SOCIETY OF WOMEN.—No society is more profitable, because none more refining and provocative of virtue, than that of refined and sensible women. God enshrined peculiar goodness in the form of woman, that her beauty might win; her gentle voice invite; and the desire of her favor persuade men's sterner souls to leave the paths of sinful strife, for the ways of pleasantness and peace. But when woman falls from her blest eminence, and rational enjoyments, into the vain coquette, and flattered idolator of idle fashion, she is unworthy of an honorable man's love, or a sensible man's admiration. Beauty is then but at best

——"A pretty plaything,
Dear deceit."——

We honor the chivalrous deference which is paid in our land to women. It proves that our men know how to respect virture and pure affection, and that our women are worthy of such respect. Yet women should be something more than mere women to win us to their society. To be our companions, they should be fitted to be our friends; to rule our hearts, they should be deserving the approbation of our minds. There are many such, and that there are not more, is rather the fault of our sex, than their own; and dispite all the unmanly scandals that have been thrown upon them in prose or verse, they would rather share in the rational conversation of men of sense. than listen to silly compliments of fools; and a man dishonors them, as well as disgraces himself, when he seeks their circle for idle passtime, and not for the improvement of his mind.—Merch. Magazine.

ORIGIN OF FRANKING LETTERS.—The origin of the franking privilege is thus detailed in the 23d volume of the Parliamentary Office Bill, in the year 1560:—"Colonel Titus reported the bill for the settlement of the Post Office, with the amendments Sir Walter Earle delivered a proviso, for the letters of all members of Parliament to go free during their sitting. Sir Heneage Finch said, it was a poor mendicant proviso, and below the honor of the house. Mr. Pryne spoke also against the proviso; Mr. Buncley, Mr. Boscawen, Sir George Downing and Sergeant Chilton for it; the latter saying, the council's letters went free. The question being called for, the speaker, Sir Harbottle Grimstone, was unwilling to put it, saying, he was ashamed of it; nevertheless, the proviso was carried, and made part of the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed. The Lords, subsequently, disagreed to this proviso, and it was ultimately thrown out. At a subsequent period, both houses did not feel it below their honor to secure for themselves this exemption." Great value is attached to some franks. One by Lord Byron has been known to fetch seven guineas at an auction. Those by Single speech Hamilton are very rare, as, also, Horne Tooke's. Canning franked to a friend in Ireland, three volumes of Clarendon's History, one frank to each volume. Dresses, boots, shoes, &c., have been frequently sent under one frank; and a whole suite of window curtains have been so passed. It is said, a buck was franked to Dover by Mr. Poulett Thomson. The Duke of Wellington's frank sold last week for a guinea. The finest collection extant forms part of a splendid and unique collection of autographs in the possession of Mr. Upcott, of Islington, and which ought to enrich the British Museum; but, in all probability, the opportunity of possessing it will be neglected until some foreign potentate bears away the treasured prize.

REV. THOMAS MASON.—Mr Mason, who for some years has been at the head of the Book Concern of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in New York, has suddenly and unexpectedly given up his appointment, or been removed from it. The Advocate mentions none of the circumstances, other than simply to announce the fact, that he is no longer Agent, accompanied by the certificate of a committee of examination into the financial affairs of the church, that they are found to be correct and true.—Protestant.

"Surely our brethren of different denominations do not understand the nature of Methodist Episcopacy, or they would not class our superintendents with the Pope of Rome, or any of his Vicegerents."

The above is from the editor of the S. Western Christian Advocate. He also adds, "every man's hand seems to be against the Methodists," alluding to the great opposition to their system of government, which other denominations manifest.

If this be the case, we think it is high time for the spirit of candid examination to wake up among the membership of that church. So much opposition must result from some cause. The success of the efforts of Methodist preachers, in promoting the cause of religion, no one will deny. We presume all denominations rejoice over it. But it is the principles of ecclesiastical tyranny that their system exhibits, to which good men object. And it will be in vain to endeavor to suppress the frank expression of thought and opinions. As liberal principles among christians advance, that system must become more odious. Against "the humble, plain, self-sacrificing Bishops of the M. E. Church," we have nothing to say, as men. We believe them to be good men, and useful. But the "tendency of power is always to accumulation," and no one acquainted with the Methodist economy, who is not strangely prejudiced, can at all wonder that writers of other denominations should class them and their subordinates, presiding elders, with the Pope of Rome and his Vicegerents.—ib.

LETTERS BY THE STEAMERS TO GO FREE. It is stated in the New York Commercial that there is no charge on letters conveyed to England by the line of steamers from Boston. All that is needful to be done, is to have them lodged at the post office in Boston before ten o'clock on the 1st and 15th of the month. The post office charge is one cent on each letter, thick or thin. If letters are sent by mail to Boston, by paying postage they will be forwarded.

FATAL ACCIDENT.—A man named Jas. Dorsey, a carpenter by trade, and for the last few years a resident of New Orleans, accidentally met with his death at that place, on the 25th ult. He was engaged in working upon the Catholic Cathedral in Camp st., when a plank on which he was standing suddenly gave way and he was precipitated a distance of about twenty-five feet to the ground. He expired in about three minutes after the fall. He has left a wife and three children.

The estimated expense of keeping a pack of fox hounds in England, and hunting four days a week, and occasionally a bye day is $20,000 a year. And it may be added that not far from the estates of those who perpetrate such follies may be found the poor who live on scarcely enough to keep soul and body together!

The Norfolk Beacon of the 9th inst. says;—"The British schr. Dolphin, Capt. Murphy, of and for Yarmouth, ten days from Wilmington, North Carolina, with a cargo of lumber, was fallen in with on Wednesday last, having a signal of distress flying, about 40 miles E. by S. of Cape Henry, by pilot boat Baltimore, Capt. Wm. B. Thomas. On boarding her found all hands sick and unable to attend to duty, and the schr. having 19 inches water in her hold. Capt. T. with two pilots and a boy from the boat brought her into this port yesterday.

A BANK FAILURE.—The Commercial Bank of Milligton, (Md.) has stopped payment. Immediately after this had became known, the people of the neighborhood took possession of the banking house—opened the vaults, took what available funds they could lay their hands upon, and adjourned from there to a tavern opposite, and then redeemed the notes of the bank to the amount of funds taken from the vaults of the concern—five hundred and sixty-five dollars. It is said the circulation of the institution amounts to $300,000!—Bicknell.

☞DEATH OF THE OLDEST METHODIST PREACHER IN THE WORLD—Died, at Kingswood Circuit, the Rev. James Wood, Wesleyan minister, in the eighty-ninth year of his age. He entered upon the itinerancy in 1773; and was, at the time of his death, the oldest Methodist preacher in the world. Having travelled fifty-three years, fourteen years ago (reckoning from next conference) he became a supernumerary. He continued to preach as long as his strength would allow, and only desisted when the infirmities of advanced age had entirely disabled him.—English Wesleyan Magazine.

THE NEW BOSTON CUSTOM HOUSE.—This noble structure is fast rising to be one of the cheif ornaments of Boston. Ten of the massive granite pillars which are to surround it, have already been erected, and others are constantly arriving from the quarry. The Boston Post says:

"Although inferior in splendor to that of New York, which is composed almost entirely of marble, yet such is the effect of our climate upon this latter material, that we have no doubt that in the course of ten years, our Custom House will be more beautiful than its more costly rival. The New York City Hall, also of marble, now presents a very dingy and even dirty appearance, while buildings of granite in our city look as well as at the day of their erection.

SUDDEN AND AWFUL DEATH.—Yesterday afternoom, about 3 o'clock, 3 miles north of Wilmington, on the Baltimore Railroad, an old man, a stranger, upward of 60 years of age, was killed in a most awful manner. The accident took place upon a very narrow bridge, on which is but a single track of the railroad. It appears that the old man was standing just at the extreme point of the bridge, leaning againts the abutment, when the locomotive came along, the front of which struck his body about the middle, cutting him in two, and causing immediate death. The train was delayed for some time, for the purpose of taking him to a neighboring house. A curve in the road at that point rendered it impossible for the engineer to notice him in time to have avoided the melancholy.

The Bridgeport Farmer states that the body of Mr. John Everett, one of the Lexington victims, has recently been found on the Long Island shore.

FOREIGN NEWS.

From Bicknell's Reporter.

ARRIVAL OF THE STEAM SHIP "PRESIDENT."

The news is of greater importance than any we have had from Europe for years. The most important, however, is that from China, which we give below:

IMPORTANT FROM CHINA.

As soon as the advanced division of the English fleet reached the Chinese seas, they went to work and battered down all the forts at the Boco Tigris, and up the Canton river. They then landed a force and sent it up to Canton to destroy that place.

Extract of a letter dated Bombay, July 23d, at nine o'clock in the evening, received by the Mediterranean packet—

"The steamer is already under way and dropping down, but I try to catch her with three lines, to say that a private express from Calcutta has arrived, which states that intelligence has been received there from China, by the steamer Enterprise, of the arrival of part of the expedition in the Canton river, and of the total destruction of the forts of the Rocca Tigris. We shall know the truth of it in a day or two; it is doubted by none."

The following, from a correspondent of the London Standard, is additional to the above.

"I send you in haste the accompanying extract of a letter from Bombay, received by a friend of mine in Liverpool—'After the vessels had destroyed the forts of the Bogue at the entrance of the Bocca Tigris, some troops and seamen were sent on shore to put them in a state of defence against the Chinese.

The expedition then proceeded towards Whampoa, having pressed two Chinese pilots; but on reaching Second Bar, the passage for large vessels was impeded by the Chinese having taking the precaution to sink some large junks—however, the smaller vessels and steamers will almost immediately proceed with a strong military force to raze Canton to the ground."

FROM CANTON AND SINGAPORE.

The New York Times says: We have received a file of Canton and Singapore papers, but find nothing in them of particular interest. We are only able to make the following extracts:

A line of fast sailing packets has been established between Calcutta and Singapore, to sail at intervals of 20 days.

It is estimated that the inhabitant of India consume 750,000,000 pounds of cotton.

The Dutch possessions in Sumatra are no longer to be dependencies of Java, but are to be erected into a separate government. Java is to furnish 4,000,000 of guilders, to establish and maintain the new government.

A letter from Singapore to the N. York Express, says:

Since my former letter there have been further arrivals here from India of ships of war transports with troops. There are assembled here the Wellesley 74, bearing the pendant of commander Sir Gordon Bremer; the Conway, 28; Leon, 18; Cruizer, 16, and Algerine. 10; Steamers Madagascar, Atalanta, Queen and Diana, and twenty transports containing the Cameronians, Royal Irish, Bengal Volunteers, (Sepoys) and a detachment of sappers and miners; in all, about 3.000 troops. The Marion transport ship with 20 tons of treasure and the staff on board. for which there has been great preparation, arrived to-day dismasted from Calcutta. Besides this, four other ships of war are expected from the Cape, under Admiral Elliott, who has been appointed Commander-in-Chief, from England. But owing to the approach of the Typhon Season in the China Sea, orders have just been issued from the ships to prepare for sea on the 30th instant, and unless something turns in the meantime, the whole division will sail for China on that day.

From the New York Signal—Extra.

ARRIVAL OF THE STEAM SHIP "ACADIA."

FIFTEEN DAYS LATER FROM ENGLAND.

The steam ship Acadia, Captain Miller, arrived in Boston yesterday morning, at about eight o'clock, in a passage of twelve days and seventeen hours, from Liverpool, having left there on the afternoon of the 4th of October. She was thirty-one hours from Halifax, having been detained there ten hours—and brought out ninety-two passengers to Halifax, and seventy two to Boston.

The news by this arrival is highly important, and affairs look more warlike than ever.

Beyrout has been destroyed by Commodore Napier after a bombardment of nine days.

The King of Holland has abdicated—rumor gives as his motive his desire to form a matrimonial alliance, which was distasteful to his subjects.

Marshal Macdonald, Duke of Tarentum, one of the most illustrious of the French Generals, died at his chateau, near Gier, at the age of 75 years.

Princess Augusta died on the 22d ult. at Clarence House, St. James', in the 72d year of her age.

The state of commerce and trade appears to be improving. Heavy rains in the North, have injured in some degree the harvest, but the crops have generally turned out well.

Cotton was firm at former prices—and other important articles of commerce were looking up. Money was rather scarce.

It is rumored that Admiral Codrington was to be appointed to command the English squadron in the Mediterranean.

Marshal Vallee was still fighting the Arabs, near Algiers, and had defeated the enemy in several skirmishes.

The trial of Louis Napoleon is proceeding at Paris, without exciting the slightest interest.

Madame Laffarge has been pronounced guilty of murdering her husband, with extenuating circumstances, and has been sentenced to hard labor for life, and exposure in the pillory.

The news of the destruction of Beyrout caused Consols to recede in London from 87⅞ to 87⅛ a 87¼.

The 'Echo de la Frontiere' states that, in all the northern places of France the young recruits are drilled with extraordinary activity.

The President steam ship sailed from Liverpool on the 1st., for New-York with 140 passengers, 2000 packages. and about 500 tons of fine goods. Capt. Fayrer had been dismissed from the command of the President, in consequence of dissatisfaction of the Directors of the British and American Steam Navigation Company. The correspondence between the President of the Company and Capt. Fayrer was communicated at a meeting of the friends of the latter, and published in the London papers. The communication to Capt. Fayrer expressed the great disappointment and surprise of the Directors at the result of the President's voyage out and home, which they considered "most disastrous, and sufficient to condemn the vessel and all connected with her!" They thought that she ought to have made the voyage from New-York in fourteen days, at the out side, and considered that her not making the passage in that time reflected "any thing but credit on the way in which she had been sailed."

Some particular grounds of complaint are specified, viz. that he had employed persons as firemen and engineers, who had been employed in the Liverpool—that he had spoken openly before the passengers in disapprobation of the conduct of Mr. Hough. Capt. Fayrer replied at length, and subsequently received a communication of the vote of the directors to the effect above stated.

What will the company say when they learn that their new captain has been worse beaten by the Acadia than ever Captain Fayrer.

This arbitrary proceeding has occasioned considerable surprise among the merchants—and Captain Fayrer's friends are justly quite indignant. Capt. Ryrie, the former Lieutenant of the President, is the new commander.

DREADFUL FIRE AT DAVENPORT.

Partial Destruction of the Royal Naval Arsenal—half a million of property destroyed.

At half past 4 this morning, Sunday, an alarm was given to the Superintendent of the dock-yard police, Lieut. William, that the Talavera line of battle-ship in the North Dock, was on fire. All hands were instantly on the spot, with the engines, but so terrific were the flames to give evident proof that the total destruction of the ship was to succeed. The fire bells were then rung, and the workmen, with the military called. The tide was high, and plenty of water at hand, but nothing appeared to subdue the fury with which the fire extended southwards, the direction in which other docks and building slips lay, as well as the rigging house, sail-loft, and all the store houses. At a quarter to 5 o'clock the Talavera was one mass of flame, which, communicating with the sails overhead, threatened to carry the fire to the extremity of the yard. The Minden line of battle ship, lying astern of the Talavera, which took fire ahead, at one time appeared inevitably doomed; but the wind shifting a point and by the most strenuous exertions of the engines, the progress of the flames astern was stopped; but what appeared to be the prevention of this danger only carried it into another direction, as the roof of the shed adjoining took fire, and the dense columns of smoke for a time appeared to choke the flame.

Eight o'clock. The fire is still burning, but will now be confined merely to the consumption of the timber and materials. The loss, at a rough estimate, is said to be from £400,000 to £500,000.

ATTEMPT TO FIRE SHEERNESS DOCKYARD.

Sheerness, Friday evening, 8 o'clock. Her Majesty's ship Camperdown, guns, was attempted to be fired in Basin this evening by some incendia The fire was first discovered in the n shipman's berth, but was extinguis after burning a locker, but on furt search a well laid train was discove in the warrant officer's store rooms, c sisting of rosin, oakum, and lucifer ma es. The above is official.

DREADFUL EARTHQUAKE.

St. Petersburgh, Sep'r. 1

The Abeille du Nord of yesterd published the following letter from Tif August 13: You have, doubtless, he of the terrible earthquake of Mount A rat, which has totally destroyed the to of Makitcheman, damaged all the bui ings at Erivan, and devastated the districts of Sharour and Sourmate, Armenia. All the villages in those d tricts have been destroyed. The ea is rent in such a manner, that all t cotton and rice plantations have perish for want of water. But the most aw event has taken place in the neighb hood of Mount Ararat. A considera mass was loosened from the mounta and destroyed every thing in its way the distance of seven werts, (nearly fi English miles.)

Among others, the great village Akhouli has had the fate of Herculaneu and Pompeii. Above 1000 inhabita were buried under heaps of rocks. A thi fluid, which afterwards became a riv ran from the interior of the mounta which was opened, and following t same direction, swept over the ruins, a carried with it the corpses of the unf tunate inhabitants of Akhouli, the de animals, &c. The shock continued to felt every day in the above mention districts and entirely laid them wast then the shocks became less frequent. Ararat is not yet quiet, the day befo yesterday I was awakened by two viole subterranean commotions.

The Birmingham Advertiser states th an improvement had taken place in tra and that American orders had much i creased.

Madame Laffarge, who was on the 19 instant, found guilty, at the Tulle assiz of poisoning her husband, "under e tenuating circumstances," according the verdict of the jury, has been co demned to public exposure in the pillor in addition to hard labor for life. It understood that the prisoner's friend will appeal against the sentence.

The naval and military preparatio of France continue on a great scale.

The expenses attending these arm ments are immense, and France will b compelled to make a new loan, or sell t immense quantity of wood belonging the state.

The following is an extract of a lett received at Lloyd's, from their agent Constantinople, dated ninth Sept. " Turkish steamer has just arrived fro Alexandria, bringing, it is reported, t Pacha's positive and final refusal to liste to the arrangement which the four co bined powers have agreed upon with r gard to his difference with the Pacha.

We hear that Parliament will be pr rogued to the 16th of next month.

HE RECORDER.

ZANESVILLE.

WEDNESDAY, ... OCTOBER 28, 1840.

e itinerant preachers will please let ow where they wish their papers ed.

e weather on last Saturday turned cold. The surface of the ground everal days has been considerably ; previous to this the weather had uncommonly warm for the season.

our paper is a free discussion paper, ten give a place to articles, the sen- ts of which, we disapprove. Some not reply to for the want of time, ome others because we do not think while. We, therefore, hold our- esponsible for no sentiments we do ndorse.

. Wm. A. Beatty, a partner in the (Ill.) Telegraph establishment, de- d this life on the morning of the 8th in the 29th year of his age.

e Hon. Jno. M'Lean, of the Supreme t of the United States, has issued a me of Reports of the decisions of the t in which he presides, containing ages, 8vo.

e anti-slavery convention, of the M. urch, which we heretofore noticed, in New York on the 6th inst., and sted of about two hundred members, sters and laymen. They have form- n anti-slavery society, and passed utions censuring the doings of the General Conference in relation to the ct of slavery. This question will e permitted to rest until it divides the odist Episcopal Church.

BRONCHITIS.—We noticed some time he general prevalence of this dis- among clergymen, and the difficulty certaining an effectual remedy for it. Cronon, Professor of Elocution, now e city, believes that the malady ari- from an improper mode of public king, as it regards utterance, and that e adoption of a system in accordance nature, bronchitis may be avoided or d when it already exists. We annex w sentences from his 'Lectures on uence,' and leave the subject for the ideration of those interested:

"Public speaking is a healthful exercise operly conducted, but of most bane- endency, especially to every delicate titution, if prosecuted regardless of laws of measure. The larynx (the uary organ of the voice,) performs blouble functions of an air tube and an n—subservient to the production of d. The first is essential to respira- the latter to vocality. A perfectly sturbed respiration is compatible with low of energetic discourse; the speak- aving the ability to preserve measure never find himself at a loss, or be in slightest degree incommoded for want breath; he will be always able to ap- force with full effect where it is need- and with that which is of still greater portance—safety to health and very to life. But the importance of mea- , with regard to the health and safety ersons devoted to public speaking, de- es another consideration. During mission of sound, inspiration cannot place. By the measured action of heart, a certain quantity of blood is ght by each of its pulsations to the s, which, as it comes in contact with inspired air, undergoes a process of ovation by the inhaling of oxygen si- taneously with this contact and inspi- on. The moving powers external to chest, together with the intercostal cles, elevate and depress the chest by rnate action, so regulated as to corres- d with the pulsation of the heart, and sequently with the flowing of the od from the heart to the larynx. As re observed, there can be no inspira- during the process of utterance.— aking should therefore be so managed not to cause the slightest impediment the influx and efflux of the vital fluid." Baltimore American.

We know from experience the position ve, that bronchitis often arises "from improper mode of public speaking," correct. When we commenced our erant labors in the fall of 1816, we but little experience in the art of aking. And being afflicted with an al- st incurable diffidence, we were sub- to such confusion of spirits as pre- ted us from having proper self-possess- n. This threw us into the habit of mencing and proceeding through our courses at the top of our voice, and quently to urge forth our words when lungs were not properly supplied with . Add to this practice, we sang much. ving an assortment of popular airs, l being urged by the people to gratify m, our accommodating disposition in- ed us to yield to their solicitations, hat this contributed also to our injury. The first afflicting sensation felt was a weariness at the upper end of the wind-pipe; ultimately it appeared as tho' there was a piece of loose skin or rag hanging in the throat that could not be dislodged from its position. The quacks told us that our palate was down, and that it must be raised, &c. We often opened our mouth to them while they touched that member with pepper or other astringents, on the end of a spoon handle. But we had but little faith in their remedies, and only submitted to the operation to gratify their good intentions.

The disease, ultimately, became so afflicting that we had either to abandon public speaking entirely, or to alter our mode. We adopted the latter course and succeeded. After several years the disease of the bronchus entirely abated, and we have since been able to speak as often as three times a day, without any inconvenience from the lungs. It was, on the whole, a well timed affliction, for without the necessity which it imposed we probably never should have been able to alter the bad habits of delivery which we had formed.

OUR AFFAIRS.

Our people are preparing to build a church in Coshocton. The materials, we understand, are ready, and they would have went on with the building this fall, but the health of the place has been so bad as to prevent it.

Br. Stockton, in the Protestant of the 17th inst., calls on the brethren of the Maryland District, and the church generally, to attend and give interest to the Baltimore Convention, which commences on the first Tuesday of November, as noticed in our 58th number.

We remind the brethren of the resolution of the Pittsburgh Conference, in relation to the collection in all our churches, the last Sabbath in October, for the aid of the Philadelphia church.

ITEMS.

AN EXPLOSION.—The New York Commercial states that on Thursday last, as the steamboat Gildersleeve was about to leave Toronto for Hamilton, her boiler exploded, and two men belonging to the boat were seriously scalded. They were taken to the hospital. The Gildersleeve is a new boat, and her speed is considered greater than that of any other on the lake.

The Rev. E. W. Gilbert, of Wilmington, has been chosen President of the Newark (Del.) College, the late President has resigned.

"Well, this beats me out," as the rye said when the fellow hammered it over the head with the flail.

To speak of a divorce now is vulgar.—The phrase substituted for it is "a repeal of the Union."

ACCIDENTAL DEATH.—Wm. Wallace, mate of the steamer Gen. Harrison, accidentally fell into the hold on Thursday, and was instantly killed. He was buried yesterday with every demonstration of respect by his friends and fellow-officers, and the flag of the Gen. Harrison hung at half mast during the day. He was from Cincinnati, where a widow and bereaved family are now left to mourn his fate.—N. O. Picayune.

Col. Karnes, the greatest pioneer and Indian fighter that Texas ever had, is reported to have died at San Antonia on the 16th ult.

ACCIDENT.—The practice of carrying pistols is not only a dangerous but a very reprehensible one, often leading to results, particularly in times of political excitement, productive of lasting regret.—A young man named Elmore, was last evening severely injured in the hand, in the neighborhood of the Third Ward polls, by the accidental discharge of a loaded pistol, which he was holding at the time.—Balt. Pat.

ST. JOSEPH, Sept. 26.

Arrived here on the 21st inst. schooner Herald, Harris, (late Kupter,) in distress after an absence of ten days, with Captain dead and all hands sick with the fever and ague. Mr. Harris, the mate, and a boy acting as cook. Captain K. died on Saturday the 19th and was brought into port and buried. The Herald after landing her sick left this port again on Thursday the 24th inst. for Boston.—Times.

COMMERCIAL BANK OF COLUMBUS, MISSISSIPPI.—At the fire yesterday morning, a large quantity of unsigned notes of the above bank was found in the 3d story of the building. They were post notes and payable at the Bank of the the United States, Philadelphia. The notes were scattered about and every one present helped himself. So look out, ye dealers in Mississippi bank notes.—[Chronicle.

Charleston contains 13,029 white inhabitants, being an increase over the last ten years of 201. The free colored population is 1561, being a loss in the same time of 546. The slaves amount to 14,663, being 681 less than in 1830. Total loss of population since 1830, 1026.

A YANKEE APPLE TREE.—There is an appletree in Roxbury, Mass. noted for its age, size and fruitfulness. It is upward of one hundred years old. It is forty feet in height; and its circumference eight inches from the ground, is sixteen feet. Its fruit in one year has made ten barrels of cider, besides thirty bushels for winter use.

Bicknell's Reporter says: "The notes of the Farmers' and Millers' Bank of Hagerstown, Md., cannot now be sold in Philadelphia. This Institution has been in operation only a few months."

MISS WILBERFORCE.—When Mr. Wilberforce was chosen member for York, his daughter, in walking home from the scene of the election, was cheered by an immense crowd, who followed her to her own door, crying, "Miss Wilberforce, for ever! Miss Wilberforce, for ever!" The young lady turned as she was ascending the stair, and motioning to the populace to be quiet, said, very emphatically, "Nay, gentlemen, if you please, not Miss Wilberforce, for ever;" which sent them all home in good humor.

☞The Methodists of Mississippi are about to establish a College at Clinton. The Roman Catholics already have a number of these institutions, in operation, in the Mississippi Valley.

UNION OF THE DANUBE AND THE RHINE.—The project frequently contemplated by Napoleon, of uniting the Rhine and the Danube by a canal, is nearly accomplished. The works will bring it this year from Hamberg to Nuremberg, and the whole length will be finished in 1842. A portion of the line will be open next year.

A soldier, who was once wounded in battle, set up a terrible bellowing. An Irishman who laid near, with his leg shot off, immediately sung out "Bad luck to the likes of ye—do you think nobody is killed but yerself!"

SOUTH CAROLINA ELECTION.—An election for nine members of Congress and members of the Legislature took place in South Carolina on the 12th and 13th inst. At 12 o'clock on the 13th there had been polled at Charleston, 2267 votes. Isaac E. Holmes, V. B. re-eleted to Congress in the Charleston district, we believe, without opposition.

Amos Lawrence, Esq. of Boston, has sent a donation of ten thousand dollars to the Treasurer of the Bunker Hill Association.

Mr. Eldridge.—The Court of General Session in Philadelphia commenced the trial of this personage yesterday morning. The deputy Attorney General was engaged until 12 o'clock in reading the bills of indictment found againts him—51 in number.

Resumption.—The Phil. U. S. Gazette of yesterday says: "We have reason to believe that there are no longer any difficulties in the way of a resumption of specie payments by our Banks, as early at least as the time prescribed by law."

☞Diamonds Found Near Algiers.—Three diamonds have been found in the auriferous sands of the river Coumel, in the province of Constantine. One of them weighs three carats. It is worth about £20, if free from flaws, according to the usual mode of computation: it has been obtained by the School of Mines at Paris. The second weighs 1¼ carat, and is possessed by the Museum of Natural History; and the third, by M. Le Lree, weighs 1 carat.

Remarkable on the Bloomingdale Road.—Yesterday, between 3 and 4 o'clock, while Mr. Isaac Simonson, a very respectable citizen, was riding on the Bloomingdale road with his family, which consisted of six persons in all, they were fired upon from a piece of woods, by somebody, and five of the six persons in the carriage were wounded. They could not ascertain who did it. An infant was wounded in the neck and bled freely.—The gun was loaded with shot, of which a considerable number went through the cover of the carriage.—Express.

Distinguished Author.—"Gentleman," said a ragged loafer, addressing a crowd. "I am an author." "Indeed—of what?" "My own misfortunes."

Scene in a Grand Jury Room.—Question by a Grand Juror: Mr. —— are you in the habit of visiting groggeries? Ans: No sir, not since I joined the temperance society. Ques. Have you seen any gambling going on? Ans. Not since I saw you betting at the race-course. Ques. by the Foreman: Gentlemen. have you any thing more to ask the witness?—[Exit witness amid general merriment.

☞An iron steamboat has lately been launched at Louisville. The experiment of the Valley Forge has been entirely successful.

A letter received by the Caledonia, speaks of a quantity of flour just landed from an American packet ship, being injured by having imbibed the odor of turpentine.

It is said that a spoonful of horse-radish put into a pan of milk, will preserve it sweet for several days either in the open air or in a cellar, while other milk will turn sour.

Samuel Johnson, of Pochogue, Long Island, shot his wife with a gun on Friday night. She died in 20 minutes. He was arrested in his own cellar.

What right has England to blockade China, and shut out the free trade of other nations?

A Mrs. Gore, of Brooklyn, fell dead in her chamber on Sunday, while preparing for church; and a Mrs. Boyer in her kitchen on Tuesday morning.

THAT'S A FACT.—Nothing sets so wide a mark between the vulgar and the noble soul as the reverential love of womanhood. A man who is always sneering at woman, is, generally, a coarse profligate or a coarse bigot—no matter which.

In the Superior Court of Connecticut, at Hartford, on Wednesday and Thursday, John Burke was tried for the murder of his wife, on the 27th of June last, by cutting her throat and severing both jugular veins with a pocket knife. The jury found him guilty.

MORE OF THE TITLED.—A swindler named Charles Edwards, and passing himself off as a Count, has been convicted in New York of petty larceny.

☞NOT SO BAD.—A young lady being dreadfully frightened at a bull that had broken from his pasture, called to some men in the neighborhood to "drive away that gentleman cow!"

LAST NEWS FROM FLORIDA.—The capture of an Indian warrior.

A son of Mr. John O'Hara, of Harper's Ferry, Virginia, was crushed to death by one of the moving cars on the Baltimore and Ohio rail road passing over his body.

The Ecclesiastical Council in Boston has decided that they had no authority to adjudicate the differences between the Rev. Mr. Pierpoint and the pew-holders of his parish.

There were 27 preachers in attendance at the Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Missouri. Bishop Waugh presided.

On Friday we saw another lovely sight. Several thousand children, male and female, comprising the Sunday Schools of the different Baptist churches in the city and county, met in Washington square, accompanied by their teachers. They were all neatly dressed, and had some splendid banners carried by them, and many wore beautiful badges and appropriate mottos. They proceeded through Sixth, Chesnut and Eighth streets to the Sansom street Baptist church, where the afternoon was passed in religious services.—Philadelphia paper.

Many people are much frightened at thunder; but they should not be, when they reflect it is but the Agent of Him who gave them being.

"I feel not now as once I felt," as the politician said ven he lost his election.

☞BEGGARS ABROAD.—Going up New Broad street yesterday, to look at Bartholomew Fair—famous in the annals of raga-muffinism—I saw a barefooted and bareheaded fellow, ghostly in visage and half covered in rags, eyeing me from the opposite side of the way with the rapacious look of a hungry shark. As I came opposite him, he leaned forward, glared upon me, and crossing the street with two or three long strides, laid a convulsive grasp upon my arm, and darting a wild look in my face, cried out, "For G——d's sake, sir, have mercy upon me!" Startled at such a salutation, I tried to release myself, but in vain.—"What do you want?" said I. "A pence—for I am starving."

Notwithstanding England has more wealth, probably, than any other nation in the world, no inconsiderable portion of its people are mendicants. Some beg according to law—others against law.—Some are gross and obtrusive in their manner of doing it—others modest and insinuating. Some are beggars from necessity—others from custom—some made so by misfortune—others are born beggars—some legitimate—others illegitimate—some wear full bottomed wigs and robes—others go bareheaded and in rags—some are Royal beggars—some rascally—some Lords—some loafers. You meet them every where, and in all grades of society, from Prince Albert in his poney phæton and six, in Hyde Park, who begged 50,000*l* for the privilege of marrying the Queen, and got 30,000*l* down to "the King of the beggars" on his rickety sledge in Cheapside gutter, who asks the passengers for a penny, and "gets more kicks than coppers." The former is so well known, that I need not pencil him. He is of that fortunate family, the Saxe Coburg, who "win kingdoms in the marriage bed." The latter, "the King of beggars" as he is called—may be met any day in the vicinity of the Bank. He is a most disgusting object, wears a woeful countenance set off by a long, white, filthy beard and garments to match, has no legs, and draws his aged form about on a four wheeled sledge whose axles almost touch the ground. He is one of the greatest villians in London. Give him a sixpence, and he showers you with blessings—decline and hearty curses is hurled at your head. Audacious and importunate, he will chase you 100 yards if you refuse to drop something into his tattered woollen cap, and will steal your pocket handkerchief if he can. He is the head of a humerous gang of beggars who have their respective prowling districts in various parts of the city. They are mostly boys; some with stiff knees, broken arms, or have lost a finger or a father, or have a mother in Newgate, or have not had a bit of bread to-day, &c., &c. Whoever may doubt these tales, none will question (who sees them) that they are Oliver Twists in shallow leanness, and Jack Shepards in the embryo villainy which lurks under their eyebrows. Old Fagin reigns supreme in his ragged clan. He dresses them in some of the miserable clothing they have begged or pilfered, treats them with great cruelty, gives them mendicants' fare, while he dines on ducks, roast beef, and "the delicacies of the season." The police have more than once ferreted out his den, and frightened him to comparative decency for a few weeks, when he again marshals his forlorn hopes and sallies forth.

London furnishes more specimens of refuse humanity than can be found in all the cities of the United States. Boz's graphic portraitures have their veritable originals in hundreds of its dingy alleys. Every day in the vicinity of the Post Office, you will meet a walking desolation in the shape of a tall, spare shred of manhood, with pale and gloomy visage, whose person is half exposed to sun and storm, notwithstanding the attempted shelter of his tattered garments, his feet bound up in masses of rags, who slowly stalks through the streets on crutches, with a large placard hanging on his breast, bearing this inscription, "A real case of distress." Set your eye on him, and he will groan most piteously and stretch out his bony hand for charity.—Turn away and he will pursue you, hobbling by your side, and filling your ear with his sorrowful tale, and your face with his inebriated breath—or, till he discovers a policeman. This arrant old imposter was, not long since, traced to his hiding place in one of the dark lanes of London, where he was found decently clad, and seated around a full board, discussing wild fowl, roast mutton, and Dublin stout with half a score of boon companions.

Walking one day near the Tower, my eye was caught by some loathsome living object, lying in a pile on the sidewalk.—On approaching it, a wobegone female face peeped from under a covering of rags. Her sunken eye was resting on a little infant lying by her side almost naked, and her emaciated finger pointing towards an inscription in chalk on the flag stone, which read, "I am reduced to the last extremity!" Even suspicion could not withhold a response to such an appeal.—London Correspondent of the New York American.

Business Department.

Br. Smith you say Wm. Williams wants the paper. Where will we send it so that it will reach him?

Br. Lamper, of Ruddle's Mills, Kentucky, informs Br. Bassett that their quarterly meeting will be held on the 7th and 8th of November, at which his attendance is solicited. He states that according to former engagements the attendance of Brs. Euans, E. Newton, D. Hannah and I. Edwards will be expected.

As we reside out of town, any person who may have business with this office, can have it attended to, by calling on OLCUTT WHITE, No. 104, Main street.

Br. Herbert, our clerk, after conference, directed your paper to Holliday's Cove, supposing that would be your post office; as soon as we discovered the mistake we transferred to Eldersville again, and sent the back numbers.

The first quarterly meeting for Ohio circuit will be held at Eldersville, Pa., the last Sabbath in November.

The first quarterly meeting for Zanesville circuit will be held at the Springfield chapel, in the neighborhood of this office, commencing on Saturday, the 14th of November. The neighboring preachers are respectfully invited to be present.

We have received $1 from W. Reeves for the Christian World, for John Troutman, Sharon, Mercer, Pa. Br. Stockton is requested to forward it to him, and so soon as we get $5 we will remit to him.

Br. D. H. Stephens wishes us to inform Br. Stockton to forward his paper to E. K. M'Masters and David Johnson, both of Spencer, Owen, Ia.; that he has received the money for the above, and will forward to him as soon as convenient.

Through mistake, this was not in our last.—Editor.

TO THE REV. A. H. BASSETT, President of the Ohio Conference:

This is to inform you, that Highland circuit is in much want of a pastor. My ill-health prevents me from itinerating. I have been forced to retire from my field of labor, and place myself under the care of a physician. My health is gradually returning, but I shall not be able to take charge of a circuit this year.—Therefore, it is hoped, that our circuit will be furnished with a minister.

From character and representation, Br. J. Devore would sustain himself on this circuit. Or, the circuit would sustain either of the preachers of Twin circuit. Our much beloved Br. Euans occupied an extensive field last year, added many members. It is therefore anticipated the circuit will not be long left destitute. Yours, &c., REUBEN ROSE.

Greenfield, O., Oct. 9, 1840.

Wholesale Prices Current

CORRECTED WEEKLY FOR THE WESTERN RECORDER BY SPERRY & ABBOT,

(Successors to Geo. Reeve & Son,)

Wholesale and Retail Grocers, No. 96, Main St Zanesville, Ohio.

ARTICLES.		FROM.	TO.
Almonds, hard shell,	pound.	8	9
" soft shell,	"	16	18½
Allum,	"
Alspice,	"		12½
Apples, green picked,	barrel.	1.12½	1.50
Bacon, Hams,	pound.		12½
" Shoulders,	"		8
" Sides,	"	½	11
Beans, white,	bush'l.	62½
Butter, keg,	pound.	7	8
Beeswax,	"	23	25
Brazil Nuts,	"	10	11
Corn, in ear,	bush'l.	20	25
Candles, Sperm,	pound	48	49
" Mould,	"	18	23
" Dipped,	"		10
Coffee, Rio,	"	14	14½
" Java,	"	17	18
" Havana,	"	14	14½
" Laguira,	"	15	16½
Cheese, Western Reserve,	"	8	9
" Country,	"		8
Copperas,	"	4½	5½
Cinnamon,	"		28
Cloves,	"		45
Feathers,	"		40
Flaxseed,	bush'l.		62½
Flour,	barrel.		3.00
Filberts,	pound.	8	9
Fish—Mackerel, No. 1,	barrel.
" No. 2,	"	18.50
" No. 3,	"	14.50
Dry Cod,	pound.	6	6½
Herring,	box.	1.00	1.25
Ground Ginger,	"	13	15
Glass, 7 by 9,	box.		3.75
" 8 by 10,	"		3.75
" 10 by 12,	"		4.75
Hay,	ton.	7	8
Indigo,	pound.	162½	1.75
Leather, Spanish Sole,	"	24	26
" Country "	"	—	—
Lead, bar,	"	7	7½
Nutmegs,	"		162½
Madder,	"	15½	18
Molasses, New Orleans,	gallon.		45
" West India,	"
Oil Flaxseed,	"		87½
" W. Sperm,	"	——	162½
" Refined whale,	"	00	1.25
Oats,	bush'l.	18	20
Pepper,	pound.		12½
Potatoes,	bush'l.	20	22
Plaster Paris,	ton.	23.00	2500
Rice, North Carolina,	pound.	—	6½
Raisins, Bloom,	box.	2.75	3 00
" Smyrna,	"	—	3.50
" Muscatil.	"	2.50	3.00
Soap, Rosin,	pound.	—	7
" Castile,	"	19	20
Shot, Nos. 2, 3 and 4,	bag.	2.25	237½
Salt,	bush'l.	31	35
Sugar, New Orleans,	pound.	—	8½
" Muscavado,	"	8½	10
" White Havana,	"		15
" Brown "	"		13½
Tea, Young Hyson,	"	75	85
" Gunpowder	"	80	90
" Imperial,	"	—	70
" Black,	"	—	—
Tobacco, Kentucky Twist,	"	12	12½
" Cavendish,	"	31	44
Tallow Rendered,	"	8
Vinegar,	barrel.	4.50	6.00
Wheat,	bush'l.		50

CABINET AND CHAIR FACTORY.

THE subscribers still continue to manufacture and keep on hand, at their old stand, a few doors south of the market house in the town of Putnam, a large assortment of

CABINET WARE AND CHAIRS,

CONSISTING, IN PART, OF

Splendid black walnut and mahogony dressing and plain bureaus,
Peer, card, center, side, dining and breakfast tables,
Sofas, side-boards, washing stands,
Dressing and writing tables,
French, fancy and high post bedsteads,
Secretaries, clock cases, cradles, cribs and book cases,
Grecian, rush, cane and windsor chairs,
Sociables, settees and children's chairs.

In short every thing in their line necessary to furnish a house, either in high or common style; and at such prices as will satisfy all who will favor them with their custom. All the recommendation they have to offer, is, that they have been able to secure a continuance of their old customers and friends. They hope by the quality of their work and a strict attention to business to share a portion of the public patronage.

They have for sale a lot of first rate black walnut veneering and a lot of bureau knobs of the best kind and quality.

Turning done in the best style and shortest notice. CHERRY & GRAY.

October 28, 1840. 62tf

Proposals

For enlarging and continuing the publication of the "Harrisonian" under the title of

THE ARGUS.

AT the urgent solicitation of a number of the present subscribers to the "HARRISONIAN," we have thought it expedient to make an effort to continue the publication, but under a different name—one more congenial with the times—the present one being a remembrancer of the struggle now going on in our midst,—a struggle between the people and their servants, the office holders.

We do not deem it necessary to enter minutely into a detail of the course to be pursued by the proposed publication, as we are not sufficiently versed in prescience to state with any degree of certainty,—but this much we do say, we will use our best abilities to make it an agreeable and exceptable sheet.

The "ARGUS," in politics, will be Whig.—News, both Domestic and Foreign, will be given to its readers, and that too of the latest dates; Literature, &c. &c.

For the first year, to suit the times, the "ARGUS" will be neatly printed on a super-royal sheet, being two sizes larger than the "HARRISONIAN," on new and small type, so that we will warrant the paper to contain as much reading matter as our larger neighbors.

CONDITIONS.

The "ARGUS" will be printed weekly on a super-royal sheet, at TWO DOLLARS per annum, or, ONE DOLLAR & FIFTY CENTS, if paid in advance.

The publication will be commenced as soon after the first of November, as possible, should it receive sufficient encouragement.

JNO. W. WHITE, } Editors and GEM'L. ARTHUR, } Proprietors.

Zanesville, Oct. 28, 1840. 3w62

SELECTIONS.

MAKING AUGER HOLES WITH A GIMBLET.—"My boy, what are you doing with that gimblet?" said I the other morning to a flaxen haired urchin, who was laboring away with all his might at a piece of board before him. "Trying to make an auger hole," was his reply, without raising eyes or suspending his operations.

"Precisely the business of at least two-thirds of the world, in this blessed year of our Lord 1840, is this making auger holes with a gimblet." I said to myself, as I walked musingly onward.

Here is young A. who has just escaped from the clerk's desk behind the counter. He sports his mustaches; wears his hair long; has acquired the power of being shaved; carries a rattan; drinks champain when he can command an X to purchase a bottle and treat a friend to a dinner; talks large of a price current, fall of western stocks, and profits of banking; stands in his boots two inches taller than Astor or Appleton; and speaks of foreign exchanges as would Rothschild or Biddle. He thinks he is a great man, when all others know that he is only making auger holes with a gimblet.

Mr. B. is a rabid politician. He has labored hard at caucuses, at ward and town meetings, has talked of the dear people till the words flow parrot-like from his lips, and has done a full share of the dirty of party for years. Office has been the lure held out to lead him onwards, and which has made him neglect his business, spend his time in hunting up recruits, drilling the refractory, and qualifying himself for bar-room argument and stump oratory. He can settle the affairs of the nation in a trice; diplomacy has no intricacies for him; he has shaken hands with the president, and is a great man. He will soon be used up and cast aside; and will then see, as others now do, that he is chasing a jack o'lantern, that he is making auger holes with a gimblet.

There is Miss C. who is really a pretty girl, and who might become a woman a man of sense would be proud of. Now, she apes the ton in all things; reads exciting novels, goes to the opera, admires Celeste's dancing, has nearly ceased to blush at the most indecent nudity, lounges on sofas, glories in her idleness, keeps her bed till noon, coquets with male animals as feminine as herself, imagines she is a belle, forgets that her father was a cooper, lisps of high life, and plebian presumption, and is in a fair way to ruin.

Mr. D., whom I have just passed, may be put down as a distinguished professor of the gimblet. He was a farmer. His father left him a fine farm free of incumbrance; but speculation became rife, fortunes were made in a twinkling and D. fancied "one thing could be done as well as another." So he sold his farm and bought wild lands in the prairies, and corner lots in lithographical cities, and began to dream of "golden Ind." Work he could not do, it had suddenly become degrading. Who could think of tilling or being contented with a hundred acres of land, when thousands of acres in the broad west were waiting for occupants or owners. D. was not the man to do it, and he operated to the extent of his means. At last, the land bubble broke; lithographed cities were discovered to be mere bogs; and praire farms, though the basis of exhaustless wealth, worthless unless rendered productive by labor. But D.'s beautiful farm is gone, and as he is now preparing on compulsion to become a pioneer in the west, he feels that it is difficult making auger holes with a gimblet.

Mr. E. is the representative of quite a class. He had his attention awakened to the subject of religion, and obtained new views of its importance and his obligations. Believing what cannot be disputed, that love to God and good will to man, is the only true source of happiness and feeling, as every benevolent mind must, a desire for the welfare of his race, he fancied himself called to declare these truths to the world; and forsaking his lapstone, his anvil, or his blough, became without delay an expounder of the scriptures, a self-delegated instructor of mankind. He forgot that the age of miracles had ceased; and that the ability to teach must now be acquired by the slow but necessary process of human learning.—He begins to have misgivings that he has mistaken his call; and will probably discover, when too late to rectify the error, that he has spent the best half of his life in trying to make AUGER HOLES WITH A GIMBLET.—Cultivator.

DEATH OF A DAUGHTER IN THE MOUNTAINS.—A letter from Interlaken, of September 9, in the "Observateur Suisse," says:

"A terrible catastrophe occurred yesterday on the Harnden. Col. Rowley, son of the Admiral, went yesterday to the mountain with his two daughters and his son, who is still a child, and very imprudently took no guides. When they had had got to some height, the youngest daughter, sixteen years of age, stumbled and fell down a precipice. The son and the elder daughter seized with terror, fell also, but were so fortunate as to support themselves by laying hold of the shrubs till the cries of the father were heard by a laborer named Goldsedyler, who was mowing at a short distance.—This man, though he had lost an arm, happily succeeded in rescuing the two children from almost inevitable death. Meantime, other persons who had hastened to the spot looked for the youngest daughter. The dead body was brought into Interlaken in the evening.

FANNY ELSSLER, BUNKER HILL AND THE BOSTONIANS.—It is well known, that Mademoiselle Elssler, the popular danseuse, recently contributed a benefit worth $1,-100, in aid of the Bunker Hill Monument. A discussion has since taken place, as to the propriety of accepting such a donation from a foreign actress and for such an object. Whatever we may think of the propriety of the acceptance or otherwise, the act on the part of the female, was certainly liberal, and she deserves credit therefor. In another point of view, however, we are not prepared to accord her eulogy, or rather, we think that the American people have exhibited a lamentable specimen of their love of virtue and sound morals, by showering upon a woman of her well-known reputation, plaudits that they would withhold from many of the benevolent and untiring philanthropists of the human race. The most forcible thing that we have met with upon the subject, is the following paragraph, which concludes a Police case in a New York paper. The culprit in this instance, was a beautiful but abandoned female; and it will be seen with what bitterness and justice she refers to the conduct of the Bostonians, Philadelphians and Baltimoreans, in eulogizing as little inferior to a goddess, a mere exhibitor of her person upon the stage—always, we admit, in graceful, but sometimes in wanton and lascivious attitudes. The miserable creatures in Baltimore, who took the horses from the carriage of Fanny Elssler, and dragged her along themselves, are a disgrace to the age and country in which they live. But to the extract. It is full of bitter satire.—Bicknell.

"Ah!" said his worship, "I perfectly understand you—you find yourself lost to honorable society for ever, and you wish to console yourself by charging it upon necessity."

"Lost to honorable society for ever!" exclaimed Eveline, drawing up her majestic form to his full height, and glancing proudly and somewhat disdainfully at the magistrate. "If by honorable society you mean high and fashionable society, sir, you are greatly mistaken; for the profession I have been called on by my destiny to adopt, if artfully cultivated, is the readiest of all passports that a woman can have into the society of the great.—Learning, rank, sanctity are nothing to it, "A woman—that as a woman would be forgotten, as a distinguished courtezan, becomes the centre of attraction. Her dress, affectations and manners are copied. Happy is the highest man in the land if he can have the honor of introducing her to his wife and daughters. She moves about as a goddess, people almost ready to fall down and worship her. And, in short, it is she alone that can arrive at the very pinnacle of female dominion.—It is true that this millenium of public opinion—this worship of nature undisguised—in the particular I mentioned, is confined to this country, and that foreign aristocratic reputation is necessary; but with this all is easy, for while statesmen, heroes, scholars, authors, &c. pass through our land of liberty, not only unhonored but unnoticed, the arrival of the woman, still young and beautiful, who can show that she was the mistress of a half a dozen noblemen, or held princes in the thrall of her charms, throws open the doors of hospitality and secures for her a universal welcome and queenly triumph!"

"Oh Eveline! Eveline!"

"It is true, and a recent occurrence proved it," returned the lady, "and what's more, I glory in the fact, as it proves the porgress of the triumph of nature over error. But enough—we shall probably have the opportunity of a future tete-a-tete."

COMIC ALMANACS.—The extent to which these pestiferous annuals have been published and circulated for a few years past is truly astonishing. They are found in all parts of the country, and, in too many places, when exposed for sale, are brought up before many others. This is the more surprising as they uniformly abound with the most impious caricatures of the human form that distortion can represent, together with many obscure cuts and low vulgarities. These being associated with weak attempts at wit for the purpose of amusement, become doubly pernicious to the susceptible and ungarded mind of the juvenile reader. And, notwithstanding this is undeniably the case, these revolting annual visiters often find admittance to the family circles of the respectable and the pious. Such, surely, have not considered their obvious tendency to vitiate the taste, dissipate the mind, and form habits of buffonery and clownishness; characteristics of the most degraded portion of the community.

The fact that the demand for these disgusting things is so great is the reason why I trouble you with this communication; and would just say in conclusion, that, if there be no municipal regulation by which they may be suppressed, let religious and literary journals denounce their circulation as baneful to morality, and much will be done to counteract their influence.—Christian Advocate and Jour.

ANOTHER MURDER.—We understand, says the Boston Mercantile Journal, that a woman, the wife of Bradbury Furguson, was shot at Exeter, last night, as is supposed, by her husband—as he had returned from the militia muster at Epping, a short time before, probably intoxicated, and had quarrelled with his wife, causing the neighbors to interfere. Furguson has absconded. He is described as six feet high, stout built, curly hair, has a finger on one of his hands injured by a wound, and on one arm "B.F." is marked with India ink.

CATACOMBS OF PARIS.—The Catacombs of Paris are among its greatest curiosities. These contain the bones of between three and six millions of persons, all arranged, or most of them, in rows, under the city itself. It became evident many years ago that the burying the dead in the city had a great tendency to disease, by vitiating the purity of both air and water. It was, therefore, ordered that the bones should be removed and deposited in the caverns, over which the more modern part of Paris stands. These caverns were the quarries out of which the rock was taken to build the older parts of the city. These vaults are laid off into streets, each side lined with bones,—with a guide to conduct the inquisitive traveller through these silent abodes of the dead. Without the guide and lamps, one might wander for days in this solitary and grand mausoleum of death; and whilst a city of the living is above him, all mirth and revelry and song, there is naught heard beneath but the occasional trickling of water through the crevices of the rocks.

The dead are now buried out of the city, at some distance, in the various cemetries laid off for that purpose. That of Pere La Chase is the most celebrated, and by far the most beautiful; for it is possible for art even to beautify a garden of graves. Nothing in the way of expense is omitted, in rendering this burial ground attractive, and on Sabbaths particularly it is crowded as a garden of pleasure, and doubtless there is a mournful pleasure in the devotees of Romanism, to deck the graves of friends with flowers and bend around them the knees of prayer. What is more impressive (no matter what the rank in life) than an evening's walk among graves, tombstones and monuments. At every step a lesson of morality is read; at every turn new evidences of death crowd upon the senses. Here a proud monument rears its head; there the humble slab or more lowly cross indicating the rank of the deceased when living. Here a gentle mound six feet long, and there another and another, two or three, showing the age of those that lie entombed beneath. And it is immaterial whether the walk is under the cypress of imperial cities, or the weeping willows of a country grave-yard; the moral should be the same. For soon, very soon, another ridge will be added to the number, and he who now counts the number, will soon be counted by others. In this noted cemetry are the remains of many of the first men of France. The monument of Abelard and Heloise is here, and even one to Baron Munchausen of of truth telling memory.

Some men seem anxious in life, to designate the place of their burial, and even the coffin itself is sometimes made before nature claims any use for it. Bonaparte had a chancel erected in the crypt of the old church of St. Dennis, for the depository of his mortal remains. But, alas! poor man; his bones rest at Longwood, on Helena's Isle, far removed from the land of his adoption, or the land of his birth.

MUSIC IN THE FAMILY.—An excellent clergyman, possessing much knowledge of human nature, instructed his large family of daughters in the ordinary practice of music. They were all observed to be amiable and happy. A friend inquired if there was any secret in his mode of education. He replied, when any thing disturbs their temper, I say to them, sing: and if I hear them speaking against any person I call them to sing to me, and they sing away all causes of discontent, and every disposition to scandal.—Such a use of this accomplishment, might seem to fit a family for the company of angels. Young voices around the domestic altar, breathing sacred music, at the hour of morning and evening devotion, are a sweet and touching accomplishment.—Mrs. Sigourney.

FEMALE LABOR IN ARABIA.—I saw several females here literally performing the duties of bullocks—that is in plain English, they were yoked to the plough. One was a very comely lass, and she answered my inquiries, laughingly that they hired themselves for the purpose, the remuniation being a small quantity of grain. The men, at the same time, were looking on, with spinnets in their hands. An odd transfer of duties this! The reader may recollect that Sir Thomas Munroe relates, as a reason why an Indian should be exempted from paying his taxes, that he pleaded the late loss of his wife, who did as much work as two bullocks.

The annual expenses of several of the Colleges in the United States, exclusive of board, are as follows:—Dartmouth, $40 24; University, Vt., 30 50; Middlebury, 35; Harvard, 93; Williams, 36; Amherst, 51; Brown, 63; Yale, 54; Washington, 52 50; Wesleyan, 47 25; Union 53; Hamilton, 41 50; Hamilton Lit. 34; Geneva 45; New Jersey, 60; Dickinson, 44; University, Va., 93; North Carolina Univ. 59; West. Res. 27 50.

NOT THE SAME INDIVIDUAL.—M'Leod, the Canadian arrested at Lockport on a charge of having been one of the gang of incendiaries and murderers in the affair of the Caroline, has been examined, and discharged on the discovery that he was not the M'Leod concerned in that outrage.

EFFECTS OF TEMPERANCE.—It seems that tectotalism, while effecting much for the moral good of the inhabitants of Dublin, stops much labor. A vast number, have been thrown out of work in consequence of the stoppage in business of so many brewers and distillers.

A chemical process is stated to have been recently discovered in England, by means of which steel may be so hardened as to cut glass more easily than the diamond.

A Plan to relieve the Literary Institution
OF THE
METHODIST PROTESTANT CHURCH.

Whereas, the Methodist Protestant Church, of the Ohio and Pittsburgh Districts, for the purpose of establishing a Literary Institution, in the year 1836, purchased the farm of two hundred and fifty acres of land, known as the "Mount Pleasant Farm," situated about two miles north of Lawrenceburgh, in Indiana; the purchase money whereof, with other debts incurred and now due from said Methodist Protestant Church, amount to twelve thousand five hundred dollars: that the purchase money now due is a lien on said farm;—that John Haughton and William Disney, acting as Trustees for said Methodist Protestant Church, are personally liable for the payment of all the debts of said Institution.

Now in order to pay said debts, and release said Trustees from their liabilities, the said M. P. Church have released all their interest in the real estate aforesaid, to the said Haughton and Disney, who have heretofore held the legal title thereof, for the sole use of such subscribers as shall take up the stock, and donors, as specified in the following plan, for the purpose of liquidating the debts of said Literary Institution, on the plan here proposed, viz:

PLAN.

The beneficial and equitable interest of said real estate shall be and is hereby divided into two thousand five hundred shares of five dollars each, equal in all to twelve thousand five hundred dollars.

That each subscriber shall be a part owner of said premises in proportion to the stock by him subscribed and paid for; Provided, he pays all he is required to pay by the terms of this plan.

If any subscriber at any time shall refuse to pay up the balance that may be due on his stock subscription, that the money so by him then already paid shall be considered a donation to said Methodist Protestant Church, for the purpose of liquidating the debt of said Literary Institution generally, and may be so applied accordingly.

The subscriber shall pay one dollar on each share subscribed, at the time of subscribing, and one dollar on each share so by him subscribed, on each succeeding ninety-one days, until his whole stock be paid up; Provided, it shall be, by Daniel H. Horn, Harvey Hall, and Shadford Easton, or a majority of them, Trustees, or their successors in office, thought necessary, and the subscribers shall be called on to pay the same.

Unless stock to the amount of eleven thousand dollars shall be subscribed, and the sum of two thousand two hundred dollars shall be paid in, no subscriber shall be bound by his subscription; but the money so by him paid, shall be refunded to him, within ninety days after the next Annual Conference.

Daniel H. Horn, H. Hall and Shadford Easton, are hereby named, appointed and vested Trustees, with full power to fill any vacancies that may occur in their board, and to direct the paying out of the money so raised on this plan.

The holders of a majority of the stock may at any time direct a sale of said premises, provided the premises shall sell for a sum sufficient to pay all the debts of said Institution, then unpaid.

The several stockholders shall have one vote for each share of stock, so by them held.

If after the debts of said Literary Institution are all paid, said property still remains on hand, unsold, the holders of a majority of the stock, may dispose of the property, and divide the proceeds among the stockholders and donators, as hereinafter provided, or may dispose of the whole property by donation to the Methodist Protestant Church, as they may in their judgment and liberality think proper.

All sums hereafter donated, shall be applied in payment of debts of the Literary Institution in the same manner, as money paid in on stock subscription.

If on sale of said property, a sum of money shall be procured, more than sufficient to pay the debts of said Literary Institution, then unpaid, the surplus over and above paying the said debts, shall be divided among the stockholders and donators, in proportion to the stock subscribed, and the sum so donated.

1. Resolved, This conference, acting for and on the behalf of the Methodist Protestant Church of the Ohio District, do hereby release, relinquish and convey to John Haughton and William Disney, and their heirs and assigns, all the interest and claim in and to said real estate of the Literary Institutinn of the said M. P. Church. To have and to hold the said property and interest therein for the sole benefit and use of such stockholders as may subscribe for the stock under the plan now proposed, for the purpose of liquidating the debts of said Institution.

2. Resolved, That Br. Green G. Moore be, and is hereby appointed an agent to obtain subscriptions of stock, and receive money thereon, and receive donations, and pay the same to the aforesaid Trustees.

3 Resolved, That it shall be the duty of the superintendent of each circuit and station, to obtain subscriptions for said stock, and receive the money thereon accordingly, and forthwith or as soon as convenient, transmit the same to the said agent at Cincinnati.

For the Western Recorder.

TO THE PREACHERS AND MEMBERS OF THE METHODIST PROTESTANT CHURCH, IN THE WESTERN CONFERENCES, (FORMERLY THE OHIO ANNUAL CONFERENCE.)

The plan of the Ohio Annual Conference, held in Cincinnati, August, 1840, respecting the college property and debts, being submitted to you, I take leave to address you, through the medium of our paper, the Western Recorder, in my own individual name. I witnessed the origin, progress and failure of the Cokesbury College in the old church, and was present when Mr. Asbury received the news of its being burned, and heard his remarks upon the occasion. Not many among us, perhaps, can recollect so far back, even among those of my own age. The part I acted in our case, was that of a servant. I had no responsibility. I offer the advice of an old friend, only. Providence still favors us with a name, and an existence among the churches. We have a name to secure, or to loose. Justice has claims upon us, and we can be just. As a whole people, we are not bankrupt. Our failure in the college enterprize is matter of history. Let us furnish another item for history. Let the pen which records our failure, have to record that we were just, as a people; and then, whenever our history shall be read in the whole world, this shall be spoken of to our praise. Every body will say, that such a people deserved better success. Let us secure the good will of our contemporaries and of posterity, by this test of our public equity and public spirit. Nothing could have happened that will have raised our church reputation so high. Our God and Father who loveth a cheerful giver, loveth also, cheerful justice.—What a spectacle for men and angels to behold! In this new and comparatively poor church, twenty-five hundred men stepping forward, willingly, to pay the uttermost farthing! This being done, will it ever again be said, that we are incapable of self-government? Rather, will it now be the general belief, that such men are capable of any thing great and good. Let us deserve public confidence. Our friends, for whom we should do this thing, I am a witness, were generous and confiding to a failing; they not only regarded our word as being good as our bond, but they intrusted their property, for our use, without our word. Let it never be said that such confidence remains unrequitted. Let us be just to such noble generosity.

Your affectionate brother,
NICHOLAS SNETHEN.

Cincinnati, Sept. 1, 1840.

COMMUNICATION.

NEW LISBON, O., SEPT. 24, 1840.

Br. Springer: Please do me the favor to publish the following appointments:

Wellsville station,	- - - Novem.	1
New Lisbon "	- - - - "	8
Monongahela circuit,	- - - - "	15
Clarksburgh "	- - - - "	22
Suttonsville "	- - - - "	29
Weston "	- - - Decem.	6
Middletown "	- - - - "	13
Brownsville "	- - - - "	20
Union "	- - - - "	27

Yours, truly,
Z. RAGAN.

Puff! Puff! Puff!!

CHEAP!

CHEAPER THAN EVER! GREAT BARGAINS!

New York at your door!

SELLING OFF AT COST!

WE so heartily despise the "gull-catching" system that we seldom advertise at all. We however give our friends and the public notice that we have just received a fine stock of

FALL AND WINTER

GOODS.

We don't profess to have brought "New York to your doors," nor to undersell every body else, nor to be "selling off at cost," nor to be "closing up," and all that sort of thing,—but we do say, that our goods are cheap enough to satisfy any reasonable person, even in these "hard times."

A. A. GUTHRIE & Co.

Putnam, Ohio, September 30, 1840. ☞w58

STOLEN

FROM the stable of Hamsfar & Brown in Somerset, Perry county, O., on Saturday night, the 19th instant, an old

SORREL HORSE,

very hollow-backed, and much marked with the saddle, his mouth very much cut on one side with the bits, his foretop heavy and lately cut square off above his eyes, shod all round, and shoes much worn.

Any person giving information to the subscriber so that he can get said horse again, shall be rewarded, and receive the thanks of JEREMIAH L. LESSLIE.

Zanesville, O., Sept. 30, 1840. 60

William Green,

CLOCK AND WATCH REPAIRER, SILVERSMITH, AND JEWELLER,

CAN be found at his shop on Main street Putnam, a few doors north of J. C. Guthrie's store, where he will do his best to accommodate customers. He keeps on hand an assortment of spectacles, watch trimmings, pencils, &c.

As far as we have tried Mr. GREEN as a watch repairer he has given us good satisfaction.—ED.

April 22, 1840. 35tf.

Dissolution.

THE partnership heretojore existing between the subscribers in the PUTNAM FOUNDRY, under the firm of HARTLEY & ANDERSON, was this day dissolved by mutual consent.

The Putnam Foundry will hereafter be conducted by J. J. Anderson & Co.

LEVI HARTLEY,
JACOB J. ANDERSON.

Putnam, Jan. 1, 1840. (Jan. 29: 23.)

Notice.

ALL persons indebted to the late firm of Hartley & Anderson, are earnestly requested to call at the Foundry and make settlement, as the change of owners makes this step absolutely necessary. We ask the attention of all persons concerned, to this notice.

J. J ANDERSON & Co.

Putnam, Jan. 1, 1840. (Jan. 29: 23.)

Dissolution.

THE partnership heretofore existing between S. B. Johnson and J. M. Kirkpatrick, under the firm of S. B. Johnson & Co. was dissolved by mutual consent, on Thursday 19th inst.

S. B. JOHNSON,
J. M. KIRKPATRICK.

Zanesville, March 31, 1840. 32tf

Cattle for Sale.

J. P. SPRINGER, four miles west of Zanesville, Ohio, on the Lancaster road, has for sale sixty steers, fours and fives, in prime order.

October 21, 1840. 61.

The New World.

The Largest, Cheapest, Handsomest & most Comprehensive Newspaper in the United States.

EDITED BY
PARK BENJAMIN AND EPES SARGENT.

WITH multiplied resources for render the New World more valuable than e as a compendious newspaper and repository elegant literature, we enter upon the sec volume (folio) on the 24th of October, dres in a beautiful garb of new type, cast expressly the purpose. It will therefore be a fitting t to commence new subscriptions, as well as the renewal of those which may then expire.

During the first year of the existence of New World, it has acquired a reputation a circulation superior to that of any weekly pa in the country; and has furnished to its subs bers, during that period, (besides all the curr news of the day, domestic and foreign) new valuable works by Talfourd, D'Israeli, Thor Moore, Miss Mitford, Mrs. Jameson, Cha Dickens, Ainsworth, Knowles, Bulwer, Marr and others—works, which in London could be purchased for fifty times the amount of subscription price of the New World. In ad tion to works of interest by these eminent thors, it has contained the cream of the perio cal literature of the day, as well as original ar cles from the pens of some of the most popu writers of America, among whom we may me tion Miss Sedgwick. Orville Dewey, Profes Longfellow, the author of "Yankee Notions Simms, Street, &c., &c.

In politics we shall, as hitherto, maintain armed neutrality. Our columns will as hithe be unobjectionable in a moral point of view. criticism we shall, in justice to the public, mai tain a perfect independence, even though incur the vengeance of all the dunces. shall, in conclusion, earnestly strive to rend our sheet not only worthy of the unparallel favor it has experienced, but of a continu extending circulation. While we continue furnish with all possible promptitude the m attractive literature of the day, we shall, as means enlarge, afford that compensation to tive authors, which may induce them to ma the New World the medium for presenting the public their best productions. Our excelle London correspondence will be continued, a due attention will be paid to the commerci agricultural and news departments of our pap

A QUARTO EDITION

Of sixteen large pages was commenced on t sixth of June last, in order to meet the wish of a large number of subscribers, by giving the its rich and varied contents in a suitable fo for binding. This we have done without havi enhanced the price, so that new subscribers, a others on the renewal of previous subscription can take their choice between the Quarto a Folio form. ☞But a few sets of the Quart from No. 1, now remain on hand in the offic and we shall, therefore, not be able long to su ply them.

TERMS—Three Dollars a year in advanc for either edition; or Five Dollars for two copie In all cases letters must be free, or post-paid, they will remain dead in the post-office.

☞All Postmasters who will act for us a our authorized Agents, and may retain 25 p cent. on the subscription price, (Three Dollars for commissions, if remitted in New York eastern money; or 50 cents on each, if in not of other solvent banks, which may be at a di count here.

Letters relative to the editorial departme must be addressed to Park Benjamin and Ep Sargent, Editors: those relative to the busine department, to J. WINCHESTER, Publisher, No. 30, Ann street, New Yor

September 16, 1840. 3t

S. C. Haver,

IN the flourishing town of Putnam has on han 40 or 50 SADDLES ready for sale, of diffe ent qualities, comprising nearly all the varieti in fashion in our Buckeye State.

A good assortment of Bridles and Martin gales: Riding and driving Whips: between 18 and 200 Carriage and heavy draft Collars, whic will compare and wear with any others mad here or elsewhere.

Also, fine York, Dearborn, heavy team an common Farming Harness. A lot of first rat Carriage and Buggy Harness, (brass and silve plated.)

Trunks, vallises, saddle-bags, and double co ered wagon whips, varying in quality and pric to suit purchasers.

The only recommendation he now offers for hi work, is the testimony and long experience of hi old customers and friends. He is still anxiou to please and accommodate those who may ca on him, and hopes to share so much of the publi patronage as his attention to his business sha merit.

Putnam, April 29, 1840. 28tf

Glass Manufactory.

THE subscriber having dissolved his connex ion with the former company, has taken the GLASS WORKS below town under his own management.

WINDOW GLASS, double and single, al sezes, and of superior quality will be kept con stantly on hand for sale on reasonable terms.—The experience of the proprietor, in the manufacture of the article, will insure all made to be of the best quality. Call and see.

S. B. JOHNSON.

Zanesville, Ohio, May 6, 1840. 37

O. WHITE, BOOK BINDER, No. 104, Main Street, Zanesville, Ohio.

January 15, 1840. 21tf

THE

WESTERN RECORDER

IS PUBLISHED EVERY WEDNESDAY.

☞The office of the Recorder is five and a half miles west of Zanesville.

TERMS.

1. The WESTERN RECORDER will be published weekly, on an imperial sheet, at $2 00 per annum, in advance: $2 50 at the end of three months; $3 00 at the end of the year.

2. No discontinuances will be allowed, except at the discretion of the publisher, until all arrearages are paid.

3. To all ministers having regular pastoral charges, who do any thing at all for the paper, if they will direct us where, a copy shall be sent gratis; any other who forward to us $10 00 for new subscribers, shall have six copies sent to any address he may give.

4. All letters designed for the paper, must be directed to "C. Springer, Meadow Farm, Muskingum, Ohio."

5. A failure to notify a discontinuance before the expiration of the subscription year, will be considered a new engagement.

CHARACTER.—The pages of the WESTERN RECORDER will be open to discussion on all moral questions,—it will give articles on Literature, Mechanics, Agriculture,—an abstract of Religious and Political intelligence, and whatever may be interesting and instructive to families in general. A portion of its columns will be open to Advertisements and Prices Current,—another portion to sustain the interests of the Methodist Protestant Church in the West.—These two latter objects will not likely occupy more than one page.

The RECORDER will take a firm stand against Clerical Supremacy.

THE WESTERN RECORDER.

...NGER, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER. ...OLLARS PER ANNUM IN ADVANCE. | Vol. 2.--No. 11. | ZANESVILLE, OHIO, WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 4, 1840. | Whole No. 63. | JOHN W. WHITE, PRINTER. $2.50, IN THREE MONTHS; $3, END OF YEAR

...POETRY.

From the New Yorker.

INVOCATION.

...e from the earth away,
...its of the joyous skies!
...inly airs around me play;
...n voices seem to say,
...r spirit come away!
...per from the dust arise!"

...with all your shining train,
...d dissolve this frail abode—
...o away all earthly pain;
...m my spirit's weary chain,
...t long in bonds hath lain,
...nting 'neath a heavy load.

...me where all pain is done,
...ssed messengers of God!
...me to a cloudless sun—
...me where bright water's run
...g glad music in their tone,
...d no shadows on their flood.

...uld flee to some calm spot
...iling under peaceful skies,
...e to share a glorious lot
...re the bright world changes not,
...re all wrongs shall be forgot,
...d affection never dies.

...me where no pain can come—
...o dark dreams from troubled lee;
...re undying flow'rets bloom—
...re no willows deck a tomb,
...re no deep hearts may find a home—
...ve at last forget to weep.

...o one whose flesh is weak,—
...wed beneath affliction's rod—
... to suffer—yet be meek:
... is not the rest I seek;
... the winds of earth are bleak—
...ake me, take me up to God.

...ISCELLANEOUS.

Selected for the Western Recorder.

...EXTRACTS FROM THE SERMONS OF ...MAS EVANS, THE WELCH ORATOR.

...er the Prophets of ancient times
...g gazed through the mists of fu-
...t the sufferings of Christ and the ...hat should follow, a company of
...were gathered together on the
... of Calvary. They saw a host
...nies ascending the hill, arrayed
...le, and most terrific in their as-
...In the middle of the line was the ...God, fiery and exceeding broad,
...rking wrath. On the right wing
...ub with his troops of infernals, and ... left Caiaphas with his Jewish
..., and Pilate with his Roman sol-
... The rear was brought up by ... the last enemy. When the holy ...ad espied this army, and perceived
... was drawing nigh, they started
...nd prepared for flight. As they ... round, they saw the Son of God
...ging with intrepid step, having His
...xed on the hostile band. "Seest
...e danger that is before thee?" said
... the men of God. "I will tread
...n mine anger," He replied, "and
...e them in my fury." "Who art
...? said the prophet. He answered,
...t speak in righteousness, mighty
...." "Wilt thou venture to the bat-
...ne?" asked the seer. The Son of ...replied, "I looked, and there was
...o help; and I wondered there was
...o uphold; therefore, mine own arm
... bring salvation unto me; and my
... it shall uphold me." "At what
...wilt thou commence thy attack?"
...ed the anxious prophet. "I will ...meet the law," He replied, "and ...nder its curse; for lo! I come to do
...Will, O God. When I shall have
...eded at the centre of the line, the ... will turn in my favor." So say-
...He moved forward. Instantly the ...erings of Sinai were heard, and the ... band of prophets quaked with ter-
...But He advanced, undaunted, amidst
...leaming lightnings. For a moment
...was concealed from view, and the ...r of wrath waved above in triumph.
...enly the scene was changed. A
...m of blood poured forth from His
...ded side, and put out all the fires of .... The flag of peace was now seen
...led, and consternation filled the ...s of His foes. He then crushed with
...bruised heel, the old serpent's head,
...out all the infernal powers to flight.
... His iron rod, He dashed to pieces,
... nemies on the left wing, like a pot-
... vessel. Death still remained, who
...ght himself invincible; having hith-
...triumphed over all. He came for..., brandishing his sting which he had ...ted on Sinai's tables of stone. He
...ed it at the conqueror, but it turned
...n, and hung like the flexible lash of a
...». Dismayed, he retreated to the grave, his palace into which the conqueror persued. In a dark corner of his den he sat on his throne of mouldering skulls and called upon the worms, his hitherto faithful allies, to aid him in the conflict; but they replied, "His flesh shall see no corruption." The sceptre fell from his hand. The conqueror seized him, bound him, and condemned him to the lake of fire, and then rose from the grave, followed by a band of released captives, who came forth after His resurrection, to be witnesses of the victory He had won." pp. 198, 199, 200.

"A servant of Julian, the Apostle, asked one of the martyrs: What is the carpenter, your God, doing now in heaven? He answered, making a coffin for thy master. Julian, soon afterward, was killed by an arrow shot at him by one of the Scythians. The blind, deaf, and dumb devils of Judea, with all their pride, could not stand before the Son of Mary." Page 76.

ROMANCE IN REAL LIFE.—The following touching incident in a family well known in Cork, Ireland, may be relied on as a fact. Mr. C————, a wild young man, member of a Catholic family, who through the inconsistency of the penal laws, had been forced to find the best education he could in France, was married to Miss O'R———, a young lady as virtuous as she was lovely. A French education, as will readily be perceived, led the hero of our narrative into habits of dissipation which then could not be speedily shaken off on his return to his native city—nay, even the sincere attachment to his young wife could not entirely disentangle him from the snare. His occasional irregular hours would have given any one not possessed of as sweet a disposition as Mrs. C. every reason to believe she did not hold that place in her husband's affections to which she was so justly entitled; but if the reflection did sometimes overcast her mind, it was but as the passing cloud over the stainless moon. The husband was far from being a bad man and really loved her, but his disposition was weak, and his vicious companions had gained a powerful ascendency over him.

It happened he was suddenly called out of town, and in his haste, left behind him a letter, in which, to gratify one of his unprincipled friends, he had spoken of his wife in terms of carelessness, not to say derision, and had dilated pretty freely upon the general course of life he then led. Imagine the feelings of the startled profligate, when he found himself borne by a rapid steamboat upon a journey, which must of necessity be of several days duration, yet distinctly recalling to mind that the fatal letter was left exposed and unsealed upon his wife's table. He recollected too with a pang, that he had wantonly in answer to her inquiries, boasted that it contained a profound secret, which he would not have revealed for the world. He paced the deck in an agony of shame and suspense. His too active imagination pictured her opening the letter and turning pale with horror and indignation; perhaps fainting with anguish, alarming the servants, flying to her father and renouncing him forever.

Abridging his term of absence as far as possible he returned, but with a sinking heart, to his dwelling, bracing himself to meet the fury of an enraged and wretched woman. He opened the door softly. She was bending over the table busily writing. A placid smile was on her lips, and spread over her whole features the mild expression of joy and peace; and as she wrote, the fragment of a sweet ballad was murmured from her lips in low music that flows only from a heart entirely at ease. The husband stole noiselessly round, and read as her pen traced her gentle thought: "your very letter is lying by me; the very, very letter containing the "profound secret." Now could I punish you for your carelessness; but my dearest Charles, how could I look you in the face on your return, after taking undue advantage of the confidence you have reposed in me, and merely to gratify a silly curiosity at the expense of delicacy and honorable feeling. No,—the letter is unopened—and lest you should be uneasy, I enclose it to you; with the sincere love of your affectionate wife," &c.

"What an angel!" uttered the conscience stricken husband. She started with an exclamation of joy—and as Charles met the light of her clear, unshrinking eyes, he felt humble that he should have dared to suspect her, and was struck with heartfelt repentance at his conduct. The influence of this important moment was strong and lasting. He immediately severed all the ties that drew him abroad, and consecrated his whole heart in that endearing word, "home!" And if the pure and happy being, whose influence had allured him to the path of right, had perused all his subsequent letters, she would have found nothing concerning herself, but boasts of the warmest love and the sincerest admiration.

A GOOD DAUGHTER.—A good daughter!—there are other ministries of love more conspicuous than hers, but none in which a gentler, lovelier spirit dwells, and none to which the heart's warm requitals more joyfully respond. There is no such thing as a comparative estimate of a parent's affection for one or another child. There is little which he needs to covet, to whom the treasure of a good child has been given. But a son's occupation and pleasures carry him more abroad, and he lives more among temptations, which hardly permit the affection, that is following him perhaps over half the globe, to be wholly unmingled with anxiety, till the time when he comes to relinquish the shelter of his father's roof for one of his own. While a good daughter is the steady light of her parent's house. Her idea is indissolubly connected with that of his happy fireside. She is his morning sun-light, and his evening star. The grace, and vivacity, and tenderness of her, have their place in the mighty sway which she holds over his spirit. The lessons of recorded wisdom when he reads with her eyes, come to his mind with a new charm as they blend with the beloved melody of her voice. He scarcely knows weariness which her song does not make him forget, or gloom, which is proof against the young brightness of her smile. She is the pride and ornament of his hospitality, and the constant agent in those nameless, numberless acts of kindness, which one chiefly cares to have rendered because they are unpretending, but all-expressive proofs of love. And then what a cheerful sharer is she, and what an able lightner of a mother's cares! what an ever present delight and triumph to a mother's affection! Oh, how little do those daughters know of the power of which God has committee to them, and the happiness God would have them enjoy, who do not, every time that a parent's heart. A true love will almost certainly always greet their approaching steps. That they will hardly alienate. But their ambition should be, not to have it a love merely, which feelings implanted by nature excite, but one made intense, and overflowing, by approbation of worthy conduct; and she is strangely blind to her own happiness, as well as undutiful to them to whom she owes the most, in whom the perpetual appeals of parental disinterestedness do not call forth the prompt and full echo of filial devotion.—J. G. Palfrey.

TEMPERANCE ANECDOTE.—On my return from a temperance meeting, where I had the pleasure of addressing a large congregation in a Methodist meeting house, convened on Sunday afternoon, solely to hear a lecture on this subject, and to admit new members to the temperance society, one of the members related to me, in substance, the following anecdote:

"In the neighborhood of this church," said he, "there lived a man and his wife who are now zealous in the temperance cause. The wife attended the first meeting we held for forming a temperance society, and ardently desired to join, but her husband peremptorily forbade it, and vowed he never would live with her a single day longer if she did. He was not what people call a drunkard, but drank habitually, and sometimes to excess. His wife saw the growing habit with an agony which she could not conceal, but thought it her duty to endeavor to win him from the indulgence only by increased kindness and submission. At length he yielded to her importunities so far as to attend a lecture on temperance, and came away with less prejudice; and at a subsequent meeting, to her great joy, he gave his name as a member.

"They returned to their happy home. The wife busied herself in preparations for dinner, and looked as sweetly on her good man as she did on the bridal day. Dinner was ready, and as they were about to set down, the husband, asked as usual, 'wife, where is the jug?'—The inquiry was as a sword piercing the vitals of the wife. 'Oh, he is going to violate his pledge, and all is lost!' But she silently brought the whiskey jug, and placed it in his hands. In fearful suspense she awaited the result. 'Wife, open the window;' and she obeyed. The devil's stake was lost. The 'death gurgle' was heard in the throat of the jug, but the earth, not the husband, drank the liquid.

Oh, there was joy that day in this man's house, and there was joy in heaven, too, over this brand plucked out of the fire.

MISSIONARIES' DAUGHTERS.—Great interest has been awakened on the subject of the children of missionaries, who must be sent from heathen countries to be educated. We perceive by a notice in the "Spirit of Missions," that an institution has been opened at Walthamstow, near London, for the daughters of missionaries, and that eighteen have already been received under its care, and that ten more are soon to be added. It is supported by the Independents and Baptists. Rev. Mr Meigs, at Ceylon, at the meeting of the American Board, expressed himself decidedly opposed to the education of the children in a seminary established for the purpose, but preferred that they should be taken into the families of pious and benevolent private individuals.—N. Y. Observer.

HELPING ONE ANOTHER.—I have heard a humorous old gentleman, who, hearing a dispute between two servants, inquired what was the matter. The house-maid replied, that, being very tired, she had asked the coachman to fetch her a pail of water from the well, which was at some little distance from the house; this he illnaturedly and surely refused.—'Nay,' said the master, 'I could not have thought, John, that you could be so ungallant as to refuse to assist a female.' John sulkily muttered, 'that it was not his place to fetch water—he was not hired to do it.' 'True, true,' replied the master; 'I beg your pardon for supposing that you would do any thing that you were not hired to do. Go directly, put the horses to, and bring the carriage to the door.' In a few minutes, the carriage was announced, when the master directed the house-maid to get in with her pail, and ordered John to drive her to the well, as many times as she required.

Whenever young people feel a grudging disposition, and unwillingness to render little services that they are not expressly hired to perform, let them remember the old gentleman's humorous reproof, and remember, above all things, the precepts of the holy Book, which, if acted on, would prove the cure of all selfishness and ill-will: 'Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others. Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ.'

In the eastern world, from the remotest period, a well of sweet water has always been held as an inestimable treasure, of far greater value than heaps of silver or precious stones; and the individual who digged a well, was considered worthy to be holden in lasting remembrance, as having conferred a benefit on his species. In the Old Testament times, the digging of a well was looked upon as a matter of sufficient moment to be recorded in history.

YOUNG MEN.—Most young men consider it a great misfortune to be poor, or not to have capital enough to establish themselves at their outset in life in a good business. This is a mistaken notion. So far from being a misfortune to him, if we may judge from what we every day behold it is really a blessing; the chance is more than ten to one against him who starts with plenty of money. Let any one look back twenty years and see who commenced business at that time with abundant means, and trace them down to the present day; how many of these now boast of wealth and standing! On the contrary, how many have become poor, lost their places in society and are passed by their own boon companions, with a look which painfully says, I know you not.

ABORIGINAL CHARACTER.—As an Indian was straying through a village on the Kennebec, he passed a gentleman standing at his store door, and begged a piece of tobacco. The person stepped back, and selected a generous piece, for which he received a gruff "tank you," and thought no more of the affair. Three or four months afterward, he was surprised at an Indian coming into the store, and presenting him with a beautiful miniature birch canoe, painted and furnished with paddles to correspond. On asking the meaning, he was told—"Indian no forget, you gave me tobacco—me make this for you." This man's gratitude for a trifling favor, had led him to bestow more labor on his present than would have purchased him many pounds of his favorite fumigatory.—Boston Parer.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND AND AMERICAN EPISCOPACY.—Many of our readers are familiar with the fact that a law has for many years existed in Great Britain, prohibiting the clergy of the Protestant Episcopal Church in this country from officiating in any of the churches or chapels of the Anglican establishment. By the recent passage of a bill introduced into Parliament by the Archbishop of Cantebury, the restriction thus imposed has been removed. Such a measure may eventually result in a stricter union and greater assimilation of American with English Episcopacy.

YOUTH'S DEPARTMENT

DIFFERENT FATE OF TWO SCHOLARS.—An incident was related to the children of the "Bethel Sabbath School," recently, by Mr. S., of Marietta, Ohio; and the circumstances of the occasion, the interest manifested by the scholars, and the manner of the narrator, as well as the thrilling nature of the anecdote, made an impression on my mind which I trust will never be forgotten by those for whose special instruction and learning it was designed. I will give it as nearly as I can recollect in the words of the narrator.

"About twenty years since," said Mr. S., "two boys came under my instruction in a day school. They were both not far from eleven years of age, of about equal abilities and made much the same improvement in the school; indeed there was in no respect any marked difference between them, except that one was some what more playful and of a more restless disposition than the other.

They continued under my instructions about a year, when they were separated. But mark their different fate. Last summer, within one week of each other, one of these boys was ordained as a minister of our Lord Jesus Christ in the Presbyterian Church, and the other was——— hanged!

"I took," continued Mr. S., "considerable pains to learn the different stories of these two boys; and it may all be told in almost a word. The former (and the more restless and wayward one of the two) was requested by his parents to remember the Sabbath day as sacred time; to attend regularly the appointed ordinances of that day, and to spend no portion of its precious hours in vain or childish amusements; while the other was left free to seek his own pleasure on God's holy day"

Christian parents, who may read this article, how do your children employ the holy Sabbath? Beloved youth, whose characters are now forming, whose prospects are bright and glowing, and for whom youth and hopeful ardour have traced a pathway of honor and success for your future footsteps, how do you spend your Sabbaths? Much depends upon whether those sacred hours are improved or wasted. If you call the Sabbath, the holy of the Lord honorable, and honor him; not doing your own ways, nor finding your own pleasure, nor speaking your own words, the Lord has graciously promised that you shall delight yourselves in him—that he will bless you; and whom the Lord blesseth, is blessed indeed. But if you reverence not its sacred hours, and despise its blessed privileges, you throw contempt on the God of the Sabbath—your own consciences will condemn your course; and He who is greater than our consciences, and knoweth and remembereth all things, will be your enemy, and "who can contend with Him and prosper."

Another thought for all who may read this piece. By how many merciful dispensations does the great Head of the Church testify His pleasure in the observance, and by how many awful providences He mark His displeasure at the contempt of any of the divine institutions; and especially is this true of the Christain Sabbath. Christain, do you regard the sanctity of the Sabbath as God views it? and do you so order your worldly affairs, so order your household, as to promote its strict observance on your own part of those in your employ? and are you willing to labor in any and every way for its better observance throughout our country and the world?—Youth's Companion.

EFFECTS OF KINDNESS.—Charles Carey lived near the city of Philadelphia, in a comfortable stone house, to which was attached several acres of good pasture land. One day, as he was passing the horse market, he observed a horse offered for sale, and upon inquiring the price, he was informed that it was fifty dollars.—The horse was poor, but appeared to be young and healthy, and was a fine looking animal; and it occurred to Charles that if he was to buy him, he could, in a short time, fatten him and sell him at a considerable advance, and he made up his mind to endeavor to make the purchase. After consulting with a friend he borrowed the money and bought the horse; he took him home, turned him on to his pasture lot, and in a few weeks he became a noble animal. Being now in a condition to demand a good price, he sent his son to market with him. He had not long been in the market, before a person accosted the young man by asking where he got that horse, and upon being informkd, the stranger claimed him as his property, alleging that he belonged to a line of stages that ran between Philadelphia and Baltimore, and had been stolen, and took the young man and the horse to a magistrate. I was sent for, and accordingly attended. As Charles and his son were well known to be persons of good character, no suspicion attached to them of having acted dishonestly, and the young man was discharged; but the stranger, establishing the ownership of the horse, he was delivered up to him. Charles remarked, that it was hard to lose his money, but he was glad the man had got his property.

About a year afterwards, he had occasion to go to the city, and stepping into an Inn in High street, known by the name of the "Black Bear," where he had business, he saw the man of whom he had bought the stolen horse, sitting in the bar room. Charles called him aside, and addressing him, said, "Dost thou know me?" The man replied "no." "Dost thou recollect selling a horse about a year ago?" The stranger answered, "yes." Charles proceeded. "Well, I am the man that bought him; dost thou know that the horse had been stolen?" The man did not attempt to avade or deny his guilt, and replied "yes." Charles then requested the thief to follow him, adding, "I will put thee where thou wilt not steal another horse very soon;" and they set off together. The poor man appeared perfectly indifferent to what seemed to him his inevitable fate. When they got within a short distance of the magistrate's office, Charles began to relent of his purpose of prosecuting the man, and turning to him, said, "I am a poor man, thou hast greatly injured me. I cannot afford to lose fifty dollars; but prosecuting thee will not compensate me for the loss of my money: go about thy business, and conduct thyself honestly for the future."

The man looked amazed, and after a minute's hesitation, as if undetermined what to do, he turned about and walked away. He had proceeded but a few yards, before he returned and asked the friend where he could find him, if he should ever be able to make restitution for the injustice he had done him. At first the friend took this as an affront, and answered him, "I hope thou dost not intend to add insult to the injury thou hast already done me." The man replied, "No, I do not; but I hope to pay you some time." Charles then told him if he had any thing for him to leave it with Isaac T. Hopper, at the corner of Walnut and Dock streets; upon saying this they parted, and never saw each other afterwards.

After the lapse of considerable time, perhaps more than a year, a letter was left upon my desk, during my absence, addressed to Charles Carey, who, soon after my return home, was passing my door on his way from meeting, and I called him in and gave it to him. Upon opening it, he was greatly surprized to find that it was a letter from the man of whom he had bought the stolen horse, and contained twenty dollars. Some months after, another letter was left in the same way, containing a like sum, and in perhaps six or nine months more, a third letter was received with twenty dollars additional, making sixty dollars in all. This letter stated that he had no intention of stealing the horse ten minutes before he committed the act, and that ever since he had been in constant terror, fearing that he would be detected, and the dread of this, added to the remorse that constantly attended him, rendered his life a burthen, and that when he was apprehended at the inn, as above related, he felt entirely indifferent as to what would be done with him, considering that his wretchedness could not be augmented, but that after he had been arrested, and again set at liberty, it seemed to inspire him with fresh confidence, and he determined to make another effort to improve his condition, and he said, that, at the time he wrote those letters, he was keeping school and was assessor of the township where he resided, and had never been suspected of being a dishonest man.—Youth's Cabinet.

A WARNING TO MOTHERS.—I knew a little girl of twelve years of age, who left her father's house and went into a neighboring town to reside with her uncle and aunt.

They soon found that she deceived them and lied to them on various occasions. They conversed with her faithfully and seriously, and charged her never to be guilty of such a sin again. She was pleasent, and willing to do what she could, and in other things obeyed her uncle and aunt. But she seemed to be given to deceiving and lying. She was repeatedly found guilty of it. She was told that she would ruin her character here, and soul forever, if she did not break off this practice; that it was always best to be honest and tell the truth. But nothing seemed to have the desired effect, though she would promise not to do so any more.

After she had been guilty of this sin one day, and after another serious talk with her, her uncle told her that he must try something else, and if she ever deceived them, or lied to them again, he should punish her with a rod, unpleasant as it was to use the rod upon a girl so large, it must be done, or she would be ruined.

It was not many weeks, however, before she was found to have told a falsehood Her uncle reminded her of his promise, and went out and brought in the rod, showed it to her, and told her that he must do as he said he should, but that he would give her one hour to think of what she had done, and of the punishment she was to receive, At the expiration of the hour he came in, conversed with her again, and gave her another hour to think of it. When another hour passed, he took the rod, called her to him and applied it a few times, and then stopped and reasoned with her; she appeared humbled. Her uncle asked her how many blows he should give her? She wept, and mildly replied, "Uncle, punish me as much as you think I deserve. But," said she, "my mother has brought me to this; when I was a child she taught me to deceive and lie to my father, and now I am brought to this."

Oh! had that mother been present to hear the cutting reproof of her child, must it not have pierced her to the heart, and filled her with the deepest agony to think of what she had done! Must she not have felt, that possibly, through her teaching, her daughter might at last have her part with all "liars, in the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone?"

What a warning to mothers to be careful what they teach their children, lest at last their children should point to them as the means of their ruin.

Sabbath School Visiter.

WESTERN RECORDER.

ZANESVILLE:

WEDNESDAY, ... NOVEMBER 4, 1840.

ELDRIDGE'S TRIAL—PHILADELPHIA SESSION'S.—On Tuesday a large number of witnesses were examined. Most of them testified relative to the hand writing of the defendant. James McGowan, who was to have acted as a friend at the wedding of Doctor Eldridge, testified that Eldrige had loaned him money at several times—himself tendering the favor.—McGowan testified that on the first of May, he noticed a change in the Dr's appearance—his hair cut short, and his face discolored. He testified that the Doctor appeared disposed to avoid him. and said that he had nearly had a fight with the barber, for cutting his hair so short. The following is the testimony of James D. Pratt, to whose daughter Eldridge was to have been married:

I first saw Dr. Eldridge at the house of my son-in-law, Dr. Howell, at Trenton; it was about the beginning of March, 1839; shortly afterwards he commenced coming to my house at Bridesburgh, near Philadelphia, until after his engagement with my daughter in the month of August, 1839; he was at my house daily; he was there on the evening of the 29th of April —I saw him on the afternoon of the 1st or 2d of May; I observed his appearance was very much altered, he always wore before that very bushy hair, and his hair was cut off; his skin appeared to be of a yellowish cast; my wife asked him what was the matter with his face; he remarked that he did not know there was any difference, and laughed it off; on the 9th of May he asked me if I could not make use of some money for him; I declined; he then remarked could you not use it for the mill; my son and son-in-law have a mill at Trenton; I asked him why he did not invest his money in bank stock; I then told him I could make use of some money in the mill; I said I would take $1500 at that time; he gave me the money and I gave him a note for 60 days for the amount; the money was in ten and twenty dollar notes of the United States Bank; the next day he asked me if I could not make use of some more money; he lent me $3000 more, and told me I might have $3000 more if I wished it; the money was in ten and twenty dollar notes, with the exception of one $100 note, two $50 notes, and two $20 dollar notes of the Moyamensing Bank; the envelope containing the bundle of notes, was marked Proceeds of Stebbins' mortgage; I gave him a receipt in the name of Pratt & Howell; I had a conversation relative to the robbery of the banks on the Sunday previous to his arrest; I read the advertisement to him and said it was a very cute trick, and I thought the rascal ought to go clear; he remarked that they would no doubt catch the rascal; he said a friend told him the banks had a clue to some individual in Baltimore; he remarked that he hoped they would catch the d—d rascal; he was at my house the day previous to his arrest.—Br. Jonathan.

MORE HORRID MURDER.—The following narrative is from the Natchez Courier of the 9th inst.

"It is a painful duty, in the line of our profession, to notice this morning, one of the most sad and distressing events on record. The public are aware, that near a year ago, our fellow citizen Josiah A. Lyle, had a quarrel with Mr. Hagan, of New Orleans, in which the latter was shot through the head. Mr. Lyle was tried in this city for the offence and fully acquitted. Would that we could with the trial, date a cessation of hostility and the compromise of a dispute about property, still existing between Mr. Lyle and the Hagans; but alas! we are forced to witness a denounment truly afflicting and horrible.

Some weeks since, the Hagans, who were partners of Lyle in the cultivation of a large plantation on the Mississippi river, repaired to the farm and took forcible possession by driving off Lyle's overseer. Last Tuesday Mr. Lyle and four friends went to the farm for the purpose we have been told of compromising the difficulty. Immediately on landing at Baton Rouge, Lyle and one of his friends rushed to the house, when the Hagan whom he had previously shot, met him at the door and demanded the purpose of his visit. Lyle and his friend were both armed with guns. The response made to the demand of Hagan was "peace of course, peace." Hagan commanded him to advance no further until he explained what he wanted.

Lyle said a man could not be stopped from walking in his own yard, and continued to move towards the house. Hagan immediately levelled a double barrelled gun and shot Lyle through the head and heart, and he fell instantly dead. The friend of Lyle, a Mr. Handly, then raised his piece to shoot Hagan, but it snapped. Hagan aimed the second load of his gun at Handly, but it missed fire. Handly went to the gate and discharged his piece at Hagan without effect.

Another of Mr. Lyle's friends, a Mr. Lumsden, formerly of the Natchez City Guard, then advanced, and was shot thro' the hand by a second gun, which Hagan reached from inside the door. Thus ended the bloody conflict. Mr. Hagan surrendered himself to the proper authorities of Jefferson county, and is determined to have a trial at the next term.

The body of Mr. Lyle was brought to Natchez yesterday, and the tale of his death caused throughout our community the deepest anguish. He was a brave good citizen, highly beloved by all our people. He was followed to the grave yesterday afternoon by an immense concourse of friends.

We cannot, nor can the community sympathize too much with his bereaved wife and children. When the body came to the city yesterday, the whisper went round—"who will tell this to his family? —ah who can tell it?" The story is told —the grave, the grave spoke silently and painfully its awful reality. Our own feelings are too much excited to say more.

THE PROPHET OF 1770.—Let us suppose ourselves carried back sixty years in the stream of time, and to live again, the youthful subjects of the young King George III. Let us likewise imagine that in those days the divine spirit of prophecy had come upon us, unveiling to our sight the events of the future. In seven years from this time the British empire shall be rent in twain (American war in 1776.) In fifteen years men shall rise from the earth and fly through the air (invention of balloons. 1780.) In 20 years the French Monarchy, the oldest that ever was, and now so flourishing, shall come to an end. A virtuous prince, (Louis XVI, 1793,) not yet king, shall in twenty-three years, lay down his life on the scaffold; his wife and sister shall share the same fate. In those days, news shall travel with the speed of the wind, and what was done at mid-day shall be known at the fartherest bounds of the kingdom ere the setting of the sun (the Telegraph, 1794.) In twenty-six years a conqueror shall arise (Bonaparte,) who shall water his horses in the Nile, the Jordan, the Tagus, and the Borysthenes. This conqueror shall restore the chair of St. Peter, and throw down what he had restored (dethronement of Pious VII.)—Finally, he whom the world could not contain, shall die a captive on a rocky Island (St. Helena) neither in Europe, Asia, Africa, nor America, but in the midst of the vast ocean: a few feet of earth his empire, a willow his monument. In those days metals shall be found which float on the water and burn under it (sodium and potassium, discovered by Sir Humphrey Davy.) Ships shall stem the stormiest ocean without oars or sails (steam ships.) Carriages shall run without horses, with the speed of the wind (locomotive engines. The ordinary speed of the wind is 35 miles an hour; that of the engines on the Great Western Railway is 39.) Men shall be conveyed from India to the mighty Babylon in a month; from America in ten days; from one end of England to the other in eight hours. Bridges shall hang by a chain over the sea, while roads shall be made under it (the Menai Bridge and the Thames Tunnel.) The very beasts in those days shall have laws to protect them. Those days shall be days of great light. Men shall plough without horses (steam plough;) they shall spin without hands (power loom;) they shall calculate by wheels (Baddage's machine;) the sun shall engrave for them (the Daguerreotype;) they shall write with the lightning (electric telegraph.) One machine shall print in one hour many thousand books, each of which shall take a man many days to read; a man may buy a book for a penny; for a penny he may send it to the ends of the empire. They shall read the rocks instead of a book (geology,) and decipher the history of beings which lived and died ere man existed. In the heavens new stars shall be discovered; some sisters of the earth; some brothers of the sun (the planets five in number, discovered since the American war; and the double stars by Sir Wm. Herschel;) and of all the colors of the rainbow. In those days, likewise. they shall read the pyramids (Young's and Champollion's discoveries.) They shall find out the mouth of the Niger and the Magnetic Pole; the way to every thing shall have been discovered but the way to be happy.—Phoenix (English) paper.

TRIAL OF ELDRIDGE.—Election intelligence has hitherto prevented our giving a report of this important trial. It commenced in Philadelphia on Thursday last. The prisoner, William M. Eldridge, stands charged with forging, counterfeiting, uttering & publishing checks to the amount of 15,000 dollars on the following banks: Girard, Moyamensing, Western, Commercial, Philadelphia, Penn Township, Northern liberties, Mechanics, United States, Bank of North America and Bank of Pennsylvania. There are twenty-two bills of indictment against him, Counsel for the prosecution. Messrs. F. A. Reybold, J. M. Reed, F. W. Hubbell and the Attorney General. Counsel for the defendant, W. L. Hirat. On Thursday, Joseph R. Paul, receiving teller of Moyomensing Bank, and George Helmbold, paying teller of the Western Bank were examined. Mr. Paul testified that the defendant, kept an account in the Moyomensing Bank, in the name of Siciner & Wood, that on the 30th of April he deposited two forged checks, marked good in the bank, and drew out the same day 1,260 dollars. Mr. Helmbold testified that the defendant kept an account in the Western Bank in the name of Vandardale & Roberts, and that on the 30th of April last, he deposited two forged checks marked good, and drew out 1,260 dollars.

On Friday, Alexander P. Wilson of the Bank of the Northern liberties, William Schaeffer of the Girard Bank, John Hœkley, of the Bank of North America, Hugh Dehaven, of the Philadelphia Bank, and John Patterson, of the United States Bank, were examined. They all testified that the defendant on the 30th of April last, deposited two forged checks marked good in each bank, and at the same time drew 1,260 in notes. Thomas Sturges of the Western Bank deposed to arresting the defendant and taking him before Alderman Davis by whom he was committed. All the witnesses testified that he wore spectacles whenever he came to the banks.—New World.

SUICIDE OF A MEMBER OF CONGRESS.—On Sunday evening last, we learn from the Balitmore Sun, the Hon. Wm. S. Ramsey, of Carlisle, in this State, and who was on Tuesday last re-elected a member of Congress for the 13th District, committed suicede at Barnum's Hotel, Baltimore, by shooting himself with a pistol. The Sun says:

"About 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon, he appeared to be quite well, manifesting no unusual excitement or depression of mind, and made some inquiries at the bar relative to the boats and cars to Philadelphia; and in about an hour afterwards, the report of a pistel was heard in his room. The report attracted first a gentleman stopping at the house and some of the waiters, when he was found speechless and dying near the fire, a pistol lying close by his side, his right hand, except the forefinger, being covered with blood, which had flowed profusely from a wound in the right eye, where the ball had entered. He was recognised by the Hon. Mr. Jenifer, who soon entered the room, and sent for the Hon. Messrs. Howard and Carroll. On an inquest being held, the verdict of the jury was that he came to his death by shooting himself with a pistol. He was twenty-eight years of age, and rumor attributes the suicide act to disappointed affection. Some unopened letters found with him have been taken possession of by his friend, Mr. M'Blair."

The Sun of a subsequent day says:—"We have ascertained that the cause of the late suicide of the Hon. Wm. J. Ramsey, was aberration of mind, produced by recent exposure while laboring under great physical debility."

INSTANT DEATH IN HAGERSTOWN.—The Hagerstown Herald of Freedom states that on Thursday, Mr. Jacob Huyett, of Washington county, Md., set out with his wife and family in a carriage for Smithsburg, four or five miles distant. Just after passing Cavetown, the horses took fright and ran off; Mr. Huyett, in attempting to stop them by the reins, was thrown from the carriage with such violence as to produce almost instantaneous death. The horses ran violently for some distance, when they were arrested without further injury.—Mr. Huyett had reached the meridian of life, was an extensive farmer, as well as a highly respeclable and useful member of society.

CAUTION AGAINST AN IMPOSTOR.—Bishop Delancy, of the Diocese of Western New York, in a communication to the Buffalo Commercial Advertiser, puts the public on their guard againts a man calling himself J. Hewitt Irvine, of Oxford, and alleging himself to be an unmarried clergyman of the Church of England, a Fellow of Oxford University, Rector of Conventry, and Prebend of St. Patrick's, Dublin, just arrived from England on his way to Canada, on ecclesiastical business of some kind. He brought letters from clergymen in New York city and elsewhere, who are doubtless deceived as to his real character. On these letters he has been admitted into some of our pulpits. It is understood that he once taught school in Painsville, Ohio—that he has a wife and children, whom he left there in destitute circumstances, and whom he met in this city (Buffalo.)—The Bishop adds that "many of his statements are wholly untrue, and a satisfactory explanation of his conduct having been required, and none being given, and believing him to be either no Clergyman at all, or if a Clergyman, to be one of a most unworthy character, I publish his name and the description of him to put others on their guard againts him. He is of a large frame, about 5ft. 10 inches high, sandy hair, light blue eyes, his front teeth large & prominent, his shoulders broad, and his gait slow and heavy."

The editor of the Advertiser says: "The impostor, we learn, while living in Painesville, was known by the name of Hewitt. A clergyman of Canada says he learned a few weeks since, that a man named Irvine was collecting funds in England, ostensibly for the benefit of the College at Toronto, and to render the imposition complete, showed forged credentials, purporting to be given him by Dr. Strachan, Bishop of Toronto. It is altogether probable that both impostors are one and the same person."

The absurdity of the English game laws was strikingly illustrated at the Croyton petty sessions Sept. 14, where Mrs. Pratt, wife of a wealthy land holder was indicted for taking a patridge in a trap, not being in possession of a game certificate. It appeared that the trap was set for rabbits, in Mr. Pratt's own grounds; that a patridge was taken in it, and, that Mrs. Pratt, happening to pass the spot, took the bird out of the trap. The complaint was made by a Mr. Read, whose land adjoined that of Mr. Pratt, and who had some dispute with that gentleman on the subject of game; the complaint therefore was laid through spite; yet, such is the tenancy of the game laws, the magistrates were obliged to convict Mrs. Pratt; they fined her a penny and the costs.—N. Y. Com. Adv.

FALSE PAPERS.—In the court of General Sessions, yesterday, Wm. B. Read, Esq., read the affidavit of Oliver Evans, one of the inspectors of the late election for South Wark, stating that 60 pages of the book containing the record of the declarations of intentions of foreigners to become citizens of the United States, kept in the office of the Clerk of the court of Quarter Sessions, had been fraudulently made up or interpolated, and that thereby sixty persons had been unlawfully furnished with their papers upon the entries thus made; and upon application, a rule was granted upon Patrick Drain, Hugh Breman, John B. Kern, Martin Moffit, James McNamee and Nicholas White, returnable on Wednesday morning, at 10 o'clock, to show cause why their naturalization certificates should not be vacated. We understand that E. D. Ingraham and Wm. A. Stokes, Esqs; are retained as council for the respondents.

BONAPARTE.—Some curious anecdotes are told of the dethroned Emperor, while John Bull was his jailer, on the Island of St Helena. On one occasion he was rather merry at the expense of the Captain of a British 50 gun ship, who was introduced to him. After inquiring minutely about his weight of metal, &c., the ex-emperor inquired, "What chance would you stand of a French 74?" The Captain replied, "If it was blowing hard so that she could not open her lower ports, we would take her, not otherwise." How long, continued the imperial captive, "do you think you would be in taking a large frigate?" "Do you mean French?" inquired the Captain. "No, American," replied Bonaparte. The Captain hesitated—the Emperor laughed heartily and took his leave.

The Wood Paving.—We have mentioned the removal of the old decayed blocks from Walnut street, above Dock. The Daily Chronicle says the street is now to be paved with blocks of wood obtained from the cedar swamps of New Jersey, which are in form 'the rhomus,' with a crease or groove across the upper face when laid, which will run at right angles across the street to carry off the water into the side gutters. Each block has two holes in opposite side for the purpose of pinning them together. This become necessary from their position resting as they will on each other at an angle of apout forty-five degrees."—Philadelphia Courier.

The Wilmington Journal, alluding to Newark College says:

We understand that the President elect has not yet accepted the office; and that his acceptance depends on the consent of the Board of Trustees to put the collge into the hands of Constitutional Presbyterians. The board has not yet met; but many influential members of the Board confidently expect the arrangement will be made. As we earnestly desire to see the institution flourish, for the honor of our State, and for the promotion of literature, we cannot but hope this proposed arrangement will be consumated.—We have seen documents which prove that a large amount of patronage is dependent on it.

☞CURIOUS ATMOSPHERIC FACT.—The statement of Mr. Wise, the æronaut, is a curious one. It is well known that almost every one looking down from a great height, feels effected by vertigo—giddiness of the head—and a sensation of sickening insecurity. But he avers, from repeated experience, that this only occurs when the individual is sitting or standing upon something connected with the ground, even if it be only by a rope, or any other slight communication with the earth.—But that entirely isolated from the earth, no such feeling or sensation can be experienced.

IMPORTANT RUMOR FROM FRANCE.—By the last French Journals it is stated that a report prevailed on the Bourse that M. Thiers had addressed a note to the ambassadors of England, Russia, Prussia and Austria, to the effect that if the concessions of Mehemet Ali were not accepted, the French Government would regard the refusal on the part of the great powers as proceeding rather from a wish to attack the revolution of July, than to uphold the integrity of the Ottoman empire.

Beauties of Anarchy.—Among the worst disadvantages of the violent changes in South and in Central America, are the depredations committed upon foreign proporty in the confusion. The people have to pay for it afterward. Thus has Mexico been in a hobble—thus is Buenos Ayres in difficulty—and now Central America is to be added to the list. A British Squadron has been ordered there to demand reparation for British property lost in the late civil war—or rather the present—for it is not over yet. Ex-President Morazan was making preparations for an attack on New Grenada.

LAWYERS AND "THE LAW."—A few days ago, in the course of a horse trial, Gen. Dyson was examined for the defendant; and when cross-examined, he was asked if he had not said that the defendant ought to pay for the horse. "If I did say so," he replied, "it was on this principle—that he had better do it than go to law." (Laughter.) Mr. Justice Coleridge: That was the remark of an old soldier. (Renewed laughter.) General Dyson: My lord, my father was an old lawyer. (Roars of laughter.)

☞Bible Societies.—An article in the Cheltenham (England) Free Press states that, in 1804 there was no society in existence which had for its object the distribution of the Word of God. In contrast with this passive state of Christianity, the number of Bible Societies at the present is, in England and Wales, 2541. Ireland, 614, Scotlahd, 132; on the continent, 1268; America, 2800; W Indies, 676. In France, where the Bible was a few years since proscribed as a fable by an act of the legislature, and carried to one of the public squares and burnt, there are now 236 Bible societies, 121 pedlars employed in distributing the word of God, and circulation of copies last year was 9200.

Ohio Banks.—By the abstract of returns made to the Auditor of State, of the condition of the Banks on the 30th of September, it appears that their aggregate circulation was then $3,697,098—Specie in vault $1,229,226—Deposites. $1,990,743—Notes and bills discounted. $10,832,817. The Clinton Bank, Commercial Bank of Cincinnati, and the Bank of Sandusky do not report.

Drunken Crows.—A South Carolina paper relates a curious incident, which tells well for the moral character of some of the parties concerned—in one point at least. A gentleman, on finding that his cornfields were beset by great numbers of crows, steeped a quantity of corn in alcohol, and threw it forth as a special "treat." The unsuspecting spoilers swallowed the bait greedily, and soon began to manifest all sorts of funny consequences, being most essentially fuddled. They staggered about, even in mid-air, as they scrambled towards a neighboring forest; where they held a most loquacious and uproarious confab in the Cawcaw language, resulting, it seems, in a resolution avoid that shop in future which resolution they faithfully fulfilled, after having regained their sober senses (a lesson to other bipeds.) although they continued to plunder the neighboring fields in all directions.

TYRANNY.—We are able to appreciate the blessing of American liberty, when we contrast our condition, with such a fact as the following.

"When Mehemet Ali made his famous canal from Alexandria to the Nile, he did it by forcibly marching down 150,000 men from all parts of the country, and obliging them to excavate with their hands, as tools they had not, or perhaps could not be provided. The excavation was completed in three months, but 30,000 men died in the operation."

WET FEET.—How often do we see people trampling about in the mud, with leather soaked through, and how often do such people, when they return home, sit down by the fire side and permit their feet to dry, without changing either shoes or stockings. Can we then wonder at the coughing and barking, and rheumatism, and inflamation, which enables the doctors to ride in their carriages? Wet feet most commonly produce affections of the throat and lungs; and when such diseases have taken place, "the house is on fire"—danger is not far off, therefore, let us entreat our readers, no matter how healthy, to guard against wet feet.—Medical Advertiser.

GRATUITOUS.—"No public speaker should be without J. Pease & Son's Clarified Essence of Horehound Candy." This receipt we insert gratis for the especial benefit, comfort, convenience, favor, profit, prosperity, happiness, advantage, health, relief, ease, rest, enjoyment convenience, consolation, support, gain, advance, successs, regard, and esteem of that incorrigible talker the editor of the New Orleans Picayune.—Two sticks to be taken a-day, one after going to bed, the other getting up.—Boston Transcript.

At the Insolvent Court last week, in Philadelphia, three hundred and fifty persons applied for the "Benefit of the several acts." Many persons drive a profitable trade of taking the Benefit; their names being upon the list at every session.

At the Court of Quarter Sessions for the County of Philidelphia, September term, 1840, October 20, on motion of Wm. B. Reed, Esq., Rule to show cause was granted, why the papers purporting to be the declarations of intentions of sixty individuals (herein named) interpolated in the records of this Court, be not cancelled. Returnable on Saturday, October 24th (to-day,) at 10 o'clock, A.M.

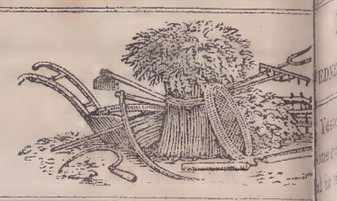
At the commencemont of the Western Reserve College, the Honorary degree of L. L. D. was conferred upon the Hon. ELISHA WHITTLESY.—Ohio Star.

A certain old woman came to Gratia the Emperor, and with much clamor complained to him of her husband, to whom the emperor mildly said, "Woman, what is that to me?" —"But," said she, "he has also spoken many things against thy majesty." To which his majesty then said, "Woman, what is that to you?"

Melancholy Example.—Jacob Leddings is to be executed at Albany, on the 4th December, for the murder of his wife.—He will leave thirteen children.

The Boston Lyceum has awarded its prize to Thomas W. Parsons, for a poem entitled "The Intellectual Republic."

AGRICULTURA



We are inclined to give credit following suggestions from an ment of our own. Being told that to ground late in the fall would dest cut worm, and as our garden had b several years, much annoyed with wishing to make a trial, we plou very late, some two or three days the weather turned cold, and the frozen so as to render it impracti plough at all. But the worms w bad the following year as ever. spring following, we broke a clov field for corn, which after it was over had frequent freezings, and the cut worms are usually bad o kind of sod, this field was entire empt from their ravages.—Ed. R

NEW MODE OF DESTROYING THE GRUB OR CUT WORM.—The destr of crops by the cut worm is incalc in most parts of the United State countless remedies have been offer not one strikes us more forcibly th following taken from the Genesee mer. The whole secret consists i ing up the ground with the plou rring the winter, so as to freeze the A correspondent of Judge Tucker "one of my neighbors wishing to t experiment, broke up one of his fiel joining the field of another neigh the two being separated only by a fence—during warm spells in the ter, when the ground ploughed the day would freeze at night. spring following he again broke u ground and planted it in corn, but cut worm was to be seen the whol son;—while his neighbor who rid the idea of breaking up ground i winter to prevent the cut worm fr stroying the corn also broke up spring and planted it also in corn what was his surprise when he s field filled with cut worms and his almost destroyed, while the adj field of his neighbor remained un ted." The writer says, many simil periments have been made, and w niversal good success.—Cultivator.

KICKING COWS.—It is not unfre ly the case, that cows excellent for acquire some habit that materially sens their value, and of these inj habits that of kicking is perhaps the common. Bowing up one fore leg ing both hind legs together, holdi the horns, and various other me have been resorted to, in order to up the practice, but frequently wi avail. Mr. Kidder has communica the Hancock Agricultural Socloty, a which he pronounces an effectual and which he thus describes:

"Noticing the position of a cow kicking which was to drop the hea curve up the back, I thought I would a new and simple method to cure After tying her in the stanchels as u I made one end of a rope fast round horns, and put the other end ove girth. which was two feet higher the top of the stanchels, and about same distance in front; drew it p tight and fastened it to a stud. Th effectualty secured her, that she milked with the most perfect ease safety; and after practicing this me of tying a few times, she gave no trouble. Several subsequent trials proved this method not only superi all others as an effectual remedy, b is so very easy and simple that a fe or a boy can secure a cow without culty."—Ib.

PIG MANURE FOR FRUIT TREES.—I ticed in your last number a pargra giving an account of a new mode to mote the growth of trees, now in op tion at Welbeck, an estate of the D of Portland, by confining pigs in pens der them.

As far as I know, its use may be as regards forest trees, but I have kn this method in use about thirty year Kent to promote the growth of the a tree and render it more productive. method originated in consequence o serving those orchards adjoining farm-steads where the pigs constan grazed to be much more productive yielding finer fruit than those orch where the soil was tilled and also su sed to be less subject to blights. this purpose moveable styes are pla on wheels in the pens. The manur powerful and rendered more or less according to the food made use of. T method is generally practiced in the ter season, and its effects are conspicu in the spring, for the trees generally sent a vigorous and healthy appearan and its effect on the soil was equally p erful. In fact it may be rendered too p erful for the trees. It is best used moderation, and occasionally repeat but after all its effects are not so unifo and lasting as in those orchards wh as before observed, swine constan graze and are fed.

The Chinese smoke 30,000 chests opium annually.

THE RECORDER.

ZANESVILLE.

CDNESDAY, ... NOVEMBER 4, 1840.

Yesterday the remains of Wm. George, ne cutter, of this vicinity, were deposi- in the silent mansion. He was an in- strious, honest man; but for several ars has been afflicted with mental aber- ion.

ELECTIONS.—It is now admitted on all nds that the administration party had mall majority of the popular vote at late State Election of Pennsylvania; that the whigs have a majority in the gislature.

PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION.—In this State counties heard from, have generally en an increased majority for the Har- on ticket over the vote for State officers. this county, the vote of the 30th over t of the 13th is near 300. A note warded to us, states;—whig majority 19 counties in Pennsylvania 18055,— n over the vote of 1836, 8739.

A Convention will be held on the 19th his instant, in Cincinnati, O., to sus- the efforts which are now making, the friends of the Sabbath, to procure observance of the Lord's day, along great commercial thoroughfares of the st. We have had a letter of invita- and should be glad to attend if our lic duties would permit.

Some of our readers have noticed the troversy, in our columns, between the S. S. Parr, of the first Baptist Church, his town, and the Rev. W. H. Lawder, the Methodist Episcopal Church, in tion to Butterworth's Concordance, the subject of baptism. It appears Mr. Lawder wrote a communication the Western Christian Advocate, ch was published in that journal, but the editors refused to publish Mr. r's reply thereto. We learn this from Columbus Cross and Journal of the ultimo, which contains Mr. P.'s re- with a preface. It is not our inten- to give any opinion as to the merits his controversy; or as to who has nifested the most exceptionable tem- , but we do intend to say such a rse as this is beneath the character of respectable journal; because, it is ently unjust to admit the attacks of man and not the defence of the other. r play, gentlemen editors! Let every defend himself, in his own way, who tacked in your columns, and let the lic be the judge of the whole matter.

WESTERN FARMER AND GARDINER.—We e frequently noticed this work. It is nthly magazine of 24 pages, edited published in Cincinnati, Ohio, at $1 annum, by "E. J. Hopper, assisted Thomas Affleck, on Horticulture," d dedicated to Agriculture, Horticul- and Rural Economy." Its subjects illustrated by elegant cuts and plates. s paper was commenced by G. G. re, but has passed, some time since, the hands of the present incumbent. think the gentleman, who now has management of this sheet, well qual- for the task he has undertaken.— read the "Farmer" with interest, frequently supply our Agricultural artment from its pages. The Octo- number, being the first number of the nd volume, is before us, and is not well filled with matter, but is neatly cuted.

We have before suggested to our west- agriculturalists, the propriety of pat- izing an agricultural paper conducted ng us, in preference to those edited he North and East, whose experi- nts and reasonings, though interesting ll whom they may concern, are not, any means, adapted to our climate soil. We offered our service to act gent for this paper,—one sent his dol- to us. If more will follow the exam- we will take pleasure in forwarding he editor, and ordering the "Western mer" directed to their address.

For the Western Recorder.

Mr. Editor: I have a very interesting orial article in a file of papers, edited published by the editor of the West- Recorder, in 1834, under a different e, the object of which, is to account the change of the name of Moxahala onathan's creek. In said publication, assert that "Lick-licking, Wakato- a, Tuscarawas and other tributaries he Muskingum river, still retain the es given them by the aborigines of country." According to the best rmation we can obtain in this vicini- the head waters of the Licking creek,) the opinion advanced by you in the above quoted sentence is incorrect, as relates to our stream.

There resides in Utica, Licking county, Ohio, and old pioneer, who is now nearly ninety years of age, and entirely blind, by the name of Elias Hughes, who for many years, prior to the year 1800, served his country in the West, in the capacity of a scout and spy against the Indians. He, with another pioneer, by the name of Ratliff, now deceased, settled on "the Bowling Green," contiguous to the Licking creek, so called by Captain Brady, who with his scouting party from the Monongahela river, passed there on their way from Whitewoman to the Ohio river, about the year 1792.—Hughes and Ratliff were the first settlers on the Licking creek, and it is understood that they commenced the settlement of the Bowling Green, soon after the treaty of Greenville, in 1795—certainly before the close of the last century. From these old pioneers, and from other early settlers, I believe the information is obtained, that the beautiful stream now called Licking, was by the aborigines of this country called Pataskala, a name, which ought, by common consent, to be restored, if it be true, that it was the original name of our stream.

How is it? Am I correct? You are an old settler, and must, in early times, have heard of the pioneers, whether or not our stream retains its Indian name.

INQUIRER.

Head Waters of Licking, October 23, 1840.

Our intelligent correspondent wishes to know whether he or we are correct, in relation to Lick-Licking retaining its Indian name. We will answer this interrogatory by relating an incident which happened in Frankfort, Ky. It is stated that Henry Clay, while in the zenith of his splendid talents, was called on to plead a case in Frankfort, which having excited much interest, had drawn out a court-house full of people to hear the discussion. Clay had an able competitor by the name of McDaniel, who opened the cause with a masterly speech. When he closed, a Dutchman, who had listened to him with great attention, said to a gentleman by his side, "he's right." After which, Clay rose and put forth one of his most astonishing efforts; on his closing, the Dutchman exclaimed, "Py sure, he's right too!"

We say to "Inquirer," we think it highly probable that we are both right. The key that unlocks the difficulty, is, Pataskala and Lick-Licking are names used to designate this beautiful stream by different nations of Indians. That different nations did inhabit this country is a fact known to the early pioneers; and that they spoke different languages, and called things by different names is also known to those conversant with the subject. Even though these nations, speaking different languages, should call any given stream of water by a peculiar characteristic, owing to the arbitrary nature of sounds, which are the signs of ideas, we should have different words to designate the same stream. For instance, Wakatomica, we were told in early day, would be, when Englished, Crooked creek; but in the language of what nation, we do not remember.

The way the Indian names of this country, were transfered to us was merely accidental. It was principally from those who dwelt in captivity with them, who, after learning their names for rivers, mountains, &c., returning to the English settlements, would bring a knowledge of them home. As captives dwelt with different nations, a portion of the names of each would be likely to come into the possession of the whites to be retained for posterity.

That some nations spoke a smoother and more harmonious language than others, we think appears evident, from the names we find on record. For instance, how much more agreeable to the ear are the words Ohio, Scioto, Muskingum, &c., than the barbarous sounds, Tuscarawas, Wakatomica, Kanhaway, &c.

The Indians, as all the sons of nature elsewhere, usually name their children, their rivers and their mountains, from some quality or circumstance connected with them. Instance,—the Muskingum received its appellation from the clearness of its waters, which the sons of the forest tho't resembled the transparency of the "Elk's Eye." The name should be written Moosekingum, Moose being an Indian name for Elk. We give this on the authority of an aged and intelligent man, who now resides, or did a few years since, in Columbus, Ohio, and who lived many years in captivity with the Indians on the Moosekingum or Elk's eye river.

The very sounds, Lick-Licking and Hock-Hocking, bear evident marks of their Indian origin. But we doubt not the venerable Hughes may be correct in saying his nation of Indians called this stream Pataskala; this and Lick-Licking would be the names of two distinct nations, each speaking a different language, for the same stream. If these views be correct, "Inquirer's" argument in favor of restoring to Licking the appellation of Pataskala, looses its force, because one aboriginal name can have no preference with us to another, saying nothing about the difficulty it would introduce into the maps and records of the country.

We will be thankful to "Inquirer," or any one else, to favor us with any "Western" incidents which may be in their possession; our very name imports we are desirous to be a "Recorder" of such events.

BATES' CREEK.—This is a branch of Wills creek, of the Muskingum, and received its name from the following occurrence; a party of scouters in the Indian war, had pitched their tents on its banks, to tarry for the night. A man by the name of Bates being one of the party, and full of youth and vigor, kept constantly tripping and plucking his companions, and bantering them to wrestle, until he became rather annoying to the company. At last, one of his fellows being provoked by his banterings and mischief, accepted his challenge, took hold of him, and by a sudden effort threw him into the stream, which was considerably swollen with the rains, and ducked him finely, to the no small amusement of the party, who all agreed to call the creek thenceforward after his name.

WEE GEE.—Is the name of a stream putting into the Ohio river from the west, some seven or eight miles below Wheeling, which received its name as follows: A hunting or scouting party who had been reconoitering the wilderness, west of the Ohio, were returning to the settlements; on passing the mouth of this stream, which was very crooked, as they had been giving names to a number of others, one of the party inquired what this should be called,—an Irishman answered, the Wa Ga, this being a sort of cant phrase with him to indicate the serpentine course of the stream at its mouth. So, trifling are the incidents which frequently give names that are to last to the end of time. These facts we have from Esquire Johnson, who was with both the parties alluded to, who now resides in Woodfield, and who is the younger of the two boys that killed the two Indians, an account of which we have before published.

PRICES CURRENT.

ZANESVILLE.—Wheat in this town is firm at 50 cents per bushel; Flour, per barrel, $3.

PITTSBURGH.—Flour—Sales from wagons and boats $3,37½ a 3,40, and from stores $3,50 a 3,75 per barrel.

Grain—Wheat, 55, Rye 37½ a 40; Corn 35, a 37½ Barley dull at 40 cents.—Harris 31 ult.

BALTIMORE.—Flour. There is a small decline in the price of Howard street Flour since our last report, the principle sales (not exceeding 1000 barrels,) from stores having been made at 4,90 for good common brands. There have also been sales at 4,94 a 5, the latter for a select brand, but in general the demand is any thing else than animated. The car and wagon price is unsettled, 4,87½ to a fraction less.

Western Transportation.—We continue the rates of transportation by Wagons to Wheeling, are noticed in our last, at 1,50, and to Pittsburgh, 1,25 per 100 lbs.—Lyford 31*st*, ult.

ITEMS.

The Rev. Hiram Chamberlain has been installed as Paster of the Presbyterian Church of St. Charles, Mo.

The Boston Democrat states that the nett proceeds of the Elssler benefit for Bunker Hill Monument Fund, has been received by the Treasurer, amounting to five hundred and sixty-nine dollars.

The people of Alexandria, D. C., have decided by a large majority to apply for permission to "go back" to Virginia.

Eclipses.—Some of the astronomers say there will be six eclipses next year. We say seven; two of the sun, four of the moon, and one of the divine Fanny. Her rival Cerito is coming.

New Methodist College.—The new Methodist Conference at Providence, R. I., have determined to locate a college within their bounds, and the village of East Greenwich has been chosen as the site for the institution.

The old man who was killed on the Baltimore Rail Road, near Wilmington, last week, was deaf. His name was James Wright, and was a resident of Wilmington.

In the single township of Aurora, Ohio from 250 to 300 tons cheese are made annually.

Dr. D. C. Kerr, a very benevolent physician, who had attended the poor of that city for thirty years gratis, died very suddenly of late at New Orleans.

The cotton crop of the United States for the present year is over two million of bales.

Explosion.—The Commercial Bank of Millington, one of the small Maryland shin-plaster institutions, has gone by the board.

Forty-two of the last emigrants to Liberia have died.

It is stated that the Presbytery of New Jersey have recommended the clergy to wear the surplice in the desk.

St. Luke's, a new Episcopal Church, was opened for public worship in Philadelphia on Sunday. It is situated at the "West End," and is described as an exceedingly beautiful building.

Sentence.—John Leddings, convicted at the Oyer and Terminer Court in Albany, of the murder of his wife, in May last, has been sentenced to be hanged on the 4th of December next.

What an Enormous Amount.—Nearly a fourth part of the revenue of Russia is derived from the sale of spirits, it being a government monoploy. It is computed that 82 millions of gallons of brandy alone are drunk by the peasantry of that Empire.

The Hebrews.—The descendants of Israel, resident in Kingston, Jamaica, subscribed and forwarded to London £1200, to be applied towards the expense of Sir Moses Monteflore's mission to the East, in behalf of the suffering Jews at Damascus and Rhodes.

A Vegetable Bonnet.—A bonnet has been exhibiting at the Institute, at Niblo's Garden, New York, made of melon seeds. It contains 8763 seeds, and 17,776 stitches. each taken with a needle! This is a monument of both patience and industry.

☞Marriage of Miss Bonaparte.—La Presse announces the marriage, at Florence of the Princess Amelia, daughter of Jerome Bonaparte, to the rich Russian Count Demidoff. One of the conditions of the marriage contract is that the Count shall never, under any circumstances, bear arms againts France.

The Mysterious Vessel.—The cargo of the Spanish bark Rosini, which was picked up by wreckers under such mysterious circumstances, and taken into Nassau, N. P,. is valued at $190000. Nothing has as yet transpired to unravel the deep mystery which surrounds the vessel.

A late English paper says that on the death of the late Mr. Blundell, of Ince, upwards of £23,000 in money, was found in different parts the his house; 18,000 (and odd) sovereigns in an iron chest in his bed-room, 5,000*l.* in gold and notes in a bureau, &c. This was comfortable for the heirs, "in these times."

☞After all, they say that the Fanny Elssler Benefit for the Bunker Hill Monument only amounted to $590; and the ladies of New England, concerned in getting up the late fair, object to any of the amount being received. It has created a warm discussion in Boston.

DRUNKENNESS AND ITS CONSEQUENCES.—The Capt. of the Lord William Bentrick, which, was recently lost on the rocks of Bombay, and a number of lives lost, is said in English papers to have been drunk at the time, and that he was killed by falling down the main hatch way soon after the ship struck.

A slave vessel under Arab colors was captured by H. B. M. ship Curlew, on the South African coast, 21st of May. She was called the Yaruga. She had nineteen slaves on board. About the same time a slaver brigantine was captured by H.B.M. brig Wizzard, near Cape Frio. The crew escaped.

THE HUMAN FRAME.—Man has 60 bones in his legs and thighs, 62 in his arms and hands, 66 in his head, and 67 in his trunk. He also has 434 muscles in the structure of his body, and his heart has 3840 pulsations in the space of an hour.

In one town in Vermont, it is said that all the adult inhabitants but three are professors of religion, and that nearly all belong to the same denomination of christians.

Ignorance.—We notice that a lady, the wife of Mr. Jos. Raymond, of Plymouth, Mass., who was accidentally shot in the arm, bled to death while the physician was ruuning for his instruments. If the man had possessed presence of mind enough to make a tourniquet of his handkerchief and a fork, this need not have happened.

Embarkation.—Two hundred and twenty-two recruits for the 7th Infantry, under the command of Lieut. J. Van Horne, 3d Infantry, were embarked yesterday on board the ship Gen. Parkhill, for Pilatka, Florida, via Savannah. Lieut. Stephen, 3d Infantry, Lieuts. Sherwood, and Humber, 7th Infantry, and Lieut. Lugenbeel, 8th Infantry, were attached to the command.

COMFORTABLE FOR AN OLD LADY.—A late Brighton (England) Gazette state that a poor woman, named Vincent, who is eighty-five years of age residing at St. John's common, has recently come into possession of £8,000, being a legacy bequeathed to her by a relative. She had for many years chiefly subsisted on charity; but she now talks of taking a farm!

A Philidelphia paper says: "At the Franklin Institute Exhibition, one night last week, a gentleman had his pocket-book returned to him by the police, before he was aware it had been stolen! They had suspected and wached a thief whom they arrested immediately after the larceny, and before he could make way with the plunder."

Texas Filling Up.—A letter in the Galveston Sun, Sept. 13th, says:—From the 2d September, 1839, to the 2d September, 1840, there were one thousand and sixty-six arrivals at the port of Galveston from foreign countries; and four thousand and three hundred and sevnty-six passengers arrived within the same time.

"James, who was the first Whig?"—"Noah, Sir." "Why?" "Because he built the first log cabin!"

Business Department.

RECEIVED PAY FOR RECORDER.

From W. Reeves for H. Stanford,	$2 00
" " for P. Camp,	2 00
" Wm. Kidd,	1 00
" S. F. Baker for D. Waggoner,	2 50
" " for A. T. Jones,	2 00
" " for Curtis & Williams,	50
" A. C. Barnes for E. Wisbey,	2 00
" J. Springer for P. P. Morgan,	1 00
" B. Ely for J. Slade,	2 00
" W. W. Paul for J. Burton,	2 00
" " for A. D. Amos,	5 00
" " for J. Johnson,	5 00
" " for W. Williams,	2 00
" " for T. Shipp,	2 00
" " for D. Johnson,	2 00
" " for G. Dunbar,	1 00
($3 of which are not rec'd.)
" S. Bloomer for G. Ringle,	2 00
" L. M. Cochran for W. Gabb,	2 00
" J. Armstrong,	1 00
" C. Caddy for D. Yantees,	2 00
" W. Marshall for J. Grimes,	2 50
" A. H. Bassett for T. Hansel,	2 00
" " for W. Smith,	2 00
" " for G. Smith,	2 00
" " for Naomi Sill,	2 00

LETTERS RECEIVED.

J. Simpson,
J. S. Hull,
A. Smith, money rec'd.
A. C. Barns,
J. G. Lamper, 1 sub'r.
A. M. Scott, 2 subs.
J. Robinson, 2 subs.
J. A. Hanby,
B. Ely,
D H Stephens, Allice, O.
Geo. Clancy,
T. Foster, 2 subs.
J. Robinson,
T. S. Stillwell,
M. Scott,
C. Woodruff,
E. H. McCoy, M. D.
W. Rowan,
G. W. Arnold, 1 sub'r.
B. Dotson,
"A Desciple,"
S. F. Baker,
W. Workman,
J. Herbert,
J. W. Williams,
W. W. Paul, 1 sub'r.
S. Bloomer,
"Inquirer,"
L. M. Cochran, 2 subs.
Geo. Hughes, 2 subs.
C. Caddy,
T. Pinnell,
O. White, 1 subscriber.
W. Marshall, and K.G.

As we reside out of town, any person who may have business with this office, can have it attended to, by calling on OLCUTT WHITE, No. 104, Main street.

Some of the hands in our office, put in our last, a notice of the first quarterly meeting for this (Zanesville) circuit. As we were not informed as to the time, we presumed it to be correct; but we learn the meeting is to commence next Saturday, instead of Saturday week, as the notice specified.

Br. Scott will find his papers in Jackson post office.

Those wishing to address A. H. BASSETT, President of the Ohio Conference, will find him by directing their letters, either to Cincinnati, or Jackson, Butler, Ohio.

Br. Bloomer, R. Reed is credited on our books $2, but R. Coulter, nothing; you had better jog the memory of the person to whom you paid.

Br. L. M. Cochran, of Brooklyn, Ohio, had forwarded to him a small box of Books from Baltimore, in June last, containing four dozen Hymn Books and one dozen Disciplines, to the care of W. A. Otis, Cleveland, Ohio, which have never came to hand. Will the Book Agent, at Baltimore, be so good as to say in the Protestant, to what house he consigned these books, on the road, so that they may be hunted up? Or, if any of our readers have any knowledge of them, if they will communicate to us we will let Br. C. know.

The first quarterly meeting for Adamsville circuit will be held at the Hopewell meeting house, in the neighborhood of A. Gettings, Sr., on the 21st and 22d inst. Brs. W. Reeves, Thrap, Fairchild and N. Linder, are invited to attend.

T. FOSTER, Sup.

RICHWOOD, O., 29th Oct., 1840.

The Protestant Methodists held a qarterly meeting here on Saturday, Sunday and Monday—7 joined the Church—several of whom professed religion on the occasion, and those that did not had professed it before.

Among those that professed to get religion was a young man by the name of Scott, who was one of the rabble that assaulted the house of Mr. Summerville, a few miles from the brick meeting house in Licking county, on a camp-meeting occasion, of which I understand you were an inmate. He appears to be equally as zealous in his religious enterprise as he was in the pursuit of wickedness. His first check was the death of an elder brother and companion in sin, who died 3 or 4 weeks since.

The weather yesterday and to-day has been wet and disagreeable.

I remain your most obedient nephew,

C. SPRINGER HAMILTON.

Wholesale Prices Current.

CORRECTED WEEKLY FOR THE WESTERN RECORDER BY SPERRY & ABBOT,

(Successors to Geo. Reeve & Son,)

Wholesale and Retail Grocers, No. 96, Main St. Zanesville, Ohio.

ARTICLES.		FROM.	TO.
Almonds, hard shell,	pound.	8	9
" soft shell,	"	16	18¼
Allum,	"		9
Alspice,	"		12½
Apples, green picked,	barrel.	1.12½	1.50
Bacon, Hams,	pound.		12½
" Shoulders,	"		8
" Sides,	"	½	11
Beans, white,	bush'l.	62½
Butter, keg,	pound.	7	8
Beeswax,	"	23	25
Brazil Nuts,	"	10	11
Corn, in ear,	bush'l.	20	25
Candles, Sperm,	pound	48	49
" Mould,	"	18	23
" Dipped,	"		10
Coffee, Rio,	"	14	14½
" Java,	"	17	18
" Havana,	"	14	14½
" Laguira,	"	15	16½
Cheese, Western Reserve,	"	8	9
" Country,	"		8
Copperas,	"	4½	5½
Cinnamon,	"		28
Cloves,	"		45
Feathers,	"		40
Flaxseed,	bush'l.		62½
Flour,	barrel.		3.00
Filberts,	pound.	8	9
Fish—Mackerel, No. 1,	barrel.		——
" No. 2,	"	18.50
" No. 3,	"	14.50
Dry Cod,	pound.	6	6½
Herring,	box.	1.00	1.25
Ground Ginger,	"	13	15
Glass, 7 by 9,	box.		3.75
" 8 by 10,	"		3.75
" 10 by 12,	"		4.75
Hay,	ton.	7	8
Indigo,	pound.	162½	1.75
Leather, Spanish Sole,	"	24	26
" Country "	"	——	——
Lead, bar,	"	7	7½
Nutmegs,	"		162½
Madder,	"	15½	18
Molasses, New Orleans,	gallon.		45
" West India,	"
Oil, Flaxseed,	"		87½
" W. Sperm,	"	——	162½
" Refined whale,	"	00	1.25
Oats,	bush'l.	18	20
Pepper,	pound.		12½
Potatoes,	bush'l.	20	22
Plaster Paris,	ton.	23.00	2500
Rice, North Carolina,	pound.	——	6½
Raisins, Bloom,	box.	2.75	3 00
" Smyrna,	"	——	3.50
" Muscatil.	"	2.50	3.00
Soap, Rosin,	pound.	——	7
" Castile,	"	19	20
Shot, Nos. 2, 3 and 4,	bag.	2.25	237½
Salt,	bush'l.	31	35
Sugar, New Orleans,	pound.	——	8½
" Muscavado,	"	8½	10
" White Havana,	"		15
" Brown "	"		13½
Tea, Young Hyson,	"	75	85
" Gunpowder	"	80	90
" Imperial,	"	——	70
" Black,	"	——	——
Tobacco, Kentucky Twist,	"	12	12½
" Cavendish,	"	31	44
Tallow Rendered,	"	8
Vinegar,	barrel.	4.50	6.00
Wheat,	bush'l.		50

THE
CHRISTIAN WORLD.

1. THE editor desires AGENTS in every District, in the METHODIST PROTESTANT CHURCH.
2. He desires his friends to secure AGENTS for him in OTHER CHURCHES.
3. He will allow $25 of every $125, collected, as remuneration.
4. He particularly requests the AGENTS of the LETTER-PRESS to continue their agency.
5. He will DEDUCT for any Nos. of the Letter-Press not received.
6. He will forward to AGENTS, CIRCULARS, &c.
7. He wishes, quickly, NAMES and RESIDENCES of Agents, with COLLECTIONS.

According to the decision of the Post Master General, subscribers to this work will be charged only ordinary newspaper postage.

The editor takes pleasure in stating that the work has been approved by the voice of the press, generally, RELIGIOUS, LITERARY and POLITICAL. The next number will furnish a considerable variety of notices relating to its plan, appearance, &c. Its correspondents are multiplying, including several of the first names in the various churches. THS. H. STOCKTON.

Philadelphia, Nov. 4, 1840. 63tf

Winslow's Compound
BALSAM OF HOARHOUND.

UNRIVALED and unequaled in curing Colds, Coughs, Asthma, Influenza, Whooping Cough, and all diseasus of the Breast and Lungs, leading to Consumption, composed of the concentrated virtues of the herbs Hoarhound, Boneset, and several other vegetable substances, warrnted pure from any mineral whatever.

Sold by A. LIPPITT and S. GATES.

Zanesville, Nov. 4. 64tf

Notice.

BOOKS, Stationery, and Printer's Ink, for sale by A. LIPPITT.

Main st., No. 72, Zanesville, Nov. 4. 63tf

DRUGS, Medicines, Paints, Dayestuffs, Oils, and Spirits Turpentine. Cheap for cash or good horses, by A. LIPPITT.

Zanesville, Nov. 4. 63tf.

Partnership Notice.

THE sudscribers have formed a co-partnership under the firm of POTTS & GRAHAM, for the transaction of a general mercantile business; and will occupy for that purpose the old stand of Spear & Helmick, where their friends and others wishing to purchase goods, are respectfully solicited to call.

FRANCIS R. POTTS,
NELSON W. GRAHAM.

Putnam, Ohio, Nov. 4. 63tf

New and Cheap Goods.

POTTS & GRAHAM, are now enabled by a fresh arrival of FALL and WINTER GOODS, to offer to the public a very general assortment of all articles in their line. Their stock is almost ENTIRELY NEW, and embraces a complete supply of DRY GOODS, GROCERIES, QUEENSWARE, HARDWARE, &c. All of which they will sell upon such terms, and conduct their business throughout upon such principles, as cannot fail to afford permanent satisfaction to all who may favor them with their custom.

☞Most kinds of country produce, including any quantity of new Butter, will be taken in exchange for goods.

Putnam, Ohio, Nov. 4. 63tf

MAGISTRATES' BLANKS, neatly executed at this office.

SELECTIONS.

CHINA.—ITS EARLY HISTORY.

We have recently given several articles in relation to China. The last number of the Westminster Review furnishes us with materials for another. The subject still possess deep interest, as well because of the unadjusted condition of affairs between that empire and Great Britain, as because the people of this country have, until within a short period, paid very little attention, comparatively speaking, to the manners, customs, history and ability of the Chinese as a nation. The empire is the oldest existing on the face of the earth; and on glancing at the stream of time in which the progress of nations is illustrated, one cannot but be struck with surprise, that while so many have risen, flourished, and tottered to their fall, China, with its hundreds of millions of inhabitants, should have so long kept on its course, and with so little change in its great national position and features. It is a matter of equal surprise and of interest, that a question like that of the introduction of opium into the country, should, because resisted by the Government, and for a moral object, lead to a conflict, and with a power that professes Christianity in so eminent a degree as Great Britain. According to the Westminster Review, the Chinese appear to have existed apart, as a distinct family, on the same spot where they were planted, when the world was first made the habitation of human beings. The Chinese, as early as the date of Thebes, had attained a settled form of government and a high state of civilization, and have maintained in the East, for several thousand years, the same comparative intellectual rank which the English, French and Germans hold in Europe. The following is an account of the three earliest emperors, according to Chinese historians:

Fuh-he, it is said, began to reign 3369 B. C., when the Chinese are described as being in an uncivilized state. One authority says, that "the people at this time lived on the spontaneous productions of the soil;" another that "man at this period differed little from the beast, knowing that he had a mother, but knowing not his father;" no form of marriage being then observed. "When thirsty or hungry, he sought drink and food, and clothed himself with the skins of animals," which, in after ages, became articles of barter. Fuh-he is introduced as "teaching the people how to catch fish, and how to cultivate the soil," as "the inventor of the Pa-kwa," or eight diagrams, by which, with "the use of knotted cords, he recorded the events of his government;" as being the originator of "numerals," &c., and "the inventor of the musical instruments, sih and kin." It is stated by Chinese historians that he reigned 115 years, and was succeeded by—

Shin-nung (or the divine Nung,) 3254 B. C. We are told of him, that from his youth he made himself acquainted with the five kinds of grain, and all kinds of shrubs and vegetables, especially those possessing medicinal virtues. Shin-nung felled the tree to make a plough, and taught the people agriculture, as well as the healing art. By him days were appointed for regular barter. He died at Chakin after reigning (as stated) 140 years.

During this reign Shuh-sha, the governor of a province, revolted, and slew the minister Ke, sent to remonstrate with him and bring him back to his allegiance. Shin-nung, shocked at the crime, took blame to himself, and became more than ever intent upon cultivating virtue, and exercising a mild government. The followers of the rebel Shuh-sha, equally indignant at the conduct of their leader, came and submitted themselves to their liege lord. This is the first mention of murder by the Chinese.

Hwang-te ascendsd the throne 2732 B. C. He was remarkable as a child. It is said that he was able to speak while an infant in the arms, and that he grew up distinguished for his wisdom. Another revolt was subdued by the monarch's superior military tactics. One of the odes in the "She-king," alluding to this period, describes man as "more ferocious than the wild boar or tiger." The invention of the sword, battle-axe, and large bow, is ascribed to one of the nobles, Che-yew, who declared war, was defeated, made prisoner, and slain by the Kenn-yuen, (Hwang-te) whom the nobles proclaimed emperor. At this time Tsang-hee improved the mode of recording events, adopted by Fuh-he, by the invention of written characters which may be traced to those invented by Tsang-hee.

About this time we find the minister Yung-ching ordered to erect an orrery to assist certain officers in recording the phenomena of the heavenly bodies, and calculating the revolutions of the sun, moon, and stars. Another minister, Le-show, is said to have explained the principles of Arithmetic, and to have fixed a standard for weights and measures, which with slight alterations, exist to the present day. Ling-lun received imperial orders to correct the popular music. The empress Yuen was requested to instruct the people in rearing the silkworm, and in weaving cloth for garments. The land was divided into acres.

The emperor died at King-shan, after reigning (according to the historians) 100 years. Great are the praises bestowed upon him. His actions are described as having accorded with the fixed laws of heaven and earth, and with the decisions of fate; his virtues as having equalled the benevolence of heaven and earth; and hence, it is said his people were happy. Another writer says of him,—"His eminent virtues were diffused thro' the empire; we glory in his benevolence. Though dead, he lies es in our affections."

Further details of the succeeding monarchs are given; but our limits prevent us from referring to them at any length. The Chinese were frequently subjected to struggles with the half civilized but warlike tribes on their borders, and about 1000 years before the birth of Christ, the eastern foreigners are spoken of as exceedingly troublesome, and as compelling the Imperial Court to retire to the centre of the Empire. 800 years later —about 213 B. C. the celebrated wall of China, extending 1500 miles was built. About this time the law of non-intercourse with other nations, was adopted. About the fifth century, the Tartars took possession of the North and West of China, and the Empire became divided into two kingdoms. These were united again 400 years after. A. D. 1240, China was invaded by the Western Tartars or Moguls under Genghis Ghan, who took Pekin in 1215. By the year 1280, the whole of China had submitted. In 1367, the Tartars were again driven out by Choo, a Chinese General, who assumed the title of Emperor, and founded the last of the Chinese dynasties called the Ming dynasty. In 1644, the Tartars were again conquerors, and in 1682, the whole empire was totally reduced by the Tartar General Kang He. He was the founder of the existing or Tait Sing dynasty. Confucius, the celebrated moralist and law-giver, was born 552 B. C.

"In all the several phases through which the Chinese advanced—from barbararism to a comparatively high state of civilization—they seem to have believed in the existence of a Supreme Being, whose almighty power they recognized, and to whom a national worship was addressed. Besides offerings to Heaven, national sacrifices were offered up to the mountains for their genial influences, and to the powers or gods supposed to preside over the earth, for luxuriant crops, and even to the deities of wood, rivers, &c. But about the year A. D. 560, one of the emperors of the Leang dynasty busied himself sedulously in introducing Budhism and Budhism or Boodhism is now the religion of at least one-third of the inhabitants of China, as it is also that of the Birman empire and of a great part of Asia, but modified more or less in different countries by other superstitions. Priests, however, of no religion are a class much esteemed in China.—They are generally poor, dirty in their habits, and lead a mendicant kind of life.

"The arts of literature in China are almost as ancient as the monarchy. Printing from wooden blocks (which, for Chinese purposes, are superior to our metal types) was known in China certainly many centuries before the Christian Era, although with us so modern an invention that it is yet but but 400 years old in Europe. Paper of the same quality as that now in use, made of the bamboo, and although thinner, less easily torn than our own, is said to have been invented 105 years B. C. Long before this period paper of inferior qualities had been in general use."

The celebrated emperor who built the great wall of China, is described as having been a tyrant and a madman. Having been censured during his life by different writers he resolved to destroy the press, and strangle or imprison all who were connected with it. All ancient records were committed to the flames, and 460 persons who resisted, were murdered.—Two years afterwards, the emperor died, literature revived, and has since flourished.

The system of government, says the Reviewer, is on the whole, favorable to the industry of the people, and the extent to which it was once supposed population presses in China upon the means of subsistence is an entire delusion. The working classes are contented, the rights of property are respected, and there exists in China, as in England, a large wealthy middle class. Chinese servants we have found in our own experience as faithful and trustworthy as those of England, and among their merchants instances are on record of some who have risked their lives to fulfil an engagement.

The Reviewer expresses an opinion that all the difficulties between the Chinese and the English, have arisen from the blunders of the officers of the two nations, neither understanding, and each perverting and misrepresenting the conduct of the others. The beginning of the rupture, he says, may be partly traced to the mere verbal mistakes of Lord Napier and others, in taking offence where none was intended, and in a profound contempt for Chinese established forms and usages, which we have never given ourselves the trouble to understand.

He adds:

"It is our ignorance alone of the Chinese language (as shown in our translation of their official documents) that has led us to conclude that the Chinese are wanting in courtesy and attention to foreigners, or are in the habit of using nicknames and insulting expressions. So far from this being the case, they have a proverb which says, 'He that spits dirt, first defiles his own mouth.' Personally in our intercourse with them we have never found them neither apt to give or take offence. They are not, like hot and hasty persons, in the habit of losing their tempers on slight occasions, but are generally cool and collected, and much more willing than ourselves to forget, instead of resenting, an affront."

The writer of the article, who resided a number of years at Canton, says:

"Whether just or not, there will be, perhaps has been, no difficulty in making reprisals, or in other words, seizing the property of Chinese subjects, to indemnify our opium merchants for the loss they have sustained; but we do not feel quite so certain of our power to force the Chinese government to resume with us the commercial relations which have been interrupted. Commerce is the creature of confidence, not of fear. The moral influence of the government over the whole people of China is, perhaps, greater than we suspect; and that whatever influence it may possess will be exerted to stir up Chinese feelings of nationality and pride against foreigners, there is no doubt. The result of a similar quarrel in the case of the Dutch and Japanese, was to exclude the Dutch altogether from the ports of Japan, which their ships have now not entered for the last 198 years!"

He adds in a note:

"It is to be remarked that the value of the opium would not have been lost if it had not been seized, but simply returned on the hands of the consignees. We are not, however, defending the conduct of Commissioner Lin, who clearly put his Government in the wrong, by placing Captain Elliot under restraint, and by so doing has afforded the British smuggler a chance of realizing the full amount of his shipment. Up to that time the blame was wholly on our side. We were smuggling a prohibited drug, with the connivance of the viceroy, it is true, but still in defiance of repeated proclamations from the Imperial government; and instead of employing agents with powers like those exercised by the Supercargoes of the East India Company, by whom the trade was formerly kept in some sort of check, we send over superintendents armed with no authority, and backed by no adequate display of force, by whom the opium trade was allowed to run riot till at last it forces itself upon the attention of the government at Pekin, and is put down by the strong hand."—Bicknell.

BRITISH POST OFFICE.—We have been favored by Captain Joseph C. Delano, of packet ship Patrick Henry, with a sheet which he prepared for his acquaintance, showing the operation of the new British Post Office system. From it we select the following items:

Letters not exceeding half an ounce in weight may be sent through the kingdom for one penny and in the same proportion for greater weights. The rates are double if the postage is not paid in advance.

Letter to and from the United States, if sent by packet, twelve times, and if by private ship, eight times the above rates. This applies to Cunard's line, and includes the inland postage.

Letter from foreign ports for the Continent (except France) must be post paid in England, or they will be opened and returned.

Newspapers for foreign places by packets or private ships, pay 2d. each, and for this are sent to any part of England.

British newspapers pass through the mails free.—Journal of Commerce.

A Plan to relieve the Literary Institution

OF THE

METHODIST PROTESTANT CHURCH.

Whereas, the Methodist Protestant Church, of the Ohio and Pittsburgh Districts, for the purpose of establishing a Literary Institution, in the year 1836, purchased the farm of two hundred and fifty acres of land, known as the "Mount Pleasant Farm," situated about two miles north of Lawrenceburgh, in Indiana; the purchase money whereof, with other debts incurred and now due from said Methodist Protestant Church, amount to twelve thousand five hundred dollars. that the purchase money now due is a lien on said farm;—that John Haughton and William Disney, acting as Trustees for said Methodist Protestant Church, are personally liable for the payment of all the debts of said Institution.

Now in order to pay said debts, and release said Trustees from their liabilities, the said M. P. Church have released all their interest in the real estate aforesaid, to the said Haughton and Disney, who have heretofore held the legal title thereof, for the sole use of such subscribers as shall take up the stock, and donors, as specified in the following plan, for the purpose of liquidating the debts of said Literary Institution, on the plan here proposed, viz:

PLAN.

The beneficial and equitable interest of said real estate shall be and is hereby divided into two thousand five hundred shares of five dollars each, equal in all to twelve thousand five hundred dollars.

That each subscriber shall be a part owner or said premises in proportion to the stock by him subscribed and paid for; Provided, he pays all he is required to pay by the terms of this plan.

If any subscriber at any time shall refuse to pay up the balance that may be due on his stock subscription, that the money so by him then already paid shall be considered a donation to said Methodist Protestant Church, for the purpose of liquidating the debt of said Literary Institution generally, and may be so applied accordingly.

The subscriber shall pay one dollar on each share subscribed, at the time of subscribing, and one dollar on each share so by him subscribed, on each succeeding ninety-one days, until his whole stock be paid up; Provided, it shall be, by Daniel H. Horn, Harvey Hall, and Shadford Easton, or a majority of them, Trustees, or their successors in office, thought necessary, and the subscribers shall be called on to pay the same.

Unless stock to the amount of eleven thousand dollars shall be subscribed, and the sum of two thousand two hundred dollars shall be paid in, no subscriber shall be bound by his subscription; but the money so by him paid, shall be refunded to him, within ninety days after the next Annual Conference.

Daniel H. Horn, H. Hall and Shadford Easton, are hereby named, appointed and vested Trustees, with full power to fill any vacancies that may occur in their board, and to direct the paying out of the money so raised on this plan.

The holders of a majority of the stock may at any time direct a sale of said premises, provided the premises shall sell for a sum sufficient to pay all the debts of said Institution, then unpaid.

The several stockholders shall have one vote for each share of stock, so by them held.

If after the debts of said Literary Institution are all paid, said property still remains on hand, unsold, the holders of a majority of the stock, may dispose of the property, and divide the proceeds among the stockholders and donators, as hereinafter provided, or may dispose of the whole property by donation to the Methodist Protestant Church, as they may in their judgment and liberality think proper.

All sums hereafter donated, shall be applied in payment of debts of the Literary Institution in the same manner, as money paid in on stock subscription.

If on sale of said property, a sum of money shall be procured, more than sufficient to pay the debts of said Literary Institution, then unpaid, the surplus over and above paying the said debts, shall be divided among the stockholders and donators, in proportion to the stock subscribed, and the sum so donated.

1. Resolved, This conference, acting for and on the behalf of the Methodist Protestant Church of the Ohio District, do hereby release, relinquish and convey to John Haughton and William Disney, and their heirs and assigns, all the interest and claim in and to said real estate of the Literary Institutinn of the said M. P. Church. To have and to hold the said property and interest therein for the sole benefit and use of such stockholders as may subscribe for the stock under the plan now proposed, for the purpose of liquidating the debts of said Institution.

2. Resolved, That Br. Green G. Moore be, and is hereby appointed an agent to obtain subscriptions of stock, and receive money thereon, and receive donations, and pay the same to the aforesaid Trustees.

3 Resolved, That it shall be the duty of the superintendent of each circuit and station, to obtain subscriptions for said stock, and receive the money thereon accordingly, and forthwith or as soon as convenient, transmit the same to the said agent at Cincinnati.

For the Western Recorder.

TO THE PREACHERS AND MEMBERS OF THE METHODIST PROTESTANT CHURCH, IN THE WESTERN CONFERENCES, (FORMERLY THE OHIO ANNUAL CONFERENCE.)

The plan of the Ohio Annual Conference, held in Cincinnati, August, 1840, respecting the college property and debts, being submitted to you, I take leave to address you, through the medium of our paper, the Western Recorder, in my own individual name. I witnessed the origin, progress and failure of the Cokesbury College in the old church, and was present when Mr. Asbury received the news of it being burned, and heard his remarks upon the occasion. Not many among us, perhaps, can recollect so far back, even among those of my own age. The part I acted in our case, was that of a servant. I had no responsibility. I offer the advice of an old friend, only. Providence still favors us with a name, and an existence among the churches. We have a name to secure, or to loose. Justice has claims upon us, and we can be just. As a whole people, we are not bankrupt. Our failure in the college enterprize is matter of history. Let us furnish another item for history. Let the pen which records our failure, have to record that we were just, as a people; and then, whenever our history shall be read in the whole world, this shall be spoken of to our praise. Every body will say, that such a people deserved better success. Let us secure the good will of our contemporaries and of posterity, by this test of our public equity and public spirit. Nothing could have happened that will have raised our church reputation so high. Our God and Father who loveth a cheerful giver, loveth also, cheerful justice.—What a spectacle for men and angels to behold! In this new and comparatively poor church, twenty-five hundred men stepping forward, willingly, to pay the uttermost farthing! This being done, will it ever again be said, that we are incapable of self-government? Rather, will it now be the general belief, that such men are capable of any thing great and good. Let us deserve public confidence. Our friends, for whom we should do this thing, I am a witness, were generous and confiding to a failing; they not only regarded our word as being good as our bond, but they intrusted their property, for our use, without our word. Let it never be said that such confidence remains unrequitted. Let us be just to such noble generosity.

Your affectionate brother,

NICHOLAS SNETHEN.

Cincinnati, Sept. 1, 1840.

COMMUNICATION.

NEW LISBON, O., SEPT. 24, 1840.

Br. Springer: Please do me the favor to publish the following appointments:

Wellsville station,	-	-	-	Novem.	1
New Lisbon "	-	-	-	"	8
Monongahela circuit,	-	-	-	"	15
Clarksburgh "	-	-	-	"	22
Suttonsville "	-	-	-	"	29
Weston "	-	-	-	Decem.	6
Middletown "	-	-	-	"	13
Brownsville "	-	-	-	"	20
Union "	-	-	-	"	27

Yours, truly,

Z. RAGAN.

Dissolution.

THE partnership heretojore existing between the subscribers in the PUTNAM FOUNDRY, under the firm of HARTLEY & ANDERSON, was this day dissolved by mutual consent.

The Putnam Foundry will hereafter be conducted by J. J. Anderson & Co.

LEVI HARTLEY,
JACOB J. ANDERSON.

Putnam, Jan. 1, 1840 (Jan. 29: 23.)

CABINET AND CHAIR FACTORY.

THE subscribers still continue to manufacture and keep on hand, at their old stand, a few doors south of the market house in the town of Putnam, a large assortment of

CABINET WARE
AND
CHAIRS,

CONSISTING, IN PART, OF

Splendid black walnut and mahogony dressing and plain bureaus,
Peer, card, center, side, dining and breakfast tables,
Sofas, side-boards, washing stands, ottomans,
Dressing and writing tables,
French, fancy and high post bedsteads,
Secretaries, clock cases, cradles, cribs and book cases,
Grecian, rush, cane and windsor chairs,
Sociables, settees and children's chairs.

In short every thing in their line necessary to furnish a house, either in high or common style; and at such prices as will satisfy all who will favor them with their custom. All the recommendation they have to offer, is, that they have been able to secure a continuance of their old customers and friends. They hope by the quality of their work and a strict attention to business to share a portion of the public patronage.

They have for sale a lot of first rate black walnut veneering and a lot of bureau knobs of the best kind and quality.

Turning done in the best style and shortest notice. CHERRY & GRAY.

Putnam, Ohio, October 28, 1840. 62tf

Proposals

For enlarging and continuing the publication of the "Harrisonian" under the title of

THE ARGUS.

AT the urgent solicitation of a number of the present subscribers to the "HARRISONIAN," we have thought it expedient to make an effort to continue the publication, but under a different name—one more congenial with the times—the present one being a remembrancer of the struggle now going on in our midst,—a struggle between the people and their servants, the office holders.

We do not deem it necessary to enter minutely into a detail of the course to be pursued by the proposed publication, as we are not sufficiently versed in prescience to state with any degree of certainty,—but this much we do say, we will use our best abilities to make it an agreeable and exceptable sheet.

The "ARGUS," in politics, will be Whig.—News, both Domestic and Foreign, will be given to its readers, and that too of the latest dates; Literature, &c. &c.

For the first year, to suit the times, the "ARGUS" will be neatly printed on a super-royal sheet, being two sizes larger than the "HARRISONIAN," on new and small type, so that we will warrant the paper to contain as much reading matter as our larger neighbors.

CONDITIONS.

The "ARGUS" will be printed weekly on a super-royal sheet, at TWO DOLLARS per annum, or, ONE DOLLAR & FIFTY CENTS, if paid in advance.

The publication will be commenced as soon after the first of November, as possible, should it receive sufficient encouragement.

JNO. W. WHITE, } Editors and GEM'L. ARTHUR, } Proprietors.

Zanesville, Oct. 28, 1840. 3w62

Puff! Puff! Puff!!

CHEAP!

CHEAPER THAN EVER! GREAT BARGAINS!

New York at your door!

SELLING OFF AT COST!

WE so heartily despise the "gull-catching" system that we seldom advertise at all. We however give our friends and the public notice that we have just received a fine stock of

FALL AND WINTER
GOODS.

We don't profess to have brought "New York to your doors," nor to undersell every body else, nor to be "selling off at cost," nor to be "closing up," and all that sort of thing,—but we do say, that our goods are cheap enough to satisfy any reasonable person, even in these "hard times."

A. A. GUTHRIE & Co.

Putnam, Ohio, September 30, 1840. w58

STOLEN

FROM the stable of Hamisfar & Brown in Somerset, Perry county, O., on Saturday night, the 19th instant, an old

SORREL HORSE,

very hollow-backed, and much marked with the saddle, his mouth very much cut on one side with the bits, his foretop heavy and lately cut square off above his eyes, shod all round, and shoes much worn.

Any person giving information to the subscriber so that he can get said horse again, shall be rewarded, and receive the thanks of JEREMIAH L. LESSLIE.

Zanesville, O., Sept. 30, 1840. 60

William Green,

CLOCK AND WATCH REPAIRER, SILVERSMITH, AND JEWELLER,

CAN be found at his shop on Main street Putnam, a few doors north of J. C. Guthrie's store, where he will do his best to accommodate customers. He keeps on hand an assortment of spectacles, watch trimmings, pencils, &c.

As far as we have tried Mr. GREEN as a watch repairer he has given us good satisfaction.—ED.

April 22, 1840. 35tf.

Notice.

ALL persons indebted to the late firm of Hartley & Anderson, are earnestly requested to call at the Foundry and make settlement, as the change of owners makes this step absolutely necessary. We ask the attention of all persons concerned, to this notice.

J. J ANDERSON & Co.

Putnam, Jan. 1, 1840. (Jan. 29: 23.)

Dissolution.

THE partnership heretofore existing between S. B. Johnson and J. M. Kirkpatrick, under the firm of S. B. Johnson & Co. was dissolved by mutual consent, on Thursday 19th inst.

S. B. JOHNSON,
J. M. KIRKPATRICK.

Zanesville, March 31, 1840. 32tf

Cattle for Sale.

J. P. SPRINGER, four miles west of Zanesville, Ohio, on the Lancaster road, has for sale sixty steers, fours and fives, in prime order.

October 21, 1840. 61.

The New World.

The Largest, Cheapest, Handsomest & most Comprehensive Newspaper in the United States.

EDITED BY

PARK BENJAMIN AND EPES SARGENT.

WITH multiplied resources for rende the New World more valuable than as a compendious newspaper and repository elegant literature, we enter upon the sec volume (folio) on the 24th of October, dres in a beautiful garb of new type, cast expressly the purpose. It will therefore be a fitting t to commence new subscriptions, as well as the renewal of those which may then expire.

During the first year of the existence of New World, it has acquired a reputation circulation superior to that of any weekly pa in the country; and has furnished to its subs bers, during that period, (besides all the curr news of the day, domestic and foreign) new valuable works by Talfourd, D'Israeli, Thom Moore, Miss Mitford, Mrs. Jameson, Cha Dickens, Ainsworth, Knowles, Bulwer, Marr and others—works, which in London could be purchased for fifty times the amount of subscription price of the New World. In ad tion to works of interest by these eminent thors, it has contained the cream of the perio cal literature of the day, as well as original a cles from the pens of some of the most popu writers of America, among whom we may m tion Miss Sedgwick, Orville Dewey, Profes Longfellow, the author of "Yankee Notion Simms, Street, &c., &c.

In politics we shall, as hitherto, maintain armed neutrality. Our columns will as hithe be unobjectionable in a moral point of view. criticism we shall, in justice to the public, ma tain a perfect independence, even though incur the vengeance of all the dunces. shall, in conclusion, earnestly strive to ren our sheet not only worthy of the unparalle favor it has experienced, but of a continu extending circulation. While we continue furnish with all possible promptitude the m attractive literature of the day, we shall, as means enlarge, afford that compensation to tive authors, which may induce them to ma the New World the medium for presenting the public their best productions. Our excelle London correspondence will be continued, a due attention will be paid to the commerci agricultural and news departments of our pap

A QUARTO EDITION

Of sixteen large pages was commenced on t sixth of June last, in order to meet the wish of a large number of subscribers, by giving th its rich and varied contents in a suitable fo for binding. This we have done without havi enhanced the price, so that new subscribers, a others on the renewal of previous subscription can take their choice between the Quarto a Folio form. ☞But a few sets of the Quar from No. 1, now remain on hand in the offi and we shall, therefore, not be able long to su ply them.

TERMS—Three Dollars a year in advan for either edition; or Five Dollars for two copi In all cases letters must be free, or post-paid, they will remain dead in the post-office.

☞All Postmasters who will act for us our authorized Agents, and may retain 25 cent. on the subscription price, (Three Dollar for commissions, if remitted in New York eastern money; or 50 cents on each, if in not of other solvent banks, which may be at a d count here.

Letters relative to the editorial departme must be addressed to Park Benjamin and Ep Sargent, Editors: those relative to the busine department, to J. WINCHESTER, Publisher, No. 30, Ann street, New Yo

September 16, 1840. 3t

S. C. Haver,

IN the flourishing town of Putnam has on ha 40 or 50 SADDLES ready for sale, of diffe ent qualities, comprising nearly all the varieti in fashion in our Buckeye State.

A good assortment of Bridles and Marti gales: Riding and driving Whips: between 1 and 200 Carriage and heavy draft Collars, whi will compare and wear with any others ma here or elsewhere.

Also, fine York, Dearborn, heavy team an common Farming Harness. A lot of first ra Carriage and Buggy Harness, (brass and silv plated.)

Trunks, vallises, saddle-bags, and double co ered wagon whips, varying in quality and pri to suit purchasers.

The only recommendation he now offers for h work, is the testimony and long experience of h old customers and friends. He is still anxio to please and accommodate those who may ca on him, and hopes to share so much of the publ patronage as his attention to his business sha merit.

Putnam, April 29, 1840. 28tf

Glass Manufactory.

THE subscriber having dissolved his conne ion with the former company, has taken th GLASS WORKS below town under his ow management.

WINDOW GLASS, double and single, a seizes, and of superior quality will be kept co stantly on hand for sale on reasonable terms.—The experience of the proprietor, in the man facture of the article, will insure all made to b of the best quality. Call and see.

S. B. JOHNSON.

Zanesville, Ohio, May 6, 1840. 37

O. WHITE, BOOK BINDER, No. 104 Main Street, Zanesville, Ohio.

January 15, 1840. 21tf

THE

WESTERN RECORDER

IS PUBLISHED EVERY WEDNESDAY.

☞ The office of the Recorder is five and a half miles west of Zanesville.

TERMS.

1. The WESTERN RECORDER will be published weekly, on an imperial sheet, at $2 00 per annum, in advance: $2 50 at the end of three months; $3 00 at the end of the year.

2. No discontinuances will be allowed, except at the discretion of the publisher, until all arrearages are paid.

3. To all ministers having regular pastoral charges, who do any thing at all for the paper if they will direct us where, a copy shall be sent gratis; any other who forward to us $10 00 for new subscribers, shall have six copies sent to any address he may give.

4. All letters designed for the paper, must be directed to "C. Springer, Meadow Farm, Muskingum, Ohio."

5. A failure to notify a discontinuance before the expiration of the subscription year, will be considered a new engagement.

CHARACTER.—The pages of the WESTERN RECORDER will be open to discussion on all moral questions;—it will give articles on Literature, Mechanics, Agriculture,—an abstract of Religious and Political intelligence, and whatever may be interesting and instructive to families in general. A portion of its columns will be open to Advertisements and Prices Current, —another portion to sustain the interests of the Methodist Protestant Church in the West.—These two latter objects will not likely occupy more than one page.

The RECORDER will take a firm stand against Clerical Supremacy.

THE WESTERN RECORDER.

RINGER, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER. | Vol. 2.--No. 11. | ZANESVILLE, OHIO, WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 11, 1840. | Whole No. 64. | JOHN W. WHITE, PRINTER.

DOLLARS PER ANNUM IN ADVANCE. | $2.50, IN THREE MONTHS; $3, END OF YEAR

MMUNICATIONS.

For the Western Recorder.

ALPHABETIC WRITING.

vention of alphabetic writing is one of important that has ever occurred to the ind. Without it, each succeeding age se all the benefit derived from the effort rience of the preceding. The human ld remain in a condition of perpetual , and the different sections of the world cut off from intellectual communica- each other. By this invention, mind ted with mind to the remotest ages most distant climes. Thoughts, inven- improvements, flow into each other me the common property of the world.

gyptians had very early, probably before of Abraham, a mode of writing pecu- emselves, which they retained during period of their national independence. was not alphabetic, but hieroglyphic, ems to have been the primitive mode of n several of the eastern nations, whose was monosylibic. Alphabetic charac- writing have universally given regular- anguage, but on the contrary, where hics are used, their language has re- n perpetual infancy and unintelligible .

cientals, almost universally, ascribe the n of letters to Thath or Theuth, whom peans denominate, Hermas or Mercury. eks ascribe the introduction of alpha- ting among themselves to Cadmus, the n. But the word Cadmus is merely the rm of the Shemitish word (keden) which n eastern man.

earliest account of alphabetic writing orofane historians, refers it to Babylon. s a Phygian philosopher, quoting Por- lates that Calisthenes found at Babylon, of astronomical observations for 1903 hich brings us as far back as 2234 years out the 89th year of the life of Abraa common opinion amongst the ancients phabetic writing was invented by the ans, and Pliny states, that the glory of ntion was due to them. In this matter, end, that Pliny was mistaken, and the f his error is very easily detected. The ans were the greatest commercial nation quity, and diffused among the various na- hither they penetrated in commercial se, the knowledge of that art which they ived from their eastern neighbors. Her- ecognizes this fact in his history. From historical data that I have been able to upon this subject, I am inclined to the hat alphabetic writing is of Shemitish and was first practised in the great Asi- ley of the Tigris and Euphrates. In con- n of this opinion, we have explicit his- testimony. Diodorus Siculus states that yrians were the inventors of letters, that nicians learning from them, communica- s knowledge to the Greeks.

very names of the most ancient letters h are Shemitish and in the old Shemitish ges they are the names of things which eres of the letters represented, whilst in nguages they are mere technical terms.

process of forming the Shemitish alphabet o have been something like this; to rep- a sound, the name of some visible object hen. For example, the Shemitish name letter which corresponds with our aspirate, Heth, which means a fence or enclosure, ordingly, in the Babylonean alphabet, it exact enclosure of a triangular form, and rresponding letter in the old Hebrew is enclosure. The same correspondence n form and signification, is observable out the entire alphabet; see Stow and on Hebrew poetry. The figures are ex- y rude and represent but very imperfectly ible objects, whose names they bear; but ery rudeness is an indubitable mark of very remote antiquity—and it was the l and long continued process of refinement roduced the more perfect alphabets of e and Latium. The primitive literary must have been very imperfect and lim- perhaps to brief genealogical records. Stone the first material upon which letters were ved. Lead occurs very early as a material ting, and was in many respects, preferable e. Pausanias relates that he saw in *Bœ- the works of Hesiod engraven upon lead.— abylon, square pieces of clay were worked letters and burned into tiles. Herodotus ons the skins of goats and sheep roughly d as being in use among the Ionians.— informs us that the papyrus came into use us to the Trojan war, 1184 years B. C. ment, properly prepared, was not known about 200 years B. C.

us we have hastily glanced at the origin of rt which is the monument of buried ages, has survived the wreck of empires and ed the stamp of immortality. The light bark floats down the stream of time and while marble palaces moulder to ruins.— r is read and admired though the grass green over the ruins of Troy, and the s of Cicero are appreciated though the lan- of Rome is no longer spoken on the banks e Tiber. E. H. McCoy, M. D.

ithfield, Jefferson, O., Oct. 28, 1840.

For the Western Recorder.

r brethren, ye have been called unto liberty; use not liberty for an occasion to the flesh. 5, xiii.

has occurred to me, Mr. Editor, that this ge would not be inappropriate to be quoted r Methodist Protestant people. "Ye have called unto liberty," religious liberty—eccle- cal liberty,—"only use not liberty for an occasion to the flesh," for this would be a carnal liberty not authorized by the gospel.

On a journey recently, in company with a brother in the ministry, I providentially obtained accommodations for a night, at the house of a friendly Episcopal Methodist family. We learned that the house was a regular preaching place, and that the next morning at 11, would be the appointment of the circuit minister in charge. Being kindly pressed to remain until after the services, we concluded to do so. At an early hour the minister came, and we were introduced to his acquaintance. We found him a friendly and liberal, as well as devoted man. He requested us to officiate for him in the public exercises, to which we consented. After preaching and exhortation, we were followed by our Methodist Episcopal brother. He attended to some baptisms, and met the class. We were permitted to remain present, and could not have retired without rudeness. I would observe that this was upon a week day, and in a country place. The members of society lived in a scattered condition, within several miles around. In closing, the minister opened the class book and read out the names of all the members, marking each, as present, absent or excusable. And in every case of an absentee, he called for the reason of the individual's non-attendance. Well,—thought I,—some would consider this pretty rigid discipline. But under the administration of the "divinely instituted" feeders and rulers of the flock, it passes without murmur or objection. Who, indeed, could take exceptions to this strictness, in so far as its object is to induce faithful attention to religious duties?

But our Methodist Protestant community, consider themselves 'called unto liberty.' Could our ministers venture to enter into such a scrutiny? Would our membership submit to it? I mean under the circumstances—a country place—a scattered society—a week day appointment. Brethren, use not liberty for an occasion to the flesh. If ye consult the flesh, will not the flesh, too often furnish excuses for neglect of the means of grace? And if ye "thus make provision for the flesh," will not this prove injurious, if not fatal to religious life, and endanger your social organizations? Then, beware brethren,—"use not liberty for an occasion to the flesh."

A few days after the incident above related, I attended in a certain circuit of the Methodist Protestant connexion, a regular week day appointment. To my mortification, scarcely half a dozen members were present, out of a society of twenty-five or more. Here, it appeared, that one brother was too busy to attend,—another had forgotten the day,—others did not believe in week day preaching, &c.,&c. These brethren, thought I, "are called unto liberty." But I was constrained to fear something amiss in the use of liberty. And another thing. I was led to fear that there is too much slackness on the part of our leading and ministering brethren in the exercise of discipline. Shall our Episcopal brethren continue to have the advantage of us, or shall we come out and preach against indulgence in carnal liberty, and let it be known withal, that we too have church discipline?

A certain circumstance is here brought to my mind. In the neighboring city of L———, resides our old friend and brother O———. Some time since, he was called upon by a stranger, whose dialect evidently indicated from what foreign land he had recently came.

"Your name," said he, "is Misther O——."

"Yes, sir."

"And this is your house, Misther O———."

"Yes, sir."

"Well,—I wish to lodge with you to-night, Misther O———."

"I don't keep public house,—there is a hotel a little further down the street, where strangers are entertained."

"But I had rather lodge with you, Misther O———. It is a fra country, I am tould."

"Yes, it is a free country, but my house is not a free house."

Thus, I have been led to apprehend, Mr. Editor, that some amongst us, like this foreigner, suppose that ours is a free church, because, forsooth, we are "called to liberty." And this they seem to conclude, is liberty to do as they please, to use, or refrain from the means of grace; to attend, or neglect the public services of the house of God.

Dear brethren, let us not use liberty "for an occasion to the flesh." And may the God of our salvation deliver us from anarchy.

A. H. Bassett.

Cincinnati, October 23, 1840.

For the Western Recorder.

Br. Timothy: I think you are unfair in your last communication. In that, you give all of your questions fully, but not my answers. The first matter that I shall notice is your remarks on the 12th and 50th of Matthew. Is there nothing but relationship embraced in the above passage? I think that it embraces relationship and a vast deal more. In fact, all that can be embraced in the christian character; for according to the example given by our Saviour, he that is my neighbor is my brother, and he that is my brother is a disciple of Christ. But, again—are the words obtain, membership, birthright, in the bible, (not to cavil) the question is, if I understand it, how is membership obtained in Christ's church? We refer you to Heb. 2, xi. For both he that sanctifieth, and they who are sanctified, are all of one; for which cause, He is not ashamed to call them brethren.

Again—all I intended by the words "positively" and "no distinction," is, that it was: 1st. a positive declaration,—shall be saved,—"no distinction,"—black and white, bond and free, of course every thing depends on the part of man upon the manner of calling upon God for salvation as is expressed in Heb. 11, vi. He that cometh to God must believe that He is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek Him.

Lastly—the most exceptionable part is your answer to my four questions, by including baptism in the means of salvation, or the matter of present salvation. You state the following, after giving a long list of names, intending the same thing: "I conclude that it takes all those things named by the Apostles to complete the sinner's present salvation from sin." I ask does it take baptism to complete the sinners salvation from sin? I think not.

Faith and repentance are the only conditions of salvation, or to pardon; therefore, baptism must be for another purpose than to wash away sin. Does the carpenter connect an ingredient of a building with the general frame, before it is framed? Certainly not. Then, after the same manner, after a man has believed and repented, and is pardoned, then baptize him and induct him into the church by that institution. We think the above position is correct according to Prov. 28, xiii. He that covereth his sins shall not prosper: but whoso confesseth and forsaketh them shall have mercy. Again—Ps. 32, v, I said I will confess my transgressions unto the Lord; and thou forgavest the iniquity of my sin. Then, baptism must be regarded, not as a means of pardon, but as the door into the visable church of Christ. Br. Timothy will have to try it again. A Disciple.

October 19, 1840.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

For the Western Recorder.

Mt. Vernon, Oct. 29, 1840.

Br. Editor:—Sometime previous to the date of this letter, I commenced my ministerial operations on this circuit. I think from present appearances, some good (by the divine blessing) may be effected in this region, provided there is unanimity of feeling, and of effort, on the part of the ministry and laity. Br. Roberts, my worhty colleague, is at his post and doing well.—Our first quarterly meeting will be held at Fredericktown, commencing on the 7th November.

Yours in the gospel of Christ,

C. Caddy.

Jackson co., Ia., Oct, 10*th*, 1840.

Dear Br:—Just from the Indiana Conference—held near Mt. Tabor, at Liberty meeting house. It closed its session on Wednesdy morning about 2 o'clock A. M., the 7th day of October.

There was no lack of efficient ministers and preachers to fill up the call of circuits and missions. There has been large accessions this year of members, some from our mother church. Perhaps three hundred on the Wabash circuit and its environs. Br. Edmondson took in as many as thirty in one society from the ranks of our old side brethren, in the bounds of Spencer, now Mill creek circuit. There is a very considerable revival amongst the Protestants in Indiana, on the circuits in general.

We are praying, and hoping, and looking to our Redeemer to crown our young conference with a glorious out-pouring of the Holy Ghost upon all our circuits and missions the ensuing year. As our minutes are to be forwarded to you without delay, we add no more. Yours truly, &c.

Thomas S. Stilwell.

OBITUARY.

For the Western Recorder

When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory.—Collossians, 3d chap., ver. iii.

Br. Springer:—By the providence of our heavenly Father, our ears are not unfrequently saluted, with the solemn tidings of the departure of those with whom we have been closely connected by the ties of consanguinity, or with whom we have been identified in church fellowship. But when we learn the pleasing intelligence, that peace! peace! was the distinguishing characteristic of the departing soul, it produces in the mind an intermingled sensation of sorrow and joy, which we cannot easily describe. Such a sensation has no doubt been felt by many of the lovers of truth, who have been personally acquainted with the subject of the following notice.

Elizabeth Boovey, our departed sister, was from the State of Maryland, the 9th of February, A. D., 1795. And was for a number of years a member of the Lutheran Church; but although identified with a christian church, it appears she remained destitute of an experimental knowledge of the christian religion. She however, in her judgment, saw proper about six years since to unite with the Methodist P. Church, and about the same time, as we are informed, by an humble reliance on the merits of Christ's death, obtained the pearl of great price, which she retained until the spirit fled. While her bodily energies, were gradually yielding to the influence of disease,—not a murmuring word was heard,—but her language was,—"I am willing to live or die." She suffered the will of her heavenly Father, until the evening of the 19th October. She then gave all her earthly concerns into the hands of him, who "Doeth all things well," and quietly sank into the arms of death, to awake not, "until the heavens be no more." The spirit fled!—but apparently unwilling to depart from the earthly tabernacle, without leaving a sacred memento behind that all was well,—a heavenly smile was seen resting upon the pale form as it lay enclosed in the habiliments of the grave.

The writer of the present notice, by request, made an effort to improve the occasion, by offering a few thoughts from Job 14 chap. latter c, xiv verse Sister Boovey has been the mother of 12 daughters, 8 of whom, together with an affectionate husband, and a large circle of acquaintances, are left to mourn her loss, 4 of the daughters are gone hence to be no more seen on earth. One of the 4, a daughter of 14 years, departed this life about 5 weeks previous to the mother.

Permit me to remark, that this mother in Israel loved our cause. Her house was the ministers' home, and it is now no less so, although one of its inmates is gone. Often in their dwelling, has the sinner heard the word of truth from the ministers of the Methodist P. Church. May this dispensation of divine providence remind us all of the uncertainty of human life, that we may be prepared for a happy existence, far beyond the reach of pain, disease and death.

Charles Caddy.

Mt. Vernon, O., Oct. 29, 1840.

For the Western Recorder.

Departed this life on the 11th of September last, in the 43d year of her age, sister Catharine Fulton, consort of Robert Fulton, Manchester township, Morgan county, Ohio.

The soul of our sister is gone
To heighten the triumph above,
Exalted to Jesus' throne,
And clasped in the arms of his love.

Through divine goodness, she was brought in early life to feel the need of a Saviour; and not being disposed to slight the heavenly calling of Jesus Christ, sought redemption, and united in fellowship with the Presbyterian church; and after enjoying its communion fourteen years, by a turn of providence she moved and settled where she deceased. Two years after her change of residence, the Presbyterian church not being convenient, she united with the Methodist P. Church, in which, until the close of her mortal existence, (a period of seven years,) she lived in peace and love with its members, and the regular observance of the communion.

She was taken ill on the first of May last, and no remedy could be obtained by medical assistance to prevent the termination of her disease in a hasty consumption. Being unable to attend meeting at the usual place, and aware that her dissolution was speedily approaching, her house became the place of my special attention, when on that part of the circuit; and it afforded me no little comfort to find from her conversation that she had lived a bible-reading as well as a Saviour-loving christian. Her patience and resignation were extraordinary, as I discovered on various visits; but the time at which I paid her the last visit before conference, appeared to be very trying to her christian fortitude. She complained very much of her inability to keep her mind firmly fixed upon the Saviour in perfect resignation to his will. She having been previously so uniformily composed, it was to me a source of reflection, whence this discomposure arose. Concluding that it was caused by the pressure of her nervous system, or by a clearer light from heaven revealing to her the necessity of a deeper work of grace to qualify her for the sublime regions of eternal felicity to which she was rapidly hastening, I told her that the Lord does not esteem us less for discovering our own imperfections and want of love to Him; and that when He reveals to those who rely upon Him a knowledge of their wants, His grace stands firmly pledged in the promises of the Redeemer, to wash them from all defilement, and support them even in the solemn and trying hour of death.

After morning prayer had been concluded, I bade her "farewell" for the last time in this world. She soon became better composed, and just before her departure, told her friends that she was going, and bade her companion a solemn and affectionate "farewell;" and then remarked, "Now I am going to Jesus." She left an affectionate companion and several children, who, I trust, will try to meet her ere long in a better world. C. Woodruff.

Morgan co., Oct. 26th, 1840.

For the Western Recorder.

Br. Springer:—Learning from a notice in your paper that obituaries should be short, we send you closing remarks taken from the M. S. "Memoirs of the life and death of Thomas C. Stilwell—a young Protestant preacher," for insertion.

Night coming on—he was much distracted—said many simple things, but nothing sinful—towards day coming to himself, he spoke most affectionately to his mother, who was setting by him, and said "O mother, I suffer much in my body, but my soul feels much better." At another time he said to her,—

"Jesus can make a dying bed
Feel soft as downy pillows are,
While on his breast I lean my head,
And breathe my life out sweetly there."

Awhile after this he fell into a deep sleep, which lasted sixteen hours. Toward evening his breathing grew shorter,—his pulse quicker, though regular to the last. A moan now began in his sleep, and ceased no more until his last. This warned his weeping mother and sisters that the last hour was come! They now moved slowly in, from another apartment, just time enough to take a final leave. Soon after which he breathed out his soul to God, in the 22d year of his age—about four years, two months and ten days after his happy conversion. "The heart knoweth its own bitterness—but what can equal the anguish of that emotion" which told the parents you are without a son, in this strange land! and the sisters,—your trusty brother is gone—forever! "They feel its pang once—to forget it no more forever!"

Thomas was strictly pious—a great lover of good books especially the bible. Was an acceptable preacher—gave pleasing evidence of future usefulness. But God who always sees what is best for all his people, took this amiable youth to himself, to dwell in his presence forever!

Yours respectfully,

Thomas S. Stilwell.

Jackson Co, Ia., Sept, 1840.

SELECTIONS.

DUTIES OF A CHRISTIAN FARMER.

FAMILY PRAYER.

Family Prayer will be valued as a delightful privilege by the Christain farmer. Its influence on himself, and on the good order and peace of his family will forbid him to regard it merely as a duty.

By Family Prayer, we do not mean what is sometimes called by that name—a short season during which a chapter is hastily read in the bible, and a form of prayers offered without the semblance of devotion, amidst disorder and noise. We mean a season set apart for real communion with God—when all the members of the household can come together to read the Bible and ponder it; to confess to heaven their offences, and to ask forgiveness; to thank the giver of all good for past mercies, and to supplicate for themselves, and the world, new blessings for the soul and for the body.

No wonder that some do not find either themselves, or their families, interested in this exercise. They never devote the necessary time, nor make for it necessary preparation. A part of the family, perhaps, are not required or expected to be present. Another part are not present when the parent begins to read the word of God; and while he continues to read, those who had come together in season, are disturbed by others, or by attention to some household matters, which ought to have been attended to previously, or to be deferred until the devotions, if they may be called by that name, are finished. In such circumstances; solemnity is altogether out of the question; and it is not wonderful if children and domestics catch the spirit of the scene and regard the whole either as a farce or as a thing done only for the sake of form.

Family prayer is, doubtless, sometimes irksome to children and domestics, because the parent repeats the same words from day to day, without feeling the spirit of the petitions which he offers.—Whether or not the same form of prayer should be used at all times, we will not undertake to decide. Some may be so diffident as to feel straightened in this exercise, and the only alternative, in their case is to neglect prayer in their families, entirely or use the same form. What their duty is none can hesitate a moment in deciding. In other cases, where there is ability, the interest of family prayer may be increased, by varying it to suit present circumstances. But whichever of these modes is adopted, there is no excuse for dullness and want of spirituality in the exercise.

No rule of universal application can be given for the time of family prayer. Each parent or master must consult his pecuniary circumstances. Some find it most convenient to attend to this duty before their morning meal; and some after. In the latter case, there will be less of hurrying, interruption, and abscence.—If the exercise at evening is deferred till a late hour, the members of the family will be wearied, and a part may have retired to rest. To avoid these evils, some have chosen the hour immediately after their evening meal for the devotions of the family. When this hour is convenient, it has advantages over every other; but often the circumstances of the Christian Farmer, will not permit him to devote this season to family prayer.

But whatever time may be chosen for this service it is wrong that any part of the family should be habitually excluded. Some it is believed do not require their domestics, and others in their employment, to attend family prayer even if they suffer them to do it. Such a custom should never find a place in the household of a christian Farmer. It is injurious both to himself and to his domestics. Their fidelity, their honesty, their good will; and desire to promote his interests, will be strengthened by joining with him in this delightful service. The christian farmer who goes forth in his fields in the freshness of morning, after offering with his laborers the incense of prayer to God will find them respectable and obedient. They will cheerfully share in his toils, as they have shared in their supplications—and when the shades of evening again gather the family around the throne of grace, they will rejoice in his thanksgivings for the preserving care of God.—Discord, and murmerings, and strife, are banished from his house and from his fields, by the voice of prayer and praise. His children and his domestics look back to his dwelling, as the scene of their choicest delights; and memory loves, and will love to linger around it, long after his happy spirit has joined the assembly of the blessed in heaven.—The Farmer's Own Book.

Grace and Philanthropy.—No man can be truly and rightly studious of the advancement of the kingdom of God in the world, that hath not first felt the mighty power and blessed effects of it in his own soul. 2 Timothy i: 12,—Shaw.

The Rev. Charles Rich, of Boston, has become Pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, at Washington city.

Autumn.—Though the chill winds of the lake at times, sharpened by traversing hundreds of miles without feeling the warm breath of mother earth, are like agues to the nerves, for many a day in this region,—yet there are mingled even here with the moods of autumn, many of the warmest beauties of more fervent climes. An autumn upon Lake Erie, though not one of constant, benevolent temperament, like one in the more favored climes of the more southerly states, has nevertheless, in its inconsistency, a transition and contrast of beauties and pleasures, which make, it to us, a more desirable abiding place than any under which we have lived.

If the chill air of the evening is more prevalent than in any other longitudes upon the same parallel of latitude, there are, notwithstanding, nights when the moon seems to send a warmth with her light, and the very lake breezes seem to come loaded with a warmth like summer. Such have we seen during the present week. And even when the sharp frosty wind from the north, or the chill damp breeze from the southwest, forbid the contemplative to walk abroad in the evening they give a new and active buoyancy to the hilarity within doors, and make the fireside the focus of a thousand charms.

The beauty of autumn scenery in our country, is upon the page of every foreign traveller;—and now, when

Her breath hath tinged the grove with red
And strew'd the valve with yellow,
And every leaf reclines its head
Beside its withering fellow,—
And Nature looking round her,
Rends the green robe that bound her.

Now when the green, the yellow, the crimson, and the russet, are struggling for supremacy, in foilage of the whole wilderness,—with its chills—with all its damps,—we would almost pray that autumn might last forever.

But the bounty of the God of the year, whose chosen era of ripe rewards for all the toils and privations of other seasons, is fixed among the fading but brilliant beauties of autumn, is most worthy the aspirations of a grateful and sympathetic heart. And in no autumn more than the present has that bounty been so infinitely above the desert of the human family. On every side we see the smiles of plenty and on every hand we hear the sounds of joy at the goodness of that hand that has met us in our complaints, and silenced our ingratitude, by the fruits of a most ample and abundant harvest.

From this wilderness of beauty, the little that man really wants, is easily gathered. With a prudent hand, and a strong guard against those artificial wants which constitutes the misery of our existence, the season of autumn always opens the door to competence, through which the most needy of our race may arrive at the summit of rational happiness.

Earnestness in Preaching.—The energy of Rowland Hill's manner, at times, and the power of his voice, are said to be almost overwhelming. It is related of him, that once at Wotton while preaching, he was carried away by the impetuous rush of his feelings, and raising himself to his full stature, he exclaimed—"Because I am in earnest, men call me an enthusiast; but I am not; mine are the words of truth and soberness. When I first came into this part of the country, I was walking on yonder hill; I saw a gravel-pit fall in, and bury three human beings alive. I lifted up my voice for help, so loud, that I was heard in the town below, at a distance of a mile: help came, and rescued two of the poor sufferers. No one called me an enthusiast then:—and when I see eternal destruction ready to fall upon poor sinners, and about to entomb them irrecoverably in an eternal mass of wo, and call on them to escape, shall I be called an enthusiast now? No, sinner, I am not an enthusiast in so doing; I call on thee aloud to fly for refuge to the hope set before thee in the Gospel of Jesus Christ."

Liberia has a population of 4,500 American colonists, and 30,000 natives. It has nine settlements or towns; the two most distant being 300 miles apart, on the seacoast—the others at various distances, intermediate. Its territory, procured by purchase, contains nearly 500,000 acres of land, and other large tracts can be easily obtained of the native owners in the same way. The government is modelled after our own, and purely republican—administered almost wholly by colored people. Agriculture is thriving and greatly extending. Four printing presses are in operation. Twenty one churches are organized, some of them composd of native converts.—More than 30 ordained ministers are engaged in religious teaching. Many Sabbath Schools are regularly attended. And on the whole, the colony never appeared better than now, nor so entirely attractive to its friends on the ground of its great usefulness.—Presbyterian.

Census.—The population of Connecticut according to the returns of the Marshall, is about 310,000.

WESTERN RECORDER.

ZANESVILLE:

WEDNESDAY, ... NOVEMBER 11, 1840.

Politics.—The excitement that has prevailed on this subject, for months past, has rendered it rather unpleasant for an editor who wishes to remain neutral; 1st, in order to get the current news of the day, he has to overlook so much political slang and abuse, that to a mind cool upon the subject, it produces very disagreeable nausia. 2d, if he makes any allusion at all to political events, he is perpetually accused with being one sided. We have been alternately accused by both the parties of favoring their opponents.

We had flattered ourself, that, by this time, as all would be accomplished abuse and misrepresentation would be likely to achieve, that there would be an abatement of this party strife. But it really appears that the disease is worse at this period than at any former. The manner in which the parties are accusing each other of corrupting the polls is highly discreditable to them both, and very disgraceful to the nation. When foreigners read their mutual recriminations, they must think that Americans are a nation of scoundrels.

We give below from the Saturday Courier and the Brother Jonathan an abstracted account of the excitement in the eastern cities upon the subject of corrupting the polls.

ELECTION EXCITEMENT.

REPORTED FRAUDS—ROW.

Perhaps at no period of our history has there been so much excitement as has for months prevailed in these United States. In the midst of such a state of things, New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore have had no inconsiderable fuel added to the flame, by reported cases of "astounding frauds upon the elective franchise." As this paper is and will ever continue to be strictly neutral in politics, all we have to do, is to recapitulate the statements in regard to these election frauds, as a mere matter of intelligence to our readers.

The first case that was developed to the public was from Baltimore. It was charged that Mr. Madison Jeffers, deputy high constable of that city,—voting with the whig party—had written a letter to Mr. George Riston, a broker, of this city, desiring him to send to that city from Philadelphia, five hundred men, to take part in the election for Mayor of Baltimore, which has since occurred. The Mayor of that city immediately suspended Mr. Jeffers from the exercise of the duties of his office, until the charge should be fully investigated; and it is now stated in the Baltimore papers that the Grand Jury have found a bill against him.—When the case shall have been decided, we shall present the result to our readers. It is proper to add that Mr. Jeffers has published a statement, addressed to the citizens of Baltimore, in which he denounces the charge against him as a "conspiracy."

We learn since, by the Baltimore Clipper, that Mr. George Ritson, of this city, on Monday, voluntarily presented himself before the court, in consequence of information he had received that the Grand Jury had found a bill against him for conspiracy with Madison Jeffers to introduce illegal votes at the polls of the city of Baltimore, and gave bail in the sum of $2000, for his appearance to answer the charge. Mr. Jeffers was arrested in the morning, and for want of bail was committed, but he afterwards obtained bail and was released.

The next matter that excited public attention was an alleged naturalization fraud, in the books of the Court of Quarter Sessions and the Court of the Criminal Sessions, in this city, in the former of which several leaves have been interpolated, bearing the declarations of unnaturalized citizens of their intention to take the necessary oath and become naturalized citizens of the United States. The law requiring that two years' notice should be given, previous to the taking out of the legal papers, the leaves were inserted in the records of 1838. The matter has this week been a subject of investigation before Judges King, Randall and Jones in the Court of Common Pleas. It should be stated for the information of distant readers, that the whig party aver that the alleged alterations alluded to had the effect to allow voters to deposit their ballot at the late election, who were not legally authorized so to do. We state the case as charged. On Wednesday, the Grand Jury made a presentment, which was read in open court, covering the whole ground, and desiring legal investigation into the whole business.

P. S. Since the above was in type, Judge King delivered the opinion of the Court: That the "declarations of intentions," the legality of which had been called in question, had been fraudulently interpolated, and that the name of the recording clerk, in every instance in which it appeared, had been forged. The declarations, so interpolated, were, by order of the Court, vacated.

The next matter which excited the community was a report from our sister city of New York. This was a statement that the Recorder and Justice Matsell of that city had been occupied since Tuesday morning in the investigation of a system of fraudulent voting, which was alleged to have been carried on there in 1838.—"Among the persons examined, were Mr. Glentworth, tobacco inspector, J. D. Stevenson, ex-tobacco inspector, of New York, Mr. Young, a High Constable of Philadelphia, Robert C. Wetmore, R. M. Blatchford, and others. Mr. Stevenson made affidavit that Mr. Glentworth had told him, that at the instance of R. M. Blatchford, Simeon Croper, Jas. Bowen, R. C. Wetmore and Moses H. Grinnell, of the whig party, he went from New York to Philadelphia in the month of October, 1838, to procure persons to vote, in company with Robert Swartwout, who was appointed with him for that purpose; that he, Glentworth, met by appointment at the house of George Riston, Jas. Young a police officer, Robert Miller, then a captain of the watch, and Mr. Swift, the Mayor of Philadelphia; that he, Glentworth, then in the presence of Mayor Swift and Riston, paid Miller five hundred and sixty dollars, in consideration of which they were to bring or send on to New York voters at twenty-five or thirty dollars a head, a list of which they each furnished. That Robert Looney of this city had also sent on men to one Mr. Ardle of the Almshouse, who took charge of them previous to their voting. The number of men was something like thirty.—That money (raising $800) was also paid to James Young, high constable of Philadelphia, for the purpose of sending on men. That he saw and corresponded with Bela Badger in regard to the same transaction. That the same kind of scheme was arranged for the Spring Election of 1839, when Glentworth went on as before, and that Henry W. Havens was sent on to him with money to buy voters with. And the affidavit goes on to state that Glentworth and thirty voters did go on and voted in every ward in the city in the autumn of 1838 and spring of 1839, amongst them Mr. Young, High Constable of Philadelphia. That Mr. Stevenson, after obtaining these disclosures, received a letter the present month from Glentworth, directed to Mayor Swift of Philadelphia, stating that 'the bearer was entitled to his confidence,' and with this proceeded to Philadelphia, and conversed with Mayor Swift, Messrs. Young, Miller, Riston, Bela Badger, Saunders, Thornton, &c., to whom he pretended he wanted voters for New York as in 1838 and 1839, and that they not only promised to furnish him at the former price, but acknowledged that they had sent on voters before; Miller saying he had accompanied his men on, and had also voted in nearly all the wards."

This is the amount of the charge which is stated for the information of our readers. It should be added here that all the parties accused have come out with counter-affidavits, denying the charges made against them. Messrs. Mayor Swift, Bela Badger and Robert Miller of this city, in their affidavits, state that they were cognizant of the fact that men were sent to New York, to watch the polls. Mr. Swift, in his statement, declares as follows:

Mr. Glentworth stated to me there were great and reasonable apprehensions on the part of our friends of an importation of votes into New York, from this city, and they were very desirous, if it were possible, to have there at the coming election a select number of persons of general acquaintance, residing in Philadelphia, for the purpose of watching the polls of the wards to prevent the reception of illegal voters, by detecting those who might come from the city of Philadelphia to offer them.

I think I went down to the United States Hotel with Mr. Miller, and there introduced him to Mr. Glentworth and left them.

I do solemnly declare that I have never directly or indirectly aided, assisted or connived at the reception of an illegal voter either in the city of Philadelphia or in any part of the United States.

Robert Miller in his statement, affirms as follows:

I furnished him (Glentworth) with a list of forty three and not exceeding forty-five men and well acquainted with the voters of the city and county of Philadelphia, who could not be induced by any means, when citizens of this State, to vote in any other nor did I ever dream of furnishing a list for such an illegal purpose, or did Stevenson, alias Jarvis, request of me a list for any such purpose. So far as anything in Stevenson's or Jarvis' deposition conflicts with what I have stated, I pronounce it false and utterly untrue.

The purport of the statement of Mr. John Saunders of the Northern Liberties and others is like what is copied above, they all declaring that they had no other agency than sending on men to watch the polls in New York; and of course it could be of no interest to our readers to recapitulate their statements. What we have given has of course, been impartially presented for the plain purpose of exhibiting to distant readers, which would naturally be anxious to learn, an idea of the various exciting cases, which have kept our cities in such sad commotion for many days.

All honest men of all parties must desire a full and fair investigation into these charges. The parties implicated cannot fail to do so, if they have just respect for their private characters. The charge of attempting to interfere with the honest exercise of the elective franchise is a grave and important one and for ourselves we care not what party a man belong to, against whom such a charge be found true, we say he should receive the odium of all good citizens; and in making this remark, we feel confident we do nothing more than express the sentiment which is ever cherished, and would zealously be defended, by all honest-minded freemen of our country, let their predilections be whatsoever they may.

CURIOUS PROCEEDINGS.

It appears that there was on Tuesday a struggle, rush, or melee in the room occupied by the Recorder and other magistrates, who are examining the facts connected with the election of 1838.—Certain papers belonging to Glentworth, were in possession of the Court, under seal, both of Glentworth and his partner, N. Pearce, from whose house they had been obtained. The seal of the Mayor, was also upon the package. The Recorder stated the manner in which he came in possession of the papers, by the application, as a magistrate, at the house of N. Pearce, on Thursday evening, and decided that the Court had a right to open them. The rest of the proceedings we copy from the Journal of Commerce, the reporter of which paper was a witness to nearly the whole. His evidence we can vouch for, as he is incapable of a wilful misrepresentation:

"After the Recorder had delivered the above opinion he took from his coat pocket the parcel which contained the papers in question, and handed it to the Mayor, and requested him to examine it, and ascertain whether the seal which he had affixed to it, was in the same state as when put in the Recorder's possesion. The Mayor examined it and replied in the affirmative. He then handed it back to the Recorder, who handed it to Mr. Glentworth, to examine if the seal which he had affixed to it was in the same state as when the parcel was delivered to the Recorder. Mr. Glentworth took the parcel in his hand, looked for an instant at the seal, and then stood up from the chair, and thrust the papers inside the breast of his coat, saying, 'these papers are mine, and I will keep them;' and at the same time turned half around as if to leave the room. The Recorder then put his hand on Mr. Glentworth's shoulder, and told him that he must not take the papers out of Court. Mr. Glentworth in return assumed a menacing attitude, and attempted to pull himself back from the Recorder, and the latter then laid his other hand on Mr. Glentworth's breast, as if with the intention of taking hold of the papers, the end of which was protruding outside the breast of Mr. Glentworth's coat.

Sheriff Acker, who had been, for some time before standing nearly behind Mr. Glentworth, now threw his arms around Mr. Glentworth's body, and endeavored to pull him away from the Recorder, saying at the same time, I take possession of them under a writ of replevin. At this instant several persons rushed up apparently to asist the Sheriff, and then the whole Court became a scene of confusion. The Mayor attempted to exercise his authority in order to restore peace, but it was all in vain; his official character was paid no respect to whatever. On the contrary he was jostled and pushed about, and for a few minutes riot reigned triumphant. At this stage of proceedings several voices cried out, 'shut the door,' and instantly some persons rushed towards it, pushed outside two or three individuals who were standing near it, amongst whom was our Reporter, and closed the door and no person was allowed to enter for some ten or twelve minutes.

On being again permitted to enter the room, our Reporter found order had been restored, and was informed that during the contention, or more properly speaking, contest, some person got possession of the papers which caused it, and carried them away. And that as soon as order had been partly restored, the Recorder requested the Sheriff to show him a writ of replevin for the papers. The Sheriff immediately handed the writ to the Recorder, who read it and said, 'Mr. Sheriff, I have not the papers in my possession, and consider myself your prisoner.' After some further conversation, the Recorder informed the Sheriff that the person who had got possession of the papers would restore them to the Court and the Recorder promised that if the papers were delivered to him, he would bring them this day before one of the higher Courts which had jurisdiction over the matter, and which could dispose of the question. On this understanding the parties all left the court which then adjourned.

'In order to give some idea of the sort of scuffle which took place. Justice Matsell had his coat half torn from his back."

Conference.—The Recorder, Mayor, and District Attorney, and half a dozen other gentlemen of the Van Buren party met on Tuesday a deputation of Whigs at whose suggestion the meeting was held. David B. Ogden. Jonathan Thompson, Samuel Stephens, Shepherd Knapp, Daniel Lord, Jr,, Ex-Alderman Taylor, Phenix, were the Whig gentleman present.

The public were not admitted, but it is understood that the meeting resulted in nothing but a mutual expression of a desire to keep the peace, without the adoption of any steps. It was proposed that the Whigs should appoint a meeting to attend the investigations now in progres—but the Whigs declined, stating that neither they nor the whig party, were connected with the examination now going on.

It was proposed that the Mayor should issue a proclamation requesting the public not to hold mass meetings or assemblages in the open air, during the present excitement. This proposition was, however, not generally approved of by the gentlemen composing the meeting, and they adjourned without accomplishing the object for which they convened; the Mayor expressing his thanks to the Whig gentlemen for the tender of their services.

The Mayor of Philadelphia has written to Mr. Butler to inquire whether in his speech in the Park, on Saturday, Mr. B. made use of the following language:

"John Swift, the Mayor of Philadelphia, was a willing and a guilty participator in the frauds of 1838, and it was by its influence over the officers in his employ that they were successfully perpetrated—it was by the contrivance and management of Colonel Swift that the scheme was successful."

The Mayor disavows any intention of seeking any redress except by an appeal to law or public opinion. Mr. Butler's answer has not been published.

The Glentworth Papers.—The Recorder, Mayor, and Sheriff, went before Judge Edwards on Tuesday, in relation to the Glentworth papers. The Recorder commenced to state the facts in the case, but Judge Edwards interrupted him by telling him that unless an arrest was made, he had no jurisdiction. Judge Edwards then asked the Sheriff was the Recorder under arrest, and the Sheriff replied in the negative. The Recorder then said that he was aware, before coming there, that Judge Edwards had no authority in the case, but that under all the circumstances, he thought it his duty to attend there, and that he now surrendered himself to the sheriff and was ready to give bail. The Sheriff declined making any arrest, but demanded the papers from the Recorder, on the writ of replevin. The Recorder in reply admitted that he then had the papers in his possession, and considered it would be altogether at variance with his official duty, and every principle of law involved in the case, to deliver them to the Sheriff, and therefore peremptorily refused to do so. The parties then left Judge Edwards, and the Recorder proceeded to the Alms House and continued the investigation. The papers were not read in Court yesterday.

In reference to this matter of "the Glentworth papers" the following letter has been received by the Recorder:

New York, Oct. 27, 1840.

Sir—To prevent any misappresention, we beg leave to state, that so far as we are concerned, we have no objection to the opening of the papers of J.B. Glentworth now in your possession on the contrary, as we challenge the severest scrutiny, we have no objection whatever to the publication of copies of all of them.

Yours,

M. H. Grinnell,
R. M. Blatchford,
James Bowen,
R. C. Wetmore,
Simeon Draper, Jr.

To Robt. H. Morris, Esq.,
Recorder of the city of New York.

The Glentworth papers were read by the Recorder in his Court, New York, on Friday. The New York Sun (neutral) remarks: "They furnish now new light upon the subject with which they are connected; but are, for the most part, confirmatory evidence of what has heretofore been made public in the affidavits and testimony of those who have testified to what they knew, or had information of, in relation to the political transactions of 1838–9." The investigation was not proceeded in until the following day.

From Bicknell's Reporter.

THE WORLD ABROAD.

ENGLAND, FRANCE AND THE EASTERN QUESTION.

A FURTHER VIEW.

We have already given one or two articles in relation to the deeply interesting attitude of England and France at the last dates, as connected with the position of Mehemet Ali. It appears to us that the great nations of the Old World have not presented so warlike a front for many years, and although we still adhere to the impression that the difficulty will pass away, a conflict under the circumstances, is not only by no means impossible, and some of the shrewd observers in both England and France, seem to consider it as by no means improbable. We have read with much care and attention, several leading and able articles in the London and Parisian Journals, as well as three or four interesting European letters from well-informed and observing correspondents. In France, it has been repeatedly declared, and in one or two instances in a form semi-official, that if any attempt should be made to enforce the treaty, war would be the consequence. Now, our latest intelligence is to the effect that such attempt had been made in the destruction of Beyrout. Should that affair be confirmed, we cannot see how France will be able to escape with honor the dilemma in which she has placed herself, or at all events in which the Journalists have placed her. In order to render the matter perfectly intelligible to the hasty reader, we will recapitulate a few of the prominent events immediately preceding the capture.

The 6th of September was the last day of the the twenty, allowed the Egyptian to decide upon his answer to the Allies. The consuls waited upon him for the purpose of hearing his determination, but he was unable to see them, in consequence either of feigned or real indisposition. Two of his officers, however, were present and said that the determination of Mehemet had been given to Rifaat Bey.—Some words ensued, when the Consuls of Russia and Great Britain remarked, that the acceptance would only be considered available and effective, when the Ottoman fleet should be given up, and an order be placed in their hands to withdraw the Egyptian troops from Syria. The Minister said that it was to the Sultan, and not to them, that Mehemet was bound to reply. The Consuls then protested against Rifaat Bey, in accepting such vain proposals as those made by Mehemet. The latter was taking every means of defence, collecting an immense force, mounting his cannon, and providing supplies and ammunition.—It was after these events, and after the rejection by the Sultan of Mehemet's proposition, that the bombardment of Beyrout took place—also that the Consuls withdrew. The Paris Journal des Debats has a long article on the subject, in reply to one which had appeared in the London Times. Both papers assume to be the friends of peace, and in favor of moderate Conservatism. The Debats says:

"We have been the warmest, the firmest partisans of the English alliance. We still believe that this alliance is, for both nations, the most natural and indeed the only alliance, capable of reciprocally guaranteeing their power and their liberty. We believe that the definite rupture of this alliance would be, not only for the two countries, but for all the world, an immense calamity. Our blame only applies to the English Minister, from whom this necessary alliance has received a first blow. We complain not of the English people. We would willingly hope, even to the last moment, that the good sense of both nations would again make firm that which a policy characterized at least by levity has almost torn asunder. This is our profession of faith.—Will "The Times" listen to a friendly voice? Will it accord to us more credence when we describe the real feelings of France, and the objects of her armaments, than to the reckless organs of party? What we have to say shall be said without passion."

The same paper continues:

"France arms herself—but who is to blame for this? We fully relied on the maintenance of the English alliance. Who suddenly shook this confidence, by the unexpected intelligence of a treaty, concluded without us, almost without our knowledge, between Austria, Prussia, Russia and whom else?—England. And with respect to what question? With respect to the question of the East; that is to say, regarding a question in which the alliance of France & England seemed most essential for restraining an ambition, of which the whole universe knows the object and ultimate aim—the ambition of Russia. England allied to Russia! England detaching herself from France, at the moment when the ardent eye of the Muscovites is more than ever fixed upon Constantinople, which seems ready to open its gates to them! England placing herself at the head of a quadruple alliance, which revives such mournful recollections for France! How was it possible for news so unexpected not to produce a violent sensation among us? How could we remain calm and indifferent in presence of a treaty, which all at once informed us that we were isolated in Europe? We ask this question of the Times itself: A Government which, under such circumstances, neglected to take precautions, to increase its army and fleet, to make every precaution for future events, would it not have been deservedly obnoxious to the most ignominious reproaches? It is in vain to misstate the effect of the treaty of London; the fact being, that the consequence of that treaty is to place France in a state of absolute isolation."

Again:

"What would the Times say, if France had signed with Russia, Austria and Prussia, the quadruple treaty of the 15th July? What!—Would not England in that case have adopted precautionary measures, as we are doing, notwithstanding the natural rampart which she possesses in the surrounding ocean? Would she not have raised the cry of treason still louder than we have done? One word suffices to prove, that if any nation desires war, it is not France. In this war we would be one against four! A great people may accept so cruelly unequal a part when its honor is at stake, but it cannot thoughtlessly embrace so rash an alternative; it would be madness on her part to pick a quarrel with the entire of Europe, and to provoke at the same time England, Russia, Austria, and Prussia. We have something better to do than exhaust our blood and treasure in sterile warfare. We have a far more profitable use of them on our own soil. The money which we are expending in purchasing cannon, ball and gunpowder, could be more advantageously employed in the construction of railways? Who spoke in France of war and battle previous to the treaty of July 15th? Were we not the first to repress the propaganda? The preservation of peace, unfortunately, is no longer in our power. We place ourselves on the defensive. We have not taken, nor do we mean to take, the offensive. The Times says, that the preparations now making in France amount to actual war. We say that France is arming for the sake of peace, and that peace must ensue, if the powers comprehend the enormous mistake they would commit in driving us to a last extremity! The treaty of London in uniting four powers against one, has destroyed the balance of power in Europe. Wo unto them if they compel us to re-establish it at the point of the bayonet!

The article concludes with remarking that "the month of December approaches, the Ministers must shortly convoke the Chambers, and that then also, will the country make known its real sentiments through the mouths of its representatives." The article throughout is pacific and dignified, and yet it is exceedingly cautious and diplomatic. It was published, moreover, before the news of the attack on Beyrout had reached Paris.

The New York American, adverting to this question, remarks that "concerning the chances of war to result from the seperation of France from the Five Powers, on the Eastern Question, we feel, as heretofore, that such a calamity must be forced, and does not necessarily nor naturally spring from this difference of views—not as an ultimate object, but as to the means of effecting it. The aim of the Five Powers, including France avowedly is, to preserve the integrity of the Ottoman Empire; and all have pledged themselves to promote that end without any desire or purpose of self-aggrandisement. But while four of the Powers believe that the integrity of the Ottoman Empire can only be restored and maintained by persuading or compelling the Pacha of Egypt to return within the borders of that country, of which they propose to secure the Sovereignty to him and to his male successors—nominally only subject to the Porte; and to renounce the occupation of Syria, Caudia, &c., the French Government assumes that the easiest mode of accomplishing the end in view, is to leave Mehemet Ali—now an old man—in possession of Syria and the other provinces for life—and that at his death they should revert to the Porte.—France, moreover, expressed unwillingness to employ any other than persuasive means with Mehemet.

"To this suggestion of France, the Four Powers reply, that Syria is the military key of the Sultan's dominions; and that possessed by an ambitious soldier, with a large army, it would be unreasonable to suppose that the ambition which led to its forcible occupation originally, would not induce Mehemet to use its advantages to the further dilapidation of the Ottoman Empire—and, therefore, that to leave Syria, even as a life possession to Mehemet, was, in fact, to consent to a dismemberment of the Empire.

"After much negotiation, France finally proposed as a compromise that a portion of Syria, south of a line to be drawn east and west from the sea near Beyrout to Damascus, should be left to Egypt, and the rest to the Porte,—stipulating, if Mehemet should refuse to acquiesce in an arrangement, to co-operate with the Powers to coercive measures against him. This was rejected as being virtually a dismemberment—as compelling both parties, from the dangerous proximity to keep up large armies, as, in fact, leaving all the elements of discord in the field. It was urged, moreover, that if France was willing to concur in coercive measures against the Egyptians for enforcing a plan that was imperfect and inefficient, it seemed somewhat inconsistent, that she should object to concurring in the same measure for a plan complete and effectual for its purpose. To this the reply was, that the objection of France to employ coercion, arose from domestic considerations; that if it could be established to the satisfaction of the Chambers and the country, that an effort had been made to procure the best terms for Mehemet, if he then refused them, the nation would consent to the employment of force against him."

Lord Palmerston in his dispatch of the 31st August, alludes to the proposition of France and remarks that the French government did not say that it knew Mehemet Ali would consent even to this arrangement, nor did it declare that if he should refuse to accept, France would join in coercive measures to compel him to do so. Therefore, and for other reasons stated in the dispatch, the British Government could not consent. "But," adds Lord P. "her Majesty's Government, in order to prove its anxious desire to come to an understanding with France on these matters, stated that it would waive its well founded objection to any extension of Mehemet Ali's authority beyond Egypt, and would join with the French Government in recommending to the Sultan to give to Mehemet Ali, in addition to the pachalic of Egypt, the administration of the lower part of Syria, bounded to the north by a line drawn from Cape Carmel to the southern end of lake Tiberias, and to the eastward by the Jordan, the western shore of the Dead Sea, and by a line thence down to the Gulf of Akaba: provided that France would engage to co-operate with the Four Powers in coercive measures, if Mehemet Ali should refuse this offer. This proposal, however, was declined by the French Government, and that Government now declared that it could not possibly operate in any coercive measures against Mehemet Ali, and could not therefore be a party to any arrangement to which Mehemet Ali should not spontaneously consent.

The case is now before our readers not in all its details, but sufficiently so, to enable them to see all its prominent points.—It is a matter of deep and grave importance, upon which may be said to hang the lives of thousands of human beings, and the destinies of nations. Hence we have paid more than ordinary attention to the France, as it strikes us, however well fortified and however full of chivalry and spirit, is unprepared, her domestic condition considered, her relations with Spain and her position in Algiers—to cope with the four great powers of England, Russia, Prussia and Austria—to say nothing of Turkey. The next news will doubtless possess deep interest.

Trial of Dr. Eldridge.—During a portion of several days this week, the trial of this individual has been proceeded in. It may not be uninteresting to state a portion of the testimony introduced by Mr. Hist for the prisoner.

Thomas Thorne testified that he boarded at Mrs. Howell's house at the time that Dr. E. did; that Dr. E. dined in that house on the first of May last, when Mr. Haven brought in the news of the forgeries upon the banks the day previous: that he saw no change in the appearance at the time, and would have observed it if there had been any; that he saw no change in the manner of wearing his hair, nor any discoloration upon his face that he observed no attempt on the part of concealment, but that he seemed perfectly composed.

Dr. John L. Taylor, of Trenton, testified that he studied in Dr. Mott's office with Dr, Eldridge, whom he considered to be wealthy as he had seen him in possession of large sums of money.

George C. Marshall of New York, testified that he had framed upward of 1 paintings for Dr. Eldridge, which the Dr. had imported from Europe between the years 1836 and 1839, and that he knew the Doctor owned a large number of other papers and engravings, some of which were very valuable, but he did not know that the Doctor dealt in pictures for a livelihood.

Rufus K. Wells, barkeeper in Mr. Harbach's hotel, testified that Dr. Eldridge was in the habit of calling in to read the newspapers every day, and that he did not observe any change whatever in his appearance about the time of the forgeries.—Philadephia Saturday Courier.

Dr. Eldridge.—The trial of Dr. Eldridge is still continued at Philadelphia, the evidence for the prosecution not having yet been concluded. If the number of witnesses could condemn a man, he must be convicted. The Philadelphia Ledger gives the following account of his manners and appearance:

"We stopped in yesterday at the Court of Criminal Sessions for the second or third time since the trial of this individual has been in progress. He maintains the same dull, lethargic manner that has governed him from the moment of his first incarceration in prison. His face was all the time almost wholly covered by his hands, upon which his head rested with his eyes closed in apparent unconsciousness of the important investigation that was going on around him. When spoken to by his counsel, or by his counsel who sits by his side, some moments elapsed ere he sufficiently roused himself for answer, which he generally comprised in two or three words. The deepest mortification marks every feature of his face and when the evidence of the father of the young lady to whom he was to ha married on the day but one after his t was given in, all control of his gs gave way, and he wept without or remorse; but his general bearing t of unconsciousness—not indifferfor he seems so deeply humbled owed to the earth in shame, that would be a welcome relief. He is 27 or 28 years of age, we should

, and in appearance altogether dift from what we had supposed, from ng the many stories connected with ransaction with which he stands
ed. We had imagined to ourselves nd Dr. Hines, a frivolous, foppish , who prided himself upon the ele-of his dress, or comely appear-of his face and person, with black and whiskers, and probably a mus-
—but how egregiously we were mis-
, a true description of his appear-as he sat in Court will show. He is five feet eight or nine inches, and ight about 135 pounds, with a head ore than usual size, which is covered a thick growth of quite light hair, which seems to be of that intractaort that all the efforts of the most nplished peruquier could not beautify.
ace is large, as are its features, and ed to red. His hands, with the ex-on that he wore very long nails upon ngers, looked as though he might been a day laborer. His dress also as plain as his person, being com-of an olive colored frock coat, gray pants and green silk vest, all of non quality, and without extra frill nket about him in any respect—inof the rich and fashionable gentle-with forty suits of clothes, we should suspected him from his appearance ve been one whose station in society that of a journeyman mechanic.— was Dr. Eldrige, whose alleged s and the aid of a prolific press endered notorious, as we saw him rday. A very common looking man d, and without one prepossessing re."—Br. Jonathan.

ial of Eldridge.—Mr. Hirst has oc-d the most of two days in his defence client.

HE RECORDER.

ZANESVILLE.

NESDAY, ... NOVEMBER 11, 1840.

WEATHER.—We had some rain on Saturight and Sunday last, but on Monday it cleared up pleasant and warm for the f year.

hope the friends of the law for the protecf religious worship will not forget to circu-he petitions for signatures, which have placed in their hands in view of that ob-Should any one feel disposed to do some-on this subject, who might have no printed on, let him copy the form in our paper with n, and circulate it. Our Methodist Episorethren, at their late conference in Zanestook action upon the subject, and their peare now in circulation. Let us emulate n this good work. Their petitions asks in nce for the same that ours does.

WARNING FOR SOME PRIESTS IN OHIO.—An ma paper says: "The Primitive Baptist hes in Henry county, Georgia, have closed loors against the Rev. William Moseley, a f theological eminence, "believing it in-ent with the clerical dignity to mingle in ial broils and traffic in political slander."
nur W. Elliot, Wm. H. Raper, Presiding
Findley, Mr. Rankin, and many others, also be in danger, if they had not first cor-their churches, and prepared them to e religion to the works of the devil, hard nd coon skins.—Ohio Statesman.

Statesman is pretty hard on our old friends
M. E. Church. Whether the charge of ting their churches be correct or incorrect not pretend to say, but we do mean to s is highly imprudent for ministers to enter ne spirit of politics, and we hope the min-of the M. P. Church will ever keep clear of ng in the party political contests of the ELECTION NEWS.

w HAMPSHIRE.—This State has chosen Buren electors by five or six thousand of ty. The vote is said to be larger than ever
.

DDE ISLAND goes for Harrison by a larger ity than any other State will likely go, in ition to its voters.

NNECTICUT has given the Whigs a majority
37, which is a gain of 2059.

INE.—The N. Y. Signal of the 4th inst., it is probable this State has chosen the son electors by a small majority.

NSYLVANIA.—The Philadelphia Saturday er of the 7th inst. says; "the official re-were not yet received from a number of ies; that "both parties claim the State by ll majority. By the last reported returns, rer, the Whigs express great confidence that son has the State by a few hundred major-w JERSEY.—This State has gone for Harby a majority of near 1500.

io has chosen the Harrison electors by a ity of something like 24,000.

ere is nothing yet decisive from NEW YORK IRGINIA.

he above be correct, the result is as follows:

	Van Buren.	Harrison.
io,		21
ryland,		10
nnecticut,		8
ine,		10
w Jersey,		8
de Island,		4
w Hampshire,	7
	7	61

cessary for a choice, 148.

. Corwin, the Whig candidate for Governor
o, has been elected by a majority of 16,090.

PRICES CURRENT.

ZANESVILLE.—Wheat is still 50 cents in this town. The mills are now shipping flour through the canal, south; the millers say as soon as this navigation closes wheat will be down to 44 cents. The market has been lately much over stocked with meat. From the super-abundance of every thing, and the scarcity of money, produce is likely to be cheap this fall.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 3.—FLOUR.—Pennsylvania Flour is steady at $5 per bbl. with however but a moderate export demand.—Bicknell.

QUICK ARRIVAL.—The New World, New York, and Saturday Courier, Philadelphia, of the 7th instant, from their respective places of publication, arrived at this office on the evening of the 9th.

Br. Hunt, of Union, says they have good times within the bounds of his charge. Twenty-five have joined the church since conference.

NOTICES.

The LADY'S BOOK for November is before us. It is embellished with a steel engraving—the INDIAN MAID, and the November fashions. This work is sustained by able contributors, and its mechanical execution is of a superior kind.

PHILADELPHIA CASKET for November is also before us. Embellishments—steel engraving of Fort Putnam, and Evening Dress, November.—This work is likewise sustained by able contributors, and very neatly executed. The proprietor of the Casket has recently purchased Mr. Burton's 'Gentleman's Magazine,' with a handsome list of subscribers. He proposes in future to give "Fashion plates, engravings and music each month."

The gentlemen who manage these publications give evidence of being honest and liberal. We have known editors to publish the prospectuses of other similar works, in the eastern cities, but the owners of them never responded to the favor. But we know of no instance of the publication of the Prospectus of either of the above magazines, whether requested to do it or not, that they were not forwarded to who ever published for them. Such men we can recommend cheerfully to public attention.

MISSIONARY BANNER.—This is the name of a small pamphlet, "published," at Charleston, S. C., "by the board of managers of the Juvenile Missionary Society Methodist Protestant Church," quarterly, at 50 cents, and edited by J. H. Honour, Jr. and B. S. Anderson. This society was formed in June, 1839, and then consisted of 70 members—since, 67 more have been added. The object of this society is to teach the juvenile mind the value of missions, as well as to raise means to aid in the cause of missions. Our Charleston brethren appear to be quite enterprizing in their efforts to do good.

NEW ENGLAND CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.—We have received the first number of this paper which is to be published in Lowell, Mass., "by the Layman's Wesleyan Association," and edited by LUTHER LEE. This is the same size, and appears to be printed with the same type of the Wesleyan Observer, of which it is no doubt intended to be the successor. When that paper attempted to amalgamate with Zion's Watchman, we considered it a vain effort, at the time, and anticipated a divorce. We could not believe that the sons of the Pilgrims would be satisfied with a paper that is nothing but a bore on consistency. The Advocate proposes to open its columns to temperate discussion on any moral question, and particularly to the abolition of slavery. This paper will go, no doubt, for the emancipation of both white and colored man. It will be published weekly at $2 per annum in advance, commencing with the first week in January.

FOREIGN NEWS.

From the Extra Morning Signal.

ARRIVAL OF THE BRITANNIA.

TEN DAYS LATER.

The steam ship Britannia, Capt. Judkins, arrived at Boston at eight o'clock yesterday morning, in thirteen days thirteen and a half hours from Liverpool.

The Britannia brought out 63 passengers and an immense letter bag.

Attempt to Assassinate Louis Philippe.—An attempt was made on the 15th ultimo, to assassinate Louis Philippe. The following details of which appear in the Journal des Debats:

The London Times of the 19th says: "The funds fell of course at Torton's in consequence of this attack, but, as no further consequences were apprehended from it, they rallied. At the last advices the three per cents. were at 70f. 75c. with, however, but little doing."

The most important item of news is that of another attempt upon the life of Louis Philippe, full particulars of which we give.

A large fire broke out in Manchester on the evening of the 17th, which destroyed warehouses and property to the amount of thirty or forty thousand pounds.

Affairs look more peaceable in Europe than at last advices.

The Corn Market continues to look down and a fall in Wheat of four shillings per quarter may be noted during the last fortnight. The duty is now 21s. 8d. or 13s. per barrel of flour. Good brands are now selling of this last in Liverpool at 34s per barrel. The Cotton Market shows less animation and a fall of ⅛d. on the lower kinds has been submitted to. So soon as the war question becomes settled, the reaction of this staple must be important, which would be the more assisted by the late news of the crop in America.

"Last evening," continued the Debats, "at 55 minutes past 5 o'clock, when the King was returning to St. Cloud, accompanied by the Queen and Madame Adelaide, and was passing along the quay of the Tuilleries, near the Pont de la Concorde, opposite to the gardenhouse du Lion, an individual fired a carbine toward the carriage. Their Majesties, who fortunately were not injured, continued their journey. The assassin had evidently chosen this position with the intention of taking advantage (like Aliband) of the instant that the King would salute the troops under arms. The King, in fact, always salutes the guard, whether troops of the line or National Guard, and in so doing lets down the glass of the carriage and advances forward. One of the Grenadiers on guard immediately seized the assassin, who said, "I am not going away." He was then taken to the guard house. The Prefect of Police arrived in a few minutes, and interrogated him. He confessed his crime, and declared that his name was Marius Darmes. He said that he was a native of Marseilles, and had been for a long time in Paris, and was employed as a frotteur (in polishing the floors of apartments.) He was clad in a long frock coat, under which he concealed his carbine, the stock of which was expensively carved. He is forty-three years of age.

He was searched, and on his person were found two loaded pistols and a poinard. The carbine, which had been cut short and loaded up to the muzzle, had burst. The charge did not scatter, and the carriage was but slightly struck. The assassin, however was severely wounded in the left hand. His carbine was loaded with several balls and slugs. The explosion was extremely loud. One of the National Guard, of the escort was slightly wounded in the hand by a slug. One of the footmen, who was standing behind the carriage, was wounded in the leg. The wound is not dangerous, but the ball has not been yet extracted.

Darmes, when arrested, burst into a violent passion, and exclaimed, "Cursed carbine! I had taken a good aim, but I overloaded it."

To the first question which was addressed to him, he at first replied, "Conspirator."

"What is your profession?"

"An exterminator of tyrants."

"What could have induced you to commit so horrible a crime."

"I am not a hired conspirator; I follow the impulse of my nature."

"How long is it since you formed this resolution?"

"About an hour since; I wished to rid France of the greatest tyrant that she ever produced."

Darmes is of low stature; he has a scowling and ferocious expression of countenance. His bearing indicates most determined resolution.

His wound is serious, and required medical assistance. It is asserted that it will be necessary to amputate two or three of his fingers. The pain of the wound was so intense that he fainted.

On the boulevards and public places the news of the attempt of the king's life produced an extraordinary effect."

Louis Philippe issued an order, convoking the Court of Peers, for the trial of the assassin. The court assembled at two o'clock, on the 17th, when the Chancellor, Baron Pasquier, read to them the royal ordinance, constituting them a court of justice, "for the purpose of trying Marius Darmes;" and Mr. Franc Carre, the attorney general, presented his requisatory against the assassin. The proceeding was private. A committee was appointed to investigate the affair, which it was reported would be found to involve very grave questions, besides that of the prisoner's guilt. Among other strong measures which the government were deliberating upon, was one directed against the press.

The prisoner, Marius Darmes, appears to be a fanatic of the stamp of Louvel and Alibaud—so says a private letter. The interrogatories he has undergone has not elicited from him any admission tending to prove that he had any accomplices, or that he was a hired assassin. Although suffering from his wounds, he has throughout evinced extraordinary energy, and to this moment the only regret he has manifested is, that of not having effected his criminal purpose. At one question, put to him by his instructing judge, tears were seen to flow into his eyes.—"Do not imagine," said Darmes, "that these are tears of repentance; if I weep it is from despair at having missed my aim." He was heard to exclaim, on another occasion, "Had I killed the tyrant, Soliman Pasha would now be free—the French fleet, united with that of Mehemet Ali, would have sunk that of the incendiaries of Beyrout, and Egypt would be freed"

The packet ships Toronto, New York and Westminster, have arrived at New York, the latter having dates to 10th ult.

The news appears still more warlike. Indeed the war upon Syria and Egypt is already under way, and we have only to note its destructive progress. The final crisis is now at hand. If France commences hostilities at all she must do so very soon.

The fall of Beyrout is confirmed, and is stated on the authority of private letters that the allied troops which landed were compelled to embark with a loss of two thousand men.

EXTRAORDINARY EXPRESS FROM PARIS.

PARIS, Thursday.—The Moniteur of Thursday has the annexed ordonnance of the day—

"Louis Philippe, King of the French,

"To all greeting, we have ordained and do ordain as follows:

"The Chamber of Peers and the Chamber of Deputies are convoked for October 28.

"Our Minister, Secretary of State of the Interior is charged with the execution of the present ordonnance.

By the King, "LOUIS PHILIPPE.

"The Minister Secretary of State at the Department of the Interior.

C. REMUSAT.

"Tuilleries, Oct. 7. 1840.

Our private letters regard the fall of the Thiers Ministry as now certain, although it will probably not take place till the Chambers are assembled.

The Havre Journal states that the French ministry is inundated with applications to issue letters of marque for various ports, and adds that the French privateers would be sure to make large prizes, as the British are unprepared.

EXTRAORDINARY CREDITS.

The Bulletin des Lois, the 29th of Sept. publishes the Royal Ordinance, opening in the department of war an extraordinary credit of 51,674,000*f* to cover the urgent expenses accruing from the increase in the effective force and material of the army, which had not been provided for by the Chambers during their last session. The clothing and articles of encampment figure in the items for a sum of upwards of 13,000,000 of francs, and the outlay for the purpose of cavalry horses amounts to 9,600,000f. The same official publication contains the Royal Ordinance of the 28th of September, decreeing the formation of ten additional battalions of Chasseurs, of 1,280 men each.

SENTENCE OF LOUIS NAPOLEON AND HIS FELLOW PRISONERS.

The following are the sentences of the Court of Peers on Prince Louis Napoleon and his fellow prisoners.

Prince Louis Napoleon, perpetual imprisonment in a fortress.

Count Montholon, 20 years' detention; Voisin 10; Mesonan, 15; Parquin, 20; Forricster 10.

Second Rank—Bataille, 5 years' detention; Labords, 2 do.; Aladenize transportation for life. Desjardines, Galvani, De Lambert and Bure, acquitted.

THE WAR IN THE EAST.

Destruction of Beyrout—1000 Egyptians killed.

Extract of a letter from the Princess Charlotte, off Beyrout, 19th Sept.

"We arrived here on the 11th, and made every preparation for an immediate attack upon the coast. The marines were all landed by the steamers, under the command of Capt. Nepier, of the Powerful, and then the work began in gallant style; the Princes Charlotte, Edinburgh, Benbow, Ganges and Belerophon, poured their destructive broadsides into the devoted town of Beyrout, which in the short time of two hours presented a heap of smoking ruins. The marines, in the meantime, had not been idle, having, assisted by the other ships, soon hoisted the British jack upon the forts on the coast.

"Our loss is trifling, considering the number of men engaged. The total is six killed and sixteen wounded. Four have since died of their wounds. We have lost no officers. Lieutenant Giffard of the Cyclops, wounded. We are now about eleven thousand strong on shore. The number of Egyptians killed and wounded exceeds 1000 men.

SYRIA.

Hostilities would not be suspended—Attack on the Egyptians by the Turks.

On the 18th September, Soliman Pacha asked for cessation of hostilities for two days, which was refused. The arriving of the people still continues. An attempt will be made on the 20th upon Sidon. Two Austrian steamers arrived off Beyrout on the 19th with eight hundred troops and Izzet Mehemet, the newly appointed Pacha for Egypt. The number of mountaineers arrived is about ten or twelve thousand. The force now entrenched in the position taken up by the allies is nearly ten thousand. Ibrahim and Soliman are upon very bad terms; and, though the latter is in Beyrout and the former within a few hours march of it, yet they do not meet. Three hundred of the Egyptian army have deserted. An intercepted letter from the river Besbir admits the impossibility of depending upon the army; this accounts for there being no attack made upon the position taken up by the allies. All the deserters are on board the Turkish ships of war. Two thousand more await opportunities of deserting. A courier had arrived at the camp, bringing intelligence that 3000 Turkish troops, having advanced, encountered a division of the Egyptian army, and completely defeated them. Their loss is estimated at 300.

OVERLAND MAIL FROM INDIA AND CHINA.

Canton, June 5.—The English were lying quietly at Macco—The Canton Market was cleared of teas, and the Americans were preparing to leave by the end of June. The expedition had not arrived. The last seen of it was at Pulo Sopata, on the 13th ult. Lord John Churchhill, of her Majesty's ship Druid, died at Macco on the 3d ult. of dysentary.

By advices just received, the insurgents in Nepaul having formed into a regular body, amounting to 7000 men, have taken complete possession of the whole Champarun district. The Indigo planters, European civilians, fled before them. They proceeded to the capital, and have now closely blockaded the British President, B. Hodgson, Esq., and his escort. The Raja positively disclaims any knowledge or connection with the affair, but we are disposed to doubt his disclaimer.

ITEMS.

Judge Betts of New York, a day or two ago, fined a juror $25, for keeping eleven other jurors, the counsel and other witnesses, half an hour waiting his attendance.

Extract of a letter, dated Iberville, La. Sept. 1840. "The Cotton crops through out the State have been cut off one half at least, by worms. Sugar cane looks tolerably well. We begin to make sugar on the 5th of October."

The interest on the national debt of Great Britain, is now a little more than £29,000,000 per annum.

The Bunker Hill Monument is to be completed. The directors have an available sum to the amount of $50,000.

The Baptist churches of New Jersey have received an accession of over 700 members during the year.

REVIVALS.—At a protracted meeting with the church at Deep Run, Va. forty-five professed to obtain a hope in Christ.

The Baptist church at Rahway, New Jersey, have recently received several additions by baptism.

Several of the Baptist churches near Richmond, Va. are enjoying precious revivals.

At Stamping Ground, Ky., between forty and fifty have been added to the church.

Several churches in Barren and Adair Counties Ky., have received additions.

At Gereval and Covington, Tenn,, refreshing revivals have recently been enjoyed.—Cross and Journal

Several very respectable citizens have been arrested, charged with false voting in the city of N. York.

South Carolina.—The election has resulted decidedly in favor of the Democrats The State has gone mostly one way, one whig to eight democrats in Congress.

The first steamer on the Mississippi was launched in 1811—now there are more than 600 on that river and its tributaries. The first steamer passed on the lake from Buffalo in 1818—now the inland seas are navigated by 61 steam-ships; some of them magnificent in their construction, and of the largest class.

Six Hindoos were recently hanged in Bombay, for the murder of Captain Whiffin, of the barque Virginia.

It is estimated that 270,000 votes were polled at the recent election in Ohio, being 60,000 more than were ever polled at any previous election.

The New Orleans Picayune states that several of the crew of the barque B. Mezick, of Philadelphia, were brought up in that city on the 11th ult. for plundering of her cargo.

There is a report from Florida, of a treaty about to be made between the Seminoles and General Armistead.

It is believed that 225,000 votes were polled at the recent election in this State, the largest number ever polled on any occasion in Pennsylvania.

Among the novelisties at the New York Fair, is a labor-saving machine, to be propelled by horse power, for the purpose of reaping grain.

The Bostonians talk of building an Exchange in State street, and have already subscribed a large portion of the money.

Death of a United States Senator.—The Hon. John S. Spence, United States Senator from (the Eastern Shore) Maryland, died at his residence in Worcester county on Thursday morning last.

Fire in Ohio.—On Thursday evening last week the large establishment at Massillon, Ohio, known as "the machine shop," was totally destroyed by fire. Loss estimated at 43,000 dollars.

Another Generous Donation.—A gentleman of New Orleans has added a donation of ten thousand dollars to those already announced toward the completion of the Bunker Hill Monument, which is deemed sufficient to complete the object.

Double crops.—A second crop of pears and of apples has been produced this season, on the farm of D. Clark, near Delaware city, (Del.) The first crop was very abundant, came off in July. In August the trees bloomed again, and are now producing fruit which looks as if it had passed through the usual season.

One night last week some villians broke into the fancy millinary store of S. Johns, 285 Chestnt street, and plundered it of silks, satins and other articles to the value of six or seven hundred dollars.

Maine Election.—It is stated in several Eastern papers that the votes for Members of Congress have been counted by the Governor and Council, and the result is as has been stated before, that four Whigs and two Democratic members are elected to Congress, and there are two vacancies. On the popular vote there is a Whig majority of 237. The votes for governor are not to be counted, by a provision of the Constitution, until the meeting of the Legislature in January.

The Pennsylvania Catholic Total Abstinence Society now numbers upwards of eleven thousand members.

The Mayor of Baltimore offers a reward of $1000, for the apprehension of certain incendiaries.

The New York Sun sold 35,000 copies of the Glentworth papers in the course of a few hours.

Mr. Webster has so far recovered as to be able to travel.

William Pennington was on Friday last re-elected Governor of New Jersey,—and Chas. G. McChesney, Secretary.

The total number of bankruptcies in England and Wales in the last year was 1,083, being an excess over the previous year of 240.

The Legislature of Illinois is about to be convened.

About three hundred new houses are in progress in Mobile.

Mr. Appleton, of Boston has made no less than twenty-three organs for churches in that city alone.

Howard street flour in Baltimore, $4 87 and $4 94.

A letter from Guilford, N. H., states that on Monday, the snow at that place was several inches deep and still falling.

Eighty berths have already been engaged in the President.

The Baltimore Sun states that the Real Estate Saving Institution has gone the way of all similar establishments.

A Shocking Rail Road Accident.—We learn from the Boston Advertiser, that a serious accident occurred on the Worcester Railroad on Saturday last. A woman, while walking over the canal bridge, on the Worcester Railroad, where the track is double, unexpectedly met the train, and probably being confused, and not knowing which track the train was on, she fell, and throwing her arm across the rail, it was cut entirely off by the engine. The engine man used every effort to stop the train, and had nearly succeeded. The woman immediately received every attention which her situation required.

The Banks of Illinois.—A Sangamon, Journal, says:—"Col. Mather has returned from New York; and we believe it is now understood the State Bank is ready to resume specie payments. It is also understood that the Bank of Illinois and the Cairo Bank are ready to resume.—They will wait, we presume, the action of banks in other States."—Bicknell.

APPOINTMENT BY THE PRESIDENT.—Paschall Bequette, Receiver of Public Moneys at Mineral Point, Wisconsin, vice D. W. Jones, resigned.

A Sentence.—At the late term of the Iberville (La.) Court, Charles Lewis was found guilty of negro stealing, and sentenced to seven years imprisonment in the penitentiary. Richard Case was convicted of manslaughter, and was sentenced to 10 years imprisonment in the penitentiary.

The proprietors of the various Transportation Lines between Philadelphia and Pittsburg have determined to discontinue receiving goods after the 10th of November.

The Boston Journal states that the Pacha of Egypt has issued a firman, directing the release of the persecuted Jews at Damascus and forbidding any person to molest them in future.

The Great Western is now on her twelfth trip across the Atlantic this year.

A number of hogsheads of the new crop of sugar, were received at New Orleans on the 14th.

A man named Chaney, has been convicted at Annapolis, Md., of gambling, fined $500, and sentenced to thirty days imprisonment.

A journeyman hatter named Daniel Welch, aged 50, committed suicide in Baltimore on Thursday morning, by shooting himself with a pistol. He was separated from his wife and four children a few weeks since.

Mr. Pryor's coach factory in Baltimore was considerably injured by fire on Sunday night.

The Acadia left Boston on Sunday with about 40 passengers which would be increased to 70 at Halifax.

TYLER AT THEIR TRICKS AGAIN.—A political paper commences a paragraph thus:

"In this district there are three candidates running, &c."

We have heard of blockheads and addlepates before.—Phil. Paper.

SUICIDE.—John Wilson, a middle aged man of address, but somewhat intemperate, committed suicide on Sunday morning, at the house of Mr. Beebee, in London. The deceased is said to have respectable connexions living in the vicinity of Beaver, Pennsylvania.

WHEAT GOING ABROAD.—The ship England sailed from New York a day or two ago, with 16,000 bushels of wheat and 1500 barrels of flour.

GEN. HARRISON, says the Cincinnati Gazette, has just returned to his farm from his late tour through the interior of Ohio, in excellent health and spirits.

Dr. Duncan, the Van Buren candidate for Congress from Cincinnati, intends to contest the election of Mr. Pendleton, on the ground that he was defeated in consequence of stupendous frauds on the part of the Whigs.

Nicholas G. Williamson, Esq., has been elected Mayor of Wilmington, Del.

A PROPHECY.—The cleansing of the sanctuary—that is, the completion of the whole period from Daniel to the commencement of the millenium, 2,300 years—will take place in 1843.—Episcopal Magazine.

All the prophecies of late years, of the world's coming to an end, have been remarkably fulfilled.—Courier.

It is said that the recent election in Florida has gone in favor of the administration.

Over eleven hundred communicants have been added to the Baptist churches of Boston during the year.

The contributions of the Episcopal Church of Ohio for the past year, to the purposes of benevolence, have been over two million of dollars.

Widow Huldah Peace has deceased at Wells, Me., aged over 100 years.

Mr. Daniel Welsh, foreman in the hat manufactory of Clapp & Cole, Baltimore, shot himself with a pistol through the heart, and died immediately. Domestic infelicity is stated as the cause.

Mr. Jesse L. Pool's steam-mill at Elizabeth City, N. C., has been burnt down. Loss $15,000.

The New York Times states that the Insurance offices in that city are, in consequence of the war news from Europe, unwilling to take long risks.

It is now ascertained that 1200 souls were buried up by the dreadful earthquake which destroyed the village of Akhouli.

Active preparations have been suspended in Florida, on an agreement made by Gen. Armistead to hold a "talk" with the Seminole chief.

Business Department.

The minutes of the Indiana Conference are received, but not until the arrangements for this paper were made. They shall be forthcoming in our next.

Br. Hunt informs the President of the Ohio Conference, that the quarterly conference of Union circuit has agreed to employ Br. Devore, if it meet his approbation; if so, a note to that effect, through the Recorder, is desired.

The post master at Cincinnati informs us that A. Metcalf and J. Steubert do not take their papers. Will Br. Barnes inform us about this matter?

The post master at Versailles, Ia., writes us that Br. Jos. Breeden has removed and does not take his paper. He has had it from the beginning and we have received nothing; will some of our friends in Indiana see to this matter for us?

POETRY.

THE BREWERS' LAMENT.

There has recently been published a poem (embellished with an engraving,) purporting to be "the lament of the Albany Brewers, after the verdict in the libel case of Taylor vs Delavan." The name of the author appears not, and we have no means, but internal evidence, of determining to whom the honor of its production is due. This, however, is sufficient to satisfy us, that he who sung the "Airs of Palestine" with so much sweetness, has inspired his muse with "Ale," and condemned to the immortality of song, the luckless brewers and their horrid pond. The cut which illustrates the poem, represents the pond from which the water was taken to the Brewery, and around in disgusting numbers, and in it, in loathsome corruption lie the carcasses left there for want of sepulchres; and here stands the glue factory, and there the slaughter house draining in, and fortifying the water for the more effectual accomplishment of its destined office in making malt. The Poet speaks for the Brewers, who being defeated in their libel suit, now pour their lamentations on the banks of this Stygian lake, in lugubrious strains like these:—

It is all up with us!—As said the Moor,
Who killed folks with his old Damascus blade,
'Othello's occupation's gone!' We poor
Traduced and libelled brewers, who have made
'An honest living,' o'er our ruined trade,
Which was not killing folks with murderous steel,
'Some natural drops' must shed: no great parade
Of our deep sorrows make we, but appeal
For sympathy, to such as cannot fail to feel.

Are there no bottles for a brewer's tears?
If you've one empty, bring it, with a funnel!
The briny drops, that have not leaked for years,
Gush forth, and like the poet's 'bubbling tunnel,'
We feel the coming torrent. Ye have done ill,
Jury and Judge, to side with the defendant!
That Libel Case he certainly hath won ill:
Could we appeal, this should'nt be the end on't
Ye'd not soon hear the last of it, ye may depend on't.

But 'tis all up with us!—Have ye an onion?
Our eyes are getting dry too soon: we're fond
Of a long snivel. There! now bring us Bunyan,
And let us read about his 'Slough Despond:'
It will bring back the image of that pond
Hard-by our malt-house, whence are all our woes!
And of the Potter's Field that lies beyond,
Where gullying rains sometimes the dead expose
And where the passer-by holds on his way, and—nose.

* * * * * *

Ye sleeping cats, who would no' let us sleep,
When, at the noon of night, our ears were smitten
With the key-note that cawterwaulers keep,
Or with the monotone of some lone kitten,
That in its mother's absence hath been bitten
By hunger, or an old revengeful rat,—
Shall not your nine lives by the Nine be written Since ye our pursy friends have made so fat,
Yea, and our purses, too?—Mute mousers, tell us that.

False is the proverb,—not that we would doubt
The holy book of Proverbs,—that were wrong;
Tho', sooth to say, we could do well without
Some of thy sayings, Solomon!—That song
About 'dead flies,' we think, cannot belong
To the true cannon; for a 'topic' graver
Than 'the apothecary's ointment' strong
Would have become a preacher of good flavor
Thy song, that ointment makes 'send forth a stinking savor.

But, speaking of false proverbs, all we meant
To question, as we might do without sin,
When we were drawn off on another scent,
Was that which saith that 'No more than her skin
Can of a cat be had.' For ye'll be in (Should we your various occupations call up)
The cat-egory your Kilkenny kin
Were found in, after they had done their squall up;
If even your tails are left: our ale will use ye all up!

For, our dissolving pool doth nothing spare,
Of all that goes to make a living creature!
Weeks rolled around, and neither hide nor hair,
Bowels, nor bones, are left; nor form, nor feature
Of gray grimalkin from the wave will greet your Inquiring eye; albeit, we do suppose,
Should he go dabbling there, a temperance preacher,
Intent our malting secrets to disclose,
Would swear (what wont they swear!) they greeted still his nose!

Corpses that, living, bloated on our beer,
And died of dropsy, long before your time,
Were it not better that ye give back here
Thy moisture that converts your clay to slime,
And eke supply us as we brew our rhyme,
With such suggestions as become our vats,
Than to be cased in lead, or burnt with lime!
For here they riot round you river rats,
That care not for the claws of countless carrion cats.

Poor putrid relics! while with us ye dealt,
We never heard ye called 'of earth the salt;'
For neither wit nor wisdom with ye dwelt,— Though that was your misfortune, not your fault!
Had ye been wise, ye'd ta'en the pledge to halt,
On your way down to the still slandered spot;
Nor would ye, with the liquor of our malt,
Have so prepared your carcasses to rot
And make the soil, and us, the richer: ye would not!

Ye murdered dogs, who, when ye had your day,
Were wont, by moonlight, o'er yon graves to howl,
Who from cash customers would walk away,
But at the ragged ones would turn and growl,
Though round our premises no more ye prowl,
Against the loafer to 'keep watch and ward,'
Still do ye serve us, though reformers scowl;
For, since ye dangled in the strangling cord,
Ye've helped make many a lout as tipsy as a lord.

Bullocks, who bellowed just before your blood
Was, for our benefit, poured out like water,
Dreamed ye, as erst ye lay and chewed the cud,
That, from yon house, where ye were led to slaughter,
There would drain down for many a blouzy daughter
Of our good city, who sits guzzling ale,
Such 'real stuff?' Our Trial now hath taught her (Grew she not, as she read it, 'very pale?')
That from your horns and hoofs there hangeth quite a tale

Thou ponderous porker, who are numbered '6'
Upon the map in Delavan's 'Report,'
Who didst sink into our Albanian Styx,
And rise again before the Circuit Court,
Like sightless Samson, there thou madest sport
For temperance Philistines:—but 'tis clear,
The very place for thee was in our wort:
Why should not we, who have from year to year, (beer?
Our beer in hogsheads put, put hogs' heads in our Speaking of Samson.—Bible-readers know
That, with the bone of a dead ass's jaw,
He made a dreadful onslaught on the foe
Of Israel's tribes and the Mosaic Law.
'Heaps upon heaps' they fell. But when we saw
That dead horse swelling our 'steep-tub's resources,
And giving them the virtues of his maw,
We thought that, measuring the respective forces
Of horse and ass's bones, the mightier were the horse's.

For, when well brewed, and sent away in kegs,
There is such vigor in them, that we've known
Men so transported by a horses' legs
That, for their souls, they could'nt keep their own.
Still had we hoped, poor steed, that, bone by bone,
Thou would'st have so commingled with the mass
Of filth and fluid flesh, around the thrown,
That, when thy foaming flanks should foam in glass,
Thou would'st lay sprawling more than e'en did Samson's ass.

* * * * * * *

New Inventions.—Our attention has lately been called to two new inventions—one American, the other, we believe, French—which seem likely to effect revolutions of great though unequal importance in the world of manufacture.

The American novelty is a machine by which woolen cloth of every sort is produced at less than one fourth part of the cost hithero usual. The material is not woven but compressed. Two urchins, with the machine, can turn out one hundred yards of the broadcloth in 12 hours; and where 24*s* were demanded per yard, 6*s*. afford the new manufactures abundant remuneration. We have inspected and handled (as roughly as we liked) specimans of every variety, from the finest scarlet cloth for officers' uniforms down to blankets and carpets, and we certainly could not, either by sight or touch, distinguished them from corresponding pieces in the old fashion.

The French device is of a very different sort, but must also have very remarkable results. Two specimens of this new manufacture were exhibited at the Marquis of Nortampton's last soiree, as President of the Royal Society, and they then excitid the curiosity and astonishment of the assembled elite of our philosophers They were rich silk curtains, having all the appearance of being inwoven in gold and silver, in the most gorgeous patterns of arabesque.—They looked and felt exactly like the most splendid hangings of the Louis Quartorze taste, but their cost is a mere trifle in comparison, for the gold and silver are merely woven glass.

The Queen of the French and her daughters appeared at the balls in Tuillieries in dresses manufactured upon this principle.—London paper.

Longevity.—The Post Ampt. Gazette, of Frankfort, says there is now living at Moscow, the widow of a dealer in skins, who has attained her 157th year. When 123 she married her fifth husband. All her alliances have been prosperous and happy. She is still in the possession of all her mental faculties.

The Tattler is growing ancient.—Boston Transcript.

Very like. We are two days older already since you said that.

For the Western Recorder.

TO THE PREACHERS AND MEMBERS OF THE METHODIST PROTESTANT CHURCH, IN THE WESTERN CONFERENCES, (FORMERLY THE OHIO ANNUAL CONFERENCE.)

The plan of the Ohio Annual Conference, held in Cincinnati, August, 1840, respecting the college property and debts, being submitted to you, I take leave to address you, through the medium of our paper, the Western Recorder, in my own individual name. I witnessed the origin, progress and failure of the Cokesbury College in the old church, and was present when Mr. Asbury received the news of it being burned, and heard his remarks upon the occasion. Not many among us, perhaps, can recollect so far back, even among those of my own age. The part I acted in our case, was that of a servant. I had no responsibility. I offer the advice of an old friend, only. Providence still favors us with a name, and an existence among the churches. We have a name to secure, or to loose. Justice has claims upon us, and we can be just. As a whole people, we are not bankrupt. Our failure in the college enterprize is matter of history. Let us furnish another item for history. Let the pen which records our failure, have to record that we were just, as a people; and then, whenever our history shall be read in the whole world, this shall be spoken of to our praise. Every body will say, that such a people deserved better success. Let us secure the good will of our contemporaries and of posterity, by this test of our public equity and public spirit. Nothing could have happened that will have raised our church reputation so high. Our God and Father who loveth a cheerful giver, loveth also, cheerful justice.—What a spectacle for men and angels to behold! In this new and comparatively poor church, twenty-five hundred men stepping forward, willingly, to pay the uttermost farthing! This being done, will it ever again be said, that we are incapable of self-government? Rather, will it now be the general belief, that such men are capable of any thing great and good. Let us deserve public confidence. Our friends, for whom we should do this thing, I am a witness, were generous and confiding to a failing; they not only regarded our word as being good as our bond, but they intrusted their property, for our use, without our word. Let it never be said that such confidence remains unrequitted. Let us be just to such noble generosity.

Your affectionate brother,
NICHOLAS SNETHEN.

Cincinnati, Sept. 1, 1840.

A Plan to relieve the Literary Institution
OF THE
METHODIST PROTESTANT CHURCH.

Whereas, the Methodist Protestant Church, of the Ohio and Pittsburgh Districts, for the purpose of establishing a Literary Institution, in the year 1836, purchased the farm of two hundred and fifty acres of land, known as the "Mount Pleasant Farm," situated about two miles north of Lawrenceburgh, in Indiana; the purchase money whereof, with other debts incurred and now due from said Methodist Protestant Church, amount to twelve thousand five hundred dollars. that the purchase money now due is a lien on said farm;—that John Haughton and William Disney, acting as Trustees for said Methodist Protestant Church, are personally liable for the payment of all the debts of said Institution.

Now in order to pay said debts, and release said Trustees from their liabilities, the said M. P. Church have released all their interest in the real estate aforesaid, to the said Haughton and Disney, who have heretofore held the legal title thereof, for the sole use of such subscribers as shall take up the stock, and donors, as specified in the following plan, for the purpose of liquidating the debts of said Literary Institution, on the plan here proposed, viz:

PLAN.

The beneficial and equitable interest of said real estate shall be and is hereby divided into two thousand five hundred shares of five dollars each, equal in all to twelve thousand five hundred dollars.

That each subscriber shall be a part owner or said premises in proportion to the stock by him subscribed and paid for; Provided, he pays all he is required to pay by the terms of this plan.

If any subscriber at any time shall refuse to pay up the balance that may be due on his stock subscription, that the money so by him then already paid shall be considered a donation to said Methodist Protestant Church, for the purpose of liquidating the debt of said Literary Institution generally, and may be so applied accordingly.

The subscriber shall pay one dollar on each share subscribed, at the time of subscribing, and one dollar on each share so by him subscribed, on each succeeding ninety-one days, until his whole stock be paid up; Provided, it shall be, by Daniel H. Horn, Harvey Hall, and Shadford Easton, or a majority of them, Trustees, or their successors in office, thought necessary, and the subscribers shall be called on to pay the same.

Unless stock to the amount of eleven thousand dollars shall be subscribed, and the sum of two thousand two hundred dollars shall be paid in, no subscriber shall be bound by his subscription: but the money so by him paid, shall be refunded to him, within ninety days after the next Annual Conference.

Daniel H. Horn, H. Hall and Shadford Easton, are hereby named, appointed and vested Trustees, with full power to fill any vacancies that may occur in their board, and to direct the paying out of the money so raised on this plan.

The holders of a majority of the stock may at any time direct a sale of said premises, provided the premises shall sell for a sum sufficient to pay all the debts of said Institution, then unpaid.

The several stockholders shall have one vote for each share of stock, so by them held.

If after the debts of said Literary Institution are all paid, said property still remains on hand, unsold, the holders of a majority of the stock, may dispose of the property, and divide the proceeds among the stockholders and donators, as hereinafter provided, or may dispose of the whole property by donation to the Methodist Protestant Church, as they may in their judgment and liberality think proper.

All sums hereafter donated, shall be applied in payment of debts of the Literary Institution in the same manner, as money paid in on stock subscription

If on sale of said property, a sum of money shall be procured, more than sufficient to pay the debts of said Literary Institution, then unpaid, the surplus over and above paying the said debts, shall be divided among the stockholders and donators, in proportion to the stock subscribed, and the sum so donated.

1. Resolved, This conference, acting for and on the behalf of the Methodist Protestant Church of the Ohio District, do hereby release, relinquish and convey to John Haughton and William Disney, and their heirs and assigns, all the interest and claim in and to said real estate of the Literary Institutinn of the said M. P. Church. To have and to hold the said property and interest therein for the sole benefit and use of such stockholders as may subscribe for the stock under the plan now proposed, for the purpose of liquidating the debts of said Institution.

2. Resolved, That Br. Green G. Moore be, and is hereby appointed an agent to obtain subscriptions of stock, and receive money thereon, and receive donations, and pay the same to the aforesaid Trustees.

3 Resolved, That it shall be the duty of the superintendent of each circuit and station, to obtain subscriptions for said stock, and receive the money thereon accordingly, and forthwith or as soon as convenient, transmit the same to the said agent at Cincinnati.

COMMUNICATION.

For the Western Recorder.

Friend Springer:—In my former communication I called the attention of your readers to two theories concerning the remission of sins, and in this permit me to say that the first of these theories carried out into practice I conceive to be one of the strongest props that now remains to support the wind shaken, and rain beaten fabrick of "Clerical Supremacy." The notion that sins are remitted at the "mourners bench" through the prayers of the clergy, is that which supports clerical supremacy more than any other prop now in use. In this practice the clergy assume to stand in the following elevated relations:

1st. They assume to propitiate Deity.

2d. They assume mediatorship between God and sinners.

3d. They assume advocacy in behalf of sinners.

In short, they virtually assume the office of Jesus Christ in Heaven, if not on the earth. This practice I presume is one of the branches of Popery, which has continued to grow on the Protestant tree unobserved, having been a little enlarged in its appearance. The Popish clergy only appear as the advocates of citizens or members of their church, who have committed sins after they became citizens.

But the Protestant clergy not only appear in behalf of citizens or members of their church, they also appear for and advocate the cause of satan's subjects, their advocacy embraces the world as well as the church.

When I see a man fall on his knees and ask God to forgive the sins of an alien, I say to myself, this man is ignorant of the difference between church and world, he cannot shew the advantages of citizenship, or of adoption into the family of God. Or does he expect God will break his covenant, and remit the sins of such as are not of the house of either Israel or Judeah? But such men will say that I condemn all prayer, not so. the christian should pray for himself, for the saints, for kings, and other rulers, and for the world of mankind, including his enemies, but he should not pray to God to remit their sins in unbelief, nor in disobedience to his command. If therefore God commands aliens to repent and be baptized in the name of the Lord, we as christians should not ask Him to forgive them without doing what he commands. But the objector adds: what if he does repent, and is not able to be baptized, should we not ask forgiveness for them?

I answer. The law of God requireth according to what a man hath, and not according to what he hath not. God requires no impossibilities. But if God does not require the blind to see, nor the deaf to hear, is that a good reason why such as can see, should not read, or such as can hear should not listen to the word of God? We should be very careful not to teach men to disobey God, and feed them on the false hope that when they become unable to obey Him he will forgive them. One step further and this doctrine would be universalism. Just tell them that when dead God will require nothing of them; but that He will then forgive them without faith, repentance or baptism, and we have universalism complete. O.

THE
CHRISTIAN WORLD.

1. THE editor desires AGENTS in every District, in the METHODIST PROTESTANT CHURCH.
2. He desires his friends to secure AGENTS for him in OTHER CHURCHES.
3. He will allow $25 of every $125, collected, as remuneration.
4. He particularly requests the AGENTS of the LETTER-PRESS to continue their agency.
5. He will DEDUCT for any Nos. of the Letter-Press not received
6. He will forward to AGENTS, CIRCULARS, &c.
7. He wishes, quickly, NAMES and RESIDENCES of Agents, with COLLECTIONS.

According to the decision of the Post Master General, subscribers to this work will be charged only ordinary newspaper postage.

The editor takes pleasure in stating that the work has been approved by the voice of the press, generally, RELIGIOUS, LITERARY and POLITICAL. The next number will furnish a considerable variety of notices relating to its plan, appearance, &c. Its correspondents are multiplying, including several of the first names in the various churches. TUS. H. STOCKTON.

Philadelphia, Nov. 4, 1840. 63tf

Winslow's Compound
BALSAM OF HOARHOUND.

UNRIVALED and unequaled in curing Colds, Coughs, Asthma, Influenza, Whooping Cough, and all diseasus of the Breast and Lungs, leading to Consumption, composed of the concentrated virtues of the herbs Hoarhound, Boneset, and several other vegetable substances, warranted pure from any mineral whatever.

Sold by A. LIPPITT and S. GATES.

Zanesville, Nov. 4. 64tf

Notice.

BOOKS, Stationery, and Printer's Ink, for sale by A. LIPPITT.

Zanesville, Nov. 4. 63tf.

DRUGS, Medicines, Paints, Dayestuffs, Oils, and Spirits Turpentine. Cheap for cash or good horses, by A LIPPITT.

Main st., No. 72, Zanesville, Nov. 4. 63tf

Partnership Notice.

THE subscribers have formed a co-partnership under the firm of POTTS & GRAHAM, for the transaction of a general mercantile business; and will occupy for that purpose the old stand of Spear & Helmick, where their friends and others wishing to purchase goods, are respectfully solicited to call.

FRANCIS R. POTTS,
NELSON W. GRAHAM.

Putnam, Ohio, Nov. 4. 63tf

New and Cheap Goods.

POTTS & GRAHAM, are now enabled by a fresh arrival of FALL and WINTER GOODS, to offer to the public a very general assortment of all articles in their line Their stock is almost ENTIRELY NEW, and embraces a complete supply of DRY GOODS, GROCERIES, QUEENSWARE, HARDWARE, &c. All of which they will sell upon such terms, and conduct their business throughout upon such principles, as cannot fail to afford permanent satisfaction to all who may favor them with their custom.

☞Most kinds of country produce, including any quantity of new Butter, will be taken in exchange for goods.

Putnam, Ohio, Nov. 4. 63tf

Dissolution.

THE partnership heretofore existing between the subscribers in the PUTNAM FOUNDRY, under the firm of HARTLEY & ANDERSON, was this day dissolved by mutual consent.

The Putnam Foundry will hereafter be conducted by J. J. Anderson & Co.

LEVI HARTLEY,
JACOB J. ANDERSON.

Putnam, Jan. 1, 1840. (Jan. 29: 23,)

CABINET AND CHAIR
FACTORY.

THE subscribers still continue to manufacture and keep on hand, at their old stand, a few doors south of the market house in the town of Putnam, a large assortment of

CABINET WARE
AND CHAIRS,
CONSISTING, IN PART, OF

Splendid black walnut and mahogony dressing and plain bureaus,
Peer, card, center, side, dining and breakfast tables,
Sofas, side-boards, washing stands, ottomans,
Dressing and writing tables,
French, fancy and high post bedsteads,
Secretaries, clock cases, cradles, cribs and book cases,
Grecian, rush, cane and windsor chairs,
Sociables, settees and children's chairs.

In short every thing in their line necessary to furnish a house, either in high or common style; and at such prices as will satisfy all who will favor them with their custom. All the recommendation they have to offer, is, that they have been able to secure a continuance of their old customers and friends. They hope by the quality of their work and a strict attention to business to share a portion of the public patronage.

They have for sale a lot of first rate black walnut veneering and a lot of bureau knobs of the best kind and quality.

Turning done in the best style and shortest notice. CHERRY & GRAY.

Putnam, Ohio, October 28, 1840. 62tf

Proposals

For enlarging and continuing the publication of the "Harrisonian" under the title of

THE ARGUS.

AT the urgent solicitation of a number of the present subscribers to the "HARRISONIAN," we have thought it expedient to make an effort to continue the publication, but under a different name—one more congenial with the times—the present one being a remembrancer of the struggle now going on in our midst,—a struggle between the people and their servants, the office holders.

We do not deem it necessary to enter minutely into a detail of the course to be pursued by the proposed publication, as we are not sufficiently versed in prescience to state with any degree of certainty,—but this much we do say, we will use our best abilities to make it an agreeable and exceptable sheet.

The "ARGUS," in politics, will be Whig.—News, both Domestic and Foreign, will be given to its readers, and that too of the latest dates; Literature, &c. &c.

For the first year, to suit the times, the "ARGUS" will be neatly printed on a super-royal sheet, being two sizes larger than the "HARRISONIAN," on new and small type, so that we will warrant the paper to contain as much reading matter as our larger neighbors.

CONDITIONS.

The "ARGUS" will be printed weekly on a super-royal sheet, at TWO DOLLARS per annum, or, ONE DOLLAR & FIFTY CENTS, if paid in advance.

The publication will be commenced as soon after the first of November, as possible, should it receive sufficient encouragement.

JNO. W. WHITE, } Editors and GEM'L. ARTHUR, } Proprietors.

Zanesville, Oct. 28, 1840. 3w62

Puff! Puff! Puff!!
CHEAP!
CHEAPER THAN EVER! GREAT BARGAINS!

New York at your door!

SELLING OFF AT COST!

WE so heartily despise the "gull-catching" system that we seldom advertise at all. We however give our friends and the public notice that we have just received a fine stock of

FALL AND WINTER
GOODS.

We don't profess to have brought "New York to your doors," nor to undersell every body else, nor to be "selling off at cost," nor to be "closing up," and all that sort of thing,—but we do say, that our goods are cheap enough to satisfy any reasonable person, even in these "hard times."

A. A. GUTHRIE & Co.

Putnam, Ohio, September 30, 1840. 3w58

STOLEN

FROM the stable of Hamisfar & Brown in Somerset, Perry county, O., on Saturday night, the 19th instant, an old

SORREL HORSE,

very hollow-backed, and much marked with the saddle, his mouth very much cut on one side with the bits, his foretop heavy and lately cut square off above his eyes, shod all round, and shoes much worn.

Any person giving information to the subscriber so that he can get said horse again, shall be rewarded, and receive the thanks of JEREMIAH L. LESSLIE.

Zanesville, O., Sept. 30, 1840. 60

William Green,

CLOCK AND WATCH REPAIRER, SILVERSMITH, AND JEWELLER,

CAN be found at his shop on Main street Putnam, a few doors north of J. C. Guthrie's store, where he will do his best to accommodate customers. He keeps on hand an assortment of spectacles, watch trimmings, pencils, &c.

As far as we have tried Mr. GREEN as a watch repairer he has given us good satisfaction.—ED.

April 22, 1840. 35tf.

Notice.

ALL persons indebted to the late firm of Hartley & Anderson, are earnestly requested to call at the Foundry and make settlement, as the change of owners makes this step absolutely necessary. We ask the attention of all persons concerned, to this notice.

J. J ANDERSON & Co.

Putnam, Jan. 1, 1840. (Jan. 29: 23.)

Dissolution.

THE partnership heretofore existing between S. B. Johnson and J. M. Kirkpatrick, under the firm of S. B. Johnson & Co. was dissolved by mutual consent, on Thursday 19th inst.

S. B. JOHNSON,
J. M. KIRKPATRICK.

Zanesville, March 31, 1840. 32tf

Cattle for Sale.

J. P. SPRINGER, four miles west of Zanesville, Ohio, on the Lancaster road, has for sale sixty steers, fours and fives, in prime order.

October 21, 1840. 61.

The New World.

The Largest, Cheapest, Handsomest and most Comprehensive Newspaper in the United States.

EDITED BY
PARK BENJAMIN AND EPES SARGENT.

WITH multiplied resources for rendering the New World more valuable than ever as a compendious newspaper and repository of elegant literature, we enter upon the second volume (folio) on the 24th of October, dressed in a beautiful garb of new type, cast expressly for the purpose. It will therefore be a fitting time to commence new subscriptions, as well as for the renewal of those which may then expire.

During the first year of the existence of the New World, it has acquired a reputation and circulation superior to that of any weekly paper in the country; and has furnished to its subscribers, during that period, (besides all the current news of the day, domestic and foreign) new and valuable works by Talfourd, D'Israeli, Thomas Moore, Miss Mitford, Mrs. Jameson, Charles Dickens, Ainsworth, Knowles, Bulwer, Marryat and others—works, which in London could not be purchased for fifty times the amount of the subscription price of the New World. In addition to works of interest by these eminent authors, it has contained the cream of the periodical literature of the day, as well as original articles from the pens of some of the most popular writers of America, among whom we may mention Miss Sedgwick, Orville Dewey, Professor Longfellow, the author of "Yankee Notions," Simms, Street, &c., &c.

In politics we shall, as hitherto, maintain an armed neutrality. Our columns will as hitherto be unobjectionable in a moral point of view. In criticism we shall, in justice to the public, maintain a perfect independence, even though we incur the vengeance of all the dunces. We shall, in conclusion, earnestly strive to render our sheet not only worthy of the unparalleled favor it has experienced, but of a continual extending circulation. While we continue to furnish with all possible promptitude the most attractive literature of the day, we shall, as our means enlarge, afford that compensation to native authors, which may induce them to make the New World the medium for presenting to the public their best productions. Our excellent London correspondence will be continued, and due attention will be paid to the commercial, agricultural and news departments of our paper.

A QUARTO EDITION

Of sixteen large pages was commenced on the sixth of June last, in order to meet the wishes of a large number of subscribers, by giving the its rich and varied contents in a suitable form for binding. This we have done without having enhanced the price, so that new subscribers, and others on the renewal of previous subscriptions can take their choice between the Quarto and Folio form. ☞But a few sets of the Quarto from No. 1, now remain on hand in the office and we shall, therefore, not be able long to supply them.

TERMS—Three Dollars a year in advance for either edition; or Five Dollars for two copies. In all cases letters must be free, or post-paid, they will remain dead in the post-office.

☞All Postmasters who will act for us as our authorized Agents, and may retain 25 per cent. on the subscription price, (Three Dollars for commissions, if remitted in New York eastern money; or 50 cents on each, if in not of other solvent banks, which may be at a discount here.

Letters relative to the editorial department must be addressed to Park Benjamin and Epes Sargent, Editors: those relative to the business department, to J. WINCHESTER, Publisher, No. 30, Ann street, New York.

September 16, 1840. 3t

S. C. Haver,

IN the flourishing town of Putnam has on hand 40 or 50 SADDLES ready for sale, of different qualities, comprising nearly all the varieties in fashion in our Buckeye State.

A good assortment of Bridles and Martingales: Riding and driving Whips: between 150 and 200 Carriage and heavy draft Collars, which will compare and wear with any others made here or elsewhere.

Also, fine York, Dearborn, heavy team and common Farming Harness. A lot of first rate Carriage and Buggy Harness, (brass and silver plated.)

Trunks, vallises, saddle-bags, and double covered wagon whips, varying in quality and price to suit purchasers.

The only recommendation he now offers for his work, is the testimony and long experience of old customers and friends. He is still anxious to please and accommodate those who may call on him, and hopes to share so much of the public patronage as his attention to his business shall merit.

Putnam, April 29, 1840. 28tf

Glass Manufactory.

THE subscriber having dissolved his connexion with the former company, has taken the GLASS WORKS below town under his own management.

WINDOW GLASS, double and single, of all sizes, and of superior quality will be kept constantly on hand for sale on reasonable terms. The experience of the proprietor, in the manufacture of the article, will insure all made to be of the best quality. Call and see.

S. B. JOHNSON

Zanesville, Ohio, May 6, 1840. 37

O. WHITE, BOOK BINDER, No. 1 Main Street, Zanesville, Ohio.

January 15, 1840. 21tf

THE
WESTERN RECORDER

IS PUBLISHED EVERY WEDNESDAY.

☞The office of the Recorder is five and a half miles west of Zanesville.

TERMS.

1. The WESTERN RECORDER will be published weekly, on an imperial sheet, at $2 00 per annum, in advance: $2 50 at the end of three months; $3 00 at the end of the year.

2. No discontinuances will be allowed, except at the discretion of the publisher, until arrearages are paid.

3. To all ministers having regular pastoral charges, who do any thing at all for the paper, if they will direct us where, a copy shall be sent gratis; any other who forward to us $10 for new subscribers, shall have six copies sent to any address he may give.

4. All letters designed for the paper, must be directed to "C. Springer, Meadow Farm, Muskingum, Ohio."

5. A failure to notify a discontinuance before the expiration of the subscription year, will be considered a new engagement.

CHARACTER.—The pages of the WESTERN RECORDER will be open to discussion on all moral questions;—it will give articles on Literature, Mechanics, Agriculture,—an abstract of Religious and Political intelligence, and whatever may be interesting and instructive to families in general. A portion of its columns will be open to Advertisements and Prices Current—another portion to sustain the interests of the Methodist Protestant Church in the West. These two latter objects will not likely occupy more than one page.

The RECORDER will take a firm stand against Clerical Supremacy.

THE WESTERN RECORDER.

C. SPRINGER, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.
☞TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM IN ADVANCE.

Vol. 2.--No. 13. ZANESVILLE, OHIO, WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 18, 1840. Whole No. 65.

JOHN W. WHITE, PRINTER.
$2.50, IN THREE MONTHS; $3, END OF YEAR

MISCELLANEOUS.

HARRIET LIVERMORE.

Many of our readers will well recollect the singular woman whose name heads this article. From her long absence from New England, the scene of her nativity, and of her early public labors she has become almost forgotten, except by persons somewhat advanced in public life; but the following information, which we copy from the Southern Literary Messenger for this month, will be interesting to those who retain a recollection of her thrilling eloquence.—Lowell Souvenir.

Those of the readers of the Messenger, and others, who listened some years since to the public lectures of Miss Harriet Livermore in which she enlarged upon the wrongs of the "poor Indian," and dwelt much upon the near approach of the millenium, will doubtless be glad to learn her whereabouts.—Whatever may be the opinion of individuals as to the propriety or utility of the course of life she has adopted, there can be but one, as to the sincerity and purity of the motives by which she is governed, and that when she went out from the midst of her own people, a wayfarer and a pilgrim in a strange land, she went in obedience to what she believed to be the voice of God; can we fail to admire the harmless enthusiasm and devotion with which, amid sickness and discouragement of every kind, she has resigned herself to what she regards the imperious call of duty and religion.

Eight years ago she lectured in our city of Richmond, since which time she has visited many of the tribes of our Western Indians, and at one time proposed to spend the remainder of her days with the red people in the vicinity of Fort Leavenworth, but her intentions were frustrated, she says, by the machinations of the commander, and the Indian agent, who wished to dislodge her. Perplexed and disappointed, she knew not what to do; but true to the principles that govern her, she adds, "I believe they could not have accomplished their intentions had my faith in prayer remained unshaken." She was then led to exclaim, "what shall I do?"—and a still small voice seemed to reply—"Peace be unto thee—thou shalt go to Jerusalem."—Accordingly we have before us a letter from her, dated on the confines of Judea. Yes, twice has this, in many respects extraordinary woman, visited the sepulchres of the prophets; and now she says, "It is to die there."

Believe what we may, there is something simple, beautiful and affecting in all this; this unhesitating faith, this self sacrificing obedience to the dictates of duty. It is a spirit akin to the primitive Christians; a spirit, which the selfishness, the expediency, the greediness of gain, and the matter-of fact character of the age in which we live, is fast extinguishing from amidst us. It is akin to that which swayed the good, aye, even the great Oberlin, great with small means, the Pastor and Legislator of the secluded Ban de la Roche. Miss Livermore may accomplish nothing to be hereafter blazoned on the roll of fame, but the simple love of truth and duty, paramount, in her own mind, will bring to her its "OWN exceeding great reward."

At the date of her letter she had scarcely reached her place of destination, and it is accordingly filled with details gratifying to her private friends, but of hardly sufficient interest for the public eye. It abounds with sentiments of the most ardent piety, and faith in Him who has hitherto protected her in her solitary pilgrimage and who has promised to "temper the wind to the shorn lamb." It must be borne in mind that she travels alone, apparently unpatronised by any of our missionary boards.

At Gibralter, she was hospitably entertained by our worthy consul, Mr. Sprague, who seems not unmindful of the apostolic injunction to "entertain strangers." With a pleasure, highly creditable to her heart, she dwells upon the many proofs of kindness and benevolence she experienced in his amiable family and the substantial comforts they provided for her long and perilous journey.

While entering the bay of Malta, she was saluted with the familiar air of "Hail Columbia," played by a Maltese, who came along side, and thus did honor to her country. She threw him some coin while her thoughts were far away with the home and country she should see no more.

We trust again to hear from her, with particulars of the city made holy by the steps of the Saviour, and the witnesses of His death and resurrection. The remarkable aspect of the times, the change of the seat of war between civilized communities from Europe to the ancient Aceldema of Asia, and the concurrant testimony of prophecy, whether to be understood literally or otherwise, seem to point out this portion of the earth on which great events are yet to be revealed. The circumstance of the Rothschilds holding a mortgage of the Holy City, which seems to be well authenticated, adds not a little to the peculiar interest with which all eyes regard this interesting portion of the world.

MARY FISHER'S VISIT TO THE SULTAN.

Mary Fisher was a member of the society of Friends, in England, in the middle of the seventeenth century, and visited the New England settlements in America as a missionary. In or about the year 1660, she projected an enterprise. the history of which is given in a late number of "The Friend," which we quote with some abridgement.

Mary Fisher now believed it would be right for her to pay a visit to the Grand Turk, to relieve an exercise which was resting on her mind on his account. It would appear from the records which we have of the accomplishment of this concern, she undertook it alone. From Italy she obtained a passage to Zante, and from thence to the shores of the Morea, where she landed at Patras. She passed the narrow strip of land lying between the Arcadian mountains and the waters of Lepanto. She was at Vostitza the ancient Ægium where the States of Achia in the days of their Freedom met in council; and she trod the streets of Corinth. From thence her course was through the isthmus of Corinth; and travelling the public road of the emperor Hadrin she entered the territory of ancient Megaris through the Scironean pass, and skirting the coast of the gulf of Egina, was a spectator of the ancient ruins and modern miseries of Athens. From Attica she passed over the plains of Maranthom, and crossed the Channel of Euripus to the island of Euborea now Negropont. She visited the city of Egripos, the ancient Chalcis. She next visited Scio, and some of its neighboring islands, from whence departing she first trod the shores of Asia at Smyrna. While she remained in this city she attracted the attention of Winchelsea, the English ambasssdor to the Ottoman porte. On learning her intention of visiting the Sultan, he had her arrested and sent back to Venice.

From Venice or some of the other Italian ports this indefatigable minister of the gospel obtained a passage to Zante. Of her further journey the only information we can gather is, that after crossing Greece to its eastern border she skirted the shores of the Egæn, and made her way in safety to the gates of Andrinople. In the vicinity of the city the army of the Sultan and his court were now encamped. Here it was that Mary Fisher was led to speak to the Sultan. Protected by him whom she desired to serve, she had passed without insult or injury through a land trodden by degraded Greeks and their tyrant masters. The Plague had by this time overrun the whole of Turkey. it found victims among that army which for ten years invested Candia, and it thinned the crews of those fleets which defended the Bosphorus or controlled the Ægean. The camp of the Sultan was not exempt from the scourge, although it does not appear to have raged with much virulence. Such was the condition of the country through which this devoted handmaiden unflinching passed to fulfil her mission.

At Adrinople she was courteously received and entertained, but she could find no one willing to accompany her to the camp, she therefore proceeded alone. On reaching the out-posts she sent a message to the vizier that an English woman who had something to declare from the great GOD, wished an audience with the Sultan; and he sent Mary word, that at a certain hour the next morning, she should have an opportunity to declare her message. Mary spent the night at Adrinople and at the appointed hour she returned to the camp. She was now ushered into the presence of the Sultan, who surrounded by his great officers of State, was waiting to receive her. On her presentation, the youthful monarch demanded if see had a message for him, and, on her replying in the affirmative, bade her deliver it. The pomp and splendor of the orential court according to the description of Ricaut, must have been grand and imposing, far beyond anything which Mary had ever seen or perhaps amagined; but this she regarded not, for her mind was inwardly engaged as she stood silently before that assembly, seeking for that qualification which alone can enable any one rightly to perform a religious duty. The Sultan supposed she was struck with awe at the thought of speaking before such an audience, and asked her if she desired that any of them should retire. To this she replied in the negative. He then encouraged her to speak the word she had to say from the Lord, neither more or less, for they were willing to hear it, be it what it would. Finding that authority and power for which she had waited, Mary now began to speak and the whole court with much seriousness quietly listened until she had concluded. The Sultan then demanded if she had any thing more to say. To this she replied by asking him if he had understood that which she had already spoken. He answered "every word" and added, "it is truth." He then invited her to remain in his dominions, saying that they could not but respect one who had come so far with such a message. She now desired liberty to pass on to Constantinople, upon which he offered her a guard. This she modestly declined, stating that her confidence was in that divine arm which had brought her thither for her safe conduct home again. The Sultan, on this reminded her that it was dangerous travelling alone, expressed his surprise that she had passed safely so far, and added that his offer was out of a respectful concern for her safety and that he would not for any consideration that she should suffer the least injury in his dominions. As she was about departing, she was asked "what she thought of their prophet Mehammed?" This was a question the answer of which was likely to endanger her safety. With holy wisdom as well as intrepidity, she answered, "I know him not—but I know Christ the true prophet, the Son of GOD, who was the light of the world, and enlightened every man that cometh into the world." She added, "If the word that the prophet speaketh cometh to pass, then shall ye know that the LORD sent that prophet, but if it come not to pass then ye shall know that the LORD never sent him." This they acknowledged to be truth. Then they suffered her to depart; and she proceeded without molestation to Constantinople, from whence she took her departure, and reached England in safety.

A MOTHER'S TEARS.—There is a sweetness in a mother's tears when they fall on the face of a dying babe which no eye can behold untouched. It is holy ground upon which the unhallowed foot of profanity dares not encroach. Infidelity itself is silent and forbears her mocking; and here woman shows not her weakness but her strength, it is strength of attachment which man can never feel. It is peresial, dependent on no climate, no changes, nor soil, but alike in storms as in sunshine, it knows no shadow of turning. A father, when he sees his child going down to the dark valley, may weep when the shadow of death has fully come over him, and as the last departing knell falls on his ears, may say, "I will go down to the grave for my son in mourning;" but he turns away; in the hurry of business the tear is wiped, and though when he returns to his fireside the sportive laugh comes up to his remembrance, the succeeding day blunts the poignancy of his grief, and finds no permanent seat. Not so with her who has borne and nursed the tender blossom. It lives in the heart where it was first entwined in the dreary hours of night. She sees its playful mirth, or hears its plaintive cries; "she seeks in the morning," and she goes to the grave to weep there. Its little toys are carefully laid aside as the mementos to keep constantly alive that thrilling anguish which the dying struggle and sad look produced, and though grief, like a canker worm, may be gnawing at her vitals, yet she finds a luxury in her tears, and sweetness in her sorrow, which none but a mother ever tasted.

THE TOMB OF NAPOLEON.— The model of the tomb of Napoleon, now erecting by M. Marochetti, under the dome of the Invalides, is composed of a large base, surrounded by columns and bas-reliefs, supporting at the four corners as many statues; one holding the globe, another the sceptre, a third the hand of justice, and the last the imperial crown. Upon this is another base, two-thirds the width and one-half the height of the first, also decorated with bas-reliefs, and having at each angle an eagle with expanded wings. This again is surmounted by a pedestal eight feet high decorated with bas-reliefs, and bearing in the centre the word Napoleon, upon which is an equestrian statue of the Emperor, wearing the imperial mantle, and having the brows crowned with laurel. The left hand holds the bridle, while the right carries the sceptre of the empire, raised to the height of the head. The two bases and pedestal which rise to the height of nearly 40 feet, are of wood and the statues of carton. The equestrian statue is 15 feet high, the eagle 6, and the other ornaments in proportion. The effect is exceedingly grand and worthy of the subject. It is expected to occupy M. Marcohetti 3 years.—Galignani's Messenger.

EXTRAORDINARY RESEMBLANCE.—The Limerick (Ireland) Standard states that there are at present two gentlemen, occupying a respectable position in that country, who are so strikingly similar in their appearance that frequently most ludicrous mistakes have occurred, from the inability of their intimate acquaintances to discern one gentleman from the other. As this fact is now notorious in the country, and good-humoredly enjoyed by the parties themselves, who are on terms of the closest friendship, and who not unfrequently play off jokes at the expense of each other, there can be nothing unseasonable in mentioning their names—viz: Bernard O'Flaherty, Esq., of Lisdona, and Robert Bodkin, Esq., of Annagh; so perfect is their resemblance as to height, figure, complexion, and dress, that the brother of one gentleman has been known to declare he could not distinguish between them, had not his relation a peculiar rotary motion about the eyes which the other had not. The resemblance is still more unaccountable, as there is no relationship between the parties.

An Address to the Senior Class of Dickinson College, Carlisle, Pensylvania, July, 8.—The Baccalaureate Address has been published by Messrs Collins, 1 Lodge Alley. It is an appropriate production, abounding in sound principles, affectionately impressed. We transcribe a few sentences, which will be appreciated by all readers.

"On whatever career of life you enter, fix your eyes on the highest point of possible excellence & then persevere in your efforts to approach it. Probably more persons fail for want of continued exertions, than for want of high resolves. They make a few efforts with apparent zeal, but, meeting no immediate reward or discouraged by unforseen difficulties, give over the struggle and sink down in listless inaction or gloomy misanthropy. The racer might as well think to win the prize without the breath and bottom to reach the goal. Men might with equal reason complain that the pure wine does not sparkle in the cup without the care of vintage and the labor of the wine-press. The great Roman orator devoted twenty years to constant application before he commenced his public career; and afterwards, amidst the harrassing anxieties of political life, found time besides delivering an incredible number of orations, to write valuable and learned works on a great variety of subjects. Do you inquire how he accomplished all this? Let him answer for himself in the oration for Archias, the poet. "Who then can justly censure me, if, as much time as is given to other men for their own business; for the celebration of festival days and other pleasures; for repose of body and mind; for gaming, ball, and nightly entertainments; so much I appropriate to myself, and devote to these studies." Now the reason why so few attain similar eminence is that so few make similar efforts. What Cicero became, he made himself; and whatever degree of usefulness or reputation you attain, must be fruit of patient, resolute toil. You live in an age of unparalleled activity and enterpise in every department of human exertion. Mankind will hold you to a strict account and pay only a fair equivalent for what they receive. No sinecures are bestowed to fatten the indolent; no garlands are woven for the brow of the sleeper. The laurel flourishes in living green on the summit of an arduous steep, and he that would pluck a perennial wreath, must toil up the rugged acclivity."

CURIOSITIES.—A stump orator who will not abuse his opponent.

A politician who will argue a mooted question without getting angry.

An actor who does not think himself perfect in the art.

An artist who places a modest estimate on his abilities.

A candidate who does not think himself fully entitled to the suffrages of the people.

A lass of fifteen who has not began to think of a husband.

A political editor who can tell the truth without making wry faces.

A letter from a lady that has not a P. S. attached to it.

A stuttering woman.

A lawyer who conscientiously docks his fees.

A schoolmaster who does not wish it understood that he knows everything.

A constable who does not delight in meddling with other people's business more than his own.

A little man that is not conceited and that does not wear high-heeled boots and a high crowned hat to make himself appear taller.

A counter-jumper who does not esteem himself higher than he is in the estimation of the people.

A printer whose pocket can be found to contain more than 25 cts.

Election Joke.—At the late election in this city, an old and well known gentleman presented himself at the window where he had voted for twenty years. His vote was challenged by a young whipper-snapper who officiated, and who knew that the old gentleman differed in politcs with him.

"It is necessary for you to swear that you have lived in this ward more than ten days," said the challenger.

"Why you know that I have," replied the voter, "for more than a year ago you came to my shop and purchased the hat you have on, and have never paid for it yet."—N. Y. Paper.

March of Mind.—We have received from Lowell the first number of a neatly printed periodical, entitled "The Lowell Offering," the whole of which was written by females employed in the factories. The schoolmaster is abroad with a vengeance. The articles are mostly well written, and combining the gay with the grave.—New World.

One of the best illustrations of avarice we ever heard of is that contained in an old caricature, which represents Old Nick carrying a Yankee down to his regions, and while on the way the Yankee is making propositions to his majesty to supply him with coal!

THE INTEMPERATE HUSBAND.

BY CHARLES SPRAGUE.

It is my friend in the degradation of a husband by intemperance, where she who ventured every thing, feels that she is lost. Who shall protect her when the husband of her choice insults and oppresses her? What shall delight her when she shrinks from the sight of his face and trembles at the sound of his voice?

The hearth is indeed dark, that he has made desolate. There, through the dull midnight hour, her griefs are whispered to herself; but her bruised heart bleeds in secret. There, while the cruel author of her distress is drowned in distant revelry, she holds her solitary vigil, waiting, yet dreading his return, that is but to wring from her by unkindness, tears even more scalding than those she shed over his transgressions.

To fling a deeper gloom across the present, memory turns back and broods over the past.—The joys of other days come over her, as if only to mock her grieved and weary spirit.

She recalls the ardent lover whose graces won her from the home of her infancy, the enraptured father who bent with such delight over his new-born children; and she asks if this can be the same; this sunken being who has now nothing for her but the sot's disgusting brutality, nothing for those abashed and trembling children, but the sot's disgusting example.

Can we wonder that amid these agonizing moments, the tender chords of violated affection should snap asunder? That the scorned and deserted wife should confess "there is no killing like that which kills the heart!" That though it would have been hard to kiss for the last time the cold lips of a dead husband, and lay his body for ever in the dust, it is harder still to behold him so debasing in life, that even death would be greeted in mercy.

Had he died in the light of his goodness, bequeathing to his family the inheritance of an untarnished name, and the example of virtues that should blossom for his sons and daughters from the tomb; though she would have wept bitterly indeed, the tears of grief would not also have been the tears of shame.

She beholds him fallen from the station he once adorned, degraded from eminence to ignominy at home, turning his dwelling to darkness, and its holy endearments to mockery; abroad, thrust from the companionship of the worthy, a self-branded outlaw.

LATTER DAY SAINTS COMING TO THIS COUNTRY.—The Liverpool Chronicle contains the following:—The New York packet ship North America, Captain Lowbar, sailed on Tuesday week, with 19 cabin passengers and 200 in the steerage. The whole of the steerage passengers belong to a sect called "Latter Day Saints" and are bound for Quincy, Illinois, on the borders of the Mississippi, where a settlement has been provided for them by one of their sect, who has purchased a large tract of land in Illinois. We understand that upwards of 2000 are to embark early next spring for the same locality. A great portion of those who sailed in the North America are members of the Total Abstinence Society, and are from Leicestershire and Herefordshire.

A Noble Example.—Many years ago, in an obscure country school in Massachusetts, an humble, conscientious, but industrious boy was to be seen, and it was evident to all that his soul was beginning to act and thirst for some intellectual good. Next we see him an apprentice on the shoemaker's board, with a book spread open before him. Next we see him put forth, on foot, to settle in a remote town in this state, and pursue his fortunes there as a shoemaker, his tools being carefully sent on before him. In a short time he is busied in the post of county surveyor for Litchfield county, being the most accomplished mathematician in that section of the state. Before he is twenty-five years old we find him supplying the astronomical matter of an almanac, published in New-York. Next he is admitted to the bar, a self-qualified lawyer. Now he is found on the bench of the Superior Court. Next he becomes a member of the Continental Congress. Then he is a member of the committee of 6 to prepare the Declaration of Independance. He continued a member of Congress for nearly twenty years, and was acknowledged to be one of the most useful men and wisest councellors of the land. At length, having discharged every office with a perfect ability, and honored in every sphere with the name of a Christian, he died regretted and loved by his state and nation. This man was Roger Sherman.—Connecticut paper.

Farmers, can you beat this? Mr. Noah S. Barnum, of Nonsald, says he has produced a lot of Rohan potatoes, weighing 205 pounds and eleven ounces, from a single potatoe, which had twenty-one chits or eyes.

During the French Revolution, it was related of Madame Du The, that she carried her extravagance to such a pitch, that the horses of her carriage had silver shoes.

THE METHODISTS.

This large and influential church, whose ministry have acted to a considerable extent as pioneers in propagating the christian religion in this and other countries, appears to be experiencing a share of those trials to which the whole church of Christ is incident. In many respects that church seems well adapted to secure to itself unanimity in sentiment, increase of numbers, and general prosperity in temporal as well as spiritual things. And thus far, their increase in numbers and influence has been very rapid. Yet their history, as well as experience of all past time proves that no system ever yet introduced into the world, however well framed, has been able to sustain its claims to universal support. Mr. Wesley, the venerable founder of this sect, lived to see the flock he had labored night and day to collect, divided and scattered to some extent, both in England and America; and this branch of the Church has been no stranger to dissensions and divisions from that time to the present. Until, within a few years past, we believe the principal source of dissatisfaction and division among them, has been the form of church government, (many ministers as well as members disliking Episcopacy.) But recently, the question of slavery has to a great extent agitated this as well as most of the large churches in this country. It is generally known that Mr. Wesley was the uncompromising enemy to this system, and a great portion of the church at every period has cherished the same views.—Previous to the late session of the General Conference, it appeared to us that the denomination would devide on this point, but though we were disappointed in this respect, yet the action of that body has failed to give general satisfaction to the ministry and membership, perhaps we might with propriety say it has increased the dissatisfaction which previously existed, As an evidence of this, we see there have been numerous secessions from the church within a short time past; and when we reflect on the bearing of the above named objections, it is impossible to divine what the results will be.

The Methodist Protestant, and Reformed Methodist denominations, holding the same doctrines and usages, excepting only Episcopacy and slavery, are already numerous and respectable and are fast increasing as well by the accession of dissenters from the M. E. Church, as by persons brought in by the labors of an industrious and efficient ministry. To say nothing of the views of these brethren in separating from each other, we are impressed that it will be productive of ultimate good to the parties and the community at large. The parties respectively, while laboring in their various spheres, will learn the exercise of forbearance and a more fervent charity; while each branch of the church can labor in its own way to build up the kingdom of Christ.

Those who hold Methodist sentiments, and who are nevertheless opposed to slavery and episcopacy, can find a home in one of the other branches of the family, while those who choose to retain or commence membership in the Episcopal church, can do so without the annoyance resulting from conflicting opinions. Another benefit promised by the separation, is profitable exercise of gifts among the dissenters, which might have been otherwise unemployed, and consequently, the enlightening & conversion of many souls to whom the Gospel might not have had access. It will also afford an opportunity for the excercise of a more enlarged benevolence. The various resources of the whole church may thus be laid open, and a healthy action be induced and perpetuated. Finally, every branch of the household of faith may learn while witnessing the changes to which some portions of Zion are subjected—to confirm their doctrine, ordinances and discipline to the most obvious import of the sacred Scriptures; to practice justice, mercy and charity in the church of the living God—to be kind and lenient to dissenters—benevolent and useful to the whole family of man—and to aspire after the rewards of peace-makers in the Kingdom of Heaven.—De Ruyter Register.

He that produces a bushel of grain, adds something to the means of human life, and confers a blessing on his race, while he who converts this grain into alcohol to be drunk, becomes a most efficient coadjutor of the enemy of all goodness.

A young man named Spohn has been killed in a duel at New Orleans, by a Frenchman.—They fought at 60 paces with rifles. He has left a widowed mother and sister to regret the barbarous custom, which has in a moment ushered him into the presence of his God.

The U. S. Bank.—Mr. Jaudon was in the city last week. A friend of the Bank who conversed with him tells us that Mr. J. asserts that the Bank is now ready to resume specie payments whenever the local Banks are ready, that she needs no help and has needed none, but has resources of her own to the extent of all her necessities.—Jour. of Com.

WESTERN RECORDER.

ZANESVILLE:

WEDNESDAY, ... NOVEMBER 18, 1840.

THE NEW YORK INVESTIGATION.—We gave in our last an abstract from certain papers, in relation to the excitement in the eastern cities on the subject of corrupting the polls. We do not intend to give an opinion in relation to the innocence or guilt of either of the parties, as to the facts of corruption. But we do mean to say, that there is too great a disposition manifested on all hands to misrepresent and asperse their opponents. This thing should be discountenanced by calm and candid men of all parties. An honorable competition is commendable; but when partizans resort to dishonorable expedients to supplant a rival, the public should put the stamp of disapprobation upon such men, no difference to what political division they belong.

We give below, extracts from the New York "New World," a paper neutral in politics, in relation to the investigation going on in that city. We do not say that the Whigs are innocent of the charges alleged against them, (we leave that for the public to decide,) we only mean to shew what party prejudice and excitement will induce men to do to put down a rival. Nor do we mean to say that the Whigs have not been guilty, in turn, of as exceptionable conduct to injure their opponents. Both the political parties have carried on their respective campaigns, in a way that is discreditable to the country. But to the extracts:

"Without the misgivings of fear or the desire of favor, then, we unhesitatingly declare, that in our opinion the recent investigation, by the tribunal that had it in charge, was ill-timed, inexpedient, improper, unjust, and a portion of it not only without the sanction, but in direct opposition to the express mandate of the constitution, and the well settled principles of law.

"In the first place, then, we assert that the inquiry was ill-timed, inasmuch as it was gotten up on the eve of an important election, when party excitement was great, and party strife ran high, and when, if at any time, the popular exasperation would be greatly increased, and popular feeling fearfully aroused. And, besides, it is conceeded, we believe, that the prominent facts of this case were known almost two years ago; and should, then, if at all, have been the subject of inquiry, after a calm had succeeded to the storm of party violence that a contested election almost invariably produces. Instead of which it was suffered then to sink silently into oblivion, to be brought up again when the strife should revive. And it need not be said that it could not then be reached, for the means were as abundant, if sought after and collected, as they recently have been, to ferret out the frauds that were committed and to punish the perpetrators of those frauds. Besides, had the investigation then been made, the terror of detection and punishment would have prevented a repetition of the frauds as charged to have been committed in the spring of 1839.

"We contend, also, that the inquiry, in manner as well as time, was inexpedient and improper, inasmuch as it introduced to us, the form at least, of a new tribunal, composed at first of judges of the examining and trying courts of our city, of different unco-ordinate powers and different powers and different duties—created, if you please, or at least associated for this specific purpose.

"It was also composed, in part at least, of the very magistrate who, if indictments should be found against any who were suspected, was to sit in judgment on the parties accused, and who must therefore necessarily be deeply tinctured with prejudices arising from the excitement of an accusatory examination, as well as with the spirit of championship, in bringing to the light the facts that were developed, and thereby rendered him an unfit and improper person to preside at the trial of the cases as a judge. For the same reason also, the prosecuting officer, who is ultimately to act as counsel for the people in the trial of the issues that these examinations were to create, was an unsuitable and improper person, on account of the pre-enlistment of his feelings and prejudices in the matter of the inquiry, to conduct that examination to its wished for results.

"This duty we apprehend is delegated by law, and more properly belongs to the Police Court alone, whose magistrates are appointed expressly for purposes such as this: or to the Grand Inquest of the city and county, which is impartially selected from the body of the people and assembles every month for the hearing of complaints and investigating violations of the law, and who by a recent statute are expressly charged by the President of our Criminal Courts to institute inquiries on this very subject. Besides, it was improper that a tribunal composed exclusively (ministerial and clerical officers included) of men of one political party only—and that too, with the red-heat of party feeling and bias upon them—should be induced to drag before them, rigorously interrogate with a deep solicitude to implicate in guilt, and in fact to sit in judgment on some of the leading men and active politicians of an opposing party, against whom as party men, they were contending, and who, as a portion of a hostile party they were zealously laboring to put down. It was in fact nothing more than one party judging the acts of another. It was improper also to organize a tribunal of this kind, and to carry on proceedings therein, at first in an unknown and retired place, from which the public was excluded, and a few political friends alone suffered to be present to obtain copies of the testimony taken to be published, and used for mere political and party purposes.—And it was improper for the chief magistrate of the city to be there and sanction such proceedings by his presence. With such a tribunal of political and party foes as this to sit in judgment on an opposing party, it is more than human nature could do to render strict and impartial justice.

"The examining officers themselves would not be willing to pass through such an ordeal as this. And yet they could not reasonably complain should the cup of bitterness they have so liberally commended to others be returned with correspondent blessings to their own lips. We have endeavored to show, (and we believe that we have done so to the satisfaction of all candid minds) that the proceedings in the recent investigation, were ill-timed, inexpedient and improper, and we shall now undertake to prove that the proceedings were unjust towards those, who were at such a time of excitement—in such a manner and who in such an exparte way, were brought before them for examination. The laws always, in its righteous and merciful contemplation, presume every one innocent until proved to be guilty, and is never satisfied with mere accusation without proof of criminality. But in the proceedings of this tribunal the mild attributes of the law were changed, and men of heretofore reputable character, were presumed to be guilty until they could prove their innocence. One man who made disclosures and was presumed to be guilty, as perhaps he is, was first singled out for vengeance—and thus the mildew of suspicion was shed upon all the party, with whom he had fraternized; to blight and to blast them forever. Elevation of character and loftiness of standing in the community, served only as stimulants to sharpen the appetite of the members of the court, to find them guilty by anticipation. Hearsay stories and the statements of third parties which the well settled rules of the law of evidence uniformly exclude and prohibit, were thrust into the inquiry as testimony, for the immolation and destruction of character. Nothing short of a desire to make every suspected individual guilty, appeared to animate the examiners. The members of one party only were hunted and beset with accusations. No disposition was evinced to detect evidence of guilt in the friends of the prosecuting party—although enough was known to implicate many of that party in a kindred condemnation. Why, we ask, was this? Was fraud in men of one party worse than it was in men of another party?—Or have the latter, by virtue of their political orthodoxy, received absolution for their sins?

"Again, the proceedings were unjust toward those who were sought to be implicated in fraud and dishonor—inasmuch as they could not be heard by counsel, or introduce opposing evidence, or cross-examine the witnesses who testified against them. The ordinary barriers of individual right and personal safety from unjust accusation, were broken down and thrown aside by this tribunal. Tales of direful import against their characters were sought by every possible means to be obtained—and when obtained, in violation of the plainest dicta of law, were at once handed over to a party press—the proof sheet said to be even read by one of the judges of the court himself—and then the story of the assumed shame and guilt of the proscribed individuals hurried with all possible rapidity over the broad face of our land for the effectuation of party purposes, and not for the furtherance of justice.

"Is this to be considered as the fair and proper character of our legal tribunals? Is the temple of justice to have its altars profaned by such proceedings as these? or shall its holy sacraments be sullied by admitting political partialities and prejudices to its reverential rites?

"But that bold and prominent act of the grand drama of investigation, which impelled a Mayor of our city and a Recorder of our court to invade the sanctuary of a private domicil at the hour of midnight, in defiance of right and in direct opposition to a positive mandate of constitutional law, and make a seizure of private papers, was the most to be reprehended, as the most arbitrary in its character and most dangerous in its results. We speak from high authority in this case.

"In the 4th article of the amendments of the Constitution of the United States, adopted by the States, and in force for half a century, we find this safeguard for the citizen:

"'The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated; and no warrants shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized.'

"And in the bill of rights of this State, the same clause is inserted with only two verbal variations; viz: "ought" not to be violated, in the one case in the place of "shall," and "no warrants" can issue, instead of "shall," as in the United States Constitution, in the other.

"Where then, we triumphantly ask, did the Mayor and the Recorder derive their authority to go upon and execute their midnight errand in violating that sanctuary—a private domicil, and make seizure of private and sealed up papers, in a mere case of misdemeanor, for the august purpose of implicating others who were suspected? Had they a warrant to do so? was any affidavit made against persons and papers, designating who and what were to be seized? And were they executive officers, clothed with lawful authority to execute a search? Or rather were they not judicial magistrates, usurping the prerogatives of executive officers of police, without an affidavit, without a warrant, and without the color of law to justify the deed? Let such an outrage be committed by a judge in England, and his impeachment and dismission would inevitably follow. There the persons and papers of the citizens are protected by the common law in such cases as this. And it is needless to add that these rights of American citizens are as sacredly guarded, by the institutions and laws of our land.

"This act, then, of these magistrates of our city, is one of the most arbitrary and outrageous character, and could only be tolerated amongst a nation of slaves—except in cases of treason or high felony—and then the forms of law are always to be observed. If this is not so there is no safety for the citizen—no protection under the guardianship of law for his rights. Under the Colonial Government such acts were proscribed and resisted as criminal to the British constitution; and one portion of the just complaints against some of the officers of the crown, was the usurped exercise of this arbitrary power of seizure and of search without warrant.

"Let, then, no such acts of tyranny and oppression ever be indulged in by American magistrates; let them never be tolerated by a free and law-loving people. Let not our courts of justice be converted into temples of Moloch, where the laws and rights of the sovereign people are to be offered up as victims on the polluted altars of political or party prejudice or passion. And if individuals are to be converted into criminals, let it always be done in conformity with law and with an honest regard for the public weal; and let not character be sacrificed to appease the insatiate appetite for vengeance of any party. Let the guilty, whoever they may be, high or low, of whatever party be accused, examined, tried, condemned and punished according to the forms and demands of law. But better that they should escape than that the immutable and eternal principles of law and justice should be trampled under foot by the priests who minister in their temple. We would respectfully caution those who stir the tornado, to beware lest they are scorched by its fires

"We have now done, for the present, with this subject, and submit the remarks we have in candor made, to the cool reflection and calm judgment of an impartial and enlightened people."

The following is from the same pen, and appears in the "Morning Signal" of the 7th instant:

THE LATE JUDICIAL SEIZURE OF PRIVATE PAPERS.

We have by no means exhausted this subject. The purity of character—the spotless integrity of purpose for which high judicial officers should be distinguished, and which should place their motives above suspicion, and their names far beyond the breath of slander, call aloud upon the whole press, of all parties, to speak boldly and fearlessly of the late remarkable proceedings of the Recorder of this city in seizing the private papers of Glentworth.

We once studied the Law, and during a few years practised it; and though many of the more technical and intricate branches of this science, may have escaped our memory, its important principles are still fresh in our minds, and particularly those which guarantee security of persons and property; nor have we entirely forgotten the powers with which the law clothes its ministers.

Had the Recorder a legal right flowing from his official character to take those papers? is a question we have heard asked a thousand times. It is upon the lips of half our citizens, who feel a deep, an intense interest in learning the truth.—And we are not surprised at their earnestness in making this inquiry. The subject comes home to their bosoms and their firesides; and embraces a deadly weapon which in one short moment may be turned to the destruction of their dearest rights, and their holiest and most sacred privileges. If the officer we have mentioned is clothed with this power, then may the same dangerous prerogative be claimed and exercised by other judicial functionaries; but we assert—and we can produce solemn decisions of the highest courts in England and in this country, backed by our constitution and supported by our laws, to sustain us in every position we shall lay down—that the Recorder had no more authority to seize those papers than a private citizen. His rights—his duties of office are purely judicial. If from testimony taken before him he believed that papers in the possession of Pierce would furnish material and competent evidence against or in favor of Young, the law plainly pointed out and provided the means by which they were to be obtained. A subpœna should have been issued requiring Pierce to attend before him with the papers. And this writ would not have been the writ of the Recorder. It would have commanded Pierce in the name of the People of the State of New York to appear and produce them. And then he could have delivered them to Glentworth or could have produced them as he deemed advisable. If he had refused to obey the mandate of this writ an attachment could have been issued to bring him personally before the Recorder; and this, like the former, would have been in the name of the People. And to show how utterly powerless is the Recorder when off the bench, he could not himself have arrested Pierce by virtue of this attachment. He would have been a trespasser in attempting it; and Pierce would have been justified in resisting the attempt by force even to the death of his official assailant. It could only have been done by an officer of his court authorized by the laws to execute ministerial duties; for in this as in all other cases the law wisely vests the power of Judge and executioner in different persons.

But let us suppose that Pierce had been brought into the presence of the Recorder, that he had not delivered the papers to Glentworth, but still had them in his possession, could the Recorder then have seized them with his own hands? We answer no. His power would have extended no farther than to have ordered him to deliver them up and in case of a refusal, to direct his imprisonment. And could he have dragged him to prison? Again we answer no. Not a finger could he have laid upon him. He could have signed a warrant for his commitment, but he would have been as powerless in executing it as would be the court to hang the miserable victim it had just condemned; which our readers need hardly be told would be murder, and would bring upon the judicial perpetrators the terrible punishment of that crime.

The seizure then of these papers was, to say the least, a high-handed lawless trespass; as unjustifiable in point of law as though done by a private citizen. But beyond the mere infringment of private rights, this act presents features of an alarming character; destructive of the dignity of the bench and the sanctity of the judge, and which are calculated to prostrate all confidence in the official purity of the individual, who presides over an important branch of the criminal jurisprudence of our city.

The judge, and above all others, the criminal judge, is bound by duties of the highest and most sacred nature, superadded to which is the awful solemnity of an official oath, to administer the laws with the strictest impartiality. He is not the avenger of the innocent, he is not the executioner of the guilty; he is not the advocate of the prosecutor, nor is he the defender of the culprit. The law has placed him, until corrupted, beyond the influence of either. Robed in sacred ermine, he sits between the persons charged with crime and him who executes sentence upon the condemned guilty. He cannot leave his seat to search for testimony to screen the guilty, or to convict them, to hurl destruction upon the innocent, or to save them. If he acts, as he has sworn before his Maker, he is swerved neither by riches or power; nor is he biassed by affection or prejudice. Political favor buys no injustice at his hands; political hate mingles not with the solemnity of his decisions. He sits alone, spotless and pure, high above the influence of party clamor, insensible to bribery; to corruption unapproachable.

Contrasted with this how dark, and more than suspicious appears the conduct of the Recorder. He is engaged in the hearing and investigation of a criminal complaint against an individual charged with a violation of laws for preserving the purity of elections. Whether his court was legally constituted we shall not inquire; whether he had jurisdiction of the offence we care not; but during the examination he leaves his bench, throws off the robes of office and in the gloom of midnight darkness, sallies into the street. He proceeds to the house of Pierce, accompained by the Mayor of our city; he demands papers left in the hands of Pierce by Glentworth for protection, who refuses to deliver them; and then—for the honor of American judges we are almost ashamed to write it—he threatens that unless they are delivered he, by virtue of his official authority, will search for them, find them and take them by force; and under the influence of these threats they are delivered to him. This, besides being an abominable outrage upon the rights of both Pierce and Glentworth, was a flagrant, a disgraceful violation of the Recorder's duties as a judge.

The object in obtaining the papers was twofold; first, to be used as testimony against an individual arraigned before him in his own court, and secondly, to injure the leaders of a great political party. Which of these purposes is most praiseworthy in a high judicial officer, we leave for the friends of the Recorder to determine. In our opinion either will effect his everlasting disgrace, and should cause his impeachment or indictment. And we challenge those who attempt to justify this proceeding, to produce a single instance in the history of American or British jurisprudence in which a judge of any court, whether high, or low, ever descended from the sacred bench to act the vile, the degrading part of searching for, ferreting out and dragging to light testimony to convict the person whom he is first to try, and then sentence.

In the remarks we have made we are biassed by no party feelings, influenced by no man or set of men. We have nothing to hope, nothing to fear from those in authority, or from individuals who may ere long occupy high places, but were our mind grained with hatred of General Harrison and his supporters, and burning with zeal in the cause of the Administration; when, as in this case, we found corruption polluting the channels of the laws, and converting judicial tribunals into powerful and dangerous engines to hurl destruction at private rights, that upon their ruins the fortunes of a crumbling party could be reared, justice would force us to speak out, though in doing so we should weaken our partizan strength, to swell the ranks of our political enemies.

ORIGINS OF VARIOUS FRUITS.

Pine-apple.—This fruit grows wild in Mexico, South America, Africa and the East and West Indies. Hot houses and great care will ripen them in the north. The plant itself is very stately, rising from a tuft of long green leaves, with a stout stalk; the fruit resembles in shape the cone of the pine tree, from whence it derived its name. It is of a fine yellow color, and has a coronet of green leaves adorning the top.

Olives.—The olea or olive-tree is a native of the southern parts of Europe, and is extensively cultivated in France, Italy, Portugal and Spain. Olives have a bitter taste, but pickled they prove more palatable. A sweet oil is obtained from them when pressed, which is in general use. What comes freely, with slight pressure is the finest and sweetest, more pressure with some heat, forces out a second, not so pure; and a third, still more coarse, is obtained by the aid of hot water and still greater force. Scarcely any vegetable produce is more used than oil; especially in those countries where the climate is too warm for butter.

Tamarinds.—These are the fruit of an Indian tree which grows very large somewhat like the ash-tree. The fruit grows in clusters, like a number of bean-pods tied together, about as long and rather thicker; each containing several stony seeds enclosed in a dark colored pulp.—Tamarinds are of a cooling nature, and in sickness, help allay the feverish thirst of the patient. The East India tamarinds are longer than the West India; the former contains six or seven seeds each, the latter rarely above three or four.

Dates.—Dates are the fruit of a species of palm tree, which grows in Barbary and other parts of Africa and in Arabia. They are of a sweetish taste and contain a kernal with a furrow running its whole length. The fruit is frequently imported into this country.

Cocoa-nuts.—The cocoa-nut is a produce of a tree which is common in the West Indies, Asia, the South Sea Islands, &c. It is a woody fruit of an oval shape from four to eight inches in length, covered with a fibrous husk, and containing a white, firm and fleshy kernel. The tree is a kind of palm; and the nuts hang from the summit in clusters of a dozen or more together, Filbert and Walnuts, &c.,—Among the other species shelled fruit which form a commercial commodity amongst us, are the common filberts, walnuts and chestnuts of this part of the country, the ground nuts of the Southern States, the pistacho-nut of Sicily, and other warm climates, the castana-nut of Louisiana, and the West Indies, and many others; which it is perhaps unnecessary to enumerate.

Mode of making Sheet Lead in China.—The Chinese, in manufacturing the thin sheet lead in which their teas are imported into this country, conduct their operations in an exceedingly simple manner. The laminæ are not rolled, as, from their extreme thinness, might be supposed; not even hammered, as the appearance of the surface might indicate, but actually cast at once in the state in which we see them. Two men are employed; one of them is seated on the floor, with a large flat stone standig at his side. His fellow workman stands besides him with a crucible containing the melted lead; and having poured a sufficient quantity on the slab, the other lifts the moveable stone, and placing it suddenly on the fluid lead, presses it out into a flat and thin plate, which he instantly removes from the stone.—A second quantity of lead is poured out in a similar manner, and a similar plate formed; the process being carried on with singular rapidity. The rough edges of the plate are then cut off, and they are afterwards soldered together for use.—Mr. Waddell, a Scotchman, who witnessed the operation in China, applied a similar method with great success in the formation of thin plates of zinc, for galvanic purposes.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRE—Delaware Paper Mill Consumed.—The new and extensive Paper Mill, three miles south of this place, erected and owned by Messrs. Williams & Howard, was consumed on Friday night last.—The fire originated in the third story, occupied as a store room for rags, and was doubtless produced by spontaneous combustion, as fire could not possibly have been communicated by any other means. When discovered the roof was on fire, and before sufficient aid arrived the flames had made such head-way that all attempt to arrest their progress and save the property were in vain. The entire interior of the building, including most of the machinery, all the stock on hand, and a large amount of paper of various kinds, was consumed; and what remains standing of the walls is very seriously injured. Some of the lighter machinery, and a small quantity of paper, was saved.

The establishment had been in operation about a year, was doing a fine business, and had already acquired a popularity seldom enjoyed by the oldest and best mills. Its destruction is a loss to the community at large, but a more serious one to the enterprising proprietors, as the property was not insured. Arrangements are making to rebuild it immediately.—Delaware Gazette.

☞Grandiloquent.—A Western editor takes leave of his readers in the following sublime manner.—"I have said that the soul was in a progressive state of advancement. Mighty in its own undecaying energies it will continue to rise and to soar, till with its silken wings and gossamer pinions, it will sweep the glittering dew drops from the sparkling stars and enter, amid bright throngs of seraphim, the pearly gates of Paradise. Cherish the radient and gem like crystal existance; cultivate the vast, the boundless, the unlimited, then shall the soft sunlight of hope irradiate the pure sanctuary of the soul, and the moonshine of unutterable mystery illumine the inner temple of the understanding. These considerations have imparted an unspeakable interest to the labors in which we have been engaged. What is it we contemplate? Nothing less than the question of sundering the ties that many long months have bound us in bright and ever increasing union with kindred intelligence, and linking our spirits again in another and more indestructible fellowship."—Balt Clipper.

THE TWO PHILOSOPHERS.—There was an ancient heathen philosopher who was called the laughing philosopher, because he regarded life as a jest; and the follies of the world as legitimate subjects of merriment. There was another who was styled the weeping philosopher, because the same objects which amused the first saddened him, and he could not see the follies of the world, associated with its miseries without grief. Our sympathies are with the latter. It would be inhuman to be merry with the vagaries of a madman, and the levity and folly of men are the proof of their insanity—they chase a feather when they might be reaching after a crown. Our blessed Lord was habitually grave. He was touched with the miseries of men, and volunteered to save them from the cause. He could not in all His journies behold the lame, the blind, the leprous, without sympathizing with their wretchedness, and more especially did His compassionate heart bleed when He every where beheld the obstinacy and infatuation of sinners who put away the kingdom of heaven from them. There is no record that our divine Lord ever laughed or even smiled, but there is more than one notice that He wept; at one time when standing by the grave of a friend, and contemplating the private griefs, the degradation and ruin occasioned by sin, and at another, when overlooking the vast metropolis of Judea which had rejected His visit of mercy, and was then as seen by His omniscient eye ripening fast for a destruction unparalled in its horrors. The conduct of Jesus affords us a lesson that there is more in the world to awaken the sympathising griefs of christians than to promote their amusement.

Divine Providence.—From the bosom of obscurity and poverty in which I drew my first breath & spent my earliest years I have raised myself to a degree of opulence and to some degree of celebrity in the world. A constant good fortune has attended me through every period of my life to my present advanced age, and my descendants may be desirous of learning what were the means of which I made use and which thanks to the assisting hand of Providence, have proved so eminently successful.

And here let me with all humility acknowledge that to Divine Providence I am indebted for the felicity I have hitherto enjoyed. It is that power alone which has furnished me with the means I have employed and that has crowned me with success. My faith in this respect leads me to hope, though I cannot count upon it, that the divine goodness will still be exercised towards me either by prolonging the duration of happiness to the close of life, or by giving me fortitude to support any melancholy reverse which may happen to me as to so many others. My future fortune is known but to Him in whose hand is our destiny, and can make our very afflictions subservient to our benefit.

The young reader would do well to pay attention to the history of the man, who, by his industry, perseverance and economy, arrived to riches and honor. He is the first American philosopher. It is true that every man is not born with a genius like Franklin, but every man may and ought to be industrious in his station.—Life of Franklin.

A Happy Illustration,—A preacher in the course of a sermon, delivered in one of the churches of this place on Sunday evening last, got on the subject of the different denominations into which the professors of Christianity are divided, and remarked that some persons, on account of this division, objected to the whole system of christianity, saying that from the diversity of doctrines taught, all could not be right and therefore argued that there was a good reason for rejecting the whole. The preacher in reply said that these objectors might with the same propriety say that no gold is good, or worth having because every piece had not the stamp of the American eagle upon it. Gold, said he, has the same intrinsic value whether it bears the impress of the American eagle or the English, or French or Mexican, or any other coat of arms; and so that of religion. True religion is the same thing in every denomination of christians, and is the same thing by whatever name it may be called. We were struck with the illustration as being a very happy one, and thought that such doctrines, would in addition to answering the objections of the sceptic, much tend to promote that spirit of liberality and charity, which is to our mind, the essential principle of true christianity.—Blairsville Record.

The Mother of General Greene.—Among the many ladies who distinguished themselves for their patriotism, charity and other good qualities, in our Revolution, there is one whose name ought not to be forgotten, and who in my opinion, is equal in merit to any that flourished in our country, and there were many at that time. About the commencement of our Revolution and as soon as it was ascertained that Nathaniel Greene, (afterwards Gen. Greene) intended to join our army in defence of his country a deputation of Friends, commonly called Quakers and to whose society he then belonged) by order of their meeting, waited on him to endeavor to dissuade him from it, and after listening to all their arguments on the subject, he informed them that he felt an irresistible propensity, not to be got over for joining his brethren in arms. He thanked them for the interest they had taken in his welfare; but he could not comply with their request. When the deputation took an affectionate leave and left him, his mother who had been listening with the anxiety of a fond parent, used her best endeavors to prevail on him to stay at home, when he told her it was impossible. After a pause she burst into a flood of tears, with this remarkable observation—"well, Nathaniel, if thee must go, it is possible that I may hear of thy death, and if it be God's will that it shall so happen, I hope I shall not have the mortification to hear of thee being wounded in the back." Comment is needless—a Spartan mother could not have said more; but Mrs. Greene stands pre-eminently superior to the mothers of antiquity, as her education was different—she was bred a Christain.

ALAS! HOW FALLEN.—About ten days since, a man of accomplished mind and manners, though shabbily attired, named Alexander C. Draper, late of Philadelphia, reputedly a physician, was lodged in the watchhouse for drunken and disorderly conduct. After a suitable detention, having become perfectly sober and rational, he was discharged, with an appropriate admonition, by the magistrate of Police, to abstain from drink, and disgrace his fine mind and manners no more. Leaving the Police office, he proceeded to a porter-house in Centre street, where he addressed a note to a gentleman at the Astor house, (where Draper formerly had boarded,) craving his symphathy and assistance. The appeal was successful—the gentleman immediately furnished Draper with a new suit of clothes, and money for his expenses, and the derelict from virtue went his way. On the night of the 20th inst., Draper relapsed into his habits of intemperance, and became so drunk that he fell down upon a porch, where he laid insensible—and in this state was stripped and robbed of all his clothing, and left entirely naked. Without a particle of clothing he was lodged in the watchhouse, and thence transferred to the prison, where he remained in a state of nudity until yesterday, when a shirt was given him, in which, with no other clothing he was discharged, "the wreck of fallen manhood—a melancholy ruin."—New World.

A novel Rat trap.—Take a barrel and stretch a piece of parchment over the head; cut it across and athwart, nearly to the outside. Take some dripping, and mix it with meal; smear it on the middle of the parchment. The rats will smell it, and treading on the parchment it will give way, and they will fall in the barrel. Put a board for them to creep up to the barrel's brink outside, and strew some oatmeal on it. You must not let the water be too deep, but set a brick endways in it, and the first rat that is caught will make a noise, which will entice more so that they will fight for possession of the brick, and the noise will draw others. Thus in one night the house may be cleared of rats, be they ever so many.—Mice and other vermin may be caught in a similar manner.

The Snow Storm.—We had quite a snow storm Sunday night and Monday morning. It commenced about midnight, accompanied with vivid lightning and heavy thunder, which continued for some two or three hours, and this morning the ground was covered with snow to the depth of an inch or two. The snow continued to fall till about 8 o'clock, when the weather cleared up, and the snow melted in the course of the forenoon.

It is remarkable that we should have snow before we had frost, for we have as yet hardly had frost sufficiently severe to kill the tenderest plants.

We learn from Mr. Hatch, that the storm, Sunday night, was very severe at New Bedford and Fall River. The thunder was terriffic, and hail stones, of an unusually large size fell. In Mansfield and Foxborough, Monday morning, the snow was two or three inches deep.—Transcript.

Reverse of Fortune.—The U. S. Marshal who has just completed the census of Cincinnati, mentions these incidents.

I met a man who had ruined himself by intemperance, and was subsisting on charity, that I knew in Pittsburgh in the year 1815, owner of a fine property and store worth 50,000 dollars at that time. The property, I have no doubt, would since have brought 150,000 dollars.

I found in the person of a day laborer in one of our foundries, a man who had once owned a large iron establishment in Scotland, on the Carron side. He had become involved with others, and had become thereby insolvent. My sympathies were the more strongly excited here, from the simple dignity which forbore repining or complaint the family manifested in the case.

I found also the widow of a distinguished professor in an Eastern College, who was at the time eating her humble supper with her daughter, under such circumstances of penury, that their very table was formed of a board laid across an old barrel.

I have found in the city two cases of disparity of age between the oldest and youngest brother, worthy of notice. In one instance the oldest brother was 69, the youngest 25. In the other when the father was living, and aged 73 years, one brother was 46 and the other 2.

The legislature of Rhode Island has elected James F. Simmons, Senator in Congress from that state in the place of Mr. Knight, whose term of service expires on the 4th of March next.

HE RECORDER.

ZANESVILLE:

TUESDAY, ... NOVEMBER 18, 1840.

al papers have announced the death of orge H. Flood, our Charge to Texas;—the us Statesman of the 10th inst. says the s certainly incorrect, as they had receiv- ers from Mr. F. within a few days, dated ston, as late as the 5th of October, and and his family were then well.

Amos Kendall proposes to publish a semi- y work, to be called the "EXPOSITOR," at per annum to be devoted to the interests ncipies of the Democratic party.

t. thinks that our editorial of the 21st ult. relates to the withdrawal of Br. James er, from the church, makes him(R.)to with- &c. instead of the person we intended. Let n who has three ideas above an oyster read icle through,and after this if he will say it to Br. R. we will re-write it and make it in it cannot be misunderstood. We do an to say our brother R. has no ideas—he enty of them; but, then, he must have h his criticism to us without proper reflec-

's WATCHMAN.—The "Youth's Cabinet" farmer in the State of New York has of- o pay $500 for Zion's Watchman, to be uted gratuitously; and that another has to be one of one hundred to raise twenty w subscribers each. Why cannot we have uch liberal patrons?

Stringfield, editor of the S. W. C. Advo- as resigned his charge of that paper, and M'Ferrin has been appointed to the editor- r the Tennessee Annual Conference.

Quincy (Ill.) Whig, after giving an ac- of a Mormon conference recently held at o, at which some three thousand were in iance and good order prevailed,—adds: C. Kennett, Quarter Master General of s, was baptized at Nauvoo, in the belief of atter Day Saints (Mormon faith) one day eek."

ask the "Whig" if he does not mistake ame? We once baptized in the Methodist ," at Marietta, Ohio, John Cook Bennett, from the excentricity of his subsequent , we suspect to be the identical person alluded to.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 9, 1840.

ur Brother Springer: Will you be kind h to state in the "Recorder," that I have een able to send the second number of the stian World" to many of the preachers Pittsburgh Conference District, because ignorance of their residences. I wish them orm me speedily, to what post offices I shall t directed. I am willing to supply every f them regularly, and have no doubt that will be able to assist me greatly in its estab- ent. Perhaps you can publish a list of names and post offices. It might be of in- t and service to all, as well as to me.

Yours, truly, T. H. STOCKTON.

t office address of the itinerant preachers e Pittsburgh District, as far as ascertained:

orge Brown,—Pittsburgh, Pa.
Shinn,—Allegheny city, Pa: n Burns, " " "
n Clarke, Jr., " " " l Dalbey,—Steubenville, Ohio.
emiah Browning, " "
Ragan,—New Lisbon, " Beatty, " "
n Herbert,—Eldersville, Washington, Pa. nes Hopwood,—Waynesburg, Green, "
. Robison,—Connellsville, Fayette, "
A. Davis, " " "
Bloomer,—Bucyrus, Crawford, Ohio.
ses Scott,—Athens, Athens, "
n. Reeves,—Youngstown, " Inskeep, " " arles Caddy,—Mt. Vernon, Knox, " ael Thrap,—Perryton, Licking, "
. Munhall,—Brownsville, " " Kinney,—Meadow Farm, Musk., "
m. Marshall,—Zanesville, " " Woodruff, " " " Richardson,—Smithfield, Jefferson, "
m. Ross, " " "
o. Clancy,—Harrisville, Harrison, "
Fairchild,—Washington, Guernsey, Ohio.
M. Cochran,—Bath, Summit, " Bamford,—Warrensville, Cuyahoga, " K. Earl,—Morgan, Ashtabula, "
Fordyce,—Kirby's, Green, Pa.
Simonton,—Clarkesburgh, Harrison, Va.
Clawson,—Weston, Lewis, "
Y. Ostrom,—Pennsville, Morgan, Ohio.
N. Warren,—Deersville, Harrison, " L.Baldwin,—Port Washington, Tus. " ashington Maynard,—Lancaster, " hn Wilson,—Roseville, Muskingum, " homas J. Addis,—Morgantown, Va.
T. Lawson,—Sutton, Braxton, "
eo. Waddle, Henrysburgh, Belmont, Ohio.
M. Piper,—Farmington, Trumbull, " hn Clarke, Sr.—Brownsville, Fayette, Pa.
. W. Tipton,—Ligonier, Westmoreland, " eo. Hughes,—Holliday's Cove, Brooke, Va.

e published, last spring, an account of the h of Mr. Atkinson, of Wellsville, Ohio, by ll-pox. The following account of the manner is taking that disease, will, no doubt, be e interesting to our readers; it is taken from "American Journal of Medical Science," for ust, 1840.

OF SMALL-POX CONTAGION APPARENTLY CONVEYED BY A LETTER.

Washington L. Atlee, M.D., of Lancaster, Pa.

herewith forward to you an account of a sin- r instance of small-pox contagion, which, in ral points of view, may be interesting to the ession.

Ir. Robert Atkinson, of Lancaster, Pa., was en sick on the 8th of December, 1839, with eruptive fever of small-pox. He passed thro' distinct variety of genuine variola under the of my brother, Dr. John L Atlee, without very unfavorable symptoms. The attack of a violent grade, and the skin was complete- overed by the eruption. On the 18th of the e month the pustules began to dry, and on the 22d he was able to be out of bed. By the 29th the scabs had all scaled off, leaving a few scurfy exfoliations upon the hands and head. On this day he wrote a letter to his brother Richard Atkinson, in Wellsville, Columbiana county, Ohio, giving him an account of his recent illness and of other domestic affections. This letter was written on glazed writing paper, and sealed with a wafer moistened by his own saliva. Being detained on the road by the great snows which fell about that time, it did not reach Wellsville until between two and three weeks after it was written. After receiving the letter, Richard Atkinson tore open the wafer, and carried the letter in his vest pocket for several days. He wrote an answer to it on the 15th of January, 1840, and during this time had the letter, which he had received, lying before him and under the sheet on which he was writing. He wrote another letter to a friend on the 9th of February, and on the 12th he walked twelve miles on business, and on Monday the 17th, he took sick with the prominent symptoms of small-pox. The disease proved to be of the confluent character, and terminated fatally on the 1st of March.

Mr. Atkinson, of Ohio, had a sore on one of the fingers of his right hand, and one upon his breast. These sores first took on the appearance of variola, before the surface generally became affected.

An old man, who had assisted in putting the body into the coffin, went afterwards to a neighboring tavern,and,before having washed his hands, shook hands with a young man, who, without any other known cause of contagion, took the confluent small-pox and died about the 25th of March. The small-pox and varioloid now spread through that neighborhood.

There had been no case of variola at Wellsville or near it for two years before, and no other cause for its introduction could be ascertained than the letter from Pennsylvania.

Both the Messrs. Atkinson had been vaccinated about twenty years before in England, neither of whom took the vaccine disease.

The above statement was made to me by Mr. A. of Lancaster, who went to Wellsville, after the death of his brother, and there ascertained these facts. As he is a gentleman of the strictest veracity, the statement can be relied on. Should there be any error in it, it is hoped that the physicians there will correct it.

Several questions naturally suggest themselves arising out of this interesting case. How did this letter communicate this disease? Can the furfuraceous sepuelæ of variola produce small-pox by inoculation, or in any other way? Could the disease have been communicated by any loose scurf folded up in the letter? Or by any taken up from the fingers by the wet wafer? Could the saliva with which the wafer was moistened have contained contagion? Could the paper have imbibed it from the hand of the writer? Or could it have imbibed it from the air of the room when it was saturated with the effluvium? Could the ink have absorbed it as fluids do certain gasses? Would the diseased have been likely to have received the contagion had the skin of the hand been unbroken, or had he not carried the letter about his person? Can letters or packages taken out of a variolous atmosphere, infect districts through which they pass? Is our present quarantine calculated to prevent similar results? These and other questions may arise out of the above case, but I will leave others to pursue them.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

SIDNEY, O., Nov., 7, 1840.

Br. Springer: Our first quarterly meeting for Miami circuit was held on Saturday and Sabbath last. The Lord was with us of a truth; the members were much stirred up and encouraged to look for greater manifestations of God's love. We also held a two days' meeting, three weeks since, near Troy, at which we had the assistance of Br. J. Stephens. The Lord poured out of His spirit, and believers were enabled to rejoice, while sinners were made to tremble. There were fourteen added to the church. Some of whom were members of the M. E. Church, some of the United Brethren Church, and some from the world.

We have some good meetings which afford us encouragement.. Oh! that God may bless us as a church, and make us a holy God fearing people. May our light so shine around us that every species of darkness and tyranny may be done away in our happy land.

Yours, in the bonds of a peaceful gospel,

JONATHAN M. FLOOD.

PERRYTON, O., Nov. 6, 1840.

Br. Springer: I have nearly accomplished my third round on Newark circuit, and find it in rather a sickly condition. But I think not past recovery. There is, however, but one remedy, and that is, deep humiliation before God,—accompanied with punctuality and unceasing perseverance in the discharge of duty.

We held our first quarterly meeting on last Saturday and Sabbath. It was a comfortable season. Our love feast was a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord; and though there was no special religious excitement, yet we have reason to believe that there was some good done in the name of Christ. Our brethren here begin, I think, to feel a little encouraged and are looking up for better days. The Lord send them speedily, is the prayer of

ISRAEL THRAP.

GRAHAM'S STATION, MEIGS, O., Oct. 15, 1840.

Br. Springer: My delegate failed to attend the conference, and I could not go My wish was to be left in the hands of the President this year. A few days since I learned from a political paper the appointments of the preachers. I wish Br. Ragan to supply my place with another, as I have to attend to some business, and I cannot tell how much time I can devote to the interest of the conference this year.

In this county and in Athens I have found a few of our friends, and it is the request of them and others that I should preach for them what time I can and raise classes. I believe there can be twenty or twenty-five member obtained. I would like Br. Ragan to grant their request.

Yours, &c. T. PINNELL.

ITEMS.

The Episcopal Church in Ohio.—From the 23d report of the Protestant Episcopal Church in Ohio, we learn that the church is in a highly flourishing condition, and we glean the following statistics—Churches. 53; Babtism in the year, 366; Communicants added, 481; died or removed, 185; Total number present, 2,-132; Confirmed, 122; Married, 95; Funerals.192; Sunday School Scholars, 1582; Contribution for benevolent objects, $2,-474 83.

THE ELECTIONS.

GEN. HARRISON, THE PRESIDENT ELECT.

Gen W. H. Harrison has no doubt been eleted to the Presidency of the U. States. The returns already received authorize this statement. He has carried electors favorable to him in the followiug States:

Maine,	10
Connecticut	8
Rhode Island	4
New York	42
Pennsylvania	30
New Jersey	8
Maryland	10
Ohio	21
Georgia	11
	144

Mr. Van Buren has carried

Virginia	23
New Hampshire	7

We have no comments to make further than to rejoice most sincerely that the election is over. In Pennsylvania the contest has been very close. The Harrison majority may not reach 200 votes.—Bicknell.

Since the above was in type we learn that Kentucky, Indiana and Tennessee have elected the Harrison electors.—Ed. Recorder.

Snow fell in Buffalo on the 26th to the depth of six inches. The Commercial of the 27th says:—"This morning, cutters, pungs and jumpers are dashing through the streets, with joyous company. A novel sight for October."

The first snow seen in Montreal this season, fell on Sunday, the 25th ult.; the same day that we had our snow storm.—Ashtabula Sentinal.

Cleveland Prices, Nov. 3.,—Flour $3 75 and 3,87½ per barrel. Wheat 65 a 66 cts. Corn, no demand.

Indians.—Some twenty of the Seminole chiefs were in New Orleans on the 20th ult., on their way from Arkansas to Florida. It was understood that they went loaded with presents, for the purpose of inducing their brethren who are yet in hostility to the whites, to join that portion of the tribe who have already been removed west of the Mississippi.

Whirlwind on the Lake.—Yesterday afternoon,as the Chesapeake was ploughing her way throughout the lake, some few miles off Ashtabula, she was struck suddenly by a whirlwind from the northwest, which swept both smoke pipes, and her iron chain which secured them, even with the deck. The gust came unattended by the usual signs, and was altogether inexplicable.—Buffalo Com. Adv.

Church Militant.—The Wilmington,N. C. Chronicle says—A flag will to-morrow morning at 9 o'clock, be presented to the Wilmington Volunteers, by the ladies of the Methodist Episcopal Society.

The last accounts from Florida furnish a hope that a treaty may be made between the Seminoles and Gen. Armistead.

☞A Miss Ingram, somewhere, received a legacy from a namesake of hers in Texas, in consequence of her having written to him claiming relationship.

Miss Ingram married a Methodist clergyman—and a Michigan paper says that, in consequence of her good fortune "the widow's heart will be filled with joy." Not we trust on the demise of her husband.

Population of Russia.—The population of Russia in 1838 was 43,877,200—including the army and navy the wandering tribes of Poland and Finland, the number of inhabitants is 62,500,000.

Population of the Neitherlands.—On the 1st of January, 1840, was 2,662,489 souls of which 1,698,312 were protestants 910,083 Roman Catholics, 51,127 Jews, and 2,038 of other denominations.

Fall Fashions.—Last Sabbath morning a young lady was seen wending her way to church with Ellsler buttons on her wrists, and a hole as big as a ninepe ce, in the heel of her stocking.—Exchange paper.

Casually—Dr. David Richmond, an aged and esteemed citizen of Perkins, Erie county, in this State, formerly of Norwalk, Conn., was attacked by a bull in his field on the 19th inst and so badly injured that he died the next day.

Census of Baltimore.—The population of Baltimore, by the late census, is 101,-490—being an increase of 20,865 since 1830.

Texas has been recognized as a republic by Holland, and a treaty of amity and commerce, signed by General James Hamilton for Texas. and Baron Verstock Van Soclem for Holland.

Cincinnatti.—The population of Cincinnatti, by the census just completed, is 45.382. Hamilton county contains a population of 80,150. Of the city population, 2,255 are colored.

Washington City contains a population of 22,777.

The President of the United States has recognized Johann Rudolf Mahler,as Consul of Saxony for the port of New York.

Franklin H. Delano, consul of the Republic of Chili for the city and State of New-York.

William Kruger, Consul of Lubeck, for the same port.

John H. Van Cooth,Consul of Hanover, for the port of Charleston.

Among the visiters at present in the city we observe Mr. Gales of the National Intelligencer, Messrs N. Biddle and Jaudon of Philadelphia, and Senator Southard of New Jersey.—N. Y. Paper.

☞San Antonio, the Mexican frontier town of Texas has quite a feudal aspect and its churches and towers and moats and bridges remind one of some of the dilapidated cities of old Spain. It was settled by Spaniards and by emigrants from the Canary Islands as early as 1730 and once contained a population of some 12,000 or 15,000 souls. It is built chiefly of stone.

In the celebrated Barry case in New York, Judge Oakly of the Supreme Court has granted Mr. Barry a writ of attachment against Mr. Mercein, his father-in-law, to coerce the delivery to him of his child.

In the library of the College of New Jersey, there is a copy of Pliney's Natural History printed in Venice in 1472. It is a large quarto with illuminated capitals and in splendid style. There is also a copy of the "O mirificum" edition of Robert Stevens famous Greek Testament printed in Paris in 1550. This was formerly considered the most beautiful Greek book ever printed.

Glorious Achievment.—It is rumored that an express arrived at Washington city from Florida a few days since to announce that the grand army of the United States had captured another pretty sizable—Indian. They also came very near catching a squaw. There is a prospect that with the expenditure of another forty million of dollars the war will be brought to a glorious termination.

John Quincy Adams.—It is said that the committee on behalf of the Africans taken in the Amistad, have engaged the Hon. John Quincy Adams, as senior counsel, and that he will make the closing argument in the Supreme Court of the United States, at Washington, next January.

Commander John H. Aulick, for some time past on duty at Washington Navy Yard, having been ordered to sea, in command of the sloop of war Yorktown, Commander C. K. Stribling succeeds him at the Navy Yard.

A person up town, asked the other day, what part of speech an injection was.

We regret to learn from the New Orleans Bee of the 30th, that on the previous day, a fire broke out in the Ladies' cabin of the steamboat Empress, lying at the Levee, in that city. It rapidly communicated to other parts of the boat, and the whole structure was soon in flames.—The Empress was cut adrift to prevent the extension of the fire to other boats, and she floated gradually across the river, and came in contact with the steamboat Monarch, which had recently undergone thorough repairs. The Monarch immediately took fire, and both boats were completely destroyed.—Bicknell.

Constitutional Government.—The most popular form of government at present in Germany is that of Saxony. The constitution is written, and the lower house of representatives is elected by the suffrages of the freeholders, the amount of land which each voter is required to possess being so small that almost every inhabitant of the country enjoys the privilege. The constitution was granted by the king in consequence of a revolutionary movement to obtain it, simultaneous with the revolution in France which brought Louis Philippe to the throne.

Good Advice.—Lord Bacon says a man would do well to carry a pencil in his pocket, and write down the passing thoughts of the moment.—Those that come unsought for are commonly the best, and should be secured, for they seldom return.

Brevity.—The following is the short letter sent to the Porte in the Haji Baba steamer by Mehemet Ali:

"I will not yield a span of the land I possess, and if war is made against me, I will turn the empire upside down, and be buried in its ruins. Mehemet Ali."

If thou shalt live according to the necessities of thy nature, thou shalt never be poor; but if whim and fancy determine thy wants, thou shalt never be rich.—Seneca.

Temperance Man.—A son of the Emerland Isle, who arrived in New York the other day, was asked by an acquaintace to take a glass of grog, but declined, giving as a reason for his refusal, that he had joined the temperance society in Cork, before leaving Ireland. His friend replied that that was of no consequence, as a pledges given in Ireland was not binding here. To this piece of left-handed morality, Patrick indignantly retorted,—'Do you suppose whin I brought my body to America, I'd be afthur laving my sowl in Ireland!'

It is stated in an English paper, that a horse fed on bruised oats or barley, will look and work as well as one fed on double the quantity of oats or barley not bruised. This is an important consideration to the owners of horses and the experiment may be easily tried.

A son of Mr. John Goldsmith, of Baltimore was playing with a small cannon, when another boy asked him to look into it. He complied, and while looking in at the muzzle the other boy applied the match; the powder exploded, and young Goldsmith was, it is feared, deprived of the sight of both of his eyes.

It is stated that Mr. Ramsay (the Member of Congress of this state, who committed suicide) was afflicted with the liver complaint, which was sometimes so painful as to deprive him of reason.

NEW JERSEY.—The message of Gov. Pennington, in speaking of the fiscal concerns of that State, says that the ordinary expenses of the government last year were less, by $10,000, than in the preceding year, owing, in part, to the short sessions of the legislature. After deducting $30,000, (the annual disbursement from the school fund,) there remain $320,000. The State is free from debt, excepting a small sum due the School Fund, and has no bonds in the market. The number of lunatics in the State is 338,and of idiots there are 358. The number was ascertained with reference to the establishment of a Lunatic Hospital. The State supports fifteen deaf and dumb and nine blind in the institutions of New York and Philadelphia. The Governor suggests the propriety of an agricultural survey. and thinks that imprisonment for debt should be abolished.

The American olive is successfully cultivated by Messrs. Winship, of Brighton, Mass. It yields fruit from a mere shrub. It is one of the most desirable trees for ornament.

"Union is Strength.—Beavers generally choose a pond, or a piece of ground with a stream running through it; but to form a dam, it is necessary that they should stop the stream, and of course that they should know in what direction it runs. They always, however, choose the most favorable place, and never begin at a wrong part. They drive stakes five or six feet long into the ground, in different rows, and interweave them with branches of trees, filling them up with clay, stones, and sand. The dams are sometimes a hundred feet long, ten or twelve feet thick at the base, exactly level from end to end, perpendicular toward the stream, and sloped on the outside, where grass soon grows, and renders the earth more united.

At the head of one of the rivers of Louisiana, E. du Pratz found a beaver-dam in a very retired place, and ordered one of his men to cut, as silently as possible, a gutter about a foot wide through it, and to retire immediately. "As soon as the water through the gutter began to make a noise, (says the writer,) we heard a beaver come from one of the huts and plunge in. We saw him get on the bank, and clearly perceived that he examined it. He then, with all his force, gave four distinct blows with his tail, when immediately the whole colony threw themselves into the water, and arrived upon the dam. As soon as they assembled, one of them appeared, by muttering, to issue some kind of orders, for they all instantly left the place, and went out on the banks of the pond in different directions. Those nearest to us were between our station and the dam, and therefore we could observe their operations very plainly. Some of them formed a substance resembling a kind of mortar; others carried this on their tails, which served as sledges for the purpose. I observed that they put themselves two and two, and that each of a couple loaded his fellow. They trailed the mortar, which was pretty stiff, quite to the dam, where others were stationed to take it; these put it into the gutter, and rammed it down with blows of their tails. The noise of the water soon ceased, and the breach was completely repaired.—One of the beavers then struck two blows with his tail, and instantly they all took to the water without any noise, and disappeared."—Facts not Fable.

Published by request.

DIALOGUE BETWEEN THE BIBLE AND THE SINNER.

Bible. Thus saith the Lord of Hosts, consider thy ways. Haggai 1, 5.

Sinner. I am not so bad as some others?

B. They that measure themselves among themselves are not wise. 2 Cor 10, 12.

S. I hope I am not so bad as to go to hell?

B. The wicked shall be turned into hell. Ps. 9, 17.

S. But God is merciful?

B. The Lord is slow to angel, and great in power, and will not acquit the wicked. Nah. 1, 3. He will by no means clear the guilty. Ex. 34, 7.

S. Is there then no mercy out of Christ?

B. There is none other name under Heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved. Acts 4, 12. Jesus saith I am the way, no man cometh unto the Father but my me. John 14, 6. 1 Tim. 2, 5.

S. I hope I do some good?

B. There is none that doeth good; no, not one. Ps. 3, 12.

S. Is every thing that I do wicked?

B. Thou hast done evil as thou couldest. Jer. 3, 5. The ploughing of the wicked is sin. Prov. 21, 24. Deut. 21, 20.

S. I am sure I have some good thoughts?

B. God is not in all his thoughts. Ps. x, 4. God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually. Gen. 6 and 5. Out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, murders, &c. Mark 21 and 22. Prov. 24, 9.

S. If my heart be so wicked, what shall I do?

B. Make you a new heart. Ezk. 18, 31.

S. I can't.

B. Give ME thine heart. Prov. 23, 26. They first gave their ownselves to the Lord, then of their substance. 2 Cor. 8, 5.

S. I try to be honest and pay my debts?

B. Christ is become of no effect unto you, whosoever of you is justified by the law. Gal. 5, 3, 4.

S. What is the law?

B. Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and thy neighbor as thy self. Matt. 22, 37.

S. Surely I have kept the law in some measure?

B. Whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point is guilty of all. James 2, 10.

S. But did not Christ do away the moral law?

B. Think not that I am come to destroy the law—I am not come to destroy but to fulfill.—Matt. 5, 17. Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things written in the book of the LAW to do them. Gal. 3 and 10.

S. How then shall I be delivered from the curse of the law?

B. Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law. Gal. 3, 13.

S Will all then be saved?

B. He that believeth shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned. Mark 16, and 16.

S. I do believe.

B. The devils also believe and tremble. Jas. 2, and 19.

S. How shall I go to work?

B. This is the work of God that ye believe on HIM whom he hath sent. John 6, 29.

S. What is it to believe?

B. With the heart man believeth unto righteousness. Rom. 10, 10.

S. I have been trying to do my best?

B. Without faith it is impossible to please Him. Heb. 11, 6.

S. I have been praying and reading my Bible, &c.

B. He that turneth away his ear from hearing the law, even his prayers shall be abomination. Prov. 28, 9.

S. Ought I not to pray?

B. Men ought always to pray. Luke 18, I.—I will therefore that men pray every where, lifting up holy hands without wrath and doubting. 1 Tim. 2. 8.

S. But will not God hear me if I pray the best I can, though I have not a new heart and do not believe?

B. Whatsoever is not of Faith is Sin. Rom. 14, 24. If I regard iniquity in my heart the Lord will not hear me. Psim. 66, 18.

S. What must I do to be saved?

B. Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved. Acts 16, 31.

S. Is Christ able to save me?

B. He is able to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by Him. Heb. 7, 25.

S. But I am so unworthy I am afraid he will not accept of me?

B. Him that cometh unto me, I will in no wise cast out. John 6, 37.

S. Why then am I not saved.

B. Ye will not come to me that ye might have life. John 5, 40.

S. I think I am willing! I can't believe that I am unwilling to come to Christ?

B. He that believeth not God, hath made him a liar; because he believeth not the record that God gave His son. And this is the record that God hath given to us, eternal life and this life is in his Son: 1 John 5, 10, 11:

S. I will believe but I can't now?

B. God now commandeth all men every where to repent: Acts 17, 30:

S. I must wait God's time?

B. The Holy Ghost saith, to-day if ye will hear his voice harden not your hearts: Heb: 3, 7: Behold now is the accepted time, behold now is the day of salvation: 2 Cor: 6, 2: Come for all things are now ready: Luke 14, 17:

S. How can I come now?

B. Whosoever will let him take the water of life freely: Rev: 22, 17:

S. If I am spared I will try soon; perhaps tomorrow.

B. Thou fool this night thy soul shall be required of thee: Luke 12: 20: Ye know not what shall be on the morrow, for what is your life it is even a vapour: James 4, 14:

S. What would you have me do?

B. Be reconciled to God: 2 Co: 5, 20:

S. But do I hate him?

B. The carnal mind is enmity against God: Rom: 8, 4: Now they have both seen and hated both me and my father: John 15, 24:

S. I never thought I hated God.

B. The heart is deceitful above all things: Jer: 17, 9: He that trusteth in his own heart is a fool: Prov: 28, 26:

S. Well what must I do?

B. Repent and belive the gospel: Mark 1, 15:

S. I can't:

B. Except ye repent ye shall perish: Luke 13, 3: He that believeth shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned. Mark 16, 16:

S. Well what can I do more, I have done all I can?

B. Ye shall find me, when ye shall search for me with all your heart: Jer: 29, 13: Let him take hold of my strength that he may make peace with me; and he shall make peace with me: Isaiah 27, 5:

S. But may I be saved now?

B. If thou shalt confess with thy mouth, the Lord Jesus and shalt believe in thine heart thou shalt be saved: Rom; 10, 19:

S. I do believe with all my heart?

B. Go thy way; and as thou hast believed so be it done unto thee: Mat: 8, 13: Return to thine own house and shew how great things God hath done unto thee: Luke 8, 39. Not unto us O Lord, not unto us, but unto thy name give glory for thy mercy, and for thy truths sake.—Psalm cxv: 1.

Business Department.

RECEIVED PAY FOR RECORDER.

From J. Beatty for H. Springer,	$2 00
" " for S. S. Clarke,	2 00
" " for G. Beaumont,	2 00
" " for G. A. Rogers,	2 00
" " for P. L. Haver,	2 00
" W. L. Baldwin for J. Hicks,	2 00
" A. C. Barnes for J. Tipton,	2 00
" " for T. J. Finch,	2 00
" R. Harris,	2 00
" W. Hensler for W. Hamilton,	2 00
" C. Powelson,	2 00
" D. Crall for T. Mills,	2 00
" J. Swern, Esq.	2 00
" L. Miller,	2 00
" J. Rodman,	2 00
" James Brown, (balance on 2d vol.)	1 50
" D. Kinney for A. Baker,	3 00
" A. Brown for Jeremiah Guard,	2 00
" J. Burns for J. Parke,	2 00
" W.H Manwarning for J.Johnson, 2v	2 00
" R. T. Boyd for S. Conklin,	5 00
" " for V. Shinn,	2 00
" " for J. Stagg,	2 00
" " for W. H. Edwards,	2 00
" L. Gray,	2 00
" William Hibbs,	2 00
" J. M. Flood for S. Dorsey,	2 00
" S. Bloomer for C. Chambers,	2 00
" " for J Miller,	2 00
" " for —— Sawyer,	1 00

LETTERS RECEIVED.

J. Beatty, 1 sub.; J. L. Drane, W. L. Baldwin, 2 subs.; J. Myres, P. M.; A. C. Barnes, R. Harris, W. Hensler, C. Powelson, J. Hunt, Bennett & Hicklin, D. Crall, J. D. G., J. Barnes, 2 subs.; W. H. Manwarning, R. T. Boyd, your paper is free; J. K. Morehead, J. M. Flood, N. Burgess, 5 subs.; of S. Bloomer, I. Thrap, C. Russell, W. Ross, 1 sub,; T. H. Stockton.

The post master at Walker, now Manilla, Rush county, Indiana, informs us that our subscriber at that place, John Westerfield, is deceased. He owes $3, having had our paper from the beginning. Will some of our friends get the amount and forward to us?

Notes Lost.

A NOTE for $200, given by STEPHEN H. LUDLOW, and one for $166 given by WILLIAM TAIT to John Clarke, agent of the Literary Institution of the Methodist Protestant Church. The trustees have directed these notes to be given up to Messrs. Ludlow & Tait. The money for which they were given was to have been a loan for the benefit of said Literary Institution. All I can learn of them is, Mr. Ludlow and Mr. Tait say, they gave their notes, as above stated, to John Clarke, when he was agent of said Institution. I cannot learn where they are, or who (if any person) has received them from the said John Clarke. If any person knows where said notes are, it is hoped he will be so good as to communicate the same, either through the Western Recorder, or by letter to me. All persons are also warned not to purchase said notes, as it is not intended, nor would it be just, that they should be paid. DAVID CRALL, Agent.

November 18, 1840. 63

DEFERRED ARTICLES.

The Ledger states that the Story some weeks since put in circulation that the bank of the United States had anticipated a debt due to the General Government of 800,000, now turns out thus as detailed by a contemporary:

"An instalment of $800 000 was due to the Cherokee Indians, west of Missouri and Arkansas, by the federal Government. The United States Bank despatched an agent for the purpose of anticipating the payment in her own dishonored notes instead of paying that amount into the treasury, as required by law, in specie funds. By this operation the bank would have saved three per cent. or $24,000, which the poor Indians would have been shaved out of. There was no doubt entertained but that operation would be successful, and it was accordingly rumored about that the bank had made advances to government. It turned out, however, that the barbarous savages were too unciuilized to understand the superiority of depreciated paper to the precious metals, and utterly refused to take it. This spoiled the arangement, and the government is now paying out specie, which will be circulated among the people of Arkansas, and Missouri."

The object was to make United States Bank bill answer the purpose of coin to the profit of the Bank, and the direct loss of the "poor Indian."—Bicknell.

The Resumtion Movement Completed.—It is confidently stated that such an arrangement has been made with eastern Capitalists as will secure the resumtion of specie payments on the 15th of January. It is understood that the debt due to the East by the Banks of Philadelphia, is to be secured by an issue of post notes on the part our banks generally, instead of the post Notes of the United States Bank, as at first proposed. A satisfactory arrangement will no doubt be made between other banks of Philadelphia and the U. S. Bank. This movement cannot but inspire a considerable degree of confidence in our monetary circles while as the period of resumption approaches, we must become less abundant.—Ib.

The Cincinnati Republican of the 26th says:—"There is no actual impetus given as yet to money transactions but there is a prospect that in the course of a few months; money matters will be easier, our reasons for which we shall give as soon as the excitement of the election passes over. Exchange on New York 5¼ to 5½ prem; on Philadelphia 2¼ prem, and on on Baltimore 3. We have been waiting to see if any arrangement would be made by Messrs. Ford & Brothers, for the redemption of the notes of the Detroit and St. Joseph Railroad bank and we believe none has yet been made We have seen no intimation but what these notes are received at the bank where they can easily be sent, so that no sacrifice should be made upon them.

Most Horrid Murder and Suicide.—Our neighboring town were shocked yesterday with the report of a most dreadful murder, and the suicide of the murderer, which took place at Wallingford at an early hour in the morning. The circumstances as stated to us are as follows:

A woman, the wife of Atwater Allen, of Wallingford, applied to the Superior Court, now sitting in this town, on Monday last, and obtained a bill of divorce. In the operation she was assisted by a man named David H. Hotchkiss, in whose house and under whose protection she had lived for the last twleve months. On returning from Court on Monday evening. Hotchkiss wished her to marry him, but her mother coming on a visit to her, and wishing to confer with her, she declined. The mother and daughter slep together, and Hotchkiss in another room. In the morning Hotchkiss called on Mrs. Allen to get up, which she did not do, and he called a second time. His call not being attended to, he became infuriated, and having procured an axe, he went into the room, and struck the woman while in bed with the head of the axe, each blow proving fatal, but with savage ferocity he turned the edge of his axe and literally chopped his victim limb from limb. The desperate man then returned to his own room, and with a knife severed the jugular vein, and in a short time bled to death. He seems to have been sitting on the edge of the bed, when he thrust his large pocket knife into the side of his neck, by which he opened the jugular vein, after which he walked a few steps toward the door, as the bloody track of his feet indicated; but probably finding himself faint, returned and threw himself upon the bed, where he soon expired.

We understand that all the parties engaged in this are of the lowest order of society and very intemperate. The immediate agent in this awful catrastrophe was rum, Hotchkiss having purchased two quarts on Monday, most of which he had consumed.—New Haven Herald.

France and the Four Powers.—The French papers publish a transcript taken from the Belgian journals, of a note addressed on the 31st of August last to Mr. H. L. Bulwer, British Minister at Paris, in the absence of Lord Granville, the object of which is to prove that it was France that voluntarily separated from the Four Powers, and not the Four Powers from France, in relation to the settlement of the Eastern Question.

The N. E. Boundary.—A letter from Bangor, Me., dated Oct. 23, published in the Boston Mercantile Journal, states that two of the young men who accompanied the boundary Commissioners have arrived at that city. The whole ground has been carefully examined, and the Commissioners are on their return.—Their report will probably come to us by the way to Washington; and until we get it, we must put up with such information as may casually fall from those connected with the expedition. The writer of the letter is informed that there is no doubt on the minds of the Commissioners, that the line claimed by the Americans is the true line; and that no person who makes the examinatton with the intention of ascertaining the truth, can arrive at any other conclusion.

Infidelity can neither affect the existence of God, nor annihialate the obligations of man to Him. It may ruin the interests of the creature, but it cannot shake the throne of God.—Dr. Collyer.

Orthodoxy in France.—The letter from our French correspondent presents an interesting statement of the difficulties which the friends of truth encounter in the catholicism, Socinianism, Universalism and infidelity. When the political influence of France is considered in connection with the vast moral power she is capable of wielding, it must be evident that that kingdom demands the sympathies of the Christian world. There is some leaven at work, and we hope it may yet move the whole mass.—N. Y. Obs.

Floods.—Gentlemen who came into St. Louis on the 20th from the country state that all the steams beyond St. Charles, which two-thirds of the year are dry, were at a height never before known.

A reported Duel.—The New York Signal says: "It was confidently reported, yesterday, that an affair of honor was about to come off between the District Attorney of this city and N. B. Blunt, Esq., owing to the charge of falsehood said to have been made by the latter against the former at the melee on Monday evening, in the room of the Court of Inquiry. It was asserted that the preliminaries were arranged—and matters were in train for a speedy meeting of the parties—where it was not stated. We do not give any credit to this report, but simply mention it as one of the rumors of the day. We have too good an opinion of the prudence of both these gentlemen to believe they would rush into hostilities, and endeavor to shed each other's blood.

On the use of wines.—M. Croserio gives the following advice: "There exists a universal prejudice with regard to wine, namely, that it aids digestion, that it strengthens the stomach, and that it is therefore necessary for persons whose digestion is disturbed or troublesome. An experience of twenty years, for which we are indebted to the influence of the physiological doctrines, proves that persons in this condition digest much better by drinking pure water. This is not the smallest service we owe to Professor Broussais, in having delivered the sick from the use of wines, which physicians in former times were in the habit of prescribing to their patients.

Surgical Operations.—Last week, Doctor Duffie, assistrd by Doctors Condie and Duvat, performed a difficult operation on an aneuism of the artery of the ham. It was finished in fourteen minuets. The person operated upon is a young lady residing in Eighth near South street. The enormous tumor extracted filled the whole space back of the knee. It throbbed violently the whole time, threatening every instant to burst, a calamity which would have inevitably occasioned the death of the patient. At the close of the operation, the beating ceased instantly. This, we are told, is one of most critical operations known to the faculty, and the former practice was to amputate the limb. The patient is doing well. The calmness and science of the operator are creditable at once to his assiduity and abilities.—United States Gazette.

Encouragement of Literature in Prussia.—A late Paris paper says that the King of Prussia has bestowed a pension of 4000 Thalers, about twenty-eight hundred dollars annually on the celebrated Lewis Tieck. The King announced this donation to Mr. Tieck, in a letter written with his own hand, and expressed in a very kind manner in which he invites him to pass all his summers at the royal residence of Sans Souci.

Mr. Tieck who has been for some time established at Dresden; is making preparations to visit Berlin immediately, to returnhis thanks in person to King Fredic William IV for the great favor he has thus bestowed upon him.

The Village of Salem in Ruins.—A fire broke out at Salem, N. Y., on Friday evening last, in the stable connected with the Salem Hotel, and spread with dreadful fury, consuming the Hotel and all of the outbuildings, and the session house of the Presbyterian church; also the dwellings of Mr. Lambert, Mr. Seymour, Jas. A. M'Farland, Elizabeth Proudfit—in all eight.

They've had a severe shock of an earthquake in Brooklyn, Conn.

A Veteran of "The Tea Party."—The New York Sun published a long article, furnishing the particulars of a visit, made by a correspondent of that paper, to Geo. Hughes, who was one of that immerral party concerned in throwing the tea into Boston Harbour, in "days which tried men's souls." He resides in the town of German Flats, in Herkimer county, at the house of his son-in-law, a Mr. Morris.—He was 106 years of age on the 5th September last. Many of our readers will doubtless recollect, it excited some attention at the time, that a celebration of the event in which he was so conspicuous an actor, took place at Boston a few years since, and that brave old hero, then 100 years of age, was present to add to the interest of the occasion; we are informed that he not only made the visit entirely alone, but even journied several hundred miles further to the eastward at the same time. In fact, until very recently he has enjoyed good health—never, it is said, having experienced a single ill day; but for about 2 years past he has been confined to his room in consequence of an injury which he recieved while attending a 4th of July celebration in the vicinity of his residence. He was about to alight from the carriage in which he was riding, when the horse started, threw him violently to the ground, and produced a contusion, the ill effects of which will probably never be removed. This added to the infirmitles of his advanced age, has rendered him entirely helpless, and contributes greatly to the misery of his present condition.

It is properly suggested that something should be done, to ask the benevolence of the public to provide means to smooth the declining days of one who proved himself a patriot, when it was patriotism alone which could secure the liberties we enjoy.

Appointment by the governor of the state of deleware.—A. De Kalb Tarr, Esq., of the city of Philadelphia, to be a Commissioner for the State of Deleware, resident in Pennsylvania, to administer oaths and affirmations, and to take depositions to be used in the said State of Deleware, and to take the acknowledgment and proof of Deeds and all other instruments to be recorded in said State.

During the French Revolution, it was related of Madame Du The, that she carried her extravagance to such a pitch, that the horses of her carriage had silver shoes.

Mobile Going Ahead.—At the lowest estimate, there are between 2 and 300 houses building in Mobile; and some of them, too, of the most magnificent kind.

Indiana Conference.

Extracts from the Minutes of the first Session of the Indiana Annual Conference, of the Methodist Protestant Church.

The committee appointed on the part of the Indiana division of the Ohio District, for carrying into effect a resolution to divide the said District, passed at the Ohio Annual Conference, held on Tanner's creek, Ia., August 28th, 1839, having given notice in the Western Recorder of their doings, and the time and place of holding the first conference of the new District, (Ia.) the ministers and delegates assembled at Liberty meeting house, near Mt. Tabor, Indiana, and after an able discourse by Br. Jos. Simpson, organized the conference by the appointment of Br. J. Simpson, Chairman, pro tem., and H. P. Bennett, Secretary, do. The session was opened by prayer.

List of Ministerial Members.

Joseph Simpson, W. W. Paul, R. G. H. Hanna, James M Clain,* Thomas Hicklin, Sam'l. Morrison, Wm. B. Cremeens, D. H. Stephens, Geo. Evans,* T. S. Stilwell, J. D. Medearis, J. Betson,* Elijah Collins, Thomas Shipp, James Edmonson, Josiah Hopkins, Jacob Varner, Peter Clingler, Lewis Hicklin, James Williams,* and E. K. McMasters. (*Absentees.)

List of Delegates.

George Baxter, And. Pauley, Richwood circuit,
A. D. Amos, Blue river circuit,
Samuel Overstreet, White river circuit,
James Sharp, Charlestown circuit,
John Eubank, Lawrenceburgh circuit,
L. Basye, Wabash circuit,
George Wheatley, Madison circuit,
Edmund Jeans, Ab. L. Collings, Spencer circuit,
H. Banks, Sugar creek circuit,
John Birch, Wea Mission.

Received into the Itinerancy at this Conference.

Thomas Shipp, Lewis Hicklin, Sam'l. Fulton, H. P. Bennett, Joseph White, on probation; Hiram Griggs, Jacob Beatty, on probation; John Alter, on probation; John Williams, Andrew Hosea, Peter Clingler, Jacob Varner, by certificate.

Elected to Orders at this Conference.

ELDERS.	DEACONS.
Hiram Griggs,*	Josiah Hopkins,*
Thomas Shipp,*	Harvey Beal,*
John Williams,*	W. J. Bledsoe,*
Samuel Fulton,*	Andrew Hosea,
Lewis Hicklin,*	John Alter,*
Thos. Alexander,*	Harvey Collings,*
Abner Perdue,	A. L. Collings,*
Wm. B. Cremeens,*	John Williams,*
*Prevent & ordained.	Jacob Beatley.

Numbers in Society.

CIRCUITS.		CIRCUITS.
Lawrenceburgh,	87	Sugar creek,	95
Madison.	143	Blue river,	30
Charlestown,	84	Richwood,	145
White river,	108	Spencer,	162
Wabash,	500	Driftwood mission,	14

Unstationed Ministers.

Lawrenceburgh circuit—James Murray.
Madison—H. P. Bennett, Thos. Hicklin, L. Hicklin, T. Bland, Andrew Hosea, G. Wheatley, A. Chitwood, Thomas Jones.
Charlestown—C. Ruddle, N. Q. Hall.
White river—J. Thompson, Thos. Alexander, J. O'Haver.
Wabash—H. Kinhons, H. Beal, J. Shipp, C. Wright, W. J. Bledsoe, J. Briggs.
Blue river—T. Smith Cremeens.
Richwood—Andrew Perdue.
Spencer—A. L. Collings, Harvey Collings.

The committee on boundaries, stations, &c., report the following changes, &c:

1. That the name of Lawrenceburgh circuit be changed to that of Tanner's creek.
2. That the Hurricane class, on White river circuit, be attached to Sugar creek circuit.
3. That that part of the Wabash circuit, west of the Wabash river, together with the Tippecanoe mission, form a new circuit, and that it be called, Wabash.
4. That that part of the Wabash circuit, east of said river, and lying in Carroll county, be attached to the Wea mission, and that they constitute a circuit to be called Lafayette circuit.
5. That that part of the Wabash circuit, including Boon, Clinton and Marion counties, be formed into a circuit, and called the Union circuit.
6. That Sugar creek circuit be enlarged, so as to include the whole of Blue river circuit, and that it retain the name of Sugar creek.
7. That the Driftwood mission, embracing appointments in Bartholomew county and the adjacent country, be formed into a circuit to be called the Driftwood circuit.
8. That the name of Spencer circuit be changed to Mill creek.
9. That a mission be established in Grant county and the adjoining country, and that it be called Grant mission.
10. That a mission, embracing DeKalb county and the adjoining country be established, and that it be called the DeKalb mission.
11. That a mission be established, embracing Laporte county and the adjoining country, and that it be called the Laporte mission.

On motion, the above report was received and adopted.

The Stationing Committee, consisting of Elij. Collins and W. W. Paul, ministers; L. Basye and James Sharp, laymen; report the following appointments for the ensuing year:

R. G. H. HANNA, President.

Charlestown circuit—W. W. Paul.
Madison—Elijah Collins; T. Jones, A. Chitwood, T. Bland, and G. Wheatley, unstationed preachers.
Tanner's creek—Joseph White; Jas. Murray, unstationed preacher.
Sugar creek—T. Shipp; S. Morrison, sup. asst.
Richwood—Samuel Fulton; John Alter, J. McClain, Geo. Baxter, sup. assts.
White river—Peter Clingler; John Williams, sup. asst.
Mill creek—Joseph Simpson; J. D. Medearis, J. Edmonston, sup. assts.
Wabash—Andrew Hosea.
Union—Hiram Griggs.
Lafayette—Jacob Varner.
Driftwood—Wm. B. Cremeens; T. S. Stilwell, sup. asst.
Grant, DeKalb, Laporte, } to be supplied.
Conference Missionary—Lewis Hicklin.

James Betson, superanuated.

D. H. Stephens, without an appointment at his own request.

H. P. Bennett, without an appointment at his own request.

Josiah Hopkins, transferred to the Illinois Conference by certificate.

Benj. Allen, George Evans, Jos. Williams, E. K. McMasters, } Transferred to the unstationed list by their own request.

Jacob Beatly, Thomas Hicklin, } Left in the hands of the President.

Enoch Springer withdrawn, without having fulfilled his engagements to the Ohio Annual Conference.

Br. A. H. Bassett, being present, was voted a seat in this conference, as honorary member.

A committee of six, viz: D. H. Stephens, T. Hicklin, R. G. H. Hanna, John Eubank, L. Basye and E. Jeans, was appointed to report rules of order for the government of this conference in the transaction of business, made their report accordingly, which was adopted. (As these rules do not differ very materially from those published in the minutes of other conferences, we hope the brethren will excuse us for not publishing them.)

On motion,

Resolved, That Br. A. H. Bassett has honorably fulfilled all his engagements to the Ohio Annual Conference during the last year, within the bounds of this District,—and that the thanks of this conference be tendered to him for his able counsel and kind assistance in the transaction of its business, carried unanimously.

Br. Bassett presented a plan, adopted by the Ohio Annual Conference for the relief of the Literary Institution of the Methodist Protestant Church, situated near Lawrenceburgh, Ia., of the debts now against it, and for which certain brethren are liable. The plan was received, and on motion, it was Resolved, That this conference approve of the plan submitted by Br. Bassett, and adopted by the Ohio Annual Conference at its late session in Cincinnati, for the relief of the Literary Institution from its present embarrassment.

On motion,

Resolved, That each superintendant be requested to take a printed copy of the above plan, & use his best endeavors to obtain subscriptions of stock, receive payment, and forward to the agent at Cincinnati.

The standing district committee was elected as follows:—Joseph Simpson, Elijah Collins, Geo. Wheatley, James Sharp, David Johnson, William Smith.

James Sharp was elected Conference Steward, and H. P. Bennett Secretary.

The following Preamble and Resolution were introduced by consent of conference, read and unanimously adopted,—viz:

Whereas, Intemperance is a great and prevailing evil in our land, opposed to the principles of the Holy Scriptures, and destructive to the peace and happiness of society; And whereas, we conceive it to be the duty of the church to oppose all evil, and that God has laid this obligation upon her, that she exert her influence for the destruction of all evil, the pulling down of the strong holds of the adversary, and the upbuilding of the kingdom of Christ—Therefore

Resolved, That we, the members of this conference pledge ourselves to use all proper measures for the extermination of this crying evil, by abstaining from the use of all intoxicating liquors as a drink ourselves, and by discountenancing their use among our fellow men.

The following preamble and resolutions, which had been previously laid on the table, subject to a future call, were called up and acted upon.

Preamble.—Whereas, The Methodist Protestant Church professes to be established upon the sacred and unchanging principles of equal rights, and to make an equal distribution of said rights among all her members, and to grant to all, without respect of persons, the protection of those rights; and whereas, notwithstanding all her pretentions to liberty and equality, she permits her members to engage in the shameful practice of trafficing in human FLESH and BLOOD, thus licensing them to make merchandize of men, women and children, and to barter for vile dust, the purchase of a Redeemer's blood, and the living members of Christ's body; and whereas, our church periodicals, our pulpits and our members have, to some extent, been gagged or otherwise silenced on this subject; and whereas, we are commanded to open our mouths for the dumb in the cause of all such as are appointed to destruction; to judge righteously and to PLEAD the cause of the poor and needy; Therefore,

Resolved, That this conference fully recognize the right and privilege of free discussion of the subject of slavery, within the bounds of this District, as connected with the Methodist Protestant Church.

2d. Resolved, That slavery is an open violation of the rights of man in view of the gifts and grants of his Creator, that it is inconsistent with the spirit of our discipline, contrary to the morality of the Holy Scriptures, the doctrines and principles inculcated by the blessed Saviour.

3d. Resolved, That as slavery is a palpable violation of the law of God, subversive of every principle of justice, a sin of the greatest magnitude, it ought, like every other sin, to be repented of and abandoned without delay,—and as we cannot see why the practice of this sin is less ruinous in the sight of God than other popular evils of the day, nor why the latter should exclude persons from the privileges and communion of the church, while the former does not; Therefore,

4th. Resolved, That we will not invite slaveholding ministers to fill our pulpits, nor those guilty of the sin of slaveholding to commune with us at the Lord's table.

5th. Resolved, That all class leaders, trustees, stewards, exhorters and preachers, be entitled to vote in the quarterly conference, within the bounds of this District, without respect to color.

6th. Resolved, That it is the opinion of this conference that the holding of our fellow men in involuntary bondage, except it be for a violation of law, is a crime condemned by the word of God, and therefore, sufficient to exclude the person or persons so doing, from the kingdom of grace and glory.

The above preamble and resolutions gave rise to considerable discussion, which we are happy to say, nothwithstanding there was difference of opinion among the brethren, was characterized throughout by christian forbearance and mutual good feeling, and as the discussion was listened to by a large audience with deep interest, we believe that it was not without profit. It proved, at least, that men, ac uated by christian motives, and restrained by christian principles, can meet any question, however exciting, with calmness and the spirit of meekness.

On motion of Br. Geo. Wheatly,

The house was divided on the adoption of the preamble, when the yeas and nays being called for on the question, "Shall the preamble be adopted?" stood as follows:

Lay delegation—Geo. Baxter, L. Basye, John Eubank, E Jeans, affirmative, 4. A. Pauley, A. D. Amos, Samuel Overstreet, James Sharp, Geo. Wheatley, John Birch, neg. 6.

Ministerial members—Joseph Simpson, Thos. Hicklin, R. G. H. Hanna, D. H. Stephens, James Edmonston, Jacob Varner, Thomas Shipp, W. B. Cremeens, John Alter, Peter Clingler, Lewis Hicklin, H. P. Bennett, affirmative, 12. T. S. Stilwell, neg. 1.

There not being a majority of both ministers and laymen, according to the Discipline, the preamble was rejected. Several of the members were out on committees, and some had obtained leave of absence, and did not of course vote.—The resolutions were taken up separately and acted upon, but as the yeas and nays do not vary materially from the above, it is not thought necessary to transcribe them.

The following resolution was then offered, viz:

Resolved, That no person shall be rendered incompetent to give testimony, in any case, in the Methodist Protestant Church, within the bounds of this conference District, because of colors. (House still divided.) The yeas and nays being called for, stood:

Ministers—J. Simpson, W. W. Paul, Thomas Hicklin, R. G. H. Hanna, Thomas Shipp, W. B. Cremeens, Elijah Collins, James Edmonston, Jacob Varner, John Alter, Peter Clingler, Lewis Hicklin, H. P. Bennett, 13 for adopting.

Lay delegation—A. Pauley, A. D. Amos, S. Overstreet, James Sharp, Geo. Wheatley, John Birch, neg. 6. John Eubank, L. Basye, E. Jeans, affirmative, 3. There not being a majority of the lay delegation in favor, the resolution was, of course, lost.

The following resolution was offered and disposed of in a similar manner, viz:

Resolved, That this conference make the same terms for the admission and government of all members in our church, within the bounds of this District, without distinction of colors:

Yeas. Ministers—12. Nays, 1.
Yeas. Lay delegation—4. Nays, 6.

On motion,

Resolved, That each circuit and station, within this conference District, be authorized to elect one lay-representative for each minister of conference, that is not otherwise represented,—adopted.

Resolved, That the thanks of this conference be presented to Br. A. H. Bassett, for his liberality, in presenting to it a neat and suitable book for its records; and for his kindness in providing parchments for its accommodation.

Report of the Financial Committee, together with that of the Conference Steward.

CIRCUITS.	PREACHERS.	SALARY.	REC'D PT.	DEFICIT	DIVID'D
Richwood,	James Betson,	900 00	45 61	154 39	914
Lawrenceburgh,	Jos. Simpson,	206 00	206 00
Wabash,	R. G. H. Hanna,	900 00	no claim
Charlestown,	A. H. Bassett,	900 00	68 75	131 25	914
White river,	E. K. M'Masters	100 00	52 00	48 00	914
Sugar creek,	Robt. Dauthart,	44 44	44 44
Madison,	Elijah Collins,	200 00	80 00
Spencer.	Jas. Edmonston,	300 00	36 50	120 00	914
Blue river,	no report,			263 50	914
Tippecanoe mission,	"
Wea,
Driftwood,
Individual expense of conference 43¾ cent.

On motion,

Resolved, That the thanks of this conference be tendered to the brethren and citizens of this place and vicinity, for the liberal manner in which they have sustained the members during its session.

The time of holding the next Annual Conference for this District, is fixed for the first Thursday in October, 1841, at White river Meeting House, Johnson county, Indiana.

After a busy and interesting session of five days, conference adjourned to the time and place above specified. Thus ended the first session of the Indiana Conference, and we are gratified to be able to say that, though composed of members who, to considerable extent, were strangers to each other, it was characterized throughout by christian forbearance and brotherly love, and the brethren parted with tears of sincere affection. One circumstance rendered the occasion one of deeper interest, which we had almost forgotten to mention, and that was a camp meeting which the brethren had gotten up, in order that they might enjoy the labors of the ministerial members of conference, and have a time of general refreshing from the presence of the Lord.—We hope they were not disappointed. We believe that the labors of the brethren were not in vain.

The secretary being one of the publishing committee, feels that some apology may be necessary for the delay that has occurred in the publication of the Minutes, and hopes that the brethren will pardon his seeming neglect, when they are informed that he was unexpectedly detained more than two weeks, after the adjournment of conference, on his way home, and that during that time, was so much engaged as to prevent the preparation and forwarding of the Minutes.

H. P. Bennett, } Pub. Committee.
Thos. Hicklin, }

AGRICULTURAL

Work for the Season.—There no part of the year in which the f should be idle. Improvemenis ab farm might be endless, and yet them important, Fences should be ed and new ones made where ne and the corners of all well cleaned o is now the most favorable season f roofing houses and putting on new Stables, barns, sheds, and corn h should be put in order, and new reared when needed. He who ne having houses and shelters for his h cattle, sheep and even hogs for w may expect to sustain loss from po and disease, through winter and sp It is an established point, that stoc keep fat on much less food housed, if left exposed to the winter snows. deed I should have said it is impos to keep stock in fine health and cond without protection from the hard w er. Much less food too is required, animals are regularly fed watered attended.—Kentucky Farmer.

Seed Corn.—We take this oppor nity—so as to be in season—to re our agricultural friends that if would have the best seed corn and prove their kind for another year, must not neglect to select the earliest fairest ears this fall, and preserve t carefully for seed. They may be g ered by the hand from the field as soo the husks turn white, and should be ced and hung up where the air will culate freely all winter, and where rats and mice will not reach them. all fields some ears are earlier than ers. The earliest selected for seed, insure a field nearly the whole of w will be ripe as early next year as ears you gather out for seed this sea If you allow the later ears to be ta for seed, you will find a late crop i fall. The surest way therefore is t careful in selecting the seed; for it universal law of nature that "like be its like.—Maine Cultivator.

Boston and St. Louis.—The west people generally, are not probably ware that the great enterprise of conn ing St. Louis with Boston, by a chai railroads, is going forward with the p pects of speedy accomplishment, whole line of the road is already char ed. The distance from St. Louis, to B ton is about twelve hundred and seven five miles. Of this will be comple next year from Boston to Buffalo, 1 hundred and thirty-five miles—in O on the shore of Lake Erie, sixty-th miles—in Michigan near the south li sixty-five miles—total six-hundred sixty-three miles—more than half whole distance; and embracing two thi of the whole expense. The works in west are for the present suspended the want of funds but it is expected t operations will be resumed at an ea date. Here is enterprise exhibited o grand scale, as the wildest fancy co have imagined. Ten years ago, a pl to connect Boston with St. Louis wo have been regarded as visionary as scheme to brige the Atlantic ocean. E a few years will witness the acomplis ment of the project, and the extention the road, perhaps many miles westwa Wheeling Gazette.

Magnificent Conservatory at Chatsworth, the seat of the duke of Devonshi —One of the most magneficent structur erected by the Duke of Devonshire, his beautiful residence, at Chatsworth. consists of a large tropical conservator In general design, it may be compared cathedral, centre aisle and side aisle The entrance will be at the ends throug porches which will be treated as gree houses. When the whole is complete it will cover an acre and a quarter ground. There will be a carriage wa through it, which will form part of a ge eral drive through the pleasure ground It will be heated by six fires, all which, and the means of access to then the places for fuel, &c., will be unde ground, and the chimneys carried in tunnel up to the side of a hill, to the di tance of nearly a furlong, so that ther will not be the slightest appearance artificial heating, or smoke or sheds, &c either within the house or exterior of i The conservatory is situated in an ope part of a lofty wood, in nearly the centr of the pleasure grounds, and is unques tionably the largest structure of the kin in existence, or on record. The whol is under the direction of Mr. Paxon, b whom it was designated, It was, prob ably nearly or quite finished the past fall Gardener's Magazine.

New and Cheap Goods.

POTTS & GRAHAM, are now enabled b a fresh arrival of FALL and WINTE GOODS, to offer to the public a very genera assortment of all articles in their line. Thei stock is almost ENTIRELY NEW, and embraces complete supply of DRY GOODS, GROCE RIES, QUEENSWARE, HARDWARE, &c All of which they will sell upon such terms, an conduct their business throughout upon suc principles, as cannot fail to afford permanen satisfaction to all who may favor them with thei custom.

☞Most kinds of country produce, including any quantity of new Butter, will be taken in exchange for goods.

Putnam, Ohio, Nov. 4. 63tf

THE WESTERN RECORDER.

J. SPRINGER, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.
TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM IN ADVANCE.

Vol. 2.--No. 14. ZANESVILLE, OHIO, WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 25, 1840. Whole No. 66.

JOHN W. WHITE, PRINTER.
$2.50, IN THREE MONTHS; $3, END OF YEAR

MISCELLANEOUS.

om the Philadelphia Casket, for September.

THE LAST OF THE PEQUOTS.

ALE OF THE EARLY SETTLEMENTS.

eaders!—I tell a tale of days and rs long gone by. Since the events e related transpired, more than two dred times has this rolling, evermov- sphere performed its annual circuit nd the sun in yonder heavens. Near- wo centuries have elapsed, since the rs in these scenes have passed to their account. But time, instead of lessen-, increases the interest which hangs ut every incident connected with our ion's history, with the rise and im- vement of this now vast and mighty ire, that stands among the nations less proud than the proudest of them

And as I go back into the dim and dowy past, and bring up before my d things well nigh forgotten by the y crowd of men, it seems as if memory s at work—as if I were but recollecting nes which my own eyes have witness- years ago, and which now come up ore me like the transactions of child- od. Go back with me then, for a little iod, to the day when the spot where the utiful village church now stands, with spires threatening the stars, was but site of an Indian wigwam;—when the v large and thickly populated town s a dense forest; when the Red Man, all his native pride, was lord of these r fields, which now yield to your labors abundant harvest. My narrative is ple—and my object is to illustrate, as ll as I am able, the character of that ured race: and, if I succeed in exciting your breast a single feeling of sympa- , a single sentiment of kindness toward se who, though Indians, were yet our low-creatures, I shall not have spent r time in vain.

CHAPTER I.

There is a pleasure in the pathless woods.
There is a rapture on the lonely shore,
There is society where none intrudes,
By the deep sea, and music in its roar:
I love not man the less, but nature more.
Childe Harold.

who hath loved not, here would learn that love, d make his heart a spirit; he who knows at tender mystery, will love the more, r this is Love's recess.—Ib.

In the south-western part of Connecti- t, about two miles to the north of where e pleasant town of Fairfield now stands a granite rock, which is the termina- n of a ridge of the same substance— d which I shall designate by the title nich it has owned for a century past. is called "Samp Mortar Rock," from e circumstances of its having on its top n excavation in the form of a mortar, d of sufficient dimensions to contain ward of half a bushel of corn or other ain. The tradition is that it was used the native Indians, for the purpose of unding their corn." This rock on e south forms a precipice thirty feet gh, and seems like a barrier of nature's vn hand work, placed there to protect e lovely valley at its foot from the chill rthern blast. At the time when the enes which we are about to relate were ansacted, this valley was the site of a nall Indian village and burying ground -some faint traces of which are to this y visible. It is indeed a lovely spot— d he who now looks upon it, with the owledge of what it has been, cannot t admire the choice of those rude chil- en of the forest in selecting that spot r their dwelling place; even while he ushes to think of the rapacity and cru- ty of his own civilized race, which, with on hand, and unrelenting heart, wrested om its rightful proprietors the very soil n which he stands.

A small tribe of Mohegans inhabited his place; numbering perhaps fifty war- iors. Their chief was Oneeto, brave nd generous. He had but one child—a aughter, and at the period of our tale, she as just at the age when the slender and irlish form gives way to the roundness f maturer years; and while hers became ar more beautiful by the change, it lost one of its activity and fairy-like light- ess. Her flowing locks were glossy s the raven's wing, and when wreathed ith wild flowers gathered from the rock which overhung her father's wigwam, she ight have gone forth among her sex and ot found her superior in beauty, either in he drawing rooms of princes—or even in he far-famed harems of eastern lands.— Her beauty was that of nature, and there- ore perfect, and all the decorations to which art resorts to increase this much de- ired and highly esteemed quality, would ave been employed on her in vain.— Who would enhance the beauty of the ummer cloud, when the setting sun pours pon it a flood of golden and purple light? Who would heighten the beauty of the alm lake--embosomed in the depths of he forest; when the clear, full moon makes its surface silver? Who would mprove Niagara's foaming waters? Or Vesuvius—with its top in mid air, spout- ing forth rolling clouds of smoke and riv- ers of liquid fire? Nature in her simpli- city is far more beautiful than art; so the beauty of Tahmoore, from the very cir- cumstance that all effort to improve was absent, shone with the greater splendor.

She was the object of admiration of all the youg men of her tribe; and even those braves, who, full of ambition and warlike schemes, were indifferent to the other maidens, could not withstand her charms. Oneeto was proud of his daughter; and when many a bold warrior solicited of him her hand, he always referred the matter to herself, with full liberty to act at her own pleasure in accepting or re- jecting the petition. Hitherto her heart had been, or appeared to have been, un- touched; and much wonder had she caused among the maidens by rejecting so many suitors, to have been permitted to become the inmate of whose lodge, they would have considered as an honor not lightly to be esteemed. There was doubtless a cause for all this; and when it is disclosed if her own people wondered, my readers will not, at the apparent insensibility of Tahmoore's heart.

About two miles south of the village of Unquowa, which we have described above in the bosom of the forest, a single pio- neer had made a clearing and constructed a dwelling. This man's name was Har- wood. He had been a gentleman of some note in England, but having met with dis- appointments, and been deceived by pro- fessed friends, he became sick of the world, and sought to escape its perplexi- ties and its cares, in the wilds of America. As soon, therefore, as he had landed on the shores of the western continent, he proceeded in search of a spot favorable for agricultural, and which would not be likely to be soon encroached upon by other settlers. Pleased with the strong fertile soil of the plains adjacent to Long Island Sound, he purchased of the natives the tract, in the centre of which stood his house. Always attending to his own bus- iness; strictly honorable and upright in his dealings with the Indians; he had nev- er incurred any of those molestations, which were sure to trouble those, who sought by fraud to deprive the Aborigi- nes, of the lands and rights they had in- herited from their ancestors. So far from that indeed, he had interchanged many kind offices with them, always re- ceiving ample recompense. for any little favor he might have conferred.

It is a well known trait of the character of the North American Indian—that he never forgets a kindness or forgives an injury:—certain it is, that Mr. Harwood never had reason to repent of his con- duct toward them as kindness thrown away.

His family consisted of his wife and several sons, of whom the eldest, George, was now twenty years of age. He had been well educated, was possessed of an amiable disposition; and a mind rather a- bove the ordinary level. In person, he was tall; well formed, of great muscular strength, and remarkably active. Hun- ting was his pastime; and like Jugurtha. "he was the first, or among the first, to strike" the wolf, or bear, or whatever beast of the forest chanced to cross his path.

One day—soon after their settlement here he went out as usual with his rifle in his hand, attended only by his dog—a powerful mastiff brought with him from the old world. His search for game had been fruitless, till suddenly a piercing shriek, as of some one in distress rung upon his ear. He hastened in the direc- tion whence the sound proceeded; and soon reached the spot. Here he beheld a scene which made his pulse throb more quickly, and which at once roused all his energies. It was a lovely spot; a small green glade surrounded on three sides by tall craggy rocks, through the crevices of which sprang huge oaks and chesnuts, and all varieties of forest. From one of the rocks, gushed a small stream of pure water flowing through the opposite open- ing of the glade, and gurgling music as it ran. But all this was, for the present, unseen by our huntsman; his attention was absorbed by objects of deeper inter- est. On the ground lay a huge panther, with its heart transfixed with an arrow, and writhing in the agonies of death.— On a tree a few feet distant was another still larger, and just preparing to spring upon its prey. A short distance from the foot of the tree stood a young Indian girl, with her arms folded upon her breast which heaved with the excitement. She stood as if knowing escape to be impossi- ble; and as if determined to meet her fate in a becoming manner, even though there was no eye to witness it.

But there was one eye that saw it; the eye of one who well knew how to appre- ciate the moral sublimity of the scene. It was, indeed, the height of sublimity to see that girl— hardly yet old enough to be called woman; stand thus; despising fear; with eyes fixed upon that fierce beast with calmness that would not disgrace the boldest warrior of her tribe. She looked like Ajax, defying the lightnings of heaven! Her attitude was one of per- fect grace, and as George Harwoud gaz- ed for the first time, upon that form; upon the intellectual beauty of that face;—as he admired the firmness and resolution of soul, which could uphold her at such a moment, he felt that he had no longer a heart that he might call his own. But her deliverance from danger was first to be thought of—and, with the quickness of thought, his rifle was at his shoulder; his eye glanced along the barrel; and the ball sped on its errand. But it was a moment too late; at the instant the animal sprang: and the shot served only to exasperate the before sufficiently ferocious beast.— As he struck the ground, he was met by the gallant dog, and a terrific contest im- mediately ensued. The combatants were nearly equal in size, and apparently in strength. The forest rung with their cries The panther repeatedly bounded into the air, and attempted to alight upon the back of his adversary, and was as of- ten repulsed. Their eyes looked like balls of fire, and their jaws were soon red with each others blood. It seemed doubtful on which side the victory would turn, and perhaps both would have died upon the spot, had no person been there to decide the contest. George had reloaded his ri- fle as soon as possible, and at a moment when both were locked together on the ground, he boldly advanced, and placing the muzzle of his piece close to the pan- ther's head, put an end to the bloody scene. The brave dog was badly torn, but with the care which his master be- stowed on him, as the preserver of his life. and probably of another's too, he recov- ered from his injuries.

As soon as the panther was dead, the girl fell at Harwood's feet and thanked him for her rescue. She spoke in En- glish, and he was much surprised at this. He thought too that he had never before heard any voice so strangely musical.— Her tones; deepened by the excitement of the scene she had just witnessed: and by the real gratitude she felt toward her deliverer; fell upon his ear as the most perfect harmony,—and if any thing had been wanting to complete the conquest she had unconsciously made over his spir- it; it was amply supplied by the music of that voice; and by the ease and grace- fulness, yet dignity, and sincerity of the manner in which she thanked him for her life.

When she had done this she turned to depart, but George caught her by the hand, saying, "Will not the beautiful mai- den tell me her name that I may again see her?"

"My name is Tahmoore," said she— "and I am the daughter of Oneeto."

"Nay, then," answered George, "may I not even now accompany her to the tent of her father. I am the friend of her people, and they will be glad to see the young eagle, as they call me, and will welcome me to their wigwams."

Tahmoore's eyes kindled as he spoke, and he inferred that she was by no means displeased with his proposition. On the way to the village, he could not sufficient- ly admire the modesty and artlessness of her manner. She told him that Uncas, who was a relative of her father, and well acquainted with the English, had of- ten visited them, and had taught her the language of the white men. He had told her, that the English used things which they called books, which told them many strange things. And then she regretted that, although the daughter of a chief— she was nothing but a poor Indian girl— and could never hope to be like the wo- men of his race, whom she had heard were all beautiful. And then she told that she often went out alone, for she loved to gaze upon the wild woods—and the hang- ing crags—and the dashing torrent —and then she loved and worshipped the Great Spirit who made all these beautiful things. But she had heard that the white people worshipped another spirit—and she ask- ed George to tell her something about that being;—and then she described her meeting with the panthers. She had been out with her bow and arrows to shoot birds to obtain feathers, with which to deck her hair—and on returning home she was surprised by the fierce beasts. To fix her last arrow on her string was but the work of a moment—the next, and the winged shaft whizzed through the air, and the monster fell dead with his death wound. From him had come the shriek, so near- ly human, which had called George to her rescue. Then she felt that she must die—but she felt conscious that she should go to places still more lovely than any that were here—where there were no wild beasts—and where every thing would be good and happy. As George listened to her simple story, he thought how noble a task it would be to raise such a pure and lofty mind from ignorance, and to teach and to assist to it fathom the deep things of nature, and of God; and he felt convinced, as he conversed with her on the pure enjoyment to be derived from the attainment of that knowledge of which she had spoken, that she might easily become well qualified to adorn any station in life to which it might be in his power to raise her.

They had now reached the village, and as he had predicted, every one was ready to welcome him—and to urge upon him the hospitalities of their rude dwellings. But when, declining them all, though in such a manner as not to give offence, he proceeded directly to the tent of Oneeto, and Tahmoore related to her father what had taken place, in her own wild language —and impressive manner; when Oneeto, with sincere joy and gratitude depicted on his countenance, grasped his hand, and thanked him for his kindness, in rescuing his only and beloved daughter from a cruel death, he felt that he should be proud to own such a man for his father, and that his happiness depended upon a single point,—whether he might gain the pure being before him for his bride. He had then and there learned, what many in our days seem not to be aware of— that under a rude and unprepossessing ex- terior, may exist the finest qualities that ever dwelt in the human heart.

Days rolled on, and as they rolled, each succeeding one found George Harwood in company with the Indian girl;—either rambling through the glades of the green forest—or climbing the craggy heights —or angling in the mountain stream—or yet under the shade of some majestic oak, where he read to her from some favorite book. And ever anon her rich clear voice would break out into some of those wild strains which characterise the songs of her race—and as the echoes of that voice came back from the depths of the forest, and from the hill side, it seemed as if some instrument was there, touched by a fairy hand which sent forth those strains of witching melody. And ere many weeks had passed she too had learned to read— to commune with the spirits of those who had lived and written centuries before.— She had learned to admire the rich strains of poesy and song—she had begun to climb the hill of science—and as she mounted step by step, towards its summit, her character acquired new energy— faculties which before had lain dormant were roused into action—and her whole soul was gradually elevated from that state of ignorance in which the man is but a step above the brute—to a well deserved rank among the choice spirits of the earth. And when the book of books was placed in her hand, and the light of revelation poured in upon her soul, and her mind led to aspire after pleasures higher and bright- er than this world can afford, it was like placing yon orb in the heavens, which freed the earth from the darkness and gloom of chaos, and imparted to its sur- face that vivifying principle that causes it to bring forth those beautiful things which our eyes behold—clothed in a garb of green—emblematic of those joys, ever fresh, and ever new, reserved for "the spirits of the just made perfect," in the bright mansion above.

Two years passed in this manner, and George Harwood had found no reason to repent of his determination to make Tah- moore his wife. From his father he ex- perienced no opposition to his wishes.— Mr. Harwood was one who had too often witnessed the dreadful effects of com- pelling the young to wed where their af- fections were not centered; and he had often regretted the infatuation of parents who would exercise their authority in bringing about such a result. And, per- haps, treated as he had been by the world, he felt more real respect and esteem for those unsophisticated savages, than for the great mass of the civilized world.

George was now looking anxiously for- ward to the consummation of his hopes and happiness. A few weeks more, and he might call the object of his love his own. But what all this time was the state of Tahmoore's heart? Of course, she es- teemed him who had saved her life—of course she respected him who had led her in the path of knowledge; and of course, then, I might say, she loved such a man for his own sake; for respect and esteem are but the road to love, and it is a difficult task for a tender maiden to shield her heart from all the arrows of the "rosy god," while constantly in the presence of a youth whom she respects. Such was the case with Tahmoore, and her warm heart lavished on the object of her affec- tions a rich tide of gushing love. Her whole soul—her very being was wrapped up in him—and she too was anticipating the day when she might prove to him that his kindness to her would not go without its reward. Here, for the present, I must leave them while I introduce to the reader new characters and new scenes.

CHAPTER II.

Amid a circling marsh, expanded wide,
To a lone hill the Pequots wound their way;
And none, but Heaven, the mansion had descried,
Close—tangled, wild, impervious to the day.
Dr. Dwight.

Fearfully the yell arose,
Of his followers and his foes;
These in joy, in fury those.
Seige of Corinth.

The particulars of the great victory gained at Fort Mystic, in May, 1637, by Capt Mason and his men, over the Pe- quots, headed by Sassacus, the most pow- erful prince in all New England, are well known. In that bloody scene, seve- ral hundred warriors with a multitude of women and children, perished by the muskets of the English soldiery, or by the flames of their burning dwellings. That was the death blow to the Red Man's hopes. The very flower of the boldest nation in New England was cut off. Sassacus with the small party of warriors which he had remaining, aban- doned his country, and removed by de- grees toward the west.

About three miles, in a south-westerly direction from Samp Morter, and the village of Unquowa, which was described at the commencement of our story, was the great swamp of the Sasco. This marsh is several miles in extent, and is rendered nearly impenetrable by the thick growth of small trees and under- wood with which it is covered. It stands there now as it stood then. a gloomy, dis- mal swamp—and no attempts have been made to render it fit for cultivation, with the exception of here and there a small spot along its margin. Here the proud, and warlike and once powerful chief Sas- sacus, with his little band took refuge. Here they were compelled to secret them- selves, in order to escape the general destruction of their nation; and here they might have remained without fear or dis- covery, had it not been for the untamed passions of the haughty prince.

It chanced one day that Sassacus him- self had cautiously left the swamp toward evening, for the purpose of gaining a supply of food; and had somehow found his way to the very spot where George Harwood had rescued Tahmoore from death. The girl was there now, seated upon a mossy stone, listening to the mus- ic of the wind as it played through the branches, or musing, perhaps, on the ve- ry circumstances which had made that place a sacred one to her. There she had first seen him who was now the dearest object of her love. There he had saved her life—there she had often sat with him while he instructed her in things that were yet wonderful—there her soul had burst, one by one, the bands of ignorance and had gradually freed itself from the deep darkness in which it had been en- shrouded. There she had first been made acquainted with that Glorious Be- ing, whose works she had so often ad- mired. Ah! she was in greater danger as she sat there now, though all uncon- scious of it, than when she stood await- ing the spring of the fierce beast, who was to tear her limb from limb! Now, as then, human eyes were gazing,—now, as then, her beauty excited the energies of a strong nature—but unlike him who had there seen her—and had proved her best friend,—he who now stood spell-bound to the spot, was to be her bitter enemy— and, for a short time at least, to dash from her hand the cup of joy—and leave but the bitterness of disappointment. It was Sassacus, the Pequot Prince. In a mo- ment, the fact that he had been defeated in battle—driven from his country—that he was now an exile—compelled to hide himself in the recesses of a dismal swamp —all were forgotten. He thought of noth- ing—saw nothing but the beauty of the fairy creature before him. His prudence —his caution—the craftiness of his nature —seemed to desert him—so powerful was the impression which the sight of the loveliest flower of the Mohegan nation wrought upon his stern and energetic soul. Whilst he stood—lost in admiration—he uttered an involuntary exclamation of surprise. Tahmoore started at the voice and would have fled, but he sprang for- ward and caught her by the hand; and there he told her of the passion she had excited in his breast. He told her that the pale faces had burned his wigwam— and that his wife and children had all perished in the flames. And then he be- sought her to become his bride. And he who had disdained to stoop to the proud- est chiefs around him—was now a humble suiter at the feet of a simple girl. He sued in vain. Her heart was faithful to its trust; and with a firm voice she replied:

"Tahmoore must not listen to the voice of the great chief—she must not love him —she will be his friend—but she can never live with him in his tent."

"Sassacus is a king," answered the chief—"and the young fawn knows not what she does when she refuses to be- come his bride."

"Nay, nay," said the girl, with kin- dling eyes, "it must not be—for Tah- moore loves another."

"Hah! And who will dare to love the maiden that Sassacus has set his heart upon? Who shall stand before the great chief when he is angry?"

And the fierce savage clutched his knife and glared around as if for some object on which to vent his rage. At that mo- ment young Harwood—accompanied by Onceto, and by his dog, came in sight and the terrified girl sprang into her lov- er's arms. Sassacus cast upon them one look of vengeance, and darted through the forest muttering revenge.

The next day Tahmoore sat upon the Morter Rock pounding corn for the even- ing meal. Her merry voice rang upon the clear air—her soul was glad—her heart beat high with hope. The day had been fixed which was to bind her fate with that of the only one she ever loved, and in the anticipation of that happiness, the occurrence of the preced- ing day and the threats of Sassacus were nearly forgotten. At that very moment, while no care oppressed her mind, those were near who would not scruple to ruin forever her happiness, and to blast her affections ere they had fully blossomed.

Through the small bushes that covered the entire ridge, except that part of the rock where Tahmore sat, crept the ath- letic form of a tawny savage—while two others stood guarding the only way of access to the summit of the rock. Silent was his progress. He seemed intent on reaching, unperceived, the spot where the unsuspecting girl still sat engaged in her employment. But at the moment, when he had reached the edge of the brushwood—a large eagle came sailing majestically through the air, and as Tah- moore turned her head to watch its flight, the form of Sassacus caught her eye— and at once revealed her danger. Resis- tance was in vain—to escape seemed im- possible—and there appeared to be but one alternative,—to fall into the power of her enemy—or to die. It were almost needless to tell which she preferred.— With one bound she was at the edge of the precipice—the next moment she stood at the bottom unharmed! The tall thick grass at the base of the rock had preserv- ed her from injury.—and once more the frantic chief was cheated of his prey.

A week after the above occurrence, Tahmoore was sitting in the door of her father's hut. Nearly all the warriors of her tribe were absent on a great hunting expedition, and were not expected to re- turn for several days. Her eyes were strained anxiously toward the south—her betrothed had promised to visit her that day—it now lacked but one hour of sun- set, and she had not yet seen him. She had placed herself there that she might catch the first glimpse of his form emer- ging from the forest. She felt sad: some presentiment of evil shed its influence over her—and she sat in silence. The hour passed, and yet he came not; the shades of evening began to thicken a- round, yet no tidings of her lover. But in his stead came one with a triumphant smile upon his lip; and in an exulting tone, once more demanded Tahmoore as his bride; and when she returned the same answer as before—the certainty of revenge—the knowledge that he had it now in his power to bend that unyielding spirit, made him look like the wolf, while he stands parleying with the lamb—glut- ting his greedy eyes upon the tempting sight, as certain of feasting on his flesh, as if he already had him in his ravenous jaws. The tall form of the chief drew up—and a cold, malignant smile played upon his features as he said,

"The pale face whom Tahmoore loves is my prisoner! If ere to-morrow's sun- set she yields not to my wishes, I will tear out his heart and roast it for my food!— In the great swamp of the Sasco he is guarded by trusty warriors. Let the maiden come there, and by consenting to be my bride, free the white man from my grasp—if not I have told her what I will do. Sassacus will sue no more!" And with that he disappeared as suddenly as he had made his entrance.

About fifteen miles to the east from Un- quoway lay the army of the English, then commanded by Capt. Stoughton, of Massachusetts. About midnight, a light form was seen approaching the encamp- ment; and in reply to the challenge of the sentinel, a soft voice enquired for the commander—urging important intelli- gence as a reason for seeing him at that untimely hour. She—for it was a fe- male—was admitted to his tent, and at once proceeded to inform him that the remnant of the tribe of Pequots was con- cealed in the Sasco Swamp—that they held a white man their prisoner—and that if he was not released the following day—that day would be his last.

The next sunrise saw that army sur- rounding the marsh, which from that day has been called The swamp of the Pequots. All was silent as the grave— and many a soldier began to wonder at the credulity of their commander in trus- ting to the tale of an unknown Indian girl. Not a Pequot was seen—but pres- ently from a small eminence in the cen- tre of the swamp—a small, thin column of blue smoke curled upward to the clouds. Half an hour—and, mingling with the roar of musketry—and the clash of swords, and knives and toma hawks—were heard the shouts of men, and the yells of savages—and the groans of the wounded and the dying. In the centre of the conflict, freed and armed by a soldier, was George Harwood, fight- ing hand to hand with the Pequot king.

Few of the tribe survived that bloody day. Sassacus himself escaped with twenty of his most hardy men, and fled into the country of the Mohawks and perished by their treacherous hands. Such was the fate, and such the melan- choly end of the last of the Pequots.

A few months since, as I was riding through a beautiful village of Connecti- cut, my eye rested upon a large and commodious mansion in its centre. A group of children were sporting in the yard, and the striking resemblance which some of them bore to a countenance I well remembered, caused me to stop and inquire their name. It was Harwood. I immediately dismounted, and was soon welcomed by my old friend George Har- wood. We had formerly been very inti- mate—but he never told me the history of his family. And as he related to me the incidents of the preceding narrative during the evening—I was no longer at a loss to account for the dark and peculi- ar shade of his complexion—his fiery eye—and the strong energy of his nature. I saw before me the descendants of the identical George Harwood of my story, and Tahmoore the Indian girl; and easi- ly could my imagination picture her form and beauty to my mind, as I looked at the rosy daughters of my friend. The next morning we visited the rock only a few miles distant, which forms an important, feature in our tale. Her people had com- memorated the noble deed of the heroic girl, who preserved her honor and her happiness—and the happiness of her be- trothed, by springing from its summit. The rude hieroglyphics which described the event are still visible, and most pro- bably will be—till the frail body of the last son of Adam shall have mouldered back to dust.

D. M. E.

Unionville, Mass., August 29, 1840.

Have you received my letter containing the note
W. L. Clark

WESTERN RECORDER.

ZANESVILLE:

WEDNESDAY, ... NOVEMBER 25, 1840.

From the New York American.

JUNIUS FOR THE LAST TIME.

I read in the American, a few days since, the following article, extracted from an English paper:—

"A grandson of the late Sir Philip Francis, and his widow, Lady Francis, are each of them said to be preparing a life of that accomplished statesman, in which the identity of the author of Junius's Letters will undoubtedly be established. The box, or trunk, so frequently alluded to in the investigation of this subject, and which was always reported to contain undoubted testimony of this author's name has, we are told, been discovered by the grandson of Sir Philip Francis."

It is singular that the box, or parcel, containing the secret of the authorship of Junius, which was found over twelve years ago, should now be re-discovered by the grandson of Sir Philip Francis.

The simple history of the discovery is that, in October, 1827, as Lord Nugent, and the Duke of Buckingham, the grandson of Mr. Geo. Grenville, were examining the library of the latter, which had descended to the Duke, they lit upon a parcel studiously concealed in an, to them, unknown recess. The parcel contained three letters: one from Junius, under his fictitious signature; another signed with his real name; and a third with the author's initials—all in the same handwriting.

This parcel was immediately shown to Lord Grenville, the brother of G. Grenville, who at once recognized it, and declared his intention of providing for the publicity of the documents after his death, but not till then. At his request, the Duke and Lord Nugent have pledged themselves to silence till that event shall have taken place. It has been since mentioned in English papers, that these documents are deposited in a case sealed up, in the possession of the Duke of Buckingham.

Lord Grenville has been dead some two or three years, and it is believed that Mr. Woodfall, the publisher of Junius's Letters, under an impression that the sale of the work would be diminished were the author known, has prevailed with the aforesaid gentlemen to withhold their information till his copy-right should expire, which took place on the 15th of last month. It is therefore highly probable that the long sought for secret will be divulged. But Mr. Francis and his grandmother will be wofully disappointed, if they expect to find the name of Philip Francis appended to the above mentioned letters. John Horne Tooke was the author of Junius's Letters. J. F.

The following is what the biographer says about Horne Tooke:

"John Horne Tooke, a politician and philologist, who for many years was known by his family name of Horne, was born, in 1736, in Westminster; was educated at Westminster and Eton schools, and St. John's College, Cambridge; and in 1760 was inducted to the chapelry of New Brentford. The clerical profession, however, was little suited to his habits and feelings, and he took an active part in politics. The cause of Wilkes he warmly espoused for a considerable time, but at length they became enemies. In 1771 he was attacked by Junius, but he defended himself with spirit and success against that formidable writer. Resigning his living at Brentford, he studied law at the Temple, but his ecclesiastical character proved an obstacle to his being admitted at the bar. In 1775 he was sentenced to imprisonment on a charge of having libelled the king's troops in America. Out of this circumstance arose his Letter to Dunning, which formed the basis of his subsequent philological work, The Diversions of Purley, published in 1786. In 1790, and 1796, he stood, ineffectually, as candidate for Westminster; and in 1794 he was one of the persons who were tried at the Old Bailey, and acquitted, on a charge of treason. In 1801 he was returned to parliament for Old Sarum; but he sat only during that session, a bill being passed to prevent individuals in orders from sitting in future. He died, March 19, 1812."

So, if HORNE TOOKE was JUNIUS, he must, to save appearances, have warred with himself.

This affair of Junius is, probably, one of the most singular occurrences that has ever happened in the course of political events. His political essays produced a tremendous excitement throughout England, shook the king upon his throne, and ultimately changed the ministry.—And notwithstanding every expedient was put in requisition at the time, and volumes have since been written, to ascertain who he was, yet his secret, to this day, remains with himself. If any person have a desire to look into this curiosity, let him examine Woodfall's edition of Junius's Letters.

GIVE TO THE POOR.

CASES OF ALMOST UNPARALLELED DISTRESS.

That it is one of the all-wise designs of Providence that he who has in abundance shall bestow upon those who have not, every mind must at once acknowledge, on looking upon the mysterious differences which the condition of people exhibit in this world. The season has now arrived when there is called for an unrestrained exercise of this benevolent principle. In our large cities especially, the labor of women is so poorly paid, that this class presents distinct claims upon the attention of those who have the wherewith to bestow.

In this connection, we wish to call attention to the following touching report of the cellar-residents of Liverpool—and although we do not think any of the cities of this country could present so sad a picture, yet misery and distress exist in all our large towns, enough to melt the stoutest hearts, if they will but turn aside from the daily absorbtions of business, to look after the needy and the deserving.

The Rev. Mr. Johns is employed in the Domestic Mission of Liverpool, i. e. looking after and dispensing charities to the poor, a similar service which that most worthy friend of the poor, the Rev. Mr. Allen, is daily engaged in here. Mr. Johns, describing his visits to the cellar-residents of Liverpool, says—"I have seen, what had I not seen it, I could not have imagined. I have seen life under forms which took from it all that, in my eyes, made it happy, hopeful, or even human. I have seen life under forms which made it necessary for me to rouse up all the strength of my previous reasoning and convictions, in order to convince myself that these were really fellow-beings, going through a preparatory state of discipline, which under the eye of an all-powerful and purely benevolent Providence, was to prepare them for 'an exceeding and eternal weight of glory.' I am willing to believe, that the sufferings of these unfortunate beings are unknown in the classes of society above them. Few could have seen the scenes which have passed under my eyes, without feeling that the time was indeed arrived, when man should go forth to the relief of his brother. Mothers, newly become such, with scarcely a garment on their persons and with infants nearly naked, lying upon straw or shavings, under a miserable covering, without fire or food, or the means of procuring them; children taken from their schools in order to earn by begging, or by something but one degree above it, a few half-pence worth of bread for themselves and their parents; men in the prime of life, lounging at noonday across their beds, unable to procure work, and dependent upon the charity of their fellow-poor for subsistence; mothers of families only able to provide necessaries for their children by pawning their little all, or by incurring debts wherever they could be trusted; persons in fevers, whose recovery was prevented and whose weakness was prolonged, by the want of all that promotes convalescence; and infirm aged people, who were shivering out the last hours of life in absolute want of every thing that could sustain or endear it. These are some of the shapes and shades of suffering, under which it has been the lot of your missionary to see too often our fellow citizens and fellow creatures laboring, during the short period of his wanderings among them."—Phil. Cour.

THE WASHINGTON MONUMENT.—Now that the political fever has somewhat subsided, attention is awakened to the much-talked of monument. There have been exhibited at Independence Hall a great variety of models.

Mr. Ball Hughes presents one, which well sustains his high reputation. Washington has his hat in his hand, and is in the act of saluting the army.

Mr. Sandy Harris has a model of a massive arch, and his idea is to have the stones, of which it should be constructed, brought from every State in the Union.

Mr. Thomas McClelland has a design of a temple supported by thirteen pillars, emblematic of the original States of the Union.

There are several other models, by Mr. Strickland and others.

The committee, consisting of Col. Page, Col. C. G. Childs, and William Strickland, Esq., Architect, it is understood, will decide upon the model to be accepted, in the course of a week or two.

THE REMAINS OF NAPOLEON.—The expense of transporting the Emperor's remains from Courbevoie to the Hotel des Invalides is estimated at several million of francs. Immense preparations are on foot. The vessel carrying the coffin will arrive at Courbevoie. A triumphal arch will be erected to receive the imperial remains, and this ceremony will take place with the utmost pomp. The cortege will enter Paris by the Barriere de l' Etoile and the Chambs Elysees. Benches will be erected on the line of passage, right and left, and covered with magnificent draperies. In front of the Invalides, a new road will be opened to receive the procession, and for the purpose a number of trees will come down. To aid the perspective, a flying bridge will be constructed, and will afterwards be taken down. The immense Court of the Invalides will be entirely covered, and hung with velvet of a violet color (the characteristic hue of royal mourning,) and will likewise be transformed by the aid of a vast number of wax-lights into an enormous chapelle ardent. 24 white horses of an excellent breed have been imported from Germany, and by these the hearse will be drawn.

From Florida—Death of Lieutenant Graham.—The St. Augustine News of the 30th ult. has an account of a truly melancholy occurrence which took place at half past 2 o'clock, Thursday morning. The sentinels having discovered in two places, persons approaching, retreated to the house, within which the small force on the plantation were, and gave the alarm. Immediately Lieut. Brown, with his men, proceeded to reconnoitre, as well as four or five friends, who had offered to remain on the watch for upwards of 30 minutes, they discovered persons moving quickly up, the Sergeant fired, wounding Lieut. Graham, of the Dragoons, in the arm, and killing Sergeant Wolcott of his company. Lieut. Graham, it seems, was approaching with great caution, (he having, at Picolata, received an express informing him that Indians had been at the plantation,) and the fact of the alarm having taken place some time before, brought him in collision with the troops in charge, who were anticipating the approach of the enemy.

The Savannah Republican of the 5th, mentions a report received at that city that Lieut. Judd and four soldiers had been killed by the Indians, near St. Augustine.

Shipwreck and Loss of Life.—the Barnstable Patriot of the 6th, states that a schooner was seen entering the bay opposite that harbor, with a small piece of fore-sail set, about noon of the 5th, and directly after she capsized, she partially righted again, when four men were seen clinging to her sail, all of whom in the course of an hour were washed off by the sea, which was running very high at the time. She proved to be the Rodney, Libby, bound from Belfast to Boston, and owned by David Goddard and others.

From the United States Gazette.

STRABISMUS OR SQUINTING.—Dr. T. J. Crossman, on the 31st ult. performed at his Infirmary for the treatment of Diseases of the eye, corner of Seventh and Chestnut Streets, the very delicate and difficult operation of transfixing the contracted muscle of the orbit for the cure of Strabismus or Squinting, with perfect success, in presence of several eminent physicians of this city, and other gentlemen to their great gratification, and the patient's delight in being relieved from so disagreeable deformity. The celebrated Dr. Liston, Professor of Surgery in the London University has performed this NEW operation in a greater number of instances, and with more success than any other person. Out of eighty-six cases he has made a perfect cure of eighty-four within the last year, the other two being much improved. Dr. Crossman, on his last visit to Europe, witnessed the operation and management of twenty-one of them, and having the pleasure of a personal acquaintance with the Professor availed himself of all his improvements, and procured from him a case of his very ingeniously contrived instruments, which materially facilitates the operation, and without which it can rarely be performed with success.

It certainly must be gratifying to those suffering with this heretofore incurable misfortune, to learn that it can be remedied without the least damage to the eye, confinement or suffering to the patient.

W.

We saw the patient (Mr. Beatty) to whom our correspondent refers. He mentioned that his case was so bad that little or nothing of the pupil of his right eye was visible when he attempted to look at any object. After the operation, the eye, though inflamed, corresponded with his fellow in position.—U. S. Gaz.

Mr. Beatty is doing well. He called in the other day, highly gratified with the certainty that hereafter he can look straight with both his eyes.—Saturday Courier.

Shipwreck and Loss of Life.—The New Orleans Picayune of the 3d, notices the arrival at that port on the Sunday evening previous, of the brig Swan, from Philadelphia, which picked up at sea, in lat. 26 50, long. 77 30, a man named ———Brookfield, mate of schooner Delaware; he was clinging to the bottom of a boat, which was capsized, and when taken up was insensible. The schooner had foundered on the Saturday previous, and he had been on the beat until Monday afternoon. Three others, (one white and two blacks,) had fallen off the boat, exhausted, on the day before. The captain, two passengers, and two others of the crew, were picked up in about the same lat. and lon., by the ship Prentice, Capt. Hopkins, which had also arrived in New Orleans. They were in the long boat when the Prentice met them.

Novel Mode of Subscribing for a Periodical.—A new weekly periodical, to be called "The Repertory of Useful Knowledge," is about to be issued in Havana. Its terms of subscription are rather novel. It is to be published by the Savings Bank lately established there. The price of subscription is $6 per annum—two of which are deemed to be the actual cost of the work, and the remaining four dollars are to be disposited in the Bank to the credit of the subscriber, who is to receive 6 per cent. interest. It is calculated and announced to the public, that each subscriber can receive the work for twelve years, and have his 72 dollars in his pocket at the end of the term.

Counterfeiting.—Some time since a man named Isaac C. Baker, went to the office of Mr. Jones, in Nassau street, and got a bank note plate engraved without the name of the bank inserted, which he pretended was for a handsome promissory note. He then went to the office of Mr. Folger in Pearl street, and got another small plate engraved with the name of the Seneca County Bank, and the figures and words $20 thereto, intending to have the bills printed without the name of the bank or amount, and then to fill them up with the name and denomination. Officers Bowyer and G. F. Hays having obtained this information arrested Baker in Maiden Lane, and then proceeded to Newark, New Jersey, where he resided, and there found in his trunk another $3 plate, and also several hundred dollars in $3 bills not filled up or signed, in which the words Seneca County were inserted as we supposed. Baker was examined and committed to answer.—N. Y. paper.

Municipal Court.— Wm. R. Pelby, who made the brutal assault on Wm. B. English, editor and proprietor of the Boston Daily Herald, on the 26th of September last, was brought up for sentence on Wednesday. He plead guilty to the indictment at last term. He was sentenced to pay a fine of $20 and costs of prosecution and to give bonds in $200 to keep the peace for one year. Mr. E. intends to commence a civil prosecution against young Pelby.—Mer. Journal.

NO ACCOUNTING FOR TASTE.—A young lady in her 24th year and described to be of considerable personal attractions and high accomplishments, daughter of a gentleman of wealth and station in Herefordshire, Eng., recently eloped with her father's groom, an uneducated and very ordinary person, between forty and fifty years of age.

On the 29th ultimo, they had a snow-storm at Frankfort, Ky.

TRAGEDY IN REAL LIFE.

MURDER AND SUICIDE IN THE FOREST OF DEAN.

In the last Bristol (English) Mercury there is detailed one of the most horrible events, which it is our lot to present for a long time past. It occurred in the forest of Dean. It appears that a very respectable person, named Philip Willis, who has been for some years past a superintendent of one of the mines near Clearwell where the ore is raised for the iron works, was residing on his own property at a place called Claylane end, about two miles from Coleford. On Monday afternoon, he was with his wife and daughter, the latter about 18 years of age, drinking tea. He was much attached to them both, and particularly to the latter who was possessed of a very considable personal attractions, and of mind and manner superior to most of those in her situation in life. They had been conversing together on different subjects, and Anne (the daughter) got up, and went out of the house to bring in some wood from the yard adjoining, for the fire. —Just as she was leaving the room, she made some religious observation to her father and turned and kissed him.—almost immediately afterwards, Mr. Willis got up, and left the house, and in the course of a minute or two, Mrs. Willis was alarmed by the cries of her daughter, and hastening to the door, she saw her running towards the house covered with blood, and crying out, "My father is following me with the hatchet!" The father was close to the door with the hatchet in his hand, and with which he made a violent blow at his wife, but as the doorway was low, and from an injury formerly received, which prevented him from raising his arm to his head, the blow did not fully fall on her head, and she warded it off, the hatchet cutting her arm and wrist only. She then called loudly for assistance, and some men who were working close by ran to the house. Willis then put the hatchet on a low wall, in front of the house, and ran down into the orchard: the poor girl, who was bleeding copiously from a most horrid cut on the back part of her head, was then taken to an adjoining cottage by a neighbor, and placed on the bed, where in about an hour afterwards she died. The men had followed Mr. Willis into the orchard, and found him lying at the foot of a cherry tree, round which was thrown his right arm, and in his hand an open razor. He was quite dead. On raising him it was found to have nearly severed his head from his body. It is presumed that he had the razor in his pocket before the commencement of the murderous attack upon his wife and daughter as he did not go afterwards into the house. Mr. Marsh of Coleford attended the young woman in a few minutes after the occurrance; he found her sinking fast, and in a short time after his arrival she died. He found on examination that the axe had divided the large muscles of the neck, fracturing the skull and penetrating to the brain; the length of the wound was above eight inches. She was quite sensible when Mr. Marsh arrived and asked very kindly for her "dear father."

Arrest of a Murderer.—Among the loafers who were brought up before his Honor, Recorder Bertus, yesterday, was one who had been found drunk in the streets the preceding night. He gave his name as Philip Payne, and had in his pocket, when arrested, one of those dangerous weapons technically called "colts," made by attaching a leaden ball to a strong cord, one end of which is fastened to the wrist. When examined by the Judge, he was immediately recognized by an officer present as a fugitive from justice, from the State of Mississippi, before whose courts he stood charged with the murder of an individual named Black, in the town of Manchester, on the Yazoo river. He was remanded to jail for further examination. His true name is Joseph Peacock. We believe there was a proclamation issued soon after the commission of the crime, about six weeks since, by the Governor of Mississippi, offering $500 reward for his apprehension.—New Orleans Native American.

Singular Death.—A boy about 10 years of age, Edward Hance, an apprentice to Mr. D. Bowen, cabinet maker at Second and Queen Streets, was accidentally killed on Friday afternoon, by being shot in the head. The circumstances, says the Daily Chronicle, as related to us are that a couple of gentlemen were gunning in the lower section of the city, and had placed their guns in a wagon, and when absent from the horses, they took fright and ran away. At the corner of Second and Queen Streets, they ran against a pump, when one of the guns went off, and lodged the entire contents in the head of the unfortunate youth, scattering his brains over the pavement. He died instantly.—Phil. paper.

Fatal Frolic.—Some young men, much inebriated in passing the old iron store of a Frenchman named Bridge, on the Germantown road, Kensington, one night last week, resolved to play him a trick by removing an old stove from the door into a neighboring alley. While busy at this he overheard them, and from his chamber window discharged a horse pistol loaded with buck shot among them, wounding one, Henry Barnes, it is feared mortally. Bridge was arrested. It is said he was a soldier in the French army for many years previous to coming to this country, and has served under Napoleon.—ib.

Democracy.—"The greatest happiness of the greatest number" is the true spirit and meaning of democracy; and all the cant, that is employed to make the term significant of the dogmas of a party, is chicanery and humbug. In all republics the majority are the democrats, and what they will for their own benefit is true democracy. It is not democratic for one man to smoke in a stage coach, when the remaining nine passengers are made sick by it. That policy is not and cannot be democratic to which the majority of the people are opposed. Democracy is, in fine, the expressed, executed, and embodied will of the majority; and all other definitions, that can be given to the term, are anti-democratic and absurd.—New World.

Hurricane and Loss of Lives in Scotland.—A dreadful hurricane has lately occurred near Serwick, Scotland. A number of boats have been lost—some with all hands on board. A boat belonging to Lochbroom, on her way home from Wick, was lost near Scarfskerry, Dunnet, and, melancholy to relate, all hands perished. Four men and a woman are supposed to have been on board. Two of the bodies were washed ashore, and were decently interred in the churchyard of Dunnet.

Cincinnati.—The Cincinnati Republican of a late date says:—"Money matters during the week were pretty brisk, and there was quite a demand for Eastern exchange during the whole week, and its rates on Saturday were considerable better than on the week previous. Exchanges on N. York were 5c prem; on Philadelphia 2½; on Baltimore 3½; on N. Orleans certificates of deposit 1a1½ per cent. prem. Specie is selling at 3 per cent., and gold at 3½, and White Water notes 6 per cent. discount; Indiana Script, fives, are still taken at par in all business operations.

FATE OF THE APOSTLES.

St. Matthew.—This Apostle and Evangelist, is supposed to have suffered martyrdom, or was slain with a sword at a city in Ethopia.

St. Mark.—This Evangelist was dragged through the streets of Alexandria, in Egypt, until he expired.

St. Luke.—This Evangelist was hanged upon an Olive Tree in Greece.

St. John.—This Apostle and Evangelist was put into a caldron of boiling oil, at Rome, and escaped death. He afterwards died a natural death at Ephesus, in Asia.

St. Peter.—This Apostle was crucified at Rome, with his head downwards, by his own request, thinking himself unworthy to die in the same posture and manner as his blessed master.

St. James, the great.—This Apostle was beheaded at Jerusalem.

St. James, the less.—This Apostle was thrown from a pinnacle, or wing of the temple, and then beaten to death with a fuller's club.

St. Philip.—This Apostle was hanged up against a pillar at Hierapolis, a city of Phyrgia.

St. Bartholomew.—This Apostle was flayed alive by the command of a barbarous king.

St. Andrew.—This Apostle was bound to a cross, whence he preached to the people until he expired.

St. Thomas.—This Apostle was run through the body with a lance, at Coromandel, in the East Indies.

St. Jude.—This Apostle was shot to death with arrows.

St. Simeon.—Zelot—This Apostle was crucified in Persia.

St. Mathias.—This Apostle was first stoned and then beheaded.

St. Barnabas.—This Apostle of the Gentiles was stoned to death by the Jews, at Salonis.

St. Paul.—This Apostle was beheaded at Rome by the tyrant Nero.—Frederick Visiter.

LIFE OF A NEWSPAPER.

BY ITSELF.

My life is shortly told. My first impression was the sensation of a tremendous squeeze which instantly awoke me into life and thought. I was spread out to the light and a glow of intelligence completely pervaded me. My ideas were at first new, multifarous, and confused. Nations, politics, courts, wars, speeches, fightings, feasts, merchandize, marriages, deaths, ditties, &c., &c., made up my thoughts, which were various and mixed, and I lay in a silent state of wonder and amazement. I soon found that I was but one of a large family that was ushered into the world by the same prolific mother. Our whole litter was laid in regular order in a pile; my situation being one of the first born, was particularly oppressed, damp and uncomfortable. I had a silent intuitive, longing wish to get into the world, which was at length gratified. Morning and night came, and I was carefully folded, and laid, Moses like, in a basket, by an urchin who was called the carrier. The said carrier I soon found to be an object of interest and desire. He was soon accosted by an elderly looking man with threadbare, rusty breeches: "Have you got a paper to spare this morning, my boy?" asked Tightstring. "No, sir," was the short reply, and he trudged on muttering, "not for such as you, Old Gripe, you are the same chap that promised me some coppers for a paper the other morning, and han't paid me yet; you are too stingy to take the paper, but won't get another from me I guess." My brethren were now fast leaving me, being deposited at their proper destinations; at length my turn came, and I was tucked into the crevi of a shop door. The first sample of t kind was not at all prepossessing. had not been long in my new situatio when a reluctant apprentice swinging key on his hand, wistfully eyed me; a cast a look about him, feloniously seize and thrust me into his pocket. My righ ful owner, by virtue of advance pay, b ing in sight, hailed and arrested the pi ferer, and with threats compelled hi to relinquish his prize. He entered h shop, and I soon found I was an obje of some interest. After hastily dryin me by the fire, in which process I na rowly escaped conflagration, he ran ove me and fixed his eyes upon the sales auction, advertisements, &c. I was the more particularly examined and dism sed with condemnation. Nothing b foreign news, congress and cabinet, lo stories and accidents by flood and fiel "a newspaper should be a commerci report—one side at least should be dev ted to prices current." I was then pe tishly thrown upon the counter, but a soon in requisition. A bare-headed bo made his appearance, with a "please t lend ma your paper a few minutes, ju to look at the ship news?" The reque was reluctantly granted, with somethin about the plague of paper borrowing, an a determination to stop it. I was soo borne to a neighboring house. The goo old woman whose husband was at se eagerly sought the ship news, but wa disappointed in her search. "How neg ligent these printers are," said she, "n a word of the Wind Bird: they print Poland and poetry, and fill their paper with advertisements, and that is all the care about." Miss now took her turn,—She sought the stories, poetry, and ma riages, which in half an hour were a devoured with "the wonder they put any thing else in their paper." An elderl lady now took me, who, adjusting he spectacles, surveyed me a little whil declared me a "terrible uninteresting pa per, hardly a column of deaths, and n more than fifteen or twenty murder or accidents, &c." In this way I passe through all the hands of the family, an after being somewhat torn by the littl ones was sent home. For three whol days I had no rest, but was continuall borrowed and abused. At the end this period I was supplanted by a ne face, and was then discarded and throw aside like all servants when they becom useless. I was however, again resuscita ted and employed as a wrapper to som merchandize sent into the country.—There again I became an object of inte est, went the rounds of the neighborhoo and was a nine day's wonder. I am no quietly hanging up in a farmer's kitc en, from which I have written this bri memoir. I have seen much of the world and have learned that mankind are u reasonable and ungrateful, and that, i a world of great variety of tastes an wishes, it is impossible to please all.—Sa lem Obs.

YOUTH'S DEPARTMENT

A True Story of a Neat Little Boy.—When I was a little boy, my mother wa dead, and my father taught me to be clean ly in all my ways. He taught me, not onl by words, but by his good example. Fo he was neat and clean, and took grea pleasure in having every thing aroun him so. My father died when I was nin years old I remember his lessons still and I love cleanliness as my father love it. I hate dirt, and sin, and love holines and cleanliness, because I know it please God; and that the one is the best thing fo my body's health, and the other the bes thing for the life of my soul. When went to school, my master would often cal me to him, and point to me as a pattern for careless and dirty children; this m teacher did very often;—it did not mak me proud, for I was a modest little boy and it made me blush; and it seems to m now, when I often think of it, as I see dir ty children, that I was glad to be a pat tern for the careless. For some time they would try to be like me;—for m teacher used to say, this is a nice littl man; his clothes are brushed clean, hi flaxen hair smoothly combed, his face and hands clean;—and see his shining shoes, so tightly tied.

That neat little boy is now a man; he still loves neatness and cleanliness, and tries all he can to persuade children and teachers to such good habits; and he is known among his friends to this day as the man that always scrapes his feet at the door, rain or shine; and my little readers, this old fashioned habit, hurts nobody, and does a great deal of good; for it keeps dirt where it should be, out of doors. I remember how I used to do when a boy; and I have written a few o my rules in verse. Here are some of them. Please read them and put them in practice, and I will send you more and then you may in some things be like

A SUNDAY SCHOOL MAN.

RULES FOR PROMENADING.

Practiced by a little boy forty years ago.

To keep your feet clean as you walk in the dust
Be sure to tread firm on your heels, you must,—
And when through the mud you as nicely would go,
Fail not to step lightly and quick on your toe.
And when dry or wet, coming in from the street
Give a moment to scraping and wiping your feet
To this I will add only one rule more,
Just do as you're bid—when it's cold, shut the door. S. W. S.

Learn this by heart and do it, and save yourself some trouble and gain much credit.

IE RECORDER.

ZANESVILLE:

ESDAY, ... NOVEMBER 25, 1840.

RENCE MISSIONARY.—Inquiry has been know where Br. Reeves, our Conference ary, is. He has been, by invitation, at- quarterly meetings in Zanesville sta- nesville, Pennsville and Cambridge cir- hd will shortly start to visit Sandusky where he may probably spend some time.

TIAN WORLD.—The second number of er has not been sent to us. How is this, kton?

MONEY.—We have recently received sev- all notes from about Cincinnati, on shin establishments, which will not pass with ep them away from us, friends, or we ndon our neutrality in politics and turn on your hands.

WEATHER.—We had, last week, a quite ell of weather; on Saturday, it turned , on Sabbath there fell considerable rain Monday it gave some indication of snow.

KINGUM IMPROVEMENT.—The Ohio States- romises that the navigation of the Musk- shall be open late this fall; it states that blic improvements are in such a state of ness as to authorize this expectation.— ally hope these promises may be fulfilled, interest in this valley much demands the g of this channel of commerce again. Our or tells us it costs him seventy or eighty to drag a small trading boat round by the o Portsmouth, when he could have taken he river for ten.

AUTVILLE CASE.—The Judges have still deferred their opinion in this case.

S KENDALL.—This gentleman is on a visit West. The Columbus Statesman says, ter he arrived in Cincinnati, the house friend, at which he lodged, was "insulted sses, groans and unseemly noises on mu- struments," &c., &c. Rather poor busi- hat.

"Lebanon, Miami Bank," which has ormant for a number of years, has recent- n revived.

editor of the New York "New World" "there is too much fun in this world for man;" for, in one afternoon, he was chal- to mortal combat by different persons,— ened with a cow-hiding, and sued for a WAY TO SERVE LAWYERS.—Mr. H. Hub- sq., of Philadelphia, Counsellor at Law, ntenced by the court of General Sessions, days' imprisonment, for slapping Mr. ter, a member of the bar, on the face, in out.

LIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

WAYNESBURGH, PA., Nov. 17, 1840.

Springer: I have just returned from our arterly meeting, which was held at Whitely ng house, near Br. Kirby's. We were fa- with the labors of our President, Br Ra- nd also with those of Brs. Geo. Hughes, J. is and Wm. Ellis. We had a tolerable sting meeting, but nothing of a special ter. We have received into church fel- p, since conference, twenty-four members; n of whom have been formed into a class at appointment, at Rinehart's school house, three miles N. E. of this place. We are indebted to the labors of Br. Wm. Ellis, above place.

ere have been several very interesting revi- f religion in different neighborhoods in this recently, among the Baptists, Cumber- Presbyterians, Episcopal and Protestant odists. Among the latter, a class has been d in the south part of Fayette county, near onongahela, of seventy-seven members.

Yours, in the bonds of the gospel,

JAMES HOPWOOD, Sup. Mon. ct.

PRICES CURRENT.

Business of Philadelphia for Last Week.

marks.—Business along the wharves is fall- ff and transactions in foreign produce have moderate. Wholesale dealers, however, olerably busy executing orders, preparatory e close of the fall business. The forward- ouses have made ample provision for de- hing goods to the West, via railroad to nbersburgh, thence to Pittsburgh, &c. merican Fabrics.—Jobbing houses and others iving a fair amount of orders to Factors prices of cotton goods are looking up.— llen goods are without change.

read.—The export demand is fair, but with- change from last quotations. Cleared this , 265 bbls. and 751 kegs.

ndles.—Sperm 42 a 43c. for New Bedford ds, with very light stocks.

offee.—The chief sales have been of Rio, of h about 1000 bags have been sold to the e at 10¾ a 11 cents per lb. Sales Laguira 1c. per lb.

pper.—Sheating is worth 25½ cts., and old er 19c. per lb.

otton.—Sales of about 200 bales Upland at

A few sales of New Orleans at 11½. The le is rather looking up, with small stocks on d—cleared 101 bales for England.

rugs and Dyes.—A fair inland business con- es to be done by the wholesale drug houses. or oil has advanced to two dolls per gallon, scarce; refined Saltpetre 8c; sales crude petre at 6½ cents.

eathers.—Sales of Western at 42 a 45 cts. Southern 48 to 50 cts.

ish.—Mackerel is firm at 15 dollars for No. 1; for No. 2, which is an advance of 50cts. per No. 3, 7 50. Codfish no change. Sales half No. 1 Mackerel at 7¾; 500 boxes fresh Digby rings at 1 a 1 12½.

Flour and Meal.—Is steady at about last week's prices. The export demand is moderate. Sales of Brandywine Superfine Flour at 5 25; Pennsylvania Flour at 5; bbls. Brandywine Corn Meal at 3; hhds. do. Pennsylvania, 13, in hhds., and 2¾ in bbls.; Rye Flour, 3½ per bbl. Cleared this week, 6718 bbls. Flour, 294 hhds.; 1739 bbls. Corn Meal; 125 bbls. Rye Flour.

Fruit.—The arrivals from the Mediterranean have been backward this season, only one at this port, and but few at New York; the prices consequently have been high. Several vessels are now daily looked for.

Grain.—Pennsylvania red Wheat is worth 100 a 103 cts., and sales prime Southern at 95 a 100 cts. The Liverpool packet of the 20th takes out 16,000 bushels. Rye 58 a 60 cts. Yellow Corn afloat is 50 cts. and white do 46c. Oats 26 cts. Cleared this week 417 bushels Wheat, 500 do Corn.

Hemp.—Clean St. Petersburgh is held at 255 dollars from stores, and Manilla at 155 a 156 dollars per ton.

Hides.—The market is bare of all kinds in first hands. Sales of 30 bales South American Goat Skins, at 35 a 37 cents.

Indigo.—Small sales of Caraccas F at 1 50 per lb., and second grades 1 30.

Iron.—Sales 75 tons, Pa. Blooms at 65 dollars per ton, and 150 tons Juniata Pig, 33 dollars; Bar Iron is steady at former prices.

Lead.—Firm at 5¼a5½c per lb. with very light stock on hand.

Molasses.—We hear of no sales worth reporting; prices are steady at former quotations.

Naval Stores.—Tar is more plenty; sales of large barrels at 2 dolls., small do 1 50. Soft turpentine—sales of 200 bbls. North county at 2,31. Wilmington size held at 2,50. Spirits turpentine has advanced to 31 a 32 cts per gallon. No change in Rosin or Varnish. Cleared this week 135 bbls.

Oil.—Steady at 1,20 for winter, and 1,25 for bleached; Spring 1,10; bleached 1,15; whale oil 36 a 38c. per gallon; linseed oil, 68 a 70 cts. per gallon; sweet oil in baskets, sales at 4,50 for first quality.

Plaster.—Has improved, and sales made afloat at 2,62½ per ton.

Provisions.—The demand is small, and prices declining. Mess Pork, 16 a 16½ dollars per bbl. Lard—new, 10 a 11 cts. There is but little call for Bacon, of which the stocks are very small.—Butter in kegs, 9 a 10 cts. per lb.

Rice.—Continues steady at four cents per lb.

Salt.—The last import of 2000 sacks Liverpool fine, sold at a price not made known. St. Ubes is worth 25 a 27 cts. per bushel, cargo price.

Seed.—Sales Clover Seed at 5 dolls. per bushel. Flax seed 1,20 a 1,25 per bushel.

Sugars.—Have been quiet this week; sales of St. Croix in hhds and bbls. at 9 a 9½ cts. per lb. The stock of box sugars has been much reduced, sales made at last quotations.

Teas.—Continue firm at the advance before noticed, but operations have been very limited for some days and will probably so remain until further advices from China. Recent public sales in New York fully sustained former prices, and which in a measure regulates the prices in this market.

Wool.—Moderate sales continue to be made by the dealers to manufacturers, at previous prices for foreign and domestic.

Freights.—To Europe are dull. Bark is taken at 47s. 6d. in the packet for Liverpool. Wheat 7½d. per bushel. Freights to New Orleans dull. Coal freights to Boston, have advanced to 2,75 per ton; to Providence, 2,25 per ton; New York 1,75. On Schuylkill Canal, 1,80 per ton from Pottsville.

Seamen's Wages.—Continue steady at 17 dollars per month for voyages to Europe. 15 a 16 dollars, South America and West Indies.

Cattle Market.—Beef Cattle at market, 680—200 left over. Sales at 5 a 6½; a few extra at 7 cents. Cows and calves, 230—sales at 20 a 33 dollars; all sold. Springers, 12 a 19 dolls. Dry cows, 9 a 15 dolls. Hogs—460 at market; all sold at 5,75 a 6,25; a few extra at 6,50. Sheep—2700 at market; sales dull, with large surplus, at 1 a 2,25; extra, 2,75.—Bicknell, Nov. 17.

Review of the Baltimore Market, for the week ending last evening.

Remarks.—The Presidential election having terminated, there is a return of strangers to our city in the character of customers; and purchases of Groceries to a moderate extent, and of Dry Goods and other manufactures more generally, have been making by them this week quite freely.

American Dry Goods.—After a moderate falling off for about two weeks, business in this department has suddenly started up, and the present has been a week of considerable activity with some of our commission houses and jobbers. The stocks continue ample, it is thought, for the season, and prices are without material variation. But it is evident a better feeling exists between both purchaser and seller, in reference to business, than there did at some of their previous interviews.

Coffee.—The private transactions for the week include 1000 bags Laguira, in two lots, at 10¾ a 11 cts.; 1 a 200 do. St. Domingo, at 9½; and by auction, 4380 bags Rio, the cargoes of brig Arctic, (not of prime quality,) consisting of 2800 bags, at 10 a 11¼, averaging 10½ cts.; and 1350 of 1895 bags offered, of the barque Leonidas, at 10 a 12½ cts., all at 6 mos. The above prices indicate a decline of a shade as compared with those at the last previous auction sales.

Cotton.—Small sales only, not exceeding 180 bales; of which 120 were Louisiana, at 11 a 11¼ cts.; and the remainder Georgia, at 10¾ a 11, all 6 mos.

Feathers.—The transactions have been limited, at 45 a 50 cts. according to the quantity and quality.

Fish.—We continue our last week's quotations, with the remark, that all descriptions are dull of sale. There are no Shad in market.

Flour and Meal.—Howard street Flour continued to be sold from stores at 4 94 a 4 90 for good common brands, (although in very moderate request,) until Thursday, when holders gave way, and several parcels, amounting to 12 a 1500 bbls. were taken at 4 87½; yesterday we heard of the sale of 200 bbls at 4,93¾, and some particular brands will still command 5 00 per bbl. The wagon and car price on Thursday had also declined to 4 75. Large sales of City Mills have been made this week at 4 87½, full, and in one instance 5 a 600 bbls. were sold at 4 80 per bbl. cash. Contracts have been made for future delivery at 4 81¼. We quote Susquehanna 4 94 a 5 00, in limited parcels. There have been no operations in Rye Flour or Corn Meal reported this week. The inspections since our last report consisted of Howard street.....	9,008 bbls.	181 hf. bbls.

City Mills.....	7,855 "	653 "
Susquehanna.....	363 "
	17,226 bbls.	834 hf. bbls.

Forming a total for the week of 17,643 bbls. of Wheat Flour; besides 110 bbls. and 10 hf. do. of Rye Flour; and 5 hhds. and 268 bbls. of kiln-dried Corn Meal.

Fruit.—We have no transactions to report. Holders of Malaga demand prices over those obtained at the late auction sales.

Grain.—The prices of Maryland and Virginia red Wheat remain much as noticed in our last report, 90 to 98 cts. for the best parcels offering, none of which are strictly prime. Some white has been disposed of at about 1 03 a 1 04, and for Family Flour 1 15 has been paid. Sales of Susquehanna red early in the week at 1 04, and yesterday other parcels, to the extent of 5 a 6000 bushels, were in market, which sold at 1 03 a 1 04, although not entirely free from smut; the article entirely free of all impurities, would probably command 1 a 2 cents more per bushel.

Hemp.—No sales that we are advised of. There are parcels of Russia and Manilla in market which are held at quotations.

Hides.—None in market, and none of consequence in any of the Eastern markets.

Indigo.—A lot of 5 seroons of common sold at 75 a 92½ cts. per lb. by auction.

Molasses.—This article in general is dull of sale. Good sweet Cuba is held at 25 a 26 cts., and Trinidad at 29, per gallon, without meeting purchasers. Prime Porto Rico and New Orleans are scarce and wanted. By auction on the 10th 60 hhds. Porto Rico sold at 28 a 30½ cts. 6 mos.

Oils.—We note a sale of 20 casks Palm at 7½ cts. per lb. 4 mos. Linseed, Whale and Sperm, are selling in small lots, as wanted, at quotations.

Plaster of Paris.—Small sales only this week, at 3 00, and something less, in one instance, per ton. Sales of Ground to a considerable extent, at 1 50 for Nova Scotia, and 1 62½ for French, per bbl.

Provisions.—The market for most descriptions continues very inactive, without any variation in the demand or prices. The stock of old, tho' large, is receding, to which holders have no objection, as the season has arrived which renders such a measure desirable, aside from other considerations. We note the sale since our last report of 50 bbls. Mess Beef at 13 00, and 100 bbls. Mess Pork, at 16 75 per bbl. cash.

Rice.—We notice a sale of 50 trcs. new crop at 4 00 per 100 lbs. 4 mos. Our quotations remain 4 a 4 37½.

Seeds.—We note the sale of 500 bushels prime Cloverseed, taken for export, at 4 75 per bushel; and quote 4 75 a 5 00, according to quantity sold, as the present market price. Timothy is held generally at 3 00, and some holders demand 3 25. Flaxseed is taken in small lots at 1 a 1,06 and sold from stores at 1 12½ per bushel.

Spices.—We note the sale of a small parcel of Cassia, from second hands, at 28 cts. per lb.

Sugars.—The stocks of all descriptions continue light, and the article is dull. Stocks are also quite small in the Eastern markets; but the prospect of an abundant crop in Louisiana is beyond comparison. The sales this week have been chiefly by auction, and include 15 hhds. Porto Rico, at 8 15 a 8 50; and 178 do. inferior, at 7 05 a 8 00, per 100 lbs. all 4 mos.

Wool.—There have been only a few small transactions at former prices; we believe the stock in market at this time is not large.

Western Transportation.—The transportation by Rail Road and Canal to Pittsburgh, has ceased for the season; and the only medium of communication is now by Wagons—which are taking freight to Wheeling at 1 50, and to Pittsburgh at 1 00 per 100 lbs.

Freights.—A ship has been taken up to load for Amsterdam, at 35s. per hhd. Other frieghts for smaller vessels, of 4 a 600 hhds. are yet offering at 35s. a 37s. 6d.

The Home Market.—The offerings of Beef Cattle were larger on Monday than at any previous period this season, as they exceeded 1300 head. About 700 were sold, 255 of which to the packers, and the remainder to the butchers, at 4 50 a 6 00, a few fetched 6½, per 100 lbs.; 150 were drove to Pennsylvania for stock, and 450 laid over. Live Hogs have sold in lots at 6 a 6 37½, according to size and condition; one lot fetched 6 50, on time. There have been two or three small lots of slaughtered Hogs brought to market this week from Frederick county, the first this season, as they were of desirable sizes, were sold at 6 50 per 100 lbs.—Lyford, 14th inst.

Pittsburgh Market.

Business continues very fair all through the city. We found the Iron, Nail, green and white Glass, and Cotton manufacturing business all very much revived and flourishing, and not able in many instances to satisfy the increased demand. One extensive iron and nail manufacturer informed us that although he made about 150 kegs of nails a day, yet he had 1500 and 2000 kegs ordered more than the supplies, and two green glass and lead manufacturers assured us they could not near supply their heavy orders, and an extensive white Flint manufacturer made the same remark. Many of the smaller establishments and our mechanics are also now very busy. The wholesale and retail branches of business, and the commission warehouses are also doing well, and the revival of trade is very cheering. The wholesale grocery stocks are large and excellent. Flour is down to 3,25, from wagons and boats, and a shade higher for choice brands. Sales by one house of about 1000 barrels from store at 3,50 this week.

Grain.—Wheat 55 cts., Rye 37½, Oats 23 to 25, and Barley very dull at 50 cts.

Sugar.—Sales of 40 hhds. prime old, 8¾ currency, and 8½ par funds.

Feathers.—Sales 40 a 41 cts. per lb.; 800 lbs. at 4 mos. 41 cts. per lb.

Cheese.—Sales to one house of about 40 tons good Ohio, at 5½ a 6 cts. per lb.

Salt.—Sales at the river and basin, 1,55 to 1,60, and from stores at 1,75 per bbl.

Seed.—Clover sales 4,50 from wagons, 5 from stores; timothy seed 1,75 to 2,00; flax seed 75 cents per bushel.

Lead.—Sales of 5 tons at 5c per lb. at 4 and 6 months.

Iron.—Sales of about 100 tons Juniata blooms 70 dollars, 6 months.

Pig Metal.—60 tons 30 dolls., 4 and 6 months; 112 tons at 34 dolls., 4 and 6 mos.; 20 tons soft 35 dolls.; 200 tons 30 dolls., 6 mos.; 30 tons, 31 dolls., 6 mos.; 110 tons fine soft 32½ dolls. 4 and 6 months.

Hogs.—Good choice for packers and butchers, 4½ to 5 cts. per lb.

Beef Cattle.—Do. do. do. 4 to 5 cts. per lb.—Harris' Intelligencer, Nov. 14.

ITEMS.

THINGS IN PHILADELPHIA.

The Grand Jury on Friday last found a true bill against John Rox, for the murder of Barney Browning.

The usual defence, insanity, has been set up for Shuster, indicted for the murder of his wife.

The Councils are regularly progressing an Ordinance to authorize the American Philosophical Society to erect an observatory in Rittenhouse Square.

A fellow named Thomas Ely, was arrested on Sunday for stealing a National flag, valued at $20, from the tavern of James Hall, in Swanson street, below Mead Alley. This is an excess of patriotism.

True bills have been found for murder against Joseph Stark, committed for the killing of a man at his tavern in Dock street, and against James Morris, colored, for the murder of a hand on board of a sloop up the river near Frankford creek.

A little girl whose parents reside near Fairmount, on Sunday evening, accidentally got a grain of coffee in her windpipe, which caused her death the next morning.

The Grand Jury, on Monday, found a true bill against Jane Callahan, for the murder of her infant.

The Grand Jury have found a true bill against Perry Braddock the colored man, who last summer brutally murdered his uncle at Moyamensing, by assaulting him with an old broken pot, and beating his brains out.

Mr. James Stimpson has commenced a suit against the city authorities for an infringement of his patent for turn out or rail road curves.—The Councils have prepared to defend the charge.

The Grand Jury have found a true bill against Marian Wilson, who stands charged with the murder of Tamar S. Filbert, an old lady.

A committee has been appointed by Councils for the purpose of considering the propriety of reducing as much as possible the City expenses, and thus lightening the taxes of our citizens.

On Monday morning, Mr. Robert Newlin, father of Robert Newlin, Jr., of the firm of Abbott & Newlin, brewers, Second street, above Arch, fell dead upon the dock of the Burlington steamboat, and expired without a groan.

Messrs. Wood & Abbott, merchants, in Market street above Second, recovered of the City authorities last week, seven hundred dollars damages for injury done to goods in their cellar, by water running in through the trenches dug to lay gas pipes.

THINGS IN NEW YORK.

The wife of Mr. Dinneford went to bed in good health on Wednesday night, and was found dead the next morning.

A man named Thomas Prince, aged 111, died suddenly at 22 East Broadway, on Friday.

Sloop Margaret Jane, loaded with railroad iron for the New York and Erie Railroad, sunk on Saturday morning in the North river, opposite the Pallisades.

Gov. SEWARD has fixed upon the seventeeth of December as a day of general Thanksgiving in New York.

Table of Electoral Votes in Twenty States.

	Harrison.	Van Buren.
Ohio	21	00
Kentucky	15	00
Indiana	9	00
New York	42	00
Pennsylvania	30	00
Virginia	00	23
Maryland	10	00
New Jersey	8	00
Connecticut	8	00
Rhode Island	4	00
New Hampshire	00	7
Georgia	11	00
Tennessee	15	00
Maine	10	00
Massachusetts	14	00
Vermont	7	00
Delaware	3	00
Michigan	3	00
Mississippi	4	00
Missouri	00	4
	214	34

The value of the real and personal property within the limits of Washington, is estimated at 10,447,000 dollars.

A suit for libel has been instituted by Mr. James Cameron against the editors of the Harrisburgh Chronicle.

Flour at Cincinnati on the 5th, 3,62 a 3,75; wheat 52 cts. per bushel.

Dead in the Ditch.—We learn from the Greenfield Courier, that an inebriate, named Miller, who had been employed ditching in that town was found last week flat on his face in the mud, dead. It is supposed that he fell too much intoxicated to turn and extricate himself from strangulation.

Shot by Accident.—In Plymouth, Mass., a few days since, the wife of Mr. Joseph Raymond (of Ponds) was accidentally shot by a gentleman who was examining the lock of a gun belonging to Mr. Raymond. A surgeon was immediately called, but before he could return to procure his instruments, she bled to death, Fiendish Attempt.—An attempt was made last week to burn the Town Hall at Stamford, Conn., while a political convention was being held in it.

Bunker Hill Monument.—The Boston Courier says, we have the pleasure of announcing that contracts for completing the Monument of Bunker Hill were yesterday signed by the contractor, Mr. James S. Savage, on the one part, and by the President of the Monument Association, on the other. It is specified that the Monument shall be completed agreeably to the original design, by the first of October, 1843, for the sum of 43,000 dollars. Mr. Savage will commence operations at the quarry, immediately, and will begin to lay the stone as early as possible in the ensuing spring.—New World.

Fire at New Brighton.—The dwelling house of Professor Del Mar, at New Brighton, was entirely destroyed by fire on Saturday night last. As the house had been closed for some weeks, and no fire used about the premises, it was undoubtedly the work of an incendiary.

Steamboat.—We are informed that the steamboat Swallow broke her wheel in coming down from Albany on Thursday night, which was the cause of her not arriving here yesterday morning. It was reported that she was burnt, which report arose, no doubt, from the light occasioned by the burning of Mr. Talmadge's House at Poughkeepsie.—New York paper.

The steamship Acadia, Capt. Miller, arrived at Halifax on the 3d instant, in 42 hours, and left the same day for Liverpool, with 15 additional passengers.

Fire at Poughkeepsie.—We learn that the elegant mansion of the Hon. Nat'l. P. Talmadge, United States Senator, took fire and was consumed on Tuesday night. We did not ascertain whether any or what portion of the property was saved.

From Florida.—The Savannah Republican of the 5th instant, mentions a report received at that city that Lt. Judd and four soldiers had been killed by the Indians, near St. Augustine. A dismissed soldier who came to St. Augustine, stated that he was ahead of the above named party and heard the report of the rifles and saw Lt. J. and the soldiers fall from their horses.—From the fact that nothing has since been heard from them, it is feared that the report may prove true.

NOT SO EASILY SETTLED.—Mr. Walsh expresses an opinion, in letters to the National Intelligencer, that whatever, or how rapid soever the possible success of the Allies, the French Government will not brook the deposition of Mehemet.

A plot has been discovered among the slaves of the parish of St. Martin, near Opelousas, La., for an insurrection. Ten have been arrested on the information of a negro woman, wife of one of the leaders. The chief, on being apprehended, hung himself with his handkerchief.

The tides generally, for the last week or more, in the Delaware, have risen higher than for some years previous.

The barn of Mr. George Pleiffer, a very industrious, though poor man, residing near Germantown, was destroyed by fire on Saturday afternoon. Two men, John Keel and David Childs, have been arrested on suspicion of setting it on fire.

The Banks of New Jersey.—Resolutions have been introduced into the assembly of New Jersey calling upon the Banks to state whether they are now paying specie for their notes—and if not when they intend to resume paying specie.

The editor of the Salem Advertiser has been prosecuted for a libel by the Hon. Moses H. Grinnell.

The New York Commercial states, that the Rev. Henry B. Bascom, D. D., Professor of Moral Science and Belles Letters in the Augusta College of Kentucky, has been unanimously elected to the Presidency of the College of Louisiana, at Jackson.

Annapolis, Maryland, has a population of two thousand seven hundred and ninety-five.

An Erie paper boasts of a squash, the growth of that neighborhood, weighing 137 pounds,—also, a winter pear, weighing two pounds nine ounces.

Cuba, with a population of less than a million and a half, pays to England the enormous revenue of 12,000,000 dollars.

The Barre Gazette states, that there is a guide board in that vicinity, the direction upon which no traveller was ever known to follow, it reads thus: "Both roads to Barree."

A man named John W. Sassean, a deputy post master at Morristown, Jefferson county, Tenn., has been arrested for robbing letters of the money which they contained, as they passed through the office.

The Harrisburgh Reporter says that the vote of Pennsylvania has been increased about THIRTY-FOUR THOUSAND over that given at the last general election, and that the full poll will probably be 290,000.

New Coinage.—The United States Mint are coining dollars smaller in diameter than those now in circulation. The die cut a few years since has been broken up.

Man Killed in Maine.—A man by the name of Carr, wass killed on Saturday week, at Frankfort, Me., and another by the name of Hogler, was so badly injured in one of his arms as to render amputation necessary. They were engaged in firing a salute in honor of the raising of a liberty pole. The gun suddenly went off while they were loading it, and caused the dreadful accident.

Caught 'Em.—The Maysville Eagle says that a counterfeiter and his wife have been arrested near Vanceburgh, Ky., in whose possession was found a complete apparatus for counterfeiting gold and silver coin.

The agents of the Cunard line of steamers from Boston have decided not to despatch the Britannia before the 1st December.

Dr. Palmer, of Pittsfield, Mass., who was injured a short time since by accidentally inhaling concentrated sulphuric acid, during a chemical lecture, has since died.

Evening processions are quite frequent among the juvenile partisans of Boston, who seem to be as much infected with political zeal as the more elder partisans. At a resent display of this kind the boys were provided with banners, one of which was inscribed with the motto, "Tall oaks from little acorns grow;" another, "our mothers know we're out."

Return of the President.—In consequence of having encountered a severe headwind from the N. E. which gradually increased to a hard gale with a very heavy sea, against which the ship was propelled for four successive days, without making a greater progress during the whole of that time, than about 300 miles on her way; the Capt. advised the passengers that his opinion was adverse to proceeding, as there only remained a supply of coal which would last but 14 days.—The passengers were all in favor of returning.

The "Liberty Ticket."—It is stated that about 343 votes were polled in Pennsylvania on the 30th ult., for the "Liberty or Abolition Ticket." In Philadelphia county and city, that ticket received 107, in Dauhpin 47, Cumberland 3, Adams 1, Lancaster 3, Chester 25, Bradford 60, Beaver 20, and Susquehanna 31.

A bill has been passed by the New Jersey Legislature enabling the trustees of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Morristown to sell their church and parsonage it being now situated too near the rail road.

The rail road has been completed, from Boston to Portsmouth, (60 miles) and the cars have commenced running.

Prince Louis Napoleon has been imprisoned in the Chateau of Ham.

New Zealand has at length been declared a British territory. Gov. Hobson made proclamation to this effect on the 21st of May.

Enormous Price.—A florist lately purchased of an amateur in Bath a dahlia, called the "Maid of Bath," for 100 guineas, or about $525.

New York and Albany Rail Road.—About forty miles from its commencement at Piermont to Goshen, will be ready for use by the middle of this month.

Sorry to Hear It.—At an election fight in St. Augustine, Md., the other day two persons named Julius and Ennis were severely stabbed, and L. O. Harn was so beaten that his life was endangered.

Very Painful.—At Ballston, (N. Y.) a daughter of Issac U. Irish was burned to death, by her clothes taking fire.

The mint of the United Stated is said to be engaged in coining a new dollar. It is of smaller dimensions than the Spanish dollar, and is altogether better executed.

Gone to Cuba.—Among the passengers in the Christoval Colon for Havana, we notice the name of Mr. F. P. Blair, editor of the Washington Globe.

At the recent election in Georgia, it was decided by a vote of the people that the Legislature of the State shall meet hereafter once in two years. The majority in favor of biennial sessions is over 30,000.

Snow fell to the depth of one foot east of Cleveland, Ohio, on Thursday of last week.—New World.

Dates from Galveston state that Arista had capitulated to Col. Jourdan of the Federalists, surrendering 1200 men. It wants confirmation. Major Howard, with one hundred and fifty regular troops and one hundred volunteers, has left San Antonio on an expedition against the Camanches. This is the second party that is on its way into the Indian country.

Curious case of Pin-swallowing.—By H. H. Birt, Esq., Surgeon, Sussex. A girl of weak intellect, aged 23, came under the author's care in July, 1839. Before this time a surgeon had extracted 254 pins and needles (making in all 281) from almost every part of the left side of the body. The girl had been in the habit of swallowing pins and needles out of bravado, or from the bribe of sweetmeats when at school about 13 years before.—London Medical Gazette.

Charge of Piracy.—A letter from Captain Numer of the Brig Malek Adhel who was some time since reported for piracy, has been received in this city, dated Bahia, Sept. 20. in which he states that he has been arrested by the American consul at that port, for "firing his gun on the sea," to use his own expression, and expects to be sent to the United States for trial.

Fire.—The New York Star of Thursday says,—"We mentioned yesterday that Gen. James Tallmadge's splendid mansion at Barrytown, was destroyed by fire. We are now happy to be able to correct that statement. The barns belonging to the farm house, some distance from the mansion house, containing the the grain and about forty tons of hay, were consumed, together with five horses belonging to some German laborers who were constructing a road in the neighborhood, and were permitted to put their horses in these barns. The fire is supposed to be entirely accidental. There was no insurance on the property."—Bick.

No less that six attempts have been made to assasinate Louis Phillip, since his elevation to the throne.

POETRY.

From the Lady's Book.

ON THE POETICAL TALENT OF MARY, QUEEN OF SCOTS

From Professor Walter's new work,

"The Twenty Years' Captivity of Mary."

No care was wanting to give to the young Queen of Scots the most finished education.—The quietude of the royal convent of St. Germain-en-Laye formed a contrast to the bustle and gaieties of the court, favorable at once to her studies, and to the culture of her heart.—Among other accomplishments, that of Poetry was not neglected, and proofs have reached us that the natural turn of her genius was favorable to the lessons of taste instilled into her youthful mind. On the 24th of April, 1558, Mary was married to Francis, the Dauphin of France, and on the 10th of December, 1560, she was a youthful widow mourning his untimely end, having shared with him a transitory reign of but seventeen months. She lamented his loss in an Elegy which does honor at once to her head and heart.

How sadly my plaintive numbers flow
From lips that vainly would repine!
Around my tearful eyes I throw,
And see what countless loss is mine;
In the midst of burning sighs and tears
I pass the fairest of my years!

Did destiny's hard hand before
Such store of bitter sorrows shed;
Or future, in her anger, pour
Such griefs on hapless woman's head;
Who sees her very heart lie here,
Her eyes' sole pride, within this bier!

In the sweet springtide of my day,
When flowers of early joy are rife,
I feel the withering griefs that prey
Upon the closing hour of life;
In nothing does my heart feel pleasure,
Save in regrets that know no measure.

The fond delight of happier years
Are turn'd to pain, and wound the sight;
The day whose genial lustre cheers,
Nor wears the gloom of saddest night:
Nor is there aught of good or fair
That now can claim my thought or care.

Deep in my heart, and in my eyes,
Thy portrait lives; this garb of woe,
Which on my widow'd limbs you spy,
And on my pale features, sadly show,
The semblance of the violet blue,
Unhappy love's own kindred hue.

A prey to cares and anguish keen,
No place my steps can long detain:
Nor yet has any change of scene
The power to chase away my pain;
My worst, my happiest state of mind
In solitude alone I find.

Whether my footsteps sadly stray
Through flowry mead, or shady bower;
Whether at dawn of opening day,
Or at the closing vesper hour,
That bitterest of all human ill,
The grief of absence, haunts me still.

If to the heavens my eyes I raise,
His gentle smile will meet me there;
If on the floating clouds I gaze,
They picture forth his portrait fair;
If on the stream I cast my eye
In crystal hers'd he seems to lie.

When evening with her shade is near,
And when I seek my couch of rest,
In dreams his well-known voice I hear,
My hand in his is gently press'd.
In busy day, in hours of rest,
His image ever fills my breast.

However fair, however bright,
No other object charms me now,
It wakes no feeling of delight,
It cannot claim my bosom's vow,
The deep affection that I bear
To him, will have no rival there.

But hush, my song! no more complain;
The sadly soothing lay give o'er;
The grief that knows not how to feign,
Shall still this simple burden pour:—
"Two hearts to true love fondly plighted
Can by no time be disunited!"

COMMUNICATIONS.

For the Western Recorder.

MEASLES—SCARLET FEVER.

Scarlet fever, measles and various other eruptive complaints have, for several months past, prevailed to a very great extent in different parts of Muskingum county, Ohio. The mortality produced in some situations, by the two first diseases, has been truly frightful. This has, doubtless, resulted from the violent and unmanageable character which they are so apt to assume, when they occur epidemically. We fear, nevertheless, that in a considerable number of cases, the violence of the disease and the death of the patients are to be attributed, mainly, to the vulgar and ignorant prejudice which prevails in regard to the nature of eruptive diseases generally, and the improper treatment which is in consequence adopted, previous to a physician being called in, and sometimes during the period of his attendance.

It was once an opinion entertained, even by medical men, that all diseases accompanied with an eruption upon the skin, were produced by a morbific principle generated in the blood, and which the healing power, inherent in the system, attempted to remove from the more vital organs, by throwing it out upon the skin. Hence it was maintained, that the more copious the eruption upon the surface of the patient's body, the greater was his chance of recovery. On this doctrine was founded a plan of treatment, adapted, as it was supposed, to aid the efforts of nature in "driving out the disease." The greatest anxiety existed on the part of the medical attendant to produce a copious eruption, and to prevent it from "striking in;" the poor patient was accordingly placed in bed, in a hot apartment and carefully covered with clothes, so as to prevent the least access of cool air to his skin, while, at the same time, hot stimulating drinks were freely administered internally. Happily, years have elapsed since the instructed part of the medical profession became convinced of the incorrectness of the foregoing views, and of the highly pernicious effects produced by the plan of treatment to which it gives rise. But the errors of physicians, are in most instances, eagerly adopted by the public, and fondly cherished for ages after they have been renounced by the former. We accordingly find, that whenever a child is attacked with scarlet fever, or measles, or exhibits the least symptom of being unwell, during the prevalence of either disease in the neighborhood, the parents, of their own accord, or prompted by the advice of some officious and over-wise neighbor, set to work to force out, as it is styled, the disease. From that moment, the patient must bid farewell to the delightful sensation produced by the inhalation of cool, fresh air, and its free admission to the surface of the body,—no longer is he permitted to quench his feverish thirst by any bland, cool liquid.—However restless he becomes—however hot and parched his skin—however earnestly nature may crave cooling drinks and fresh air, the misguided parents persist in withholding them. Heat is applied externally. The effect of all this, instead of a decrease of the disease, is an augmentation of the uneasy sensation of the patient; increased fever; and too often, serious disease of the throat, or of some internal organ, which the most judicious and best directed efforts of the physician are unable, consequently, to subdue.

It is true, that the disease of the skin is increased, but with this is also increased, the sufferings and danger of the patient. An attack, which, had it been left entirely to itself, might have terminated favorable in a few days, is often, by this system of mismanagement, caused to eventuate in death. Let an individual in ordinary health, of an irritable constitution, be confined to bed in a warm apartment, and drenched with hot stimulating drinks, and he will very soon have fever, and not unfrequently an extensive eruption on the skin. In all eruptive complaints, attendant with fever, the proper course is to reduce the heat of the skin and the general excitement of the system, and by those means diminish, not to increase the external eruption.

Would parents only learn the importance of relinquishing entirely the management of their children's complaints, and send at once for competent medical advice, however trifling to them the case may appear in its primary symptoms, they would save themselves many days and nights of painful anxiety, and be more certain of escaping the mournful task of following to an early grave a fondly cherished, perhaps, an only child. The saving in expenses, by such a course, I need not urge. No one, who has any pretensions to correct feelings, would, for the sake of an extra dollar or two, jeopard the life of even a stranger.

A physician, when he is called in to a case of measles, or of scarlet fever, will direct the patient to be kept cool, in winter, by permitting only a moderate fire in his apartment, and a light covering for his body,—in summer, by a cool dress and free ventilation.

Perchance, if the case be one of scarlet fever, and of any severity, nothing being present to forbid its use, he may direct the entire surface of the patient to be freely sponged with cold water, or the latter to be dashed over the naked body until the heat of the skin is subdued—the process to be repeated as often as the morbid heat returns.

This may startle some parents, and cause many an ignorant quack to hold up their hands in utter horror; but the proper course is to entrust the patient to the care of a physician, in whose skill and judgment every confidence can be placed, and then to follow, implicitly, his directions, however much they may be opposed to ignorant preconceived notions and prejudices, or excite the ill-omened croakings of the knowing nurse. The physician will direct the drinks for the patient to be given cool, and that they shall consist of some mild mucilaginous fluid; a toast, barley or gum water, made slightly sour with lemon or lime juice, or at least, to consist of something equally bland and simple. He will direct the patient to be kept in a large airy apartment—every care being taken to preserve it strictly clean. He will insist upon his being debared the use of all heating, solid or indigestible food. Thin gruel or panada, will be, perhaps, the only nutriment that can, with propriety, be allowed. So far as it regards the keeping of the patient's skin cool—the free admission of fresh air—the restricting him to a very spare and simple diet, and the allowance of cool, mild drinks, the sooner they are commenced with after the attack of either of the diseases alluded to, the better. No danger need be apprehended of this course causing the eruption to strike in, and endangering any of the vital organs. On the contrary, by adhering to it, even were no other means resorted to, the recovery of the patient is rendered more certain than by any opposite course, although the treatment, in other respects should be the more judicious.

The true physician will not seek to cure disease by trick, but by SKILL; not by the magical agency of nostrums or specifics, but by a judicious use of those means which the experience of former times have placed in his hands. Nor will he be contented with understanding the structure and physiology of the body alone; but will seek to estimate and to regulate the corresponding influence of the mind. He will judge when it is proper to soothe and encourage the patient, when to alarm his fears, and when to animate his hopes. Although he may seek, on some occasions, to prevent surprise, and to blunt the keen edge of affliction, yet will he never forfeit his patient's confidence by violating the truth in the treatment, even of incurable disorders.—He will endeavor to alleviate or soften those calamities which he is unable to avert. When he can do nothing else, he may still, in the language of the poet, "make langor smile and smooth the bed of death." Even in the last solemn hour, a judicious physician will be regarded as a friend, under whose care the dying man will utter his latest breath with more complacency.

The value of a physician's attendance is likewise very sensibly felt by the friends and family of the sick. They are relieved from a heavy weight of responsibility, from the doubts and fears of erring in matters which may be of importance, and from the painful task of judging often between jarring opinions officiously obtruded upon them. For these things, an appeal to the true physician, is the proper remedy; and not only his skill, but his prudence, should be such as to inspire confidence, to remove difficulties and to enable him to take upon himself, if necessary, the entire charge and management of the sick.

"I have always thought it a greater happiness to discover a certain method of curing, even the slightest disease, than to accumulate the largest fortune; and whosoever compasses the former, I esteem, not only happier, but wiser and better." So said Sydenham. A. W. K., M. D.

Hopewell tp., November, 1840.

For the Western Recorder.

A FEW THOUGHTS ON A FEW THINGS.

NO. II.

ON THE SCRIPTURES.

The two great leading points which the Bible presents to our views, are, the utterly lost, depraved, and helpless state of man, and the only way of salvation by Jesus Christ. Not only is every imagination of the thoughts of man's heart described to be evil, only evil, and that continually, Gen. vi, 5: but also desperately or hopelessly wicked and deceitful above all things, Jer. xvii, 9. This is strongly depicted in the reproof to the Laodicean church: "because thou sayest I am rich and increased with goods, and have need of nothing; and knowest not that thou art wretched and miserable, and poor and blind, and naked." What the grand and leading object of the Bible is our Lord himself declares, in following up the precious injunction: "search the scriptures, for they are they which testify of me, John v, 39. Hence, from Genesis to Revelations, Jesus, as the great redeemer, is held up to our astonished view. The very soul—the leading subject—the main design, therefore, of the scriptures, is to testify of Jesus; and of the way through Him, by which man may escape from earth to immortal glory. Thro' all this blessed volume, the atonement of the great Redeemer is traced in lines of blood. The substance and glory of all the types, shadows and Mosaic ritual, up to His cross is, behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world." But there is, moreover, something in the oracles of God suited to every character and situation in life. Let the worldly minded read Ecclesiastes to learn the vanity of the world; the moralist, the book of Proverbs and the sermon on the mount to learn true morality; the man who depends on his own merits, the epistles to the Romans and Galatians to know the true way of acceptance with God; the unfruitful professor, the epistles of St. James to discover the genuine fruits of a living faith; the profane and unbeliever, the second epistle of St. Peter with St. Jude to know the fearful consequences of sin and unbelief; the heart in danger of apostacy, Hosea and Hebrews to preserve it; the devotional, the book of Psalms to purify and heighten his devotions; the afflicted, the book of Job; the true believer, the epistles to Ephesians, &c., that he may perceive what it is to grow in grace and in the knowledge of his Lord and Saviour; and the prophecies of Isaiah that he may rejoice in the prospect of the future glory of the church and in the final triumph of the christian cause. Compare one part with another; and as you read, never cease to pray for the illumination of that Spirit by which these books were dictated. "Lord, open thou mine eyes to behold the wonderful things out of thy law," and the whole compass of abstruse philosophy and recondite history shall furnish no argument with which the perverse will of man shall be able to shake this learned christian's faith. The Bible thus studied, will, indeed, prove to be what we Protestants esteem it, a certain and sufficient rule of faith and practice, a helmet of salvation, which alone, may quench the fiery darts of the wicked.

"When'er in error's paths we rove,
The living God through sin forsake;
Our conscience by thy word reprove,
Convince and bring the wanderers back,
Deep wounded by thy Spirit's sword,
And then by Gilead's balm restored.

"Furnished out of thy treasury,
O! may we always ready stand,
To help the souls redeem'd by thee,
In what their various states demand;
To teach, convince, correct, reprove,
And build them up in holiest love."

November, 1840. J. D. G.

For the Western Recorder.

Mr. Editor: As I do not know the address of Br. Hughes, the Literary Agent, or where to reach him with a letter, you will oblige me by publishing the following for his benefit.

Subscribers to the plan for the relief of the Literary Institution of the Methodist Protestant Church:

	Shares	Am't due.	Residence.
Jas. A. Lancaster,	1	$4	Wheeling, Va.
S. H. Lancaster,	1	4	"
Robert Guy,	1	5	"
Isaac Pierce,	1	4	Bridgeport, O.
The above subscribed September 15th.
S. B. Johnson,	1	4	Zanesville, O.
Olcutt White,	1	4	"
James Hockings,	1	4	"
Z. Taylor,	1	4	"
Miss E. A. Clarke,	1	4	"
Col. M. Jewett,	5	20	Columbus,

The above subscribed Sept. 21st, with the exception of Col. Jewett, who subscribed Sept. 24.

Respectfully, yours,

G. G. MOORE.

Jamestown, O., Nov. 13, 1840.

INSTITUTION FOR THE PROMOTION OF SCIENCE.—A national institution for the promotion of science, has just been established at Washington The officers are as follows: Directors—Hon. Joel R. Pointsett, and Hon. James K. Paulding. Councillors—Hon. John Quincey Adams, Col. J. J. Abert, Col. Joseph G. Totten. A. McWilliams, M. D., and F. A. Dayton. Treasurer—William J. Stone. Corresponding Secretary, Pishey Thompson.

The Baltimore Clipper, whence we gather our information, states that there are are 84 residents, three honorary and nine-one corresponding members. All Governors of States and Diplomatic, consular, and commercial agents of the United States are to be ex-officio corresponding members, and communications are requested from them.

The departments of the Institution at present consist of 1. Chemistry; 2. Geology and Mineralogy; 3. Geography, Astronomy and Natural Philosophy; 4. Natural History; 5. The application of Science to the useful Arts; 6, American History and Antiquities; 7. Agriculture; 8. Literature and the Fine Arts.

The Army and Navy Chronicle truly remarks that "there seems to be a peculiar apropriateness in officers of the army and navy lending to such a cause the aid which their stations enable them to do. Called in the discharge of duty to almost every section of the habitable globe, they have opportunities to collect numerous specimens in natural history; to make observations upon the climate, soil, resources and productions of countries visited, upon the habits, manners, language and pursuits of the population; upon the celestial and terrestial phenomena that almost daily and nightly occur; and in a thousand ways to promote the gratification of their friends at home."

From the Southern Christian Advocate.

THE FISHERMAN AND THE TRAVELLER.

Translated from the French.

By the side of a beautiful river in France, there once lived a poor man, who gained his living by fishing. But though poor, he was contented, for he desired nothing but what he had. One day a fancy struck him to visit a neighbouring city, and he resolved to set out on his journey the following day. While thinking of his expected visit, he met a traveller, who asked him if there was a house near in which he could obtain a night's lodging. There is one about two miles distant, said the fisherman, but it is too late to proceed there; if you will pass to-night in my cabin, you are heartily welcome. The traveller accepted the invitation joyfully, and accompanied him home. The fisherman, desirous to entertain his guest, kindled a fire, and commenced preparing supper. While doing so, he appeared so cheerful and happy, that the traveller said to him, My friend you appear very gay, what is it that pleases you so much? I would give all I possess in the world to be as happy as you are. And what prevents you? said the fisherman; my happiness cost me nothing, and I never have cause to be sad. What griefs have you that prevent your rejoicing? Alas! said the traveller, hear my history. I was once a merchant and gained great wealth, but never enjoyed it. I was continually in dread of becoming bankrupt, that my goods would be injured, and vessels shipwrecked: so I determined to abandon commerce, to be more at ease. I then obtained a situation at court, and after enjoying for some time the favor of the prince, and possessing, as I thought, his undivided affection, discovered that there were others on the list of favorites, who shared, if not more, an equal portion of his regard with myself. The idea of a rival was insupportable to me, and one night I retired to my chamber, overcome with chagrin and disappointment. Suddenly there stood before me, a man of majestic appearance, and beautiful countenance, whom I believed to be an angel: he said to me, Azael, I pity your misery, and have come to bring you relief; do you wish to be happy? Yes, most sincerely, said I.—But how shall I proceed? Renounce the love of wealth, and human applause, leave the palace immediately, and walk for two days in the first road that opens to your view: then retrace your steps, and I will show you a sight that will forever cure you of ambition; and you will learn to be happy. I have already walked one day and shall do so to-morrow, but how little hope of obtaining what has been promised.—The fisherman, after hearing the traveller, wondered at the folly of the ambitious, who make their happiness depend on the word and regard of princes. I shall be happy to see you on your return, and hear of your success, said the fisherman. I intend going to-morrow to the neighboring city; having never been from my cabin, it will be diverting too see the sights there, and gain some knowledge of the world too.—You are wrong, said the traveller, to leave home; since you are so happy, why do you seek to be miserable? Your cabin appears good enough for you to-day, but when you shall have seen the dwellings of the great, it will appear mean in your eyes. You are now satisfied with your clothing, because you are accustomed to it, and have never known better; but when you have seen the splendid garments of the rich, you will despise those you have. Sir, replied the fisherman, these reasons may have weight with you, who are accustomed to courts, and depend on others for happiness; the world is full of those who can counsel others, but cannot govern themselves. The traveller said no more and the next morning departed on his journey, and the fisherman on his. Two days after, the traveller returned to the fisherman's cabin, having had nothing extraordinary to occur. He found the fisherman sitting before his door with his hand resting on his head, and his eyes fixed on the ground. What is the matter my friend? said Azael. I am very unhappy, said the fisherman. What have I done that heaven should withhold its favours from me, and live poor, while there are so many rich and prosperous in the world? At that moment the angel appeared (who had advised Azael to quit the palace.) Why did you not follow the counsel of Azael? said he to the fisherman. The sight of so much splendor in the city where you have been, has excited avarice and ambition in your bosom, and chased away joy and peace. Moderate your desires, and endeavor to recover those precious gifts.

That is not easy, said the fisherman; indeed it is impossible; and I should always be miserable, unless it please Providence to change my situation. That would be your ruin said the angel. Be content with what you have. What? am I always to continue poor and wretched, and never desire the good things of this world. God often grants the desires of the ambitious. Yes said the angel, but it is in anger, and to punish them. I cannot be silenced by your threats, said the fisherman, I must have what I desire.—Well, said the angel, since you are determined to perish, I consent to grant any request you may ask. The fisherman, transported with joy, wished that his cabin might be converted into a splendid dwelling; the river before it become a mighty sea; and his little fishing boat a large ship, laden with gold, precious stone, and merchandize. Immediately it was granted. After admiring it for some time, he entered it. Hardly had he done so, when there arose a great tempest; he would gladly have escaped on shore, but it was too late, there was no means for doing so: then he despised his mad ambition which made him covet that which could not deliver him in the hour of danger, or save him from the dread of death. But regrets were now useless; the sea swallowed him up and his riches with him. The angel turned to Azeal, and said, 'Let this example make you wise; the end of this man is that of every ambitious one; sudden and without hope. The court you have just left is famous for these shipwrecks. Now while you are able, gain a place of safety and quiet. If you wait a day longer, you will not be willing to do it. Azeal, affrighted obeyed the angel and followed his directions. He retired to a country residence where he passed his days in peace and quiet, finding true happiness in the pursuit of piety; and offered continual thanksgiving to God, who had set before him the madness of ambition and avarice, vices which had made him cleave to worldly honours, and closed his heart to the love of his fellow man. C. F. G.

S. C. Haver,

IN the flourishing town of Putnam has on hand 40 or 50 SADDLES ready for sale, of different qualities, comprising nearly all the varieties in fashion in our Buckeye State.

A good assortment of Bridles and Martingales: Riding and driving Whips: between 180 and 200 Carriage and heavy draft Collars, which will compare and wear with any others made here or elsewhere.

Also, fine York, Dearborn, heavy team and common Farming Harness. A lot of first rate Carriage and Buggy Harness, (brass and silver plated.)

Trunks, vallises, saddle-bags, and double covered wagon whips, varying in quality and price to suit purchasers.

The only recommendation he now offers for his work, is the testimony and long experience of his old customers and friends. He is still anxious to please and accommodate those who may call on him, and hopes to share so much of the public patronage as his attention to his business shall merit.

Putnam, April 29, 1840. 28tf

Winslow's Compound

BALSAM OF HOARHOUND.

UNRIVALED and unequaled in curing Colds, Coughs, Asthma, Influenza, Whooping Cough, and all diseases of the Breast and Lungs, leading to Consumption, composed of the concentrated virtues of the herbs Hoarhound, Boneset, and several other vegetable substances, warranted pure from any mineral whatever.

Sold by A. LIPPITT and S. GATES.

Zanesville, Nov. 4. 64tf

Notice.

BOOKS, Stationery, and Printer's Ink, for sale by A. LIPPITT.

Zanesville, Nov. 4. 63tf.

DRUGS, Medicines, Paints, Dyestuffs, Oils, and Spirits Turpentine. Cheap for cash or good horses, by A. LIPPITT.

Main st., No. 72, Zanesville, Nov. 4. 63tf

Glass Manufactory.

THE subscriber having dissolved his connexion with the former company, has taken the GLASS WORKS below town under his own management.

WINDOW GLASS, double and single, all seizes, and of superior quality will be kept constantly on hand for sale on reasonable terms.—The experience of the proprietor, in the manufacture of the article, will insure all made to be of the best quality. Call and see.

S. B. JOHNSON.

Zanesville, Ohio, May 6, 1840. 37

O. WHITE, BOOK BINDER, No. 104, Main Street, Zanesville, Ohio.

January 15, 1840. 21tf

New and Cheap Goods.

POTTS & GRAHAM, are now enabled by a fresh arrival of FALL and WINTER GOODS, to offer to the public a very general assortment of all articles in their line. Their stock is almost ENTIRELY NEW, and embraces a complete supply of DRY GOODS, GROCERIES, QUEENSWARE, HARDWARE, &c. All of which they will sell upon such terms, and conduct their business throughout upon such principles, as cannot fail to afford permanent satisfaction to all who may favor them with their custom.

☞Most kinds of country produce, including any quantity of new Butter, will be taken in exchange for goods.

Putnam, Ohio, Nov. 4. 63tf

Dissolution.

THE partnership heretofore existing between S. B. Johnson and J. M. Kirkpatrick, under the firm of S. B. Johnson & Co. was dissolved by mutual consent, on Thursday 19th inst.

S. B. JOHNSON,
J. M. KIRKPATRICK.

Zanesville, March 31, 1840. 32tf

William Green,

CLOCK AND WATCH REPAIRER, SILVERSMITH AND JEWELLER,

CAN be found at his shop on Main street Putnam, a few doors north of J. C. Guthrie's store, where he will do his best to accommodate customers. He keeps on hand an assortment of spectacles, watch trimmings, pencils, &c.

As far as we have tried Mr. GREEN as a watch repairer he has given us good satisfaction.—ED.

April 22, 1840. 35tf.

CABINET AND CHAIR FACTORY.

THE subscribers still continue to manufacture and keep on hand, at their old stand a few doors south of the market house in the town of Putnam, a large assortment of

CABINET WARE AND CHAIRS,

CONSISTING, IN PART, OF

Splendid black walnut and mahogony dressing and plain bureaus,
Peer, card, center, side, dining and breakfast tables,
Sofas, side-boards, washing stands, ottomans,
Dressing and writing tables,
French, fancy and high post bedsteads,
Secretaries, clock cases, cradles, cribs and cradle cases,
Grecian, rush, cane and windsor chairs,
Sociables, settees and children's chairs.

In short every thing in their line necessary to furnish a house, either in high or common style, and at such prices as will satisfy all who will favor them with their custom. All the recommendation they have to offer, is, that they have been able to secure a continuance of their old customers and friends. They hope by the quality of their work and a strict attention to business to share a portion of the public patronage.

They have for sale a lot of first rate black walnut veneering and a lot of bureau knobs of the best kind and quality.

Turning done in the best style and short notice. CHERRY & GR.

Putnam, Ohio, October 28, 1840. 6

THE CHRISTIAN WORL

1. THE editor desires AGENTS in District, in the METHODIST PROTESTANT CHURCH.

2. He desires his friends to secure AGE for him in OTHER CHURCHES.

3. He will allow $25 of every $125, collected, as remuneration.

4. He particularly requests the AGENTS of LETTER-PRESS to continue their agency.

5. He will DEDUCT for any Nos. of Letter-Press not received.

6. He will forward to AGENTS, CIRCULARS, &c.

7. He wishes, quickly, NAMES and RESIDENCES of Agents, with COLLECTIONS.

According to the decision of the Post Master General, subscribers to this work will be charged only ordinary newspaper postage.

The editor takes pleasure in stating that the work has been approved by the voice of the public generally, RELIGIOUS, LITERARY and POLITICAL. The next number will furnish a considerable variety of notices relating to its plan, appearance, &c. Its correspondents are multiplying, including several of the first names in the various churches. THS. H. STOCKTON

Philadelphia, Nov. 4, 1840. 63tf

Puff! Puff! Puff!!

CHEAP!

CHEAPER THAN EVER! GREAT BARGAINS!

New York at your door!

SELLING OFF AT COST

WE so heartily despise the "gull-catching" system that we seldom advertise at all. We however give our friends and the public notice that we have just received a fine stock of

FALL AND WINTER GOODS.

We don't profess to have brought "New York to your doors," nor to undersell every body else, nor to be "selling off at cost," nor to be "closing out and all that sort of thing,—but we do say, that our goods are cheap enough to satisfy any reasonable person, even in these "hard times."

A. A. GUTHRIE & CO.

Putnam, Ohio, September 30, 1840. 3w58

Partnership Notice.

THE subscribers have formed a co-partnership under the firm of POTTS & GRAHAM for the transaction of a general mercantile business; and will occupy for that purpose the old stand of Spear & Helmick, where their friends and others wishing to purchase goods, are respectfully solicited to call.

FRANCIS R. POTTS,
NELSON W. GRAHAM.

Putnam, Ohio, Nov. 4. 63tf

Dissolution.

THE partnership heretofore existing between the subscribers in the PUTNAM FOUNDRY under the firm of HARTLEY & ANDERSON was this day dissolved by mutual consent.

The Putnam Foundry will hereafter be conducted by J. J. Anderson & Co.

LEVI HARTLEY,
JACOB J. ANDERSON.

Putnam, Jan. 1, 1840. (Jan. 29: 23.)

Notice.

ALL persons indebted to the late firm Hartley & Anderson, are earnestly requested to call at the Foundry and make settlement as the change of owners makes this step absolutely necessary. We ask the attention of all persons concerned, to this notice.

J. J. ANDERSON & Co.

Putnam, Jan. 1, 1840. (Jan. 29: 23.)

THE WESTERN RECORDER

IS PUBLISHED EVERY WEDNESDAY.

☞The office of the Recorder is five and a half miles west of Zanesville.

TERMS.

1. The WESTERN RECORDER will be published weekly, on an imperial sheet, at $2 00 per annum, in advance: $2 50 at the end of three months; $3 00 at the end of the year.

2. No discontinuances will be allowed, except at the discretion of the publisher, until all arrearages are paid.

3. To all ministers having regular pastoral charges, who do any thing at all for the paper, if they will direct us where, a copy shall be sent gratis; any other who forward to us $10 00 for new subscribers, shall have six copies sent to any address he may give.

4. All letters designed for the paper, must be directed to "C. Springer, Meadow Farm, Muskingum, Ohio."

5. A failure to notify a discontinuance before the expiration of the subscription year, will be considered a new engagement.

CHARACTER.—The pages of the WESTERN RECORDER will be open to discussion on all moral questions;—it will give articles on Literature, Mechanics, Agriculture,—an abstract of Religious and Political intelligence, and whatever may be interesting and instructive to families in general. A portion of its columns will be open to Advertisements and Prices Current,—another portion to sustain the interests of the Methodist Protestant Church in the West.—These two latter objects will not likely occupy more than one page.

The RECORDER will take a firm stand against Clerical Supremacy.

THE WESTERN RECORDER.

SPRINGER, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER. | Vol. 2.--No. 15. | ZANESVILLE, OHIO, WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 2, 1840. | Whole No. 67. | JOHN W. WHITE, PRINTER.

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM IN ADVANCE. | $2.50, IN THREE MONTHS; $3, END OF YEAR

MISCELLANEOUS.

From the Lady's Book.

PAYING THE DOCTOR.

BY T. S. ARTHUR.

er a day of unusual anxiety and fa-
, Dr. Elton found himself snugly ped up in a liberal quantity of blan-and bed quilts, just as the clock struck e one stormy night in February.—
ver half an hour he had lain awake ng his brain in reference to two or critical cases which were on his s; but tired nature could keep up no r, and the sweet oblivion of sleep stealing over his senses. But just as d lost himself, the bell over his began to ring furiously, and brought nto the middle of the floor in an in-Pushing his head out of the win-he interrogated the messenger beust too late to save that individual ouble of giving the bell-rope another t demonstration of his skill.
r. Marvel want you to come and Charley, immediately," replied the enger.
Why, what's the matter?"
e's got the croup, I believe."
ell him I'll be there in a moment," Dr. Elton, drawing in his head. Huron his clothes, he descended to his
, and possessing himself of some ne-ry medicines, it being too late for the y to send out a prescription, wrap-is cloak around him, and turned out the storm.
was at least half a mile to the resiof Mr. Marvel, and by the time the r arrived there, he was cold, wet, and nfortable, both in mind and body. As-ng to the chamber, he was not a little rised to find Charley, a bright little y of some two years old, sitting up crib as lively as a cricket.
Doctor! we've been so frightened!"
Mrs. Marvel, as Dr. Elton entered. thought Charley had the croup, he ed so loud. But he don't seem to worse. What do you think of him, r?"
Elton felt his pulse, listened to his ation, examined the appearance of in, and then said, emphatically, think you'd better all be in bed!" s better to be scared than hurt, Doc-responded Mr. Marvel. mph!" ejaculated Dr. Elton.
n't you think you'd better give him hing, Doctor?" said Mrs. Marvel.
hat for, ma'am?"
o keep him from having the croup.
you think he's threatened with it?"
ot half as much as I am," replied octor, who made a quick retreat, ng that he should give way too much irritated feelings, and offend a famwho were able to pay.
xt morning, on the debtor side of his r, under the name of Mr. Marvel, lton made this entry: To one night's son, $5. "And it's well for me that able to pay it," added the Doctor, lly, as he replaced the book in the r from which he had taken it.—
ely had this necessary part of the ess been performed, when the same nger who had summoned him the before, came post haste into the of-with the announcement that Mrs. el wanted him to come there immey, as Charley had got a high fever.
dient to the summons, Dr. Elton made his appearance, and found both nd Mrs. Marvel greatly concerned their little boy.
so 'fraid of the scarlet fever, Doc-said Mrs. Marvel. "Do you think it's ning like that?" she continued with anxiety, turning upon Charley a f deep maternal affection.
Elton felt of Charley's pulse, and at his tongue, and then wrote a ription in silence.
hat do you think of him, Doctor?"
the father, much concerned.
's not dangerous, sir. Give him nd if he should grow worse, send
."
Doctor bowed and departed, and d parents sent off for the medicine.
is the form of a very small dose of b, and poor Charley had to have se held tight, and the nauseous stuff down his throat. In the afternoon the doctor called, on being sent for, were some slight febrile symptoms, uent upon excitement and loss of The medicine, contrary to his exion, heightened, instead of allaying and long before night-fall he was oned again to attend his little pa-Much to his surprise, he found him hot skin, flushed face, and quicken-se. Mrs. Marvel was in a state of e alarm.
new there was more the matter im than you thought for, Doctor!"
e mother, while Dr. Elton examin-patient "You thought it was g, but I knew better. If you'd only ibed last night, as I wanted you to, might have been saved."
n't be alarmed, madam," said the
; "there is nothing serious in this It will soon subside."
. Marvel shook her head.
the scarlet fever, Doctor, I know she said, passionately, and bursting ars.
t me beg of you, madam, not to distress yourself. I assure you there is no danger!"

"So you said last night, Doctor; and just see how much worse he is getting!"

As Dr. Elton was generally a man of few words, he said no more, but wrote a prescription, and went away, promising, however, at the earnest request of Mrs. Marvel, to call again that night.

About nine o'clock he called in again, found Charley's fever in no degree abated. Mrs. Marvel was in tears, and her husband was pacing the floor in a state of great uneasiness.

"O, Doctor, he'll die, I'm sure he'll die!" said Mrs. Marvel, weeping bitterly.

"Don't be alarmed, my dear madam," replied the Doctor. "I assure you it is nothing serious."

"O, I'm sure it's the scarlet fever! It's all about now."

"No, madam, I am in earnest when I tell you it is nothing of the kind. His throat is not in the least sore."

"Yes, Doctor, it is sore!"

"How do you know?" responded the Doctor, examining Charley's mouth and throat, which showed not the least symptom of any irritation of the mucous membrane. "It can't be sore from any serious cause. Some trifling swelling of the glands is all that can occasion it, if any exists."

Thus assured, and in a positive manner, Mrs. Marvel's alarm in some degree abated, and after ordering a warm bath, the Doctor retired.

About three o'clock the Doctor was again sent for in great haste. On entering the chamber of his little patient, he found his fever all gone, and he in a pleasant sleep.

"What do you think of him, Doctor?" asked Mrs. Marvel, in a low, anxious whisper.

"I think he's doing as well as he can."

"But aint it strange, Doctor, that he should breathe so low? He looks so pale, and lays so quiet! Are you sure he's not dying?"

"Dying!" exclaimed Dr. Elton,—"he's no more dying than you are! Really, Mrs. Marvel, you torture yourself with unnecessary fears! Nature is only a little exhausted from struggling with the fever, he will be like a new person by morning."

"Do not mistake the case, Doctor, for we are very much concerned," said Mr. Marvel.

"I do assure you, sir, that I understand the case precisely; and you must believe me, when I tell you that no patient was ever in a better way than your little boy."

Next morning among other charges made by Dr. Elton, were two against Mr. Marvel, as follows: To four visits to son, $4. To one night visit to son, $5.

"Not a bad customer!" said the Doctor, with a smile, as he ran up the whole account, and then closed the book.

In the constant habit of sending for the Doctor, on every trifling occasion, whether it occurred at noonday or midnight, it is not to be wondered at that a pretty large bill should find its way to Mr. Marvel at the end of the year. And this was not the worst of it; the health of his whole family suffered in no slight degree from the fact of each individual being so frequently under the influence of medicine. Poor Charley was victimized almost every week; and instead of being a fresh hearty boy, began to show a pale thin face, and every indication of a weakened vital action. This appearance only increased the evil, for both parents, growing more anxious in consequence, were more urgent to have him placed under treatment. Dr. Elton sometimes remonstrated with them, but to no purpose; and yielding to their ignorance and their anxiety, became a party in the destruction of the boy's health.

"What is that, my dear?" asked Mrs. Marvel of her husband some ten months after their introduction to the reader, as the latter regarded with no pleasant countenance, a small piece of paper which he held in his hand.

"Why, it's Dr. Elton's bill."

"Indeed! How much is it?"

"One hundred and fifty dollars!"

"O, husband!"

"Did you ever hear of such a thing?"

"One hundred and fifty dollars, did you say?"

"Yes, one hundred and fifty dollars! Aint it outrageous?"

"It's scandalous! It's downright swindling! I'd never pay it in the world! Who ever heard of such a thing! One hundred and fifty dollars for one year's attendance! Good gracious!"—and Mr. Marvel held up her hands, and lifted her eyes in profound astonishment.

"I can't understand it!" said Mr. Marvel. "Why no body's had a spell of sickness in the family for the whole year.—Charley's been a little sick once or twice; but nothing of much consequence. There must be something wrong about it. I'll go right off and see him, and have an understanding about it at once."

Carrying out the resolution on the instant, Marvel left the house and proceeded with rapid steps towards the office of Dr. Elton. He found that individual in.

"Good morning, Mr. Marvel! How do you do to-day?" said the Doctor, who understood, from his countenance that something was wrong, and had an instinctive preception of its nature.

"Good morning, Doctor! I got your bill to-day."

"Yes, sir; I sent it out."

"But aint there something wrong about it, Doctor?"

"No, I presume not. I make my charges carefully, and draw off my bills in exact accordance with them."

"But there must be, Doctor. How in the world could you make a bill of one hundred and fifty dollars against me?—I've had no serious sickness in my family."

"And yet, Mr. Marvel, I have been called in almost every week, and sometimes three or four times, in as many days."

"Impossible!"

"I'll show you my ledger, if that will satisfy you, where every visit is entered."

"No, it's no use to do that. I know that you have been called in pretty often, but not frequently enough to make a bill like this."

"How many night visits do you suppose I have made to your family, during the year?"

"I'm sure I don't know. Not more than three or four."

"I've made ten!"

"You must be mistaken, Doctor."

"Do you remember that I was called in last February, when you thought Charley had the croup?"

'Yes.'

'And the night after?'

'Yes. That's but two.'

'And the night you thought he had the measles?' 'Yes.'

'And the night after.'

'Yes. But that's only four?'

'And the three times he fell out of bed?'

'Not three times, Doctor!'

'Yes, it was three times. Don't you recollect the knob on his head?'

'Yes, indeed!'

'And the sprained finger?' 'Yes.'

'And the bruised cheek?'

'Well, I believe you are right about that, Doctor. But that don't make ten times,'

'You have not forgotten, of course, the night he told you he had swallowed a pin?'

'No, indeed,' said the father turning pale. 'Do you think there is any danger to be apprehended from its working its way into the heart, Doctor?'

'None at all, I should think. And you remember—'

'Never mind, Doctor, I suppose you are right about that. But how can ten visits make one hundred and fifty dollars?'

'They will make fifty, though, and that is one-third of the bill.'

'You don't pretend to charge five dollars a visit, though, Doctor?'

'For all visits after ten o'clock at night, we are allowed by the law to charge five dollars.'

'Outrageous!'

'Would you get up out of your warm bed after midnight, turn out in a December storm, and walk half a mile for five dollars!'

'I can't say that I would. But then it's your business.'

'Of course it is, and I must be paid for it.'

'And how, Doctor, that don't account for the whole of this exorbitant bill.'

'But one hundred day and evening visits here on my ledger will, though."

'You don't pretend to say you have paid my family a hundred visits, certainly.'

'I will give you day and date for them if necessary.'

'No, it's no use to do that,' said Mr. Marvel, whose memory began to be a little more active. 'I'll give you a hundred dollars, and say no more about it; that is enough in all conscience.'

'I can't do any such thing, Mr. Marvel. I have charged you what was right, and can take nothing off. What would you think of a man who had made a bill at your store of one hundred and fifty dollars, if he were to offer you one hundred when he came to pay, and ask for a receipt in full?'

'But that aint to the point.'

'Aint it, though? I should like to hear of a case more applicable. But it's no use to multiply words about the matter. My bill is correct, and I cannot take a dollar off of it.

'It's the last bill you ever make out of me, remember that, Doctor?' said Mr. Marvel, rising, and leaving the office in a state of angry excitement.

'Well, what does he say?' asked Mrs. Marvel, who had waited for her husband's return with some interest.

'Why, he tried to beat me down that the bill was all right; but I'm too old a child for that. Why would you believe it?—he has charged five dollars for every night visit.'

'Well, that's no better than highway robbery.'

'Not at bit. But it's the last money he ever gets out of me.'

'I'd never call him in, I know. He must think we're made of money.'

'O, I suppose we're the first family he's had who was'nt poor, and he wanted to dig as deep as possible. I hate such swindling, and if it was'nt for having a fuss, I'd never pay him a dollar.'

'He's charged us for every poor family in the neighbourhood, I suppose.'

'No doubt of it. I've heard of these tricks before; but it's the last time I'll submit to have them played off upon me.'

The visit of Mr. Marvel somewhat discomposed the feelings of Dr. Elton, and he had began to moralize upon the unthankful position he held in the community, when he was aroused from his reverie by the entrance of a servant from one of the principal hotels, with a summons to attend immediately a young lady who was thought to be exceedingly ill.

'Who is she?' asked the Doctor.

'She is the daughter of Mr. Smith, a merchant from the east.'

'Is any one with her?'

'Yes, her father.'

'Tell him I will be there immediately.'

In the course of fifteen minutes Dr. Elton's carriage drove up to the door of the hotel. He found his patient to be a young lady of about seventeen accompanied by her father, a middle aged man. Those feelings were much, and anxiously excited. At a glance his practised eye detected symptoms of a serious nature, and a closer examination of the patient convinced him that all his skill would be called into requisition. With a hot, dry skin, slightly flushed face, parched lips, and slimy, furred tongue, there was a dejection, languor, and slight indication of delirium—and much apparent confusion of mind. Prescribing as he thought the case required, he left the room accompanied with the father.

'Well, Doctor, what do you think of her?' said Mr. Smith, with a heavy, oppressed respiration.

'She is ill, sir, and will require attention.'

'But, Doctor, you don't think my child dangerous, do you?' said the father with an alarmed manner.

'It is right that you should know, sir that your daughter is, to all appearance, threatened with the typhus fever. But I don't think there is any cause for alarm, only for great care in her physicians and attendants.'

'O, Doctor, can I trust her in your hands? But I am foolish; I know that there is no one in this city of more acknowledged skill than yourself. You must pardon a father's fears. Spare no attentions, Doctor; visit her at least twice every day, and you shall be paid for your attentions. Save my child for me, and I will owe you eternal gratitude.'

'All that I can do for her, shall be done, sir,' said Dr. Elton.

Just relieved from the care of a dangerous case, in its healthy change, Dr. Elton's mind had relaxed from the anxiety which too frequently burdened it; for a physician's mind is always oppressed while the issue of life or death hangs upon his power to subdue a disease, which may be too deeply seated to yield to the influence of medicine. Now, all the oppressive sense of responsibility, the care, the anxiety, were to be renewed, and felt, with even a keener concern.

In the evening he called in, but there was no perceptible change, except a slight aggravation of all the symptoms. The medicine had produced no visible salutary effect. During the second day, there was exhibited little alternation, but on the morning of the third day, symptoms of a more decided character had superceded—such as suffused and injected eyes, painful deglutition, an oppression in the chest accompanied with a short dry cough, pains in the back, loins, and extremities and a soreness throughout the whole body. These had not escaped the father's observation, and with the most painful anxiety did he watch the countenance of the physician while he examined the case in its new presentation. Much as he tried to control the expression of his face, he felt too deeply concerned and was too conscious of the frequent impotence of medicine, when administered with the most experienced skill.

In the afternoon he called again, and found the father as usual, by the bed side, his patient seemed to be in a narcotic sleep and when roused from it complained of much giddiness, and soon sunk down again in a state of torpor.

'What do you think of her now, Doctor?' asked the father, in a hoarse whisper, on the physician's leaving the chamber of his patient.

'It is impossible to form any correct idea respecting a case like this. I have seen many much worse recover, and have no doubt as far as human calculation will go, that your daughter will get well. But the fever is a tedious one, usually defying all attempts at breaking it. It must run its course, which is usually some ten or fifteen days. All we can do is to paliate, and then to assist nature, when the disease has abated its violence.'

It is not necessary to trace the progress of the disease from day to day, until it reached its climax. When the fever did break, and a soft, gentle moisture penetrated the skin, the patient had but a spark of life remaining. But, as Doctor Elton, in his judicious treatment, had not resorted to venesection nor to any powerful exhibitions of medicine, nature had only to react against the disease, and not against the paralizing effects of medicine; and slowly, but surely, did she begin to recover. Altogether to the skilful treatment of Dr. Elton, as a human agent, did the patient owe her recovery. A less cautious physician, by a single mistake, would have brought all to a fatal end.

At the close of the fifteenth day, when every symptom indicated that convalescence or death would ensue, no one but a physician can imagine the painful, restless anxiety, which was felt by Dr. Elton. He took but little food, and slept hardly any during the night, frequently starting from his brief periods of troubled slumber, in consequence of great nervous excitement.

Early in the morning he called at the room of his patient, trembling, least the first glance should dash every hope to the ground. He entered softly, and perceived the father bending over her with a pale, anxious face. She was asleep. He took her hand, but let it drop instantly.

'What is the matter?' asked the father, in an alarmed whisper, his face growing paler.

'She is safe!' responded the Doctor, in a low whisper, every pulse thrilling with pleasant excitement.

The father clasped his hands, looked upwards a moment, and then burst into tears!

'How can I ever repay you for your skill in saving my child?' he said, after his feelings had grown calmer.

It was nearly a month before the daughter was well enough to return home, during most of which time Dr. Elton was in attendance. For fifteen days he had attended twice a day regularly, and for nearly as long a period once a day.

While sitting in his office one day about three o'clock, waiting for his carriage to come up to the door, Mr. Smith entered, and asked for his bill, as he was about to leave. On examining his account book, Dr. Elton found that he had made about fifty visits, and accordingly he made out his bill fifty dollars.

'How much is this, Doctor?' said Mr. Smith, eyeing the bill with something of doubt in the expression of his countenance.

'Fifty dollars, sir.'

'Fifty dollars! Why, surely, Doctor, you are not going to take advantage of me in that way?'

'I don't understand you, sir.'

'Why, I never heard of such an extravagant bill in my life. I have my whole family attended at home for fifty dollars a year, and you have not been visiting one of them much over a month.'

'Such as the bill is, you will have to pay it, sir. It is just, and I shall not abate one dollar,' responded Dr. Elton, considerably irritated.

Mr. Smith drew out his pocket-book slowly, selected a fifty dollar bill from a large package, handed it to the Doctor, took his receipt, and rising to his feet, said emphatically—

'I am a stranger, and you have taken advantage of me. But, remember, the gains of dishonesty will never prosper!' and turning upon his heel, left the office.

A word to the wise is sufficient; it is therefore needless to multiply scenes illustrative of the manner in which too many people pay the doctor. When any one is sick the doctor is sent for, and the family are all impatient until he arrives. If the case is a bad one, he is looked upon as a ministering angel; the patient's eye brightens when he comes, and all in the house feel more cheerful for hours after. Amid all inclemencies of the weather, at all hours in the day or night, he obeys the summons, and brings all his skill acquired by long study, and by much laborious practice, to bear upon the disease. But when the sick person gets well, the doctor is forgotten; and when his bill appears, complaint at its amount is almost always made, and too frequently, unless he proceed to legal measures, it is entirely withheld from him. These things ought not so to be. Of course, there are many honorable exceptions; but every physician can exclaim:—"Would that their number was greater."

Some persons who are ready to send for the doctor, on every trifling occasion, seem to forget that every time this individual is called in he makes a charge.—Others are strangely oblivious in reference to the number of visits made, and when in the course of a year, the doctor has been summoned some forty of fifty times, will contend that he has not been in the house ten times during the whole twelve months. But, as just said—a word to the wise is sufficient, and so we drop the subject.

Eloquence.—The following "touch of the sublime," was delivered before a court of justice in Pennsylvania:

"Your honors set high upon the adornable seat of justice like the American Eagle perched upon the Asiatic Rock of Gibraltar, while the eternal streams of Justice, like the cadaverous clods of the valley flow meandering at your extended feet."

The post office men sometimes see funny things. A letter, with the following superscription, actually passed through the Newton (Wales) post office:—"To wun Nanny Zindred, as wuz wen a wuz singul, but now a his married to a mon in the Cole pits and livz at the lee holl Bayby Hill."

DEFERRED ARTICLES.

HIGH TIDES.—The Boston Courier of of a late date, says:

"We have noticed for several days that the tide in the bay, west of the city, was remarkably high. The meadows were entirely under water during the flood tides of Friday and Saturday, and on Sunday the lower part of Concord street (formerly the Concord turnpike) was nearly inundated. The Transcript says it overflowed Long, Central and India wharves and extended up nearly to Broad street.

A Counterfeit.—One hundred dollar bills of the Commercial Bank of Lake Erie have been counterfeited and are now in circulation in Green county Ohio. One seen by the Editor of the Torchlight, was of the description, Letter A, No. 433; January 10, 1839, payable to R. Winslow. The engraving is tolerably good, but the paper is dark and greasy, and the filling up badly done. The signature of T. P. Handy, Cashier, is bad and the name misspelled.

The Abolition Candidate.—James G. Birney, the Abolition candidate for the Presidency, received 60 votes in Philadelphia city, and 47 in the county. Total 107, out of 30,016.

A magnificent chandelier, manufactured by Messrs. H. N. Hooper & Co. of Boston, has been lighted in the Hall of the House of Representatives, Washington. It is of cut glass, and of the best workmanship. It has seventy-eight argand burners, arranged in two tiers of horizontal planes, and contains two thousand six hundred and fifty cut glass lustres. The diameter of the chandelier is 13 feet, its weight 7,500 pounds.

A fellow named Gulick, called on Mr. Cline, a butcher in Brooklyn market, N. Y., demanding a fine for non-performance of military duty. Mr. C. told him he had not been notified. He went away, but returned with four carmen, and commenced taking down meat from the hooks, when Mr. Cline not liking that kind of hooking, had Gulick sent to the police.

Governor Cass, our Minister at the French Court, has sent a manuscript work, for publication, to New-York, arising out of his late tour in Egypt, entitled "Considerations upon the history of the Ancient Mexicans, upon their Pictorial Chronicles, and upon the System of Egyptian Hieroglyphic Writing."

By the returns of the Marshals employed to take the census of the city of New-York, it appears that the population is 313,629, of whom 144,324 are white males, and 153,530 are white females.—The colored population amounts to 15,675, of whom 6637 are males, and 9038 females.

The expenses of Great Britain and Ireland, last year, exceeded the revenue by over one million pounds sterling.

The steamboat Le Roy Washington, carrying the mail from Chatahooche to Iola, has been totally lost by an explosion, and six persons lost their lives.

A State Agricultural Society has been formed in New Jersey. A very creditable fair was holden at Trenton on Wednesday. We rejoice to witness these efforts to improve the prime branch of real wealth in our country. They should every where be encouraged.

Fifty ships, of over 400 tons each, are owned in Bath, Maine. It is said the Messrs. Patten made $100,000 by freighting cotton to Europe, last year.

During the 4th week in October, over 90 thousand dollars were received in tolls on the New York State Canal.

Death of Professor Bonnycastle.—A letter from the University of Virginia to a gentleman of Richmond, announces the death of Charles Bonnycastle, Esq., Professor of Mathematics in that institution. This event inflicts a serious loss, not only upon the institution, but upon the cause of Science in Virginia.

Religious Statistics.—The following information, says the New York Commercial Advertiser, collected with much trouble by the Committee of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign parts, is extremely important.

Christians,	260,000,000
Jews,	4,000,000
Mahomedans,	96,090,000
Idolators of all sorts,	500,000,000
Populatian of the world,	860,000,000

A prize.—In New Orleans on the 24th ult., a marriage took place at the St. Louis Cathedral which excited much attention. The bride is beautiful, worth nearly $200,000 and entirely fashionable.—The bridegroom is a creole and a gentleman of high merit.

Melancholy Case of Intemperance.—At Baltimore, on Monday, a man named Antonia fell dead in a store while in the act of drinking a glass of beer. His body underwent a post mortem examination, and his stomach was found to contain nothing but ardent spirits.

WESTERN RECORDER.

WANESVILLE:

WEDNESDAY, ... DECEMBER 2, 1840.

☞Dr. Eldridge.—The Philadelphia Times speaking of Dr. Eldridge's case, says:—"We are told that the lady to whom he was betrothed, nothing dismayed by the power and influence of his enemies, nothing altered by the number or heinousness of the crimes charged against him, still loves him with that intensity of feeling for which woman is remarkable, and which nothing but a woman could feel, for a disgraced, however innocent individual; and intends the moment he is free from his persecutors, to unite her fortunes with his own, despite the frowns of a cold calculating world in order to show her full, implicit, and undiminished confidence in his integrity."

We believe it is exceedingly difficult to conviet this man; and we know that a New York Jury would not do it, upon such testimony as has been advanced.—The case of Redman, tried some years since in this city, is too familiar—or at least its principle features are too well recollected. Upon the positive oath of a bank clerk, to his identity with the person who offered the forged check, he was among other evidence convicted and sentenced. He went to the penitentiary, and after this disgrace had been inflicted upon him it was positively ascertained that he was not the criminal. It is a hard thing for a man to swear to the face of a comparative or entire stranger, whom he has seen once or even oftener across a counter.—Br. Jonathan.

The New Cabinet.—Our neutral position permits us to speculate on political affairs with more freedom than the partizan press. A whig newspaper would not for the world commit so great an impropriety, as to discuss the formation of the Cabinet. Without intending, to interfere with General Harrison's arrangements, we do not think it necessary to act the part of the tongue-tied.

The impression seems to be that neither Mr. Clay nor Mr. Webster, should enter the Cabinet. General Jackson was not so great a fool as they tried to make him out, when he talked of an Unit Cabinet. It is of the right fashion, and one who attempts any thing different must be a poor Cabinet maker. No Presidential Candidates should be permitted to embarrass public affairs with their dissensions.

On one appointment, the public mind seems to be pretty well settled. The office of Postmaster General is generally conceded to Mr. Ewing, of Ohio. A better, and a more honest man cannot be found.

The Secretary of the Treasury will be John Davis, of Massachusetts, if he will accept the place; and Mr. Webster should decline to take a seat. Otherwise, Mr. Verplanck will answer admirably well—no one better. The reputation which he has won as a financier, both in Congress, and the Senate of this State, has elevated him to a distinguished place in the estimation of the public, and New-York would be highly gratified by the appointment.

Having disposed of this office, we are at a loss to know whom to make Secretary of the Navy. Mr. Southard is talked of, but we cannot spare all our able men from the Senate. Besides, Southard has had the office once already, and we see no especial reason why he should have it again.

The Secretaryship of State is considered the head of the Cabinet. For the first twelve years of our history, the "Chancellor of the Exchequer was" the first man; but Mr. Jefferson determined to change the order of things, because he had been mortified by the precedence given to Mr. Hamilton. At the first dinner of Mr. Jefferson after his inauguration, he took Mrs. Madison by the hand and conducted her to the table, thus intimating the priority of rank which he was disposed to assign to her husband, then Secretary of State. From that time to this the precedency has been conceded to the State department. We are not quite prepared to make the appointment to this place. Mr. Preston would do honor to do it. He is well versed in our foreign affairs, acquainted with European politics, and is moreover an accomplished gentleman, well calculated to receive and entertain the diplomatists resident at the metropolis. His talents are of the highest order; and if it were not for his preeminence as a rhetorician, better justice would be rendered to his great abilities as a politician and statesman. He is a man of tact, intelligence, liberal views and elevated character. We can designate no one who would fill the station with more credit to himself and honor to the country.

Mr. Bell, of Tennessee, has been suggested for the War department. We do not know that a better man can be named. Mr. Crittenden, of Kentucky, would figure as a first rate Attorney General—and thus our cabinet is complete.

Now, it would puzzle Gen. Harrison's Committee to make out a cabinet superior to this. Let us see—Preston, Davis, Bell, Southard, Crittenden and Ewing. If any body can suggest a better we should like to hear from him. Meanwhile we shall let this stand as the cabinet that any jury of twelve sane Whigs would unanimously approve. We have given nothing to Virginia because she has enough already; nor to Pennsylvania, though it might be difficult to designate an individual who would do more honor to a cabinet than John Sergeant—nor to New York, although Mr. Verplanck would make the next best Secretary of the Treasury to John Davis.—New World.

The Next Congress.—According to the present indications the Whigs will have a majority of four to six in the next U. S. Senate—and a clear majority at any rate. For the House of Representatives 140 members have already been chosen, of whom the Whigs have a majority of fifteen. Two hundred and two remain to be elected, and if they are of the same politics, as those who now have their seats, the whig majority in the House will be about 26. In the present House the Van Buren men have a majority of six; and in the Senate of nine; there being five vacancies.—Bro. Jonathan.

Murder.—We learn that a most atrocious murder was perpetrated near Springfield, Livingston parish, in this State, on Sunday the 18th ultimo, on the body of a young man named Hutchinson, of irreproachable character. The murderer is supposed to be a man by the name of Jerry Durbin, from circumstances connected with the parties, and he having immediately left the country, stating to his brother that he was going to Tennessee.

The incidents which led to the melancholy affair, as we learned them, are as follows:

Durbin had married the cousin of the deceased, but had for a considerable time been separated from her; during that period he had again married. Mr. Hutchinson gave permission to his cousin to occupy his house, which he had erected preparatory to being married himself, which resulted in jealousy on the part of Durbin; and to wreak his vengeance, he sought an opportunity when Hutchinson and his cousin, accompanied by another lady, were returning from meeting. He was shot from his horse by a gun loaded with buckshot. The females were thrown from their horses, and one of them discovered a man running from the place were the murder was committed, but in their confusion could not identify him.—As soon as the neighbors were apprised of the unhappy affair, they repaired to the place and found one of the horses tied fast, and the body laid out with the arms folded across the breast. A gun was also found near the body, discharged of one load, and known to have belonged to said Durbin.—Louisiana paper.

The D'Hautville Case.—This case, which has created such a sensation in the fashionable world for some months past, was decided by the Judges of the General Sessions, Messrs. Barton, Conrad, and Doran, on Saturday last. The parties having assembled in Court, Judge Barton proceeded to read the written opinions of the Court. In it he took a view of the principal points of the evidence offered, commenting in proper terms upon each. In the course of his remarks, he paid a just tribute to the conduct of Mrs. Sears, who instead of wishing to bring the husband and wife into collision, endeavored by every means in her power to soothe and reconcile them, frequently enduring rudeness and even insult. He adverted to the intense affection shown by Mrs. D'Hautville for her infant, and noticed the opinion of the physicians who had delivered their evidence before the Court, as to the expediency of removing the child to a colder climate, it being Mr. D'Hautville's expressed intention, should he obtain possession of it, to return immediately to Switzerland. He also spoke of its tender age and sickly condition as demanding those cares which none but a mother can bestow, and after adducing numerous authorities to support the opinion which the Court had formed, adjudged that the child should be delivered into the charge and possession of its mother.—U. S. Gazette.

Gen. John Armstrong.—This venerable gentleman, now in his 84th year, and still in the full possession of his uncommon faculties, is in the city on a visit to his son-in-law, Wm. B. Astor, Esq.—One of his objects is, to revise the proof sheets of the concluding volume, now about to appear, of his History of the last War.

Gen. Armstrong is one of the few remaining links that connect us with the men of other days, with the heroic race of the Revolution. He has, too, in our days, filled high and responsible offices: Senator in Congress, Minister to France, Major General of our Armies, Secretary at War—he has occupied a space allotted to few men—and now in vigorous old age, has become the historian of a part, and not the least eventual part of the scenes in which he was a prominent actor.—American.

Execution of Robert M'Conachy, the Murderer of the Brown Family.—We learn from the Huntingdon Advocate and Sentinel, that this unfortunate being was executed in the jail yard, a few minntes before three o'clock, P. M. on the 6th.

Down to the hour of his execution, nay to the very moment the drop fell, he stubbornly persisted in asserting his innocence. All hope of his making any acknowledgement was entirely removed by his dogged conduct. He was taken upon the scaffold—every thing was adjusted—the moment arrived—the drop fell!—and not a word confessed. But the rope broke, and instead of hanging, very much to his own astonishment, we suppose, he found himself upon the ground under the gallows! He thought he was "clear" but the illusion was present with him but a moment. He was immediately taken up on the gallows again—every thing made ready—the drop about to fall!—when he begged for "time to talk a little"—and proceeded to make a full confession of his crime to the clergymen present, Mr. Brown and Mr. Peebles, who reduced it to writing in his own words, as he made it, and who will cause it to be published. His confession, it is said, casts yet deeper and darker shades of cruelty over the bloody affair!

He had scarcely concluded his confession, when the last minute that the execution could be delayed arrived—and he was again swung off, and paid his life a forfeiture for his crimes!

Singular Will.—An English miser, John Pleoch, lately died in London, leaving the following will: "I give and bequeath to my nephew my old black coat; I give and bequeath to you my niece the flannel waistcoat, I now wear; I give and bequeath to each my sister's grandchildren one of the earthern pots, on the top of my wardrobe: finally, I give and bequeath to my sister, as a last token of the affections I have always felt for her, the brown stone jug at the head of my bed." The disappointment of the legatees, when this strange will was read, may easily be imagined. The deceased was spoken of by all in a way by no means flattering to him—and his sister, in a fit of anger, gave the brown jug, her legacy, a kick, which broke it to pieces; when lo! a complete stream of guineas flowed out of it, and the general disappointment gave way to joy. Each hurried to examine his or her legacy, and the flannel waistcoats and little earthern pots, were found equally well filled, the testator having only wished to cause them an agreeable surprise.

Electricity.—It has been ascertained from careful and often repeated experiments, that the electric fluid travels at the astonishing and inconceivable velocity of two hundred thousand miles in a single second of time! So that if a wire were passed around this globe of ours, this subtle agent would traverse the circumference, about twenty-four thousand miles, in about the ¼ part of a second!

Charitable Bequests.—The late John Whitaker, Esq., an opulent cotton manufacturer, of Higher Hurst, in the parish of Ashton-under-Line, has devised the interest of £100 to the Methodists' New Connection Sunday School, Higher Hurst, and made a liberal provision for the support of his aged work-people, having left them four shillings per week each for life.

☞Extraordinary Accession to Fortune.—A late Maidstone Journal states that a journeyman paper maker, named Robert Howard, who formerly worked at the Ivy Mill near that town received the unexpected information that a chancery suit, which had been pending fifty years, had terminated in his favor, putting him in possession of £200,000—£50,000 of which, by a previous engagement entered into many years ago, and which with the suit itself, was almost forgotten, goes to the attorney who succeeded in bringing the suit to a successful termination.

Earthquake.—The Philadelphia Inquirer of Monday says that shortly after 9 o'clock on Saturday evening, the buildings in various parts of that city trembled and shook for several seconds, as if through the agency of an earthquake.—Many of the citizens were alarmed and the panic which immediately succeeded the shock, especially to those who were in situations of quiet and repose, calculated fully to experience the terrible sensation—was marked by a feeling of awe and solemnity. The waters of the Delaware were agitated by a heavy and unusual swell at the same time.

Discovered Relics of Antiquity.—Several relics of antiquity have been discovered by the excavation of a Roman villa at Broham, Wilts. Among them are 2 coins struck in London by Constantine the Great, one upon the dedication of his father, Constantius, who died at the imperial palace at York, A. D. 306, the other in honor of his son Crispus, whose cruel death left so indeliable a stain on the character of the first Christian Emperor. A great number of persons daily visit the scene of these operations.

Betting on Elections.—With great regret we have to chronicle that very large sums were bet on the late elections. In New York city alone, it is said that more than $500,000 were lost on the result of the elections in Pennsylvania.—Great sums were also lost on the New York elections; and we learn such was the case in other States. Cordially disapproving of betting on elections, we have ever felt called upon, in the columns of this journal, to urge people not to bet. It is an interference with the purity of the elective franchise, which no one can too strongly reprobate. There have been instances of persons betting as high as $10,000 on a single result: and some have had different bets amounting to double that sum, as we have been confidently assured.—Sat. Cour.

Dr. Eldridge Acquitted—The trial of this individual, for frauds on various banks, at last terminated on Saturday morning. The jury came into Court several times, and reported that they were unable to agree; they were out during three days and nights. It is understood that eleven of the jurors were for acquitting, soon after they first retired; but the twelfth one held out until Saturday morning.—We are told that this acquittal will not prevent the trial of the Doctor on the other distinct charges that have been preferred against him; and that he is to be so tried. The charge of Judge Conrad is a very lucid one, and we regret we have not room for it in our columns.—Sat. Cour.

Fire in New Orleans.—The New Orleans papers give the particulars of a destructive fire in Lafayettee, at the corner of Nun and New Levee streets.—The Crescent says: "The number of houses consumed was about fifteen. Several indigent families were turned out of doors, with the loss of nearly all their furniture. We saw several women, frantic with alarm, making their escape from the flames, with their infant children wrapped in the blankets snatched from their burning beds." A fireman was very seriously wounded.

One hundred and Ten Years old.—There is a man living in Jackson township, in this county, says the Rochville Olive Branch, by the name of Conard Eisla, who was 110 years of age in March last. He was a captain in the war of the revolution and commanded a company at the battle of the Brandywine. Although Captain Eisla is very infirm, and his mind has lost much of its natural vivacity, yet when the revolutionary struggle is mentioned, his eye kindles with the fire of youth.

Destructive Machine.—A London paper mentions a newly invented exploding machine, so powerful "that 100 sail of the line might be destroyed by a single small ship, constructed on the new principle." No description is given of the destroying machine.

FOREIGN NEWS.

From Bicknell.

ARRIVAL OF THE STEAM SHIP CALEDONIA.

IMPORTANT NEWS!

The Caledonia steam packet arrived at Boston on Thursday at 1 P. M. She brings us important intelligence, but happily of a pacific character.—The French ministry has been changed—Louis Phillippe favors the policy of peace, and there is every probability of an amicable adjustment of the Eastern question, although it is still surrounded with difficulties. The English funds have improved, and the money market generally was more cheerful than at our previous dates. By this arrival, we have London and Liverpool papers of the 4th instant, and Paris of the 2nd.

It will be seen that the Queen Regent of Spain has abdicated. There is a rumor of the probable abdication of Louis Phillippe, and also of the Emperor of Austria. Indeed, the movements amongst the European Governments, both actual and expected, are of an extraordinary character. The ports of Syria are blockaded, and indeed the entire coast of that country, by the allied fleet.

We are indebted to the New York Commercial Advertiser for an account of the foreign intelligence, and to the New York Sun for an extra.

The Caledonia left Liverpool at 3 o'clock of the afternoon of the 4th, arrived at Halifax at 3 o'clock in the afternoon of the 17th, and at Boston on the 19th at 1 o'clock, P. M., thus making the passage two hours short of 15 days, notwithstanding the weather was very boisterous almost the whole passage.

The Columbia was expected to be ready to leave by the 4th. She had arrived at Liverpool, but it was deemed the most prudent course to send off the Caledonia, although she had been in port but five days. She arrived out after a passage of eleven days from Halifax, and was three hours less than thirty-four days absent from Boston.

The Great Western which left New York on the 10th of October arrived at Bristol on the 24th.

The British Queen departed from Portsmouth on the 2d, and had been compelled to put into Sterling, Scotland.

FRANCE.

Resignation of the Ministry.—This event took place on the 22d of October; not unexpectedly except as to time; it was looked for, but not before the meeting of the Chambers. The immediate cause is said to have been a difference of opinion between the King and M. Theirs, in relation to the speech from the throne. The particulars are thus given by the correspondent of the Times:

On Thursday night a Cabinet Council was held at St. Cloud, under the Presidency of the King, to consider the terms of the speech with which it was proposed that his Majesty should open the sessions of the Chambers. The passage in it which referred to the crisis that has been produced by the treaty of the 15th of July was couched in terms of hostility, defiance, and even of menace. On this the King observed, that it would be highly inexpedient to introduce into the discourse expressions calculated to alter the pacific character which the Eastern question had within a few days assumed. Mons. Theirs persisted in his view of the subject, contending, with much animation, that it was necessary France should assert her independence and maintain her rank in the world.

The King agreed with him in that sentiment, but remained of opinion, that the proposed mode of declaring it was objectionable and dangerous.' Passing to another paragraph in the draught of his speech, in which direct reference was made to Egypt and Mehemet Ali, Admiral Roussin, minister of marine, objected that 'it went to bind France to the maintenance of the government of Egypt in the family of Mehemet Ali for ever,' that 'nobody ever heard of hereditary claims to a Pachalic or Government by any subject of the Porte;' 'that with the possessors perished the office,' &c. The set arguments were concurred in by the King, and supported by the ministers of war and finance (Gen. Cubieres and M. Pelet de la Lozerre,) and at midnight M. Theirs resigned.

Marshal Soult was sent for by the King, and a new ministry was quickly formed as follows:—

Marshal Soult,	President and Minister of War.
M. Guizot,	Foreign Affairs.
M. Duchatel,	Interior.
M. Humann,	Finance.
M. Villemain,	Public Instruction.
M. Martin (du Nord)	Justice.
Admiral Duperre,	Marine.
M. Cunin Gridane.	Commerce.
M. Teste,	Public Works.

Another account says that the difference between the King and M. Theirs was not upon the tone of the speech, but upon a distinct proposition introduced in it, for a vote sanctioning a farther addition of some 100,000 men to the army; this the King objected to, as almost equivalent to a declaration of war, and the minister persisted.

TURKEY AND EGYPT.

The latest intelligence from the seat of operations was by telegraph at Paris on the first inst. from Toulon the 31st of October. Beyrout had been taken possession of by the allies; the Emir Beschir had abandoned the cause of Mehemet Ali and surrendered to the English. He arrived at Malta on the 27th, on board the English steamer Cyclops, with fifteen members of his family, and a suite of one hundred and fifteen persons, on his way to England. This revolt against Mehemet was spreading throughout the mountains.

SPAIN.

ABDICATION OF THE QUEEN REGENT.

Intelligence of this event was received in London on the 20th of October. The autograph act of abdication was signed on the 12th, having been preceded by a dissolution of the Cortes. The following account is given by the correspondent of the London Chonicle:

The Queen had made up her mind to quit Spain before Espartero and her new ministers arrived. It is known that she consented to their appointment. When they reached Valencia, and proceeded to an interview with the Queen, they stated to her the situation of affairs at Madrid, the anxious expectations of the people, and the necessity of calming them by a kind of address or manifesto, promising the withdrawal of the municipal law, as well as the submission to the future Cortes for discussion or that modification of the regency for which certain parties clamored.

Her majesty was averse alike to any statement of disapprobation of the municipal law, or to any allusion to the question of the regency. She demanded from the ministers present a note in writing of these their recommendations and demands. This, with some hesitation, was drawn up, it being the wish of the ministers to merely allude to the regency question, and not offend the Queen with conditions which the Cortes might reject.

On receiving and perusing the note of her ministers, the Queen Regent withdrew and sent for Espartero, with whom she had a short conference. Espartero quitted the Queen with a countenance full of emotion, brought the ministers instantly to his apartments, and there informed them that she had already drawn up and signed her abdication of the regency, which she seemed determined to persevere in.

After some consultation among themselves Espartero and the ministers returned to the Queen and used their utmost efforts to dissuade her from the extreme of a revolution. All represented to her that the difficulties and disagreeableness of the moment were not so great as she imagined. Senor Ferrer then observed that, if Queen Christina insisted on abdicating and on retiring to Naples, as she proposed, she must leave the young Queen Isabella to the guardianship of the nation, and must also give up the public property vested in her as Queen and Regent. Christina made no difficulty with respect to Queen Isabella, but the demand of her resigning her right over all property seemed to cause her some hesitation. She said she would reflect upon it till next day. The next day, however, she was resolved on abdicating, and withdrawing to Naples at all events; and she handed the act of abdication, which had been ready on the first day, to Senor Ferrer. The ministers accordingly announced the event to the nation. They themselves are, by the constitution, invested with the Regency till the meeting of the Cortes. And the ordonnances for the dissolution and convocation will be published immediately.

An American Packet Fired Upon.—The packet ship South America, from New York for Liverpool, was fired upon on the 2d inst. just as she was entering the channel, by an English yatch full of men. The yatch proved to be a revenue crusier, and the conduct of her officer in command is severely censured by the Liverpool papers.

From the Liverpool Standard.

Our reporter has been on board the South America, and was shown one of the cabin dead lights, of the starboard side, which bears a deep indenture, or hole, evidently made by a ball, apparently considerably larger than a musket ball. It has perforated a piece of canvass outside of the dead light, or shutter. The size of the gun or guns fired is not known but some of those on board conjecture that the weapon was a swivel gun. The first officer of the ship suggests that she might have been a revenue vessel; but this is not very probable, inasmuch as she did not show a pennant. Besides, it is rather "sharp practice" for revenue vessel to fire into ships, unless they have refused to lie to on being summoned to do so, and are making sail to escape, and thus affording strong ground of suspicion that they are engaged in illicit traffic. As the matter stands, investigation, on the part of the proper authorities becomes imperative.

GREAT BRITAIN.

John Holman, an under-graduate of Cambridge University, killed himself with laudanum, in consequence of failing to pass his examination. He was studying for the ministry.

The Queen was still at Windsor on the 4th instant, but very anxious for her removal to Buckingham Palace, where preparations were going on as fast as possible.

The grand jury having found a bill against the Earl of Cardigan, for felony in fighting a duel with Captain Tuckett, his lordship will be capitally tried by the House of Lords.

Among the deaths we notice the name of Lord Holland, Admiral Fleming, recently appointed Governor of Greenwich hospital, and Major Jenkins, of the 11th Hussars, Mr. Sparkes, banker of Guildford.

Collision of Two Steam Vessels.—Copious details are given of the loss of the splendid steamer, the Phenix, a regular trader between Havre and London, belonging to a French company. She was lost at sea, off Dungeness, by coming in collision, at about nine o'clock in the evening, with the steamer Britannia, a powerful ship in the same trade, belonging to the General Steam Navigation Company.

At the time the vessels came in sight of each other, the Britannia was keeping her course, and she saw the Phenix approaching and altered her helm. The Britannia, at the same time altered her helm for the purpose of going clear of the Phenix, which, however, still kept coming down upon the Britannia. As soon as the Britannia discovered that there was no possibility of avoiding the Phenix, the engines were stopped and the order gave to back astern, but before the latter operation could be effected the collison took place, the Britannia striking the Phenix just before the paddle box on the starboard side, the weakest point of the steam vessel and cut her down to the water's edge.

The Phenix immediately began to sink and the boats of both vessels were lowered, and saved the whole of the passengers and crew of the Phenix, who were taken on board the Britannia. The Phenix went down in 35 fathom water, before the boats reached the Britannia, and was irrecoverably lost.

The Phenix was commanded by Capt. Lefort, a Frenchman, but with an English crew. The loss of vessel and cargo is estimated at £50,000.

The Britannia had her stem knocked away, and a portion of her larboard bow stove in by the collision. The hole was stopped up with blankets and tarpaulin by the crews of both vessels, and the interior covered over with canvass to prevent the water pouring in.

AUSTRIA.

Rumored Abdication of the Emperor of Austria.—The Magdeburgh Gazette of the Universal Gazette of Leipzic publishes the following correspondence from the banks of the Danube, dated the 14th inst.

"It is announced that an European sovereign of the first order has an intention of imitating the example of the King of Holland, by abdicating. Other reports with more probability, qualify this report by stating that this monarch merely intends to divide the sovereignty with his brother under the title of co-regent in order to be able to act with more energy at a period which requires the greatest firmness."

ITALY.

Vesuvius Preparing.—We learn from Naples, 4th ult., that subterranean commotions have for several days been perceptible along the whole of the ground which crosses the road leading from the frontiers of Citerios Calabria to the Roman States, and that Vesuvius had for two days been emitting dense volumes of smoke, spreading a sulphureous odor so that an eruption of the mountain was expected.

ARRIVAL OF THE BRITISH QUEEN.

The British Queen arrived at New York on Saturday morning. Her dates are only to the 31st from London, but she has enabled us to complete our files and thus to connect the chain of intelligence. She did not put back as reported.

The Queen made her passage out in 16 days.

Mr. Guizot, at the time of his appointment to the French Ministry was ambassador to London.

The Baron de Bourqueney had been accredited as the French Charge d'Affaires to the Court of England, previous to the departure of M. Guizot.

The abdication of the Queen Regent of Spain, was received by telegraphic despatch at Barcelonia. It is dated the 15th and states that the Queen had determined to resign before her interview with the new ministers at Valencia. Her only hesitation appears to have been in resigning the property vested in her as Queen and Regent. [She is reported to have amassed an immense fortune since the death of Ferdinand.

Fire at the Dock Yard in Toulon.—A letter from Toulon of the 15th inst. states that an alarm was spread the preceding evening that a fire had broke out at the naval arsenal at that port. About ten o'clock the report was first given, and an alarm gun was fired, which filled the whole city with consternation. A large body of troops mustered without arms on the Champ de Mars to be ready to act as required. In less than ten minutes, more than 4,000 persons had assembled before the gates of the arsenal ready to lend their assistance but fortunately their services were not required, as the men employed on the establishment were able to extinguish the flames before they gained any head. The damage done was very trifling, but at a moment like the present the greatest alarm was at first felt. The fire was solely the result of accident.

HE RECORDER.

ZANESVILLE.

ONESDAY, ... DECEMBER 2, 1840.

e say to all itinerant ministers, in any of onferences, who will do any thing for our , if they will tell us where to direct, we end them a copy gratis.

---

e carding machine and woollen factory of Messrs. Dares, on the canal, near the upper e over the Muskingum, was consumed by a the night of the 24th ult. No insurance.

CHAMBERS, son of our old fellow citizen, David Chambers, was buried a few days . This makes the third physician, in our , which has gone to the tomb in less than ear. The other two were Drs. Turner and es.

HEAT, in this town, has gone down to 44 , as we anticipated in a former paper; and bly will so remain until the present supply ound up, when the millers will raise again to out a new supply. The prices of Flour, at east, have been, recently, rather tending nwards. We see nothing to encourage the er to expect a raise in Wheat higher than nts for the present crop, and, indeed, from ent prospects, it is probable a considerable ion of it will be sold for less than that.
ORK, we should judge from present indica- s, will bring from 3,50 to $4 for good. We ld advise the farmer to hold on for that at resent.
AY is 6,00 dollars per ton.
ORN, from 20 to 25 cents.
ATS, 15 to 20 cents.
UTTER, 12 to 15 cents, in market.

HE WEATHER.—We have heard from our ghbors all round us having received a plenti- supply of snow, while we have had none, un- ast week we were favored with barely enough hiten the surface of the earth.

---

ur fellow citizen, Robert Hazlett, sr., pur- ed a lot of goods in Philadelphia, some two hree months since, which were forwarded to ssrs. Taylor & Keys, Baltimore, thence by a oner named Wonderly, or a similar name, st. The goods, not having been heard from e, it was supposed the wagoner had proved eant to his trust, and made off with them.— ently the goods have been discovered by the ce of Philadelphia in an untenanted house r Fairmount. It is supposed the wagoner murdered by a gang of villains, who have ta- possession of the property.

INISTERIAL IMPRUDENCE.—Less than a thou- d miles from here, and while the political con- t was at its highest, previous to the late elec- n, a clergyman was opening the services of olic worship; in addressing a Throne of Grace, prayed fervently for the nation's weal, and ecially that God would bless all men in au- rity, &c. A presiding elder, behind him, in pulpit, responded aloud, so that the congre- ion heard him: "Yes, Lord! bless them, and n them every one out of office."

The Rev. S. J. Harris, of North Carolina, a nister of the Methodist Protestant Church, in prime of life and usefulness, has recently arted this life, with disease of the heart. He s a member of the late General Conference in ttsburgh.

WESTERN WORLD AND WEEKLY MESSENGER the title of a family newspaper, the first num- r of which is before us, published by Henkle, gan & Co., Louisville, Ky. It is a large fine king sheet. The Messenger will no doubt an interesting Weekly to those who can relish nething beside political and ecclesiastical con- versies, from which it promises to abstain.— . M. HENKLE & C. B. PARSONS are the editors; tty well yoked, we should say.

The Protestant of the 21st ultimo, states that . W. Ball, of Petersburgh circuit, Va., says, at during the late conference year, there have en converted in that field of labor 150,—80 of om have attached themselves to the Methodist rotestant Church.

"Birds of a feather,
Will flock together."

Bishop Smith, of the Protestant Episcopal hurch, of Ky., has written a letter to the clergy the Methodist Episcopal Church of the Ken- cky Conference, proposing a union between e two churches for various reasons which he signs, one of which is the congeniality existing tween the two governments, &c. The editor of e South Western Christian Advocate, in his marks upon this letter, thinks that for the M. . Church, "to give up their name and distinct- reness, would be like swallowing up the sun in e brilliancy of the moon beams."

We learn from the Protestant of the 14th ul- imo, which gives an extract from the minutes of e late Kentucky Conference of the Methodist piscopal Church, that M. M. Henkle had re- oined that church and taken the "vow of office" pon him. The editor seems astounded at the act, and somewhat at a loss to account for so trange a procedure.

We would inform the editor that Br. H. took he liberty to kiss another man's wife, who hap- ening to catch him at the act, made him run foot race through the streets of Cincinnati, by way of chastisement for his impertinence, under circumstances which tremendously alarmed him. We rather suspect the cause of his joining the M. E. Church, is, he was afraid if he should con- tinue where he was, that this gentleman might give him such another foot race, and he has "fled" to the old fold as a kind of "city of re- fuge from the avenger of blood." Do not mis- take us, though, to insinuate that we think our old friend was guilty of any capital offence. Far be it from us to give countenance to any such suspicion. It was, however, one of those acts of imprudence that ministers should ever avoid, and if they do not, are every moment liable to be injured in their reputation from miscon- struction.

The same editor seems at a loss to know what is meant by this "vow of office" which Br. H. took upon him. Probably the ceremony of this "vow" is something like that described in Ex- odus xxi, 5, 6, where it is provided, that, if the servant does not wish to avail himself of the privileges of the jubilee, by which he was made free; should he "plainly say, I love my master," —"I will not go out free; then his master shall bring him to the door post, and shall bore his ear through with an awl, and he shall serve him for ever." Take the "vow," upon him, of per- petual servitude.

All the ordinations Br. H. ever received, if we are not mistaken, were from the Methodist Episcopal Church. But as he had proved recre- ant to his trust, and had said and written so many hard things against his old mother, it is highly probable she could not have confidence in him until she swore him, and we should think, hardly then.

Some person, a short time since, forwarded us the 352 whole No. of the Pittsburgh Christian Advocate. It contains some editorial strictures on the resolution of the Pittsburgh Conference of the M. P. Church in relation to Mr. Shinn's book; and also some strictures on an article from the Protestant, which makes some allusion to the papacy of the Methodist episcopal govern- ment. The whole is as weak as puddle water, and shows the vaporings of a small but self-suffi cient mind. We give the two following extracts from the latter article:

"Writers of other denominations," as this writ- ter does, may class our Bishops "and their subor- dinate, presiding elders, with the Pope of Rome and his Vicegerents," but if God be with us, a thousand such writers will only afford us an oc- casional opportunity to enjoy the pleasurable ex- citement of composition.

Again:

"To writers of all denominations against us we would say: say your prayers and be as good as you can, get as many sinners converted as you can, get as many of your converts to join you as you can, teach them the way to heaven as well as you can, and let your neighbors go and do like- wise; and when you come to die, your rejoicing will be, among other things, that you have touch- ed not the ☞Lord's anointed and have done His prophets no harm."

The editor seems to think if "God is for them" they shall be very complaisantly secure. Judging from their actions, we should suppose that church, for some years past, has relied more on her wealth and numbers, for success, than on the Supreme Being. The way they have taken advantage of honest and confiding people in cheating them out of their meeting house property, by an art- ful Trust Deed, is an abuse of confidence, and is beneath the character of honorable and high- minded men. They are more indebted to this piece of Jesuistry for success, a thousand times over, than to the grace of God; we allude to modern Methodism.

The editor's instructions to all "denomina- tions" to "say their prayers," evinces such an amount of vanity as produces perfect nausea.— Who is this editor that he would, with such a swell of importance, direct men, perhaps, a thou- sand times better than himself, to go to their "prayers?" How wonderfully high does he feel himself above his fellows, since raised by the episcopacy (not by merit) to the editorship.— He must have been the person that gave rise to the following stanzas:

Once on a time a paper kite
Was mounted to a wonderous height,
Where, giddy with its elevation,
It thus express'd self admiration:

"See how yon crowds of gazing people
Admire my flight above the steeple;
How would they wonder if they knew
All that a kite like me could do!

"Were I but freed I'd take a flight,
And pierce the clouds beyond their sight!"
It tugg'd and pull'd while thus it spoke,
To break the string—at last it broke!

Ah, foolish kite! thou hadst no wing;
How couldst thou fly without a string?
Unable its own weight to bear,
It flutter'd downward through the air!

Unable its own course to guide,
The wind soon plung'd it in the tide,
Batter'd, torn, and lost beside,
The victim of its foolish pride!

HYMENEAL.

MARRIED.—On Thursday evening last, by the Editor of this paper, Mr. RICHARD FLOWERS to Miss ELIZABETH BUMBAUGH, both of Spring- field township.

ITEMS.

ANOTHER CHANGE.—Mr. C. B. Parsons, the quandom actor, then preacher, then actor again, and the preacher again has turned editor at last, and joined the Louisville Messenger.—Brother Jonathan.

The Baltimore Patriot says: There was an- other great rise of the tide last evening in our harbor, the water overflowing many of the wharves and inundating the low grounds in the vicinity of the city. An old resident, a mer- chant on one of the wharves, informs us that the tide rose higher last evening than he ever before observed it, with but one exception, and that occurred many years since.

ALTERED NOTES OF A BROKEN BANK. —Five dollar notes of the broken Com- mercial Bank of Millington, altered so as to read 'Commercial Bank of New York,' are in circulation, without alteration of signatures.

FRAUD.—Our western friends must be on their guard against spurious bank notes purporting to be of the Lebanon Bank, New Hampshire. There is no such bank. Considerable amounts of this faudulent paper have been sent here from Ohio within the last few days.—N. Y. American.

NEW COUNTERFEIT.—Counterfeit Trea- ury notes of the denomination of 50 dol- lars, of good imitation and well calculated to deceive the most scrutinizing eye are in circulation in various parts of the coun- try.—Wheeling Gazette.

Grenville Mellen, the poet, has sailed from New York for Havana; and, we deeply regret to add, in a very precarious state of health.

The Chartists in England are against the pres- ent war measures.

Eight years' time can be saved in 40 years, by getting out of bed at six instead of eight in the morning. Try it, drones.

A destructive fire broke out in the store of Edwards, Hatch & Co., Worcester, Mass., and burnt that and several adjoining stores.

John Smith has been caught at last, having been arrested on a charge of setting fire to the factory of Mr. Handy, Washington city.

A gentleman was digging a well on his farm in Middleborough, Conn. At the depth of nine feet he came to a large flat stone, which, on breaking, freed a live toad from an imprisonment, which may have lasted for half a century for all we know.

The Florida Indians have consented to 'talk;' but it is thought, that like the British diploma- tists, in regard to the Northeastern Boundary, they may consume years in that way.

Capt. John Cady, of New London, New York, had his whole system so prostrated by the colli- sion of the steamboat against Ely's wharf, that he died in a few hours.—Phil. paper.

Seven persons went out to fish in Weller's Bay, Upper Canada. The boat was upset, and six found a watery grave.

The orange crop of Florida is, this year, es- timated at 200,000 dollars.

Isaac Hunter, of Massachusetts, hung himself in Charleston, S. C.

The Methodists in Michigan number over ele- ven thousand.

Texas has already eleven papers.

The Quarter Master General of Illinois has joined the Mormons and been baptised according to their faith. Under such a leader, the Louis- ville Journal thinks that they will no doubt be able to whip the Missourians in the next cam- paign.

DEPTH OF THE OCEAN.—The sea was recently sounded, by lead and line, in latitude 57 deg. south, and 85 deg. 7m. west longitude from Paris, by the officers of the French ship Venus, during her voyage of discovery, at a depth of 3470 yds., or 2½ miles; no bottom was found. The weather was very serene, and it is said, that hauling in the lead, took sixty sailors upwards of two hours. In another place in the Pacific Ocean, no bot- tom was found at the depth of 4,140 yards.

IS IT SO?—Macnish in one of his essays says: "I have remarked, and Gil Blas's mother did the same thing, that women generally bear a great dislike to their sons' wives. This is the more remarkable, as they are almost always fond of their sons-in-law." Can any person explain the why and wherefore of these singular facts?

FAIR-HAIRED.—Most of the eminent poets of the present age, such as Woodsworth, Southey, Coleridge, Hogg, Wilson and Moir, have had fair hair; so had Walter Scott, and so, to a con- siderable extent, had Lord Byron, his hair being a light auburn.

At the late Ballinasloe fair, only eight gallons of whiskey were drunk. The average consump- tion at previous fairs, was from eight to twelve puncheons.

SUB-TREASURY.—A series of resolutions have been introduced into the House of Representa- tives in Georgia, directing the Senators in Con- gress from that State to vote for the REPEAL of the Sub-Treasury bill.

John Davis has received the largest vote for Governor of Massachusetts that was ever given for any candidate in that State.

TEA.—Hyson tea is so called from the name of the merchant who first imported tea of that pe- culiar quality into England.

HIGHWAY ROBBERY.—The last Wheeling Gaz- ette says: "A citizen of Elizabethtown re- turning from this city on Tuesday night, was waylaid at the narrows, bound fast to a tree, and robbed of about six hundred dollars in eastern funds. Some arrests have been made of suspi- cious persons."—New World.

Dr. R. R. Madden has presented a long ad- dress to Mehemet Ali, expostulating with him on the extent of slave dealing in his dominions. Dr. M. has visited many parts of Egypt for the purpose of observing the state of the traffic in slaves.

THE NORTH EASTERN BOUNDARY.—An impor- tant work on the boundary question, from the pen of Hon. Albert Gallatin, will be issued from the press in a few days. It is entitled, "The Right of the United States of America to the North Eastern Boundary claimed by them."— Eight maps accompany the work.

NEW JERSEY.—The Legislature of N. Jersey adjourned on Saturday morning, until the 12th of January. In joint meeting on Friday, Mr. Isaac Southard was re-appointed Treasurer of the State, and Samuel R. Grummere, Clerk in Chancery, in the place of Stacy G. Potts, whose term of office has expired. The appointment of a Senator was deferred until the winter session.

Cusick, a chief of the Tuscarora tribe, who served faithfully for six years under Washington, died a few days since. They are fast fading away.

The population of the State of Connecticut is, according to the recent census, 310,131. In- crease, in ten years, 12,460.

THE SLAVE TRADE.—More than 40 years, and more than 15 millions of money have been con- sumed in fruitless attempts to put down the slave trade; and yet it has doubled during this period. The annual loss of life, caused by the trade, has risen from 17 to 25 per cent. 170,000 Africans are computed to be annually reduced to slavery; 350,000 more annually to perish; and the total annual loss to Africa to amount to five hundred thousand persons.

INSTANTLY KILLED.—A blacksmith of Cleveland, named Raiorden, was kicked on the head while shoeing a horse on Monday last and killed. A wife and three children mourn the sudden bereavo- ment.

THE STONE CUTTER'S STRIKE.—The N. Y. Sun says, the strike of the stone cutters employed in building the Trinity Church of that city, extends to all of that trade in the city, and was not oc- casioned by an attempt at reduction of wages, but from a difficulty in relation to the number of hours for a day's work. There is one thing certain, viz: Workmen should not be required to work too many hours per day. Ten hours, well attended to, are far better than twelve, where workmen are physically overtasked. Workmen, too, must have time to attend to their families, and leisure to cultivate their minds. There is no justice in any exactions that would deprive them of such privileges and rights.

The late census exhibits the population of the city of Pittsburgh to be 24,296; in 1839 it was 14,687, showing an increase of 6,909. Al- legheny city contains a population of 10,091, being an increase of 7,200 since 1839, when it was only 2,801.

THINGS IN PHILADELPHIA.

A woman named Plucket, residing in 3d treet above Tammany, committed suicide on Saturday evening last, by taking a large quantity of laud- anum. The cause of this rash act was not ascer- tained.—Saturday Courier.

A woman named Trott has been arrested on suspicion of murdering the Englishman named Hope, near Darby, an account of which we pub- lished last week. She had formerly been employ- ed by the deceased to sell truck for him in mar- ket.—ib.

A man calling himself Daniel O'Brien was ar- rested on Friday last for passing counterfeit notes. Some of the new counterfeit Wilmington one's and a Northern Liberty ten's, were found upon him.—ib

Tompkins P. Fellows, brought from New York some months since, and committed to Moyamen- sing as a susposed accomplice of Dr. Eldridge, has been discharged by the Court of General Sessions for want of evidence.

An abandoned female, named Emma Ann E- vans, committed suicide on Saturday at the house of a colored family in St. Mary street, by taking laudanum.

ANOTHER CONVICTION.—The jury in the case of Marian Wilson, charged with the murder of Ta- mar A. Filbert, an old woman, returned on Monday evening, a verdict of "guilty of murder in the second degree."

A WATER-HAUL.—A letter carrier had his pocket picked on Tuesday last, in the Court of General Sessions, of ten pennies!

FORBIDDEN GROUND.—A married lady having been left by her husband, in one of the boxes of a Theatre, on Monday night, for a few moments, was grossly insulted by a biped puppy, who was subsequently caught by the husband, and drubbed on the spot.

AN EARTHQUAKE.—During the violent storm a- bout 9 o'clock, on Saturday night, the editor of the Philadelphia Inquirer states that he felt dis- tinctly, a shock resembling that of an earthquake.

Might it not have been one of the peals of ap- plause elicted by Fanny Elssler's dancing?

DROWNED OUT.—A man shot near one hun- dred muskrats one day last week, at high water, along the embankment of a meadow, several miles below the city. A good and valuable day's work —each skin being worth twenty cents.—U. S. Gazette.

TRICKS OF TRADE.—The persons engaged in firing the salute on the river Delaware the day before yesterday, were considerably puzzled to ascertain the reason why some powder, which was used, would neither ignite readily, nor explode when ignited. After a close investigation the article was found to be of charcoal alone, pre- pared so as to closely resemble the genuine ar- ticle.—ib.

THE RECENT PERSECUTION OF THE JEWS IN DAMASCUS.

So much has been said in relation to the recent persecution of the Jews at Da- mascus, that a brief account of all the principal facts, cannot but possess inter- est. We gather it from a pamphlet late- ly published in London, and designed to vindicate the Jews from the foul and im- probable charges that were alleged a- gainst them. It is stated that a day or two before the disappearance of Father Thomaso, a Mahommedan, whom the Jews were reported to have murdered— a violent dispute took place between the father and leader of the muleteers. A servant seized the latter by the throat and held him until the blood came; when Tho- maso cursed him and his faith. The af- fair created a strong sensation among the by standers, and a respectable Mehom- medan merchant who was present, made use of violent language; while the mule- teer said that Thomaso should not die but by his hands. Shortly after the father & his servant disappeared; also the merchant and the muleteer. A search was made and the merchant was found hanging dead in his shop, the door being carefully se- cured from within. Immediately a story was put in circulation, that the parties had been murdered by the Jews—but no investigation took place, and the muleteer was not even examined. The excitement forthwith became intense—all sorts of stories were circulated, and several Jews were accused by the French Consul and Sheriff Pacha, of having murdered Fath- er Thomaso, because he and his servant had disappeared. They were put to the most dreadful tortures, and for a long time persisted in their entire innocence but unable at last to bear their horrible ag- onies, they criminated each other and confessed to a participation in a crime of which they were altogether innocent.— The chief allegation urged against these unfortunate men was, that they required the blood of some christian victims, to mix with the bread of the Passover. Hence the murders. A Jew who had lately pro- fessed the Musselman faith undertook to prove that the Talmud required the use of human blood in the manner described. This calumny is utterly refuted by the writer of the account before us. He visi- ted Damascus on the 30th of March, and in vain sought for anything calculated to give a coloring to the charges prefer- red against the arrested. One of the sto- ries circulated at that time was that the Jews dip a handkerchief in Christian blood, dry it and burn it to ashes, and that the day after a Jewess is married, these ashes are strewn on a hard boiled egg, which is eaten by the young couple. This fabrication gave rise to new tor- tures—among which were the following means:

1st. Flogging.

2nd. Soaking persons in large tanks of cold water in their clothes.

3d. The head machine, by which their eyes are pressed out of their sockets.

4th. Tying up the tender parts. and ordering soldiers to twist and horribly dispose them into such contortions that the poor sufferers grew almost mad from pain.

5th. Standing upright for three days without being allowed any other posture not even to lean against the walls; and when they would fall down are aroused up by the bystanding sentinels with their bayonets.

6th. Being dragged about a large court by their ears till the blood gushed out.

7th. Having thorns driven in between their nails and the flesh of fingers and toes.

8th. Having set fire to their beards till their faces are singed.

9th. Having candles held under noses so that the flame arises up into their nos- trils.

This last brutality was one night car- ried on with such pitiless perseverance that the wax dropped upon the poor suf- ferer's breast: it was in the night and the Pacha being present, could no lon- ger endure the sight: he then went away but put no stop to it.

The French Consul strange as it may appear acted a prominent part in the whole transaction.

On the 1st of March, after some fur- ther investigations, two brothers, the prin- cipal victims, named Erari, were called up for further trial. They denied their former confession of guilt, and said it was extor- ted from them by torture, and made it in hope of a speedy execution. The next day five others were brought forward, and again were visited with the most aw- ful tortures. The former confessions were repeated—one of them named Abu- fila, was tortured to for the blood, and said he had secreted it at home in his house. The account adds:

The French Consul, always alive to cruelty, then accompanies Mussa Abufila to his house, followed, as usual, by large crowds, and Mussa Abufila having now undertaken to give up what he never pos- sessed, unlocked a cupboard and feigned to examine it. He then asked his wife, who was in despair to see her husband so lacerated and apparently quite beside herself, "what have you done with that blood?" The poor woman as in a state of frenzy exclaimed, 'what blood had you?' He answered 'I had blood—only give me a knife, and you can take my life's blood; and then say this is it. It is stated, that when the French Consul heard this he, like a mad man, attacked Abufila and his wife. He then laid a rope round his neck, threatening to strangle him: and in the attempt to pull the rope, he laid his victim prostrate at his feet; and not sat- isfied with this, it is related that he drag- ged him about in the court yard with the rope round his neck. The French Con sul then ordered both M. Abufila and his wife to be conducted to the court of the Pasha. I ought to mention that this wanton and ungenerous proceeding of the French Consul was the means of throw- ing an additional victim into his hands;— for Abufila, almost as dead, through the infliction of maddening torture, had impli- cated his wife when he said that he had entrusted the blood to her.

The subsequent accounts are known to our readers. The poor Jews have been released, and an attempt is in progress to do them justice.—Bicknell.

Session Ohio Statesman.

WE propose to issue the Statesman, during the ensuing session of the Ohio Legis- lature, on the following terms, viz:

Tri-Weekly, during the session,	$2	00
Semi-Weekly, " "	1	50
Weekly, " "	1	00

Persons subscribing will please designate which paper it is that they desire.

No subscription will be received unless pay- ment is made in advance.

We shall have good reporters, and use what industry we are capable of employing on our pa- per, to give a correct and extensive view of all their doings.

The proceedings of Congress will also be duly given as heretofore.

S. & M. H. MEDERY.

Columbus, Nov, 13, 1840.

Ohio State Journal,

FOR THE SESSION.

THE proceedings of the next General Assem- bly being looked to with much interest, the publishers of the Ohio State Journal assures its patrons, that his arrangements will insure, as heretofore, reports which may be relied upon for correctness and fairness.

In addition to the general object of the Jour- nal, it will be devoted, during the Session of the Legislature, to a careful and impartial detail of the proceedings in that body. Arrangements will also be made to procure an abstract of the proceedings in Congress; and the readers of the Journal may depend upon the latest and most important news from Washington. For the pur- pose of extending such information, and increas- ing its circulation among those who are not its regular subscribers, the Journal will be furnished on the following terms, invariably in advance:

Tri-Weekly, for the session,.....$2,00
Semi-Weekly,.....do..... 1,50

CHARLES SCOTT, Publisher.

Columbus, November 13, 1840.

HUMOROUS.

THE BOSTON POST.—We have frequently allu- ded to the happy manner in which the Boston Post gets over political reverses. The following paragraphs are specimens; the recent election in Massachusetts having given a majority for the Whigs entirely unexpected in numbers.—Bro. Jonathan.

Don't be Alarmed.—We shall run our flags out a little while this morning, merely to dry them— therefore we beg our whig friends not to be agi- tated at the sight. We assure them that Gen. Harrison and Mr. Davis have both succeeded. The whigs wont believe it until we say so, if the Atlas should swear to it for a month.

☞If you are doomed to be whipped, there is a satisfaction even in having it done so effectu- ally that there is no mistake about it—we do not like any of your half way business—give us a decided triumph or a decided defeat.

☞To all those with whom we have bet.—Please call one at a time, approaching our office from Washington street, and departing through Con- gress street, keeping in a line, so as not to block up the highway.

☞Thanksgiving dinners will be very cheap, if poultry is as plenty on the 26th instant, as it was last night and the night before. Some of the largest kind of turkies were about.

☞The Uniform.—We offered our uniform for sale, yesterday, but the whigs have spent so much money in "laying pipe," they could not raise enough to buy it; so we shall keep it until 1842, when we shall have a chance to wear it again. Gov. Davis's aids will be obliged to ap- pear in citizens' dress.

☞The hopes of carrying Virginia for Har- rison increases with every mail.—Atlas Extra.

☞Major, our sufferings IS intolerable.

☞There is some fun about the whigs, after all. On a banner in a whig convention, held somewhere "out west," was the following:

K. K. K. K. K.
Kinderhook Kandidate Kant Kome it Kwite.

☞The Whigs behave very well about their victory—they were as polite and good-natured yesterday as gentlemen need be, and the demo- crats evinced that cheerfulness which ever ac- companies a conscientious discharge of duty.

☞We wonder if Mr. Davis will make a Colonel of the Major? Men with spectacles have risen to that dignity. All is, Haughton, if you should ever wear spurs, be careful how you step, or you will tear your pantaloons to a dead certainty—it requires some practice to place "de right foot fuss" in true military style.— Observe us in our last grand march in January next.

☞We had two whigs washed yesterday, and put a new suit of clothes on each of them, and hope the rascals will go to meeting next Sunday and ask forgiveness for having bet. We shall have to clothe about a dozen of the scamps for a year to come, and some of them in pretty costly style too.

☞Election Returns.—It isn't worth while to fill our columns with indefinite returns from various quarters. If we should hear of a State going for us any where off South or West, we will mention it.

☞Those who think they can aid a cause by gnawing crab apples and spitting vinegar from one year's end to another, are welcome to their "experiment." All we have to say is, "heaven save us from such friends." Faith produces cheerfulness.

Business Department.

RECEIVED PAY FOR RECORDER.

From J. Hopwood for S. Coe,	$2	00
" " for William Lazle,	2	00
" J. Foster balance for J. Lanning, 2v.	1	00
" A. H. Bassett for J. Aid,	2	00
" " for C. Straley,	2	00
" G. Lowther for W. Crooks,	1	00
" J. Adair for J. B. Turner,	2	00
" D. C. Carson for J. M'Ginnis,	2	00
" " for S. Chalfant,	2	00
" " (subject to order,)	1	00
" O. White for J. Anderson,	2	00
" " for J. Sturman,	2	00
" M. Brotherlin,	2	00
" J. H. Thomas for J. L. Fall,	2	00
" " for E. Christman,	2	00
" " for S. Stone,	2	00
" " for Jno. James, Jr.,	2	00
" " for R. M. Dalbey,	2	00
" " for J. H. Thomas,	2	00
" George Clancy for J. Pyle.	2	00

LETTERS RECEIVED.

A. Shinn, J. Hopwood, 1 sub.; Geo. Hughes, 3 subs.; S. Blackley, A. H. Bassett, W. Wilson, J. B. Shearer, 1 sub.; L. Hicklin, G. Lowther, T. J. Addis, 3 subs.; J. Adair, 1 sub.; J. D. G., S. M'Intyre, S. J. Simpson, 1 sub.; I. Smucker, D. C. Carson, H. France, C. Woodruff, J. Sou- der, A. Smith, 1 sub.; J. Allen, 2 subs.; T. Gardiner for J. Clarke, 3 subs.; A. K. Earl, 1 sub.; J. H. Thomas, all right.

We received a letter from Br. J. Souder, of Sandusky circuit, just as this paper was going to press, informing us that Br. Heath had declined his engagement with the President to serve the circuit, on account of ill health; that they were in a destitute condition, and that they wished the President, soon as possible, to send them aid; and also that they wished our Conference Missionary to visit them soon as possible. We will give the letter in our next.

The quarterly conference of Georgetown cir- cuit have agreed to employ Br. Wm. Browning, who has recently joined from the M. E. Church, to travel with Br. Clancy, if they can obtain the sanction of the President. Br. Browning's post office address is St. Clairsville, and Br. Clancy's is Harrisville, Ohio. We are requested to make this statement to the President, lest a letter sent to his address on this subject to Weston, Va., should not meet him.

We inform Br. Thomas that we had not dis- continued the papers of either Sample or Hen- derson; we now discontinue the former and send the latter free.

OWEN COUNTY, IA., NOV. 18, 1840.

Br. Springer: Sixteen have joined the church, on this circuit, since conference, and the pros- pect is promising. May the Lord prosper the good work! JOS. SIMPSON, Sup.

Mill creek, ct.

AS REQUESTED.—Br. Joshua Devore is duly employed to serve as assistant preacher on Union circuit, the residue of the present conference year. A. H. BASSETT, Pres't. O. An'l. Con.

COMMUNICATIONS.

For the Western Recorder.

ANTI-UNIVERSALISM.

Mr. Editor: Several Universalist pamphlets and papers have recently came into my hands, which I have carefully examined, with a view to ascertain the sentiments of that society, and its condition in the United States. From their publications I learn that they are now an organzed body in our country, claiming a membership of thousands; and, if their own statements are to be credited, their cause is rapidly on the increase. I lately had an interview with one of their preachers, from whom I tried to obtain all the information I could, in regard to their sentiments. He said he thought about one-half their members in the United States believe in future punishment; but, be this as it may, I apprehend, from the tenor of their writings, which I have seen, that their whole body is moving on to the conclusion, that there is no punishment for sinners beyond this life. The gentleman himself, with whom I conversed, told me what was his own opinion; which was, if I rightly understood him, that sin being seated in the passions and appetites of the body, when this is put off by death, the soul of every man is pure, and can never sin in a future state. I labored to convince him that sin is deeply seated in the agency of the intellect, and that the strongest principle of wickednes in man is far deeper than the passions and appetites of the body; and admonished him, that, as I conceived, he would have to renounce his opinion, or otherwise, would ultimately become a Deist.

He furnished me with several of their periodicals, containing large quotations from my late work "on the Benevolence and Rectitude of the Supreme Being." One of their editors treated my book with some contempt, because he could not find in it either the sentiment of the Universalist or that of the Restorationist; the other spoke in terms of commendation, because, altho' I was not a Universalist, yet, in his opinion, my principles would necessarily lead to that doctrine: and in this, he agrees in judgment, it seems, with some of my orthodox brethren. The editor of the "Star in the West," for Nov. 7th, speaking of the principles which I have laid down, says: "they are principles that lead, inevitably, to the doctrine of Universalism." By turning to another number of the same periodical, (Sept. 13, 1840,) we learn what Universalism is. A correspondent of that paper writes as follows: "I hope the time is at hand, when mankind will look upon one another as brethren, —heirs alike to the heavenly gift of eternal life. Dear brother, I wish you to take notice, that this heavenly gift is not a conditional concern. Nor is it left within the power of man to disannul what He has decreed shall take place. The final, ultimate salvation of mankind, can neither be secured nor frustrated by any action left within the power of man to perform." (p. 180.) Here all man's responsibility, in reference to his "final, ultimate salvation," is unequivocally denied; and if any person can find this doctrine in my late publication, or if he can find any thing in it which necessarily leads to such an untenable and pernicious dogma, I will put my hand upon my mouth and confess that the late outcry against my book was altogether just and reasonable.

In regard to the modern system of Universalism, which denies all punishment of sinners beyond this life, I have published my conviction, that it is a covert scheme of infidelity; and if any persons are disposed to charge me with advancing doctrines which necessarily lead to it, they might as well declare that I have been laboring in the cause of Atheism.

The question must, therefore, be confined to the doctrine of a future universal restoration. It appears to be the judgment, both of Universalists and their strongest antagonists, that my principles necessarily lead to this system; and if so, it would seem that one of two things awaits me: either to give up my principles, or to be a Restorationist. If this be an inevitable dilemma, it must be because the principles which I advocate are essentially connected with the system of universal restoration; and of course, that the doctrine of eternal damnation cannot be sustained upon any other than opposite principles to those which are contained in my book. Then, in my judgment, it follows as directly as two and two make four, that said doctrine cannot be sustained on any other ground than either that the Almighty is a being of an evil character, or that He is a compound of good and evil; for one or the other of these is the direct opposite of all that I have advanced. All my principles are centered in one; namely, in this: God is light, and in Him is no darkness at all. I will not give up this principle, nor any one which is essentially connected with it; and yet, I find myself in no danger, whatever, of being led into the doctrine of universal restoration. Let us take a view of the main pillars of that doctrine, in contrast with its antagonist, which I equally oppose, and which may be distinguished by the name of Acquired Fatalism.

Universal Restoration.	Acquired Fatalism.
1. Almighty power will force all the damned to become holy, that they may be happy.	1. Almighty power will force all the damned to remain wicked, that they may remain miserable
or	or
2. All the condemned in a future state will be punished in such a manner, that their punishment will necessarily lead them into holiness, and thence into happiness.	2. All the condemned in a future state will be punished in such a manner, that their punishment will necessarily confine them in wickedness, in order to their continuance in misery.
or	or
3. All fallen creatures will be constrained by a necessity of nature to become holy, so that none of them can remain wicked.	3. All condemned sinners in a future state will be constrained by a necessity of nature to continue wicked, so that none of them can cease from their wickedness.

Now, Mr. Editor, I do not believe any one of the above contrasted propositions; but view them, on the contrary, as being all alike repugnant to the whole character and government of the Supreme Being. The men occupying those antagonistical fortresses, are like a couple of opposing armies firing at each other from two barren mountains, while the truth of God, which flourishes in a fertile valley between them, is equally and alike overlooked by both.

The proposition, that sinners in a future state will continue wicked from a necessity of nature, may, perhaps, be defended, by assuming that their agency will have operated to its own destruction; and by an appeal to analogy or to facts which show, that in this world, the effects of sin on the constitution of the sinner become final and without remedy. Hence, the conclusion is adopted, that the fatality under which all condemned sinners will forever remain, though an acquired fatality, is yet as absolute as if it were original. The nature and import of this argument I have thoroughly examined, and my investigation of the subject is now in manuscript, but no part of it can be presented to advantage in this communication. It requires time, space and deliberation. All I ask, is a fair hearing; and it appears to me that candid minds may be convinced, upon rational and scriptural evidence, that there is no weight in the argument just stated, and that we have no need of it to guard us against the doctrine of universal restoration.

It seems to be thought, however, that the welfare of the world requires that I should be put to silence; and I apprehend that Universalists, when they come to understand that the ground which I occupy, instead of necessarily leading to their system, is really a basis on which their system can be demolished more effectually than on any other, will be as eager as any of the orthodox, to persuade mankind that my books ought not to be read.

You expressed the opinion, Mr. Editor, that the common curiosity of men to pry into secrets and heterodoxes, to learn what they are, would yet overcome the fear of ecclesiastical authority, and would, in due time, secure me a hearing. This, however, is counterbalanced by another strong passion of human nature—the desire of being in the fashion, and the dread of being found reading a book that, by general outcry, is rendered unpopular. Their own standing seems to require that their voice should join in the general denunciation of the book, or at least, that they should avoid patronizing it, at the peril of their reputation. Hence, my prospect is, by no means, flattering; and if I venture to publish another book, I am forewarned that I must publish a very small edition, lest I should be involved in another debt of a thousand dollars, by subscribers being intimidated from complying with their engagements. If you should lose any of your subscribers by presuming to publish this article, or other articles in my defence, I hope you will agree thus to bear a part of a brother's burthen; and that you will ultimate lose nothing for your independence and impartiality.

Permit me, in conclusion, to digress from the theme of this communication, by inquiring where our Conference Missionary, Br. Wm. Reeves, is now employed. I think his labors, and the labors of our President, should be so arranged as to confer the greatest practicable benefit upon the District; and I have no doubt this is desired and intended by both. I hope arrangements will be made for Br. Reeves to spend a considerable amount of time in our region; and I wish to take this opportunity to inform him and sister Reeves, that when they can make it convenient to visit Allegheny, it will give us pleasure if they will make our house their home, so long as it will be convenient for them to tarry. Respectfully,

A. Shinn.

Allegheny, November 18, 1840.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

Bainbridge, Ross, O., Nov. 17, 1840.

Mr. Editor: By the blessing of God I am again favored with excellent health. I returned last month from my tour to the Indiana Conference, in season to meet my appointments in Cincinnati station and circuit. But finding that through delay of mail, my appointments had not yet appeared in the Recorder, I postponed visiting the circuit and station, until after my present route, taking opportunity, the while, to visit Twin Creek circuit, and attend old brother Flood's first quarterly meeting. It was held at West Alexandria, Preble county, commencing the last day of October. At this place a new society was organized last season, under the labors of brethren Dalbey and Thomas, now numbering 26 members. Two were added at this meeting. I was much cheered to find our ministering brethren all in good spirits. Br. M'Guire our Conference Missionary, was with us. The ordination of our aged brother Fall was attended to, on the Sabbath. This meeting was, upon the whole, a reviving time; particularly the love-feast.

I rejoice that this little circuit (Twin Creek) has by the help of the Lord taken a start. But two and a half years ago, left destitute of a preacher, few in number, and surrounded with opposition, some fainted by the way, a number took refuge in another church, concluding that our cause could never rise here. But, a few pillars stood firm in the time that tried men's souls. It was my lot to visit them under these circumstances, to weep with those that wept, and to say unto those who were of a fearful heart: "Be strong—fear not." With trembling, as it were, they were induced to make another effort. A minister was obtained—and they have not since been without the services of one or more faithful laborers. The Lord has done good in His pleasure unto Zion here, and now, the circuit, tho' yet not strong, has the regular labors of two experienced itinerant ministers, who are both highly esteemed for their work's sake. Let us be glad, and rejoice in the Lord, for He is good and doeth good. May these brethren, preachers and people, be yet more abundantly prospered.

I next visited Eagle Creek circuit, and was present at their first quarterly meeting, Nov. 8. It was held at Liberty meeting house, Brush creek, Adams county. We had stormy weather, but I was glad to find an enterprising turn out of brethren from distant parts of the circuit, from 25 to 40 miles. Of the preachers, besides those appointed to the circuit, Brs. Goldsbury and Hannah were present. This meeting was lively and encouraging. Some four members were added. I trust that this circuit will prosper under the ministrations of Br. Euans. He is zealous and punctual. The quarterly conference voted to exonorate Br. Edwards, the assistant preacher, judging it impracticable to sustain two upon the circuit. This is, thus far, honorable—not suffering a man to go a warfare at his own charges. The brother consented to accompany me to Highland circuit the following week. Had the satisfaction to visit the family of that veteran of our cause, old Br. Warmsley, living near the Forge on Brush creek. On Monday, 9th, administered the Lord's Supper to his widowed daughter, at her request. She has been bedfast with an infirmity for eight years, but seems a happy example of christian resignation. The same day, our old friend accompanied us to visit a natural wonder, opposite side of the creek from his dwelling. We ascended a large hill and reached the top of a ridge, which we pursued for a short distance. Presently we approached the front of an enormous projection of overhanging rock, far above us, being the termination of a still higher ridge. It is narrowed at the base to the breadth of from five to ten feet; but above, it widens out and projects over from 5 to 15 or more feet on each side. Leaving our horses, we advanced along side, beneath this 'covert from the tempest' a considerable distance, till we found an oppor unty to ascend the precipice. After a laborious clamber, we reached the top; but our aged friend, being of old a mountaineer, outstripped us in scaling this fortress of nature. On this elevation our view was grand, embracing, say twenty or more plantations. Dr. J. Locke visited this place in the course of his geological survey of the State, 1837. He names it Split Rock Hill, from the circumstance that the terminating part is sundered from the receding ridge, leaving a fissure from one to two feet wide. Its surface measures 72 by 36 feet, and is almost bare of soil. Yet it is furnished with no small variety of trees and herbs, amongst which are conspicuous, cedar and pine. Dr. L. has given a description of this rock in his Report of Geological Survey, published in State Document, Columbus, 1838, at page 250. He enumerates rising of forty species of trees and plants found growing upon this elevation. He expresses the opinion that the rock is concave, containing a supply of water by which this vegetation is sustained.

But why is it right to occupy time in viewing these natural curiosities and wonders? Because they are the works of the mighty God, great and marvellous. And to admire His wonderful works, and thus to be impressed with His awful majesty, is to glorify Him. In His word it is said: "Lift up your eyes on high, and behold who hath created these things. Stand still, and consider the wondrous works of God." Retiring from this point, we pursued the ridge a short distance, and presently ascended a knoll, which is the summit of Dr. L.'s Split Rock Hill. According to his estimate, this is 442 feet above the plain below, and 524 above low water mark at Cincinnati. At this knoll is a burying place, which has been used by certain outlandish pretenders to civilization. We soon left these heights, and went on our way to West Union, c. h., where I had an appointment at candlelight, same evening. Preached in the meeting house of the M. E. Church, which was kindly granted for our use, well lighted, warmed and peopled. Lodged with Br. A. Woodroe, one of our earliest Reformers. Tuesday, 10.—Rode sixteen miles westward to Br. Jacob Aid's, Brown county, where I had engaged to preach in the evening. Had been here but a few moments when word came that the nearest neighbor had been instantly killed by a falling tree. Hastening to the place, we found that the information was too true. Arrived in time to see the lifeless body of Mr. Samuel Bartholomew, borne by four from the woods to the dwelling. He was falling some small trees for building purposes.—Two he had cut off, and both had lodged. It seems he then cut a third, for the purpose of dislodging and bring down the others. In endeavoring to escape from these falling trees, he must have been deceived in the direction taken by one of them, for he was struck by the upper boughs of it upon his head and face, which were much fractured and bloody. The deceased was considered pious and exemplary—a Campbellite. The widow, though deeply afflicted, was by grace sustained with the most astonishing fortitude.—At her desire, the intended meeting at candlelight was held at her house. An unusual crowd of people attended—a solemn, impressive time—for there in the house with us lay the remains of a fellow man, who ate his dinner to-day in as good health as any of us. Endeavored to improve the occasion, for the benefit of the surviving.

Thursday, Nov. 12. Took leave of our kind friends, brother and sister Aid, not soon to forget them. Rode to Hillsborough c. h., enjoyed a visit with the family of our old friend and brother D. Inskeep, but had not an opportunity of preaching in the place this time. On Friday, 13th, ten miles ride brought us to the limits of Highland circuit, at Br. Thomas Karr's, where there is a society. Next morning, proceeded with some half dozen friends to Mount Olive meeting house in Ross county, where a two days' meeting had been appointed. We had, I trust, a profitable time—one individual joined society. Br. Hughey was with us,—also Br. R. Rose, who, from the state of his health, had to decline the charge of the circuit soon after conference. May he yet have strength to become a valiant and successful laborer. Br. Edwards is employed to take charge of the circuit, for the balance of the year. The Lord be with this our young brother, and make his labors a blessing to the people.—Yesterday, I visited at Br. Chaffins, on Paint creek, and was shown the place were two women were drowned in that stream, a little below the Big Falls, two or three days previous. An aged lady of 80 or more, was in the act of dipping water from the creek for washing, when she fell into deep water. Her daughter, a woman of family, plunged in for her rescue, but after a short struggle, both sunk, to rise no more. After two or three hours search, their bodies were drawn out from a depth of 35 feet water At this place (Bainbridge) I am resting a little at the house of our friend and brother D. C. Carson. After visiting one or two more points in this circuit I go to Washington circuit. Yours, &c.

A. H. Bassett.

Middletown, Mong., Va., Nov. 8, 1840.

Br. Springer: I reached my circuit the 11th of October, and commenced my labors at Laishley's meeting house, where there was an interesting revival of religion in progress, the fruits of the labors of our Br. P T. Laishley, which has resulted in the conversion of scores of precious souls. *Seventy-seven persons, from the principal families in the neighborhood, have been received into the church, and the work is still going on.

Our first quarterly meeting was held at Salem meeting house; it was a time of interest—fourteen were received into the church. On the Saturday following, we commenced a two-day meeting at Br. McElroy's, at which a number were born again—nine were added to the church. On the Sabbath and Monday evening following, at Snell's school house, the power of God was manifested—souls were converted—eight were received to the church. On the next Friday, I organized a class of fifteen persons, at New Port, making in all, received on this circuit, since conference, one hundred and twenty-three.

T. J. Addis, Sup.

Middletown ct.

*This is, probably, the revival to which Br. Hopwood alluded in our last.—Editor.

GODEY'S LADY'S BOOK,

VOLS. 22 & 23—1841.

EDITED BY

MRS. S. J. HALE & MRS. L. H. SIGOURNEY.

Miss E. Leslie will have a Contribution in every number.

The only Magazine in this country intended for the perusal of Females that is edited by their own sex.

This is an important matter and should be borne in mind by those mothers who intend catering for their own, or their daughters' instruction and amusement.

THE "LADY'S BOOK" has been published by the same proprietor for nearly eleven years, and during that time he can safely say that no article has been admitted in its columns that parents might not with safety read to their children. It has been his constant care to prevent the work from being sectarian, political or disputatious. He has watched its progress from its first appearance in the world of letters to its now almost mature age. How many vain efforts have been made during the period of its existence to establish a rivalry—how many are still making, but in vain! The Book may almost be considered the creation of a taste for periodical literature. There is but one Magazine now in this country that can date its origin from the same period as the Lady's Book; but the latter was the earliest periodical to offer remuneration for literary contributions.

GENERAL CONTENTS.

One original large sized Steel Engraving, by A. L. Dick, in each number.
A Fashion plate, colored, (mark that) every month.
Two pages (generally original) Music in each No.
Forty-eight pages reading matter.

PICTORIAL DEPARTMENT.

The same attention to this department will be displayed. These splendid Steel Engravings, by A. L. Dick, Esq., that gave so much satisfaction last volume, will be continued.

Throughout this year, the plates will be varied, and embrace serious and pleasing subjects, and others that will contain a dash of humor. All tastes shall be consulted.

Engravings from the paintings of Landseer and Collins, two of the most eminent painters of London, will from time to time grace our Book, and as soon as arrangements can be completed, our long cherished plan of original engravings from paintings originally prepared for the Book, will be given, one in each number. Two are now in preparation. Our means gives us the opportunity of embarking in this expensive speculation—we may fail in being remunerated for our outlay, but our subscribers will be benefited.

We give twice as many embellishments as any other Magazine, and each plate is, because we pay more for its engraving, superior to the one of any contemporary, and the price of the Magazine is not increased. Our edition is immense, double any other publication, therefore we are enabled to go to greater expense than any other publisher. A better return may therefore be expected for the price paid for subscriptions.

The voice of the public press has pronounced Godey's Lady's Book at the head of the periodical Literature of the country, and he is determined that it shall retain its proud superiority. With this view he has chosen for its conductors two of the most eminent female writers of this or any other country—Mrs. Hale and Mrs. Sigourney, assisted monthly by one of no less ability, Miss Leslie.

In speaking of our Engravings, we beg leave to call attention to the following published in last volume, viz:

View of Constantinople, Schuylkill Wa'r Works,
The Pilgrim, The Indian Maid,
Happy as a King, The Death of Luath.

With each of these was published a Fashion-plate, containing either three or four figures beautifully and tastefully colored.

Universally pronounced superior to any other Magazine illustrations in this or any other country. Beautiful as they undoubtedly are, we pronounce, without hesitation that those for this year shall be superior. The engravings shall be worth more than the price of subscription. We do not, as many of our contemporaries do, who would scorn to tell a verbal falsehood, pass off second hand plates as original. Ours are undoubtedly so, and the designs selected by ourselves, and they will be continued throughout the year.

GODEY'S BOOK

has been emphatically termed the Ladies' National Magazine, as it is a receptacle for the contributions of the most celebrated Female Writers of America, most of whom of any eminence contribute to its pages.

In a future publication we will devote a column to publishing the names of our contributors. It is too long, except for a separate advertisement.

But let this be remembered, that we never in any instance will mention the name of a contributor from whom we have not the remotest idea of procuring a contribution. There are enough writers in our country, and good ones too, who, if they are paid, will furnish matter sufficient for all our periodicals.

Twenty-one volumes have already been issued. It is usual to announce that a small edition only will be published. Contrary to this, the proprietor of the Lady's Book announces that he will publish AN IMMENSE EDITION, with which he hopes to supply all those who will favor him with orders, commencing with the January number.

It will be seen by this advertisement that every effort has been made by the proprietor of this work to make it superior to any other in America; and as the Lady's Book is probably the most proper that could be desired for ladies, edited by their own sex, and assisted, as the Editorial Department is, by the Pictorial Embellishments, it is positively the Parlour Companion.

A NEW YEAR'S GIFT,

The Times aptly remarks that "a subscription to this work, would be a much more acceptable present to a fair friend during the coming holiday season, than any of the ginger bread annuals made of Laura Matilda poetry and diluted prose."

There are other publications that advertise Fashion Plates. The publisher of the Lady's Book wishes it to be distinctly understood that the principal Fashions in this work are colored, and in every number; which is not the case with any other work published in this country: unless they are colored they are useless.

THE LITERARY DEPARTMENT

is placed under the superintendence of Mrs. S. J. Hale and Mrs. Lydia H. Sigourney; to ladies so well known to the world, that to mention their names in connection with any publication is at once a guarantee of its morality, virtue, and utility. Of their capability to conduct the Lady's Book, it is presumed no person will doubt, and the proprietor mentions with pleasure that no English or American Magazine can publish in connection with its Literary Department two names so celebrated in the world of letters. It will be recollected that Miss Leslie contributes to each number.

THE MUSICAL DEPARTMENT

is under the superintendence of J. G. Osborne, than whom no person is more capable of doing it justice.

GENERAL FEATURES.

Literature, tales, essays, legends, romantic incidents in history, extracts from the old poets, reviews, poetry, female education, embellishments, fashions colored, lace, embroidery, fac similes, music, &c. &c.

A great deal of curiosity is often expressed to see the Chirography of celebrated persons.—We shall endeavor so far as lies in our power to gratify this feeling, by giving from time to time correct imitations of the most celebrated female writers of the day.

Any embellishments to be found in any other magazine may be looked for in the Lady's Book.

OUR READING MATTER

is about the same in quantity as any similar production, probably a little in favor of the Book. It would be foolish and false to say that it contains more, and the proprietor is not willing to condescend to such means for any supposed advancement of his interest. The paper is of the finest quality for periodical use. And the typographical execution has long been a subject of congratulation with those best acquainted with these matters.

TRANSMISSION BY MAIL.

One advantage the subscribers of this work will have, is early reception It will be received at the remotest cities of the Union by the first day of the month of publication.

BUSINESS DEPARTMENT.

The price of the publication is Three Dollars per annum—the money to be positively received before a number is sent. No letters will be taken from the post office unless the postage on them is paid. Unless positive orders are given at the time of subscribing, the work is continued after the first year, and if not paid during the year, the price will be increased to Four Dollars.

We still continue to furnish Walter Scott's novels complete and the Lady's Book one year, for Ten Dollars.

For the convenience of persons wishing to subscribe for any of the following publications—Graham's Casket & Gentleman's Magazine—Saturday Courier—Saturday Chronicle—Alexander's Weekly Messenger, or Saturday Evening Post—they will be furnished with the Lady's Book, and any one of these publications one year, upon the receipt of Five Dollars, postage paid.

Address L. A. Godey,
211 Chesnut street, Philadelphia.
December 2, 1840. 3t

Notes Lost.

A NOTE for $200, given by Stephen H. Ludlow, and one for $166 given by William Tait to John Clarke, agent of the Literary Institution of the Methodist Protestant Church. The trustees have directed these notes to be given up to Messrs. Ludlow & Tait. The money for which they were given was to have been a loan for the benefit of said Literary Institution. All I can learn of them is, Mr. Ludlow and Mr. Tait say, they gave their notes, as above stated, to John Clarke, when he was agent of said Institution. I cannot learn where they are, or who (if any person) has received them from the said John Clarke. If any person knows where said notes are, it is hoped he will be so good as to communicate the same, either through the Western Recorder, or by letter to me. All persons are also warned not to purchase said notes, as it is not intended, nor would it be just, that they should be paid. David Crall, Agent.
November 18, 1840. 65

Winslow's Compound
BALSAM OF HOARHOUND.

UNRIVALED and unequaled in curing Colds, Coughs, Asthma, Influenza, Whooping Cough, and all diseases of the Breast and Lungs, leading to Consumption, composed of the concentrated virtues of the herbs Hoarhound, Boneset, and several other vegetable substances, warranted pure from any mineral whatever.

Sold by A. Lippitt and S. Gates.
Zanesville, Nov. 4. 64tf

Notice.

BOOKS, Stationery, and Printer's Ink, for sale by A. Lippitt.
Zanesville, Nov. 4. 63tf.

DRUGS, Medicines, Paints, Dyestuffs, Oils, and Spirits Turpentine. Cheap for cash or good horses, by A. Lippitt.
Main st., No. 72, Zanesville, Nov. 4. 63tf

New and Cheap Goods.

POTTS & GRAHAM, are now enabled by a fresh arrival of FALL and WINTER GOODS, to offer to the public a very general assortment of all articles in their line. Their stock is almost ENTIRELY NEW, and embraces a complete supply of DRY GOODS, GROCERIES, QUEENSWARE, HARDWARE, &c. All of which they will sell upon such terms, and conduct their business throughout upon such principles, as cannot fail to afford permanent satisfaction to all who may favor them with their custom.

☞Most kinds of country produce, including any quantity of new Butter, will be taken in exchange for goods.

Putnam, Ohio, Nov. 4. 63tf

S. C. Haver,

IN the flourishing town of Putnam has on hand 40 or 50 SADDLES ready for sale, of different qualities, comprising nearly all the varieties in fashion in our Buckeye State.

A good assortment of Bridles and Martingales: Riding and driving Whips: between 180 and 200 Carriage and heavy draft Collars, which will compare and wear with any others made here or elsewhere.

Also, fine York, Dearborn, heavy team and common Farming Harness. A lot of first rate Carriage and Buggy Harness, (brass and silver plated.)

Trunks, vallises, saddle-bags, and double covered wagon whips, varying in quality and price to suit purchasers.

The only recommendation he now offers for his work, is the testimony and long experience of his old customers and friends. He is still anxious to please and accommodate those who may call on him, and hopes to share so much of the public patronage as his attention to his business shall merit.

Putnam, April 29, 1840. 28tf

CABINET AND CHA
FACTORY.

THE subscribers still continue to manu ture and keep on hand, at their old st a few doors south of the market house in town of Putnam, a large assortment of

CABINET WARE
AND CHAIRS,

CONSISTING, IN PART, OF

Splendid black walnut and mahogony dres and plain bureaus,
Peer, card, center, side, dining and breakfast bles,
Sofas, side-boards, washing stands, ottomans,
Dressing and writing tables,
French, fancy and high post bedsteads,
Secretaries, clock cases, cradles, cribs and b cases,
Grecian, rush, cane and windsor chairs,
Sociables, settees and children's chairs.

In short every thing in their line necessary furnish a house, either in high or common sty and at such prices as will satisfy all who will fa them with their custom. All the recommen tion they have to offer, is, that they have be able to secure a continuance of their old cus mers and friends. They hope by the qual of their work and a strict attention to busin to share a portion of the public patronage.

They have for sale a lot of first rate black w nut veneering and a lot of bureau knobs of t best kind and quality.

Turning done in the best style and short notice. Cherry & Gray.
Putnam, Ohio, October 28, 1840. 62tf

THE
CHRISTIAN WORLD

1. THE editor desires AGENTS in eve District, in the METHODIST PR TESTANT CHURCH.
2. He desires his friends to secure AGENT for him in OTHER CHURCHES.
3. He will allow $25 of every $125, collec ed, as remuneration.
4. He particularly requests the Agents of th LETTER-PRESS to continue their agency.
5. He will DEDUCT for any Nos. of th Letter-Press not received.
6. He will forward to AGENTS, CIRCU LARS, &c.
7. He wishes, quickly, NAMES and RESI DENCES of Agents, with COLLECTIONS.

According to the decision of the Post Maste General, subscribers to this work will be charge only ordinary newspaper postage.

The editor takes pleasure in stating that th work has been approved by the voice of the press generally, religious, literary and political The next number will furnish a considerable va riety of notices relating to its plan, appearance &c. Its correspondents are multiplying, inclu ding several of the first names in the variou churches. Ths. H. Stockton.
Philadelphia, Nov. 4, 1840. 63tf

Puff! Puff! Puff!!
CHEAP!

CHEAPER THAN EVER! GREAT BARGAINS!

New York at your door!

SELLING OFF AT COST!

WE so heartily despise the "gull-catching" system that we seldom advertise at all. We however give our friends and the public notice that we have just received a fine stock of

FALL AND WINTER
GOODS.

We don't profess to have brought "New York to your doors," nor to undersell every body else, nor to be "selling off at cost," nor to be "closing up," and all that sort of thing,—but we do say, that our goods are cheap enough to satisfy any reasonable person, even in these "hard times."

A. A. Guthrie & Co.
Putnam, Ohio, September 30, 1840. 3w58

Partnership Notice.

THE subscribers have formed a co-partnership under the firm of Potts & Graham, for the transaction of a general mercantile business; and will occupy for that purpose the old stand of Spear & Helmick, where their friends and others wishing to purchase goods, are respectfully solicited to call.

Francis R. Potts,
Nelson W. Graham.
Putnam, Ohio, Nov. 4. 63tf

Dissolution.

THE partnership heretofore existing between the subscribers in the Putnam Foundry, under the firm of HARTLEY & ANDERSON, was this day dissolved by mutual consent.

The Putnam Foundry will hereafter be conducted by J. J. Anderson & Co.

Levi Hartley,
Jacob J. Anderson.
Putnam, Jan. 1, 1840 (Jan. 29 : 23.)

Notice.

ALL persons indebted to the late firm of Hartley & Anderson, are earnestly requested to call at the Foundry and make settlement, as the change of owners makes this step absolutely necessary. We ask the attention of all persons concerned, to this notice.

J. J Anderson & Co.
Putnam, Jan. 1, 1840. (Jan. 29 : 23.)

THE
WESTERN RECORDER
IS PUBLISHED EVERY WEDNESDAY.

☞ The office of the Recorder is five and a half miles west of Zanesville.

TERMS.

1. The Western Recorder will be published weekly, on an imperial sheet, at $2 00 per annum, in advance: $2 50 at the end of three months; $3 00 at the end of the year.

2. No discontinuances will be allowed, except at the discretion of the publisher, until all arrearages are paid.

3. To all ministers having regular pastoral charges, who do any thing at all for the paper, if they will direct us where, a copy shall be sent gratis; any other who forward to us $10 00 for new subscribers, shall have six copies sent to any address he may give.

4. All letters designed for the paper, must be directed to "C. Springer, Meadow Farm, Muskingum, Ohio."

5. A failure to notify a discontinuance before the expiration of the subscription year, will be considered a new engagement.

CHARACTER.—The pages of the Western Recorder will be open to discussion on all moral questions;—it will give articles on Literature, Mechanics, Agriculture,—an abstract of Religious and Political intelligence, and whatever may be interesting and instructive to families in general. A portion of its columns will be open to Advertisements and Prices Current, —another portion to sustain the interests of the Methodist Protestant Church in the West.—These two latter objects will not likely occupy more than one page.

The Recorder will take a firm stand against Clerical Supremacy.

THE WESTERN RECORDER.

SPRINGER, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER. | TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM IN ADVANCE.

Vol. 2.--No. 16. ZANESVILLE, OHIO, WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 9, 1840. Whole No. 68.

JOHN W. WHITE, PRINTER. | $2.50, IN THREE MONTHS; $3, END OF YEAR

POETRY.

THE CRUCIFICTION.

foe to God hath done this unexampled deed?
eavens exclaimed, "'Twas Man!
ve, in horror, snatched the Sun such a spectacle of guilt and shame."
d the Sea; the Sea in fury boiled, nswered with his voice of storms, "'Twas Man!
aves, in panic at his crime, recoiled, osed the abyss, and from the centre ran."
d the Earth; the Earth replied aghast, as Man! and such strange pangs my bosom rent, still I groan and shudder at the past."
an—gay, thoughtless, smiling Man—I went, asked him next; he turned a scornful eye,
his proud head, and deigned me no reply!!

COMMUNICATIONS.

For the Western Recorder.

DEATH—THE GRAVE.

"Death is the gate to endless joy,
And yet we dread to enter there.
——— the grave,
The subterranean road to bliss.
'Tis creation's melancholly vault,
The vale funeral, the sad cypress gloom,
The land of apparitions, empty shades!"

e light in which the subject of death is d by a large portion of Christendom, clearly ates a total ignorance of the objects or def the introduction of the gospel of life, and l destitution of its benefits and blessings.
had reigned, and man had been in bond-rough fear of death, and the gospel was ed to bring life and immortality to light, to deliver those who through fear of death
ll their lifetime subject to bondage."
the time of the Saviour's advent, man was d, grovelling and wretched, through fear of
, and the labors, teachings, and doctrines
Saviour were all directed to his emanci-
. But notwithstanding the light of the has so brilliantly shone upon our degenrace for almost two milleniums, how numer-e the members of our fallen family, who t all their lifetime subject to bondage h fear of death, and are yet unwilling to ancipated from the influence of the base, and inhumanizing principle of fear. With city bordering on desperation, we cling to yea, to a life of sorrow, trouble, and pain,

"When Death kindly tenders us relief,
We call him cruel!"

th is the common lot of mortals, and is f the inevitable incidents to our existence but how few realize the fact that we must ! How few are fully reconciled to that e of Omnipotence! The pathway to an ing and blissful existence leads through ave, and yet how few are willing to enter
and Travel this subterranean road to bliss."

acts wisely who takes a rational, philo-view of death—of the present and the existence—who calmly "bides his time," eerfully obeys, when nature's Author shall ssion the messenger, Death, to summon the spirit land.

whose feet have trod the path of the just—ks thoughtful on the silent, solemn shore at vast ocean, he must sail so soon," rects monuments to Virtue, in the valley pilgrimage,

uments that shall last when Egypt's fall," not fear to pass through the silent grave, he enjoyment of the realities of the future

For him are in reversion, the glories and ies of the spirit land! Felicities and glo-which "eye hath not seen, ear heard, or conceived!" S.

LIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

ISGAH CIRCUIT, MORGAN, O., Nov. 26, 1840.

Springer: I am happy to inform you and stant friends, that the Lord has not forto be gracious to His needy people in this f the Conference District. We commen-two days' meeting nine miles above Mcelsville, at Mr. Kinney's residence, on the ingum river, the first of this month. By essing of Heaven, it proved to be a time akening and conversion to God. Twenty-through faith and repentance, took up ne of march toward Heaven, and gave in names as probationers.

quarterly meeting commenced on the fol-g Saturday at Pisgah, at which place, we were a needy people; and the blessing of en came upon us in an extraordinary man-ven beyond our expectation. Many were ned and converted, and the Lord's tempted ried people were powerfully built up in the of the gospel. Twenty-seven united with hurch as probationers. The increase of ers increases our responsibility to God and May the God of love direct us so that all tions may be in accordance with that hea-principle! J. Kreps, Br. Wm. Marshall

N. W. Tracy assisted us. May the Lord d them for their faithful labors!

B.—I hereby inform the President, that at st quarterly conference, in view of enlarghe circuit, W. W. Tracy, on his liberal sal, was requested to assist me the remainder is conference year, if the approbation of the dent can be obtained. Br. Ragan will please to me at Zanesville. C. WOODRUFF.

CLARKSBURGH CT., VA., Nov. 26, 1840.

Br. Springer: When I returned from conference I found that the religious excitement which had existed through the summer in this section, had given way to political excitement. But since the latter has abated, times, on the circuit, are beginning to grow better. The last round has been a prosperous one. We had at our first quarterly meeting a large congregation and good attention.

We held a protracted meeting on the 21st of this inst., at which we were favored with the labors of Brs. Ragan and Hughes. During this meeting we had a comfortable time; mourners on several occasions crowded to the altar; fifteen united with the church, on trial, and one by cirtificate.

Your paper, at this time, is read with much interest. I think it ought to be in the hands of every Methodist Protestant family in the west.

Yours, &c. R. SIMONTON, Sup.

MORGAN, ASHTABULA, Nov. —, 1840.

Br. Springer: Since my return from conference, to this circuit, I have received nine members, and our prospects, on some parts of the circuit, are considerably flattering. The great political excitement having measurably subsided, we hope God will wake up an excitement in the minds of the people on the subject of religion. Br. Piper and myself are making arrangements to unite our circuits and our labors together for the remainder of this year.

Yours, in Christ, A. K. EARL.

JACKSONSBURGH, OHIO, Nov. 26, 1848.

Br. Springer: Having to write to you on business, I would just inform you,—and through the medium of your excellent paper, other of our brethren who may feel a concern for the welfare of the church,—that although we are blest with the labors of two of the excellent of the earth, Br. Flood and Br. R. M. Dalbey, yet, religion appears to lag with us, on Twin creek circuit, this conference year, so far. I think I can truly say it is ebb tide with us. This state of things has been occasioned by that which has been too common to all—political excitement. No subject was as familiar and absorbing as that of the politics of the day. It was the first thing and the last with too many.

Another occurrence which took place in the largest society on this circuit, calculated to retard our progress, was the spirit of proscription aimed at some brethren, the members of another denomination, by some, called "New Lights." While we were at conference, some of these brethren, I hope sincere, were engaged in concocting a scheme, calculated in its nature, as we think, to be of the most ruinous consequences to us in that section of country, in which it took place.

When I started in religion, my soul was filled with love to God and my fellow creature. When I set sail in the Radical ship, I was actuated by the same feeling—I hope I ever shall remain the same. Our old brethren, in the ministry, came amongst us and preached, Union, Union, then it was we had good meetings; but let brethren assume the judgment seat, and enter into proscriptive measures against others, because, forsoothe, they do not understand mysteries the same way, we may rest assured that that spirit which unites christians will take its flight.—May we, as a church, look back home whence we came, and ever follow after peace, and be directed by the spirit of charity, which is the bond of perfection. It is not on the imperfections of individuals, or individual churches, or individual systems of faith, doctrine, or government that we fix the bond of union, but upon that spirit which has for its object the general good and happiness of mankind.

We hope, as the excitement produced by the politics of the day has in a measure subsided, to have a more prosperous time in religion. May the power of the Lord be felt among the people before this conference year closes! Such is the prayer of your brother in Christ.

JOHN H. THOMAS.

Having given the substance of Br. Souder's communication to the President, in behalf of the Sandusky circuit, in our last, we omit its publication, but give the following postcript to it, and commend the sentiment it contains to all whom it may concern. We will, however, add, that the brethren are very solicitous the President should do something for them, if it is in his power, and that our Conference Missionary should pay them a visit soon as possible. We hope he will, and stay with that valuable people until they are supplied by our executive officer. Br. John Mercer was appointed to this charge by the conference; he failed to go; Br. Heath was engaged by the President to go to their aid, but it seems he has failed also. God bless the delinquents.—Editor.

TIFFIN, OHIO, Nov. 19, 1840.

Mr. Editor: I received a letter a few days ago, from a worthy brother, stating that it was difficult to prevail on any of the preachers at conference to come to the Lake country. We are well aware of the character our country bears abroad, in regard to its being a sickly region, or in other words of its being a perfect Golgotha, particularly by those who live east of us.

When I was moving into Ohio, fourteen years ago, I recollect meeting a little boy, somewhere about Fairview, in this State, who inquired,—"Sir, where are you moving to?" Not having any particular point in view, I replied, "to the Scioto country." "Why," said he, "the killdeers can't live there." There are a great many older persons who entertain similar ideas in regard to the Sandusky country. We have a level and fertile country, and readily admit that we are subject to the diseases that prevail all through the level, rich parts of this State, and indeed, of all the States south and west of us. And, in addition to these, we are subject to all the ills of this life, seeing that we are a part of Adam's fallen race. But that there are natural causes to produce more diseases here than in other parts, as above named, we are not willing to admit. It is true, we have had two or three sickly seasons, but in most cases the diseases operated quite the reverse of the causes that used to be attributed to them. The two brethren who have been appointed to this circuit, this year, both attribute their not coming to ill health, so that we see people get sick in the hill country as well as on the Sandusky plains.

But, who are they, I inquire, that "it is so difficult to prevail on to go to the Lake country?" The preachers,—the ministers of Christ; those who profess to be called of Him to "go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." Are these unwilling to go to the Lake country to preach the gospel to the thousands who have emigrated there, and brooked the difficulties and dangers of a new country for the sake of worldly gain, and have now provided comfortable homesteads for themselves and for the accommodation of the ministers of Christ?—After all this, are they unwilling to come and dispense the bread of life to us, through fear of fever and ague? For this, we presume, to be the chief cause. For the honor of Christ and His ministers, and of the Church, let this never be said by a Methodist Protestant preacher.

We make the above remarks with a view to the removing of the prejudice that exists in the minds of many of our preachers in regard to this country,—and, of course, are intended for none but those to whom they are applicable.

JOHN SOUDER.

OBITUARY.

For the Western Recorder.

"There is no way to make sorrow light
But in the noble bearing; be content;
Blows given from Heaven are our due punishment;
All shipwrecks are not drowning; you see buildings
Made fairer from their ruins."

Departed this life, on Friday, the 13th of November last, at his residence in Waterford township, Washington county, Ohio, Mr. DAVID WHITE, in the 74th year of his age. For more than fifty years Mr. W. had been an unimpeachable member of the Presbyterian church, and during the most of that period filled the station of Deacon in that branch of the christian faith.

During the year 1800 Mr. WHITE left the Green Mountains of Vermont, and emigrated to Washington county, to endure the privations and dangers of the life of a pioneer in a new and thinly inhabited country. He remained a resident of the county until his death, discharging faithfully the duties he owed to his God and to his country. By his death a large circle of relatives and friends have experienced a loss which will be acutely felt and regretted by all. Mr. W. was the eldest of a family of twelve, a brother of whom now resides in Zanesville, Mr. OLCUTT WHITE.

Death, at any period of the life of man, is to be feared and looked upon with an eye of solemnity, whether it comes upon us in the helplessness of infancy, the bloom of youth, the prime of life, or the feebleness of age. At either stage it is to be viewed as the unerring messenger of God, and is not to be deceived or averted. To see the features of prattling infancy tranquillized in the sleep of death, is to make us aware that one spirit is called to its home ere it became imbued with the gall of bitterness, which but too surely awaits all who are permitted to lengthen out life to the span allotted to us. To behold the aged individual, whose locks are whitened by the frosts of many winters, whose every hair is but a memento of some unseen interposition of the hand of a kind and merciful Protector, to save him from some hidden danger, and to conduct him to some friendly harbor of peace and tranquility; interpositions not made manifest unto the children of man until the day of final reckoning and retribution, is a scene of awful sublimity, and one full of instruction.—When the aged are called upon to yield unto God the breath which had been loaned to them for a period, with what joy do those who walk in the paths of righteousness obey the summons, and depart for the happy home of the saint in Heaven; to them the grave has no terrors, for

"'Tis here all meet!
The shivering Icelander, and sun-burnt Moor;
Men of all climes that never met before;
And of all creeds, the Jew, the Turk, and Christian.
Here the Prince, and favorite still prouder,
His sovereign's keeper, and the people's scourge,
Are huddled out of sight. Here lie abash'd
The great negotiators of the earth,
And celebrated masters of the balance,
Deep read in stratagems, and wiles of courts;
Now vain their treaty skill! Death scorns to treat."

Mr. WHITE in his last moments, gave evidence of a triumph in the blood of Christ, and that he could sing with the redeemed on the glorious day of resurrection, the song of Moses and the Lamb.

J. W. W.

Meadow Farm, O., Dec. 6, 1840.

☞ATTEMPT AT ASSASSINATION.—On Thursday night week, Professor Davis, of the University of Virginia, was shot in front of his dwelling. The individual who committed the act is said to have been masked at the time. The ball was received in the lower part of the stomach, and passed around the abdomen to the fleshy part of the thigh, without entering the cavity. The wound, though severe, is not considered mortal.

P. S. We learn since that he died the Saturday following from the effect of the pistol shot.

SELECTIONS.

HON. J. Q. ADAMS' LECTURE.

The first lecture of the season before the New York Lyceum, was delivered on Wednesday, by Hon. J. Q. Adams. Long before the orator appeared, the immense building was crowded in every part; and when he was presented to the audience by the President of the Institution, all in the building rose to their feet.

The lecture was a written essay—in which we were somewhat disappointed,—as we had hoped to hear an extemporaneous address from one at whose command thoughts rally in readier flights, and bring better words to clothe them, than at the call of almost any other living man. What was lost in animation was, however, made up in finish; and though few heard any thing new, all heard acknowledged truisms, aptly arranged, and so delivered as to present the appearance of novelty and freshness.

The subject chosen was the social history of man. The orator commenced by remarking that history is the record of the passage of time—that man is the only being who takes note of that passage, and that all history must therefore have man for its subject. He divided the advance of the race into four stages of progress; the life of the hunter; pastoral life; tillage of the soil; and civilization. Upon the latter he said little, dwelling principally upon the three first.

In the hunter's life he said there could be no social virtues. Woman was a degraded slave; parental and filial affection were unknown, and the greatest act of respect and affection from the child to the parent, was to put the latter out of existence, when his support became burdensome.—In the roving life of the hunter no attachment to place, and little to person could grow up. The hunter or savage has no records, and no written language.

In the next stage, the pastoral life, man becomes from his habits, more inclined to association. Woman, from a slave, becomes a valuable chattel. Chastity is imposed upon her as a duty, but is not considered binding upon man. His habitation is not yet fixed, as he must move from place to place to feed his flocks. In this state man first discovered that the beasts of the field could be tamed to his will. The first tamed were the bull and the ram; the constellations first named in the sky were for those animals.

The pastoral condition was only the second state of society, and its natural tendancy was to wander into polygamy, and also into idolatry. The mind was led from its leisure and meditative tendency herein engendered to inquire into causes; it saw systems in multitudes, and not in unity; and man naturally was led to ascribe intelligence to all the orbs that passed before his eyes; he deemed them self-created, possessing separate souls; he soon saw in the nature of things that the earth was dependent on the sun which ruled the day, as the moon and stars ruled the night; he sees effects only on the earth and causes only in the sky; he fancies a Deity in every star; he believes each an arbiter of his fate; and thus he comes to worship the whole host of heaven. His physical wants satiated with unremitting plenty, his mind softened by his meditative life, and the effective quiet which attended it, and his thoughts led from the multitudes above him to think on earth, not unity, but of multitudes; his love becomes intense, not delicate; general, not individual; his sexual intercourse is indiscriminate; his wives are numerous; the worst state of polygamy succeeds, and produces a harvest of discord, strife and wretchedness.

The hard stage is thatin which man becomes a tiller of the ground, To this stage belongs exclusively,

Unity of Habitation,
Unity of Conjugal Society,
Unity of Religious Worship.

To this state also belongs the establishment of individual property. The shepherd had no permanent possession of the soil. But the tiller of the ground, when he came to bestow labor on the soil, found it necessary that the ground should be inclosed, and that the intrusion of others should be excluded. He finds then, too, that he needs a permanent dwelling place to superintend, and reap the benefit of his labors; that seed time is followed by harvest, and that he needs a garner to gather in his reward. And thus the foot of man becomes fastened to the earth in one constant dwelling place. He builds his habitation to outlast his life; and it passes to his children.

Thus population thickens, the ties of neighbors gain strength; the kindly affections which were first awakened in the shepherd's life, now increase and extend to all around him. His fireside becomes a cherished spot, the lawn before his door, on which he played in infancy, the stream in which he bathed his youthful limbs, the trees from which in childhood he first gathered fruit, these all seem like children, grateful to him for parental care; they all lead the mind through time up to eternity; they are the silent witnesses of God's goodness thro' youth and age; and they grapple round the heart of man, chain him to his house, and strengthen with the best and brightest, and strongest of all human impulses, the unsurpassable and unappreciable, and imperishable love of country. (Cheers.)

After a glance at civilized life, in the course of which he remarked that the word "citizen," in Europe, restricted to the dweller in cities, has with us its full and honored Roman signification; the orator gave a brief review of the condition of women in all ages, and added conclusions which are specially recommended to all old bachelors:

The female is formed in a delicate mould—for sufferance rather than action. In every state of society, woman must live in a state of dependence upon man.—To the savage hunter, she is but as a mere domestic. To the shepherd, she is but as one of the tamed, beautiful, and affectionate animals around him, and shares his regards with the sheep and the ox, who yield him food and raiment. To the husbandman she resumes her native dignity, and is no longer the slave or the plaything of her tyrant, used at will or caprice, worn out and thrown aside; but becomes the partner of his heart and life, the mistress of his home, the prop and stay of his soul; that bosom no longer recked with jealous tortures of other women sharing her husband's love—the love of each forms the happiness of each. She is the common mother of the whole family; and all are bound to her by one holy bond of filial obedience. And in this community alone woman enjoys that true liberty and love which is her birthright and her blessing:

That love intense which sensual joy survives,
Founded on duty and the nuptial vow,
Which with its partner in affection strives,
Beams in the eye, and gladdens in the brow,
Which pain and agony themselves endow;
That love intense which pillow'd in the skies,
On a next world of brighter bliss relies.
That love intense which purer ardors warm,
On blameless lives and faithful breasts which stands,
Which greets the sunshine and defies the storm,
Which Time but strengthens, and which Death withstands,
First of the social charities which form,
Parental, filial, and fraternal bands,
That love with wedlock's rays alone can shine,
Its source, its ends, are deathless and divine.

* * * * * * *

The deductions which we are to draw from all this are, that the cause which most tend to advance human happiness are—

Unity of a permanent habitation,
Unity of conjugal bondage,
Unity of religious worship.

* * * * * * *

What conclusions, then, does all this lead us to? To the firm belief entertained by the humble individual who has the honor to address you, that to the full and complete happiness of men, there is essential but

One fixed habitation,
One wedded partner for life,
One supreme, omnipotent God,
the rewarder of all those who diligently seek and serve him.

The orator concluded with another extract from Thompson; and the audience separated, full of admiration of the veteran statesman, who could lay down the weighty matters which must fill his mind continually, and thus successfully treat of subjects adapted to a popular audience.—One minor matter many noticed. The lecturer, at his advanced age, read without the assistance of any optical contrivances; while the less young men of this generation were busy wiping the "spectacles" which, ere they reach his age, will reduce the wearers almost to total blindness.

For the sketch we have given of the lecture, we are indebted, first to our own memory, on which we drew before the morning papers reached us; and next to the Herald, in which appears a very correct report of the address, with some omissions of parts not essential to the thread of the argument.—Brother Jonathan.

DIFFERENT STYLE OF ELOQUENCE.—There have seldom been examples of greater difference of eloquence than the following brief extracts presents:

"Contribute liberally, my brethren; give such a sum as you would not be ashamed to place on the altar of heaven in presence of an assembled universe."—Bishop Griswald's Charity Sermon.

"Give generously, my friends, not four pence half-pennies, but run your hands in your pockets up to the elbow, and bring out a handful as a sailor would do if you needed his assistance."—Rev. Mr. Taylor before the Bristol Seaman's Friend Society.

NOVEL DISCOVERY.—The London Atlas states that Mr. Marsh, an able chemist connected with the Royal Arsenal, recently discovered that it is an invariable rule with iron which has remained for a short time under water, when reduced to small grains, or to an impalpable powder to become red hot, and ignite any object with which it may come in contact. This he experienced by scraping some corroded metal from a gun which ignited the paper containing it and burnt a hole in his pocket. The knowledge of this fact may be useful in accounting for spontaneous fires, the origin of which has never been traced.

THE EFFECTS OF BAD NOVELS.—Among the worst class of bad books are those in which a man of genius writes an interesting tale, purporting, to have in the end a most excellent moral, but in which at every step the chief character is a villain. Some robber hero, a licentious gentleman, or even an ingenious thief, such as the Artful Dodger, is presented in bold relief as the hero of many scenes, and the object of general attention.

The effect of this on young and ambitious minds, is to make the villain model an object of emulation, rather than of abhorence. Such is the depravity of the human heart, that vice clothed in distinction, is more admired than the noblest virtue, in humility. To make youth familiar with the plans and actions of robbers, seducers and thieves, is only to make him acquainted with the way to be a villain. He must have uncommon virtue if he learns no evil, and considers them only as beacons of warning.

Mr. Bulwer was one of the chief criminals in this mode of teaching. He clothed scoundrels and puppies in the drapery of genius, and made robbers and dandies the objects of admiration.

After him, Mr. Dickens has done much to deprave public taste, and lead the young estray. Who does not know that the minute description of Fagan and his pupils, is the very way to teach apprentice boys, who may be without principles or guardians, how to perform the same exploits? None can read the story of Oliver Twist without interest, yet the reader may be assured, that to thousands of youth it is a positive poison, to which there is no antidote.

Jack Sheppard is another story of this class, and one of the very worst. It is criminal to publish, and criminal to spread before a family such a mass of filthy, and at the same time attractive moral deformities.

We have been led to these reflections by a transaction which recently took place in London, and is a very pointed illustration of the principle we have stated.

Courvoisier, the valet of Lord William Russell, as our readers know, committed the murder of his master. He was tried convicted and hung. Previous to his execution, he stated that he was induced to commit this awful crime by reading the novel of Jack Sheppard, in which the hero is made to pass through a career of successful crime.

Mr. Ainsworth, the author of Jack Sheppard, thinking, no doubt correctly, that this fact would reflect disgrace upon him and his works, appeared in the London papers in his own name, to say that it was not true, that such a confession was made. The High Sheriff of London and Middlesex, has, however, very properly established the fact. He states explicitly that to him the murderer made the statement to which we refer—that Jack Sheppard was the cause of the murder.

But this fact, though more signal than can be adduced, is only one out of thousands, which will illustrate the principle that he who either by reading or observation, makes himself familiar with vice, is hardening his heart and taking steps towards the commission of crime. This truth is one of vast importance in the business of education both private and public,

MARRIAGE IN PROHIBITED DEGREES.—At the last general convention, a committee, consisting of H. U. Onderdonk, Moore, and Brownell, was appointed to report at the next general convention, a canon prohibiting marriages within certain degrees of consanguinity and affinity. In this report, which will be one of much importance, the case of marrying a deceased wife's sister will be of necessity prominent. We allude to the subject at present, in order to direct attention to the fact that a pamphlet has been published in England advocating the repeal of the law in that country, which prohibits marriage within the degree of affinity just mentioned. A circular soliciting the repeal has unhappily received signatures from among the clergy, and the measure is said to receive countenance and active co-operation of the Archbishop of Dublin and the Bishop of Landaff.—Churchman.

FOUND DROWNED.—The body of a decently dressed man, was found in the East River, on Saturday. He was about 5 feet 10 inches high, 35 years of age, had on a dark frock coat, mixed pantaloons thick woolen net drawers, cotton shirt marked H. K., dark valentia vest and boots. In his pocket was a bill of exchange for $890:12, dated New York, Nov. 23, 1839, payable 90 days after sight, to the order of Mr. M. Schusterz and drawn by Ed. Black.—N. Y. paper.

THE CASE OF THE STEAMBOAT COLLISION.—An indictment against Capt. Roe and James Gibson, of the De Witt Clinton for unlawfully and maliciously propelling that boat against another, the Napoleon, and thereby endangering the lives of the passengers and crew, were tried on Friday. The defendants were both acquitted!! Captain Hancox of the Napoleon, was then put on trial on cross indictment for shooting with intent to kill.—ib.

WESTERN RECORDER.

ZANESVILLE:

WEDNESDAY, ... DECEMBER 9, 1840.

Table of Electoral Votes in Twenty-Four States.

	Harrison.		Van Buren.
Ohio	21	Virginia,	23
Kentucky	15	New Hampshire,	7
Indiana	9	Missouri,	4
New York	42	Alabama,	7
Pennsylvania	30	Arkansas,	3
Maryland	10
New Jersey	8	Total,	44
Connecticut	8
Rhode Island	4
Georgia	11
Tennessee	15
Maine	10
Massachusetts	14
Vermont	7
Delaware	3
Michigan	3
Mississippi	4
Louisiana	5
North Carolina,	15
Total,	234

Whole number of electoral votes, ... 294.
Necessary to a choice. ..... 148.

THE NEXT CONGRESS.—The following statement will show the result of the recent elections for members of Congress, in the States which have held their elections since July:

	No.	Dem.	Whig.
Louisiana,	3	1	2
Vermont,	5	0	5
Missouri,	2	2	0
Maine,	8	2	4	2 vacancies.
Georgia,	9	0	9
Pennsylvania,	28	14	13	1 vacancy.
Ohio,	19	7	12
New York,	40	21	19
New Jersey	6	0	6
Delaware,	1	0	1
Michigan,	1	0	1
Massachusetts,	12	1	10	1 vacancy.
Arkansas,	1	1	0
	144	57	83	4 vacancies.

☞Whig gain 26, Democratic gain 9. Nett Whig gain 17.

SENATE.—The United States Senate, consisting of fifty-two members, is now constituted of twenty-eight Democrats and nineteen Whigs, there being five vacancies.

WHAT WILL BE DONE?—A deep degree of interest will soon be felt as to the monetary or currency policy of Gen. Harrison's administration. We already hear such inquiries as these,

Will the Sub-Treasury be repealed?

Will we have a National Bank?

What will be done in relation to the currency?

These questions are much more readily asked than answered. Our own impression is that whatever may be the disposition of Gen. Harrison, he will find the currency question one that may be managed with great difficulty. The objections to a National Bank will gather much of their force from the wretched condition of the Bank of the U. States at the present time, for although that institution now only holds a State charter, it is still frequently referred to as the Bank of the United States, and people have been in the habit of regarding her as such an institution, or at least their prejudices against the existing Bank, would, in a great measure, be called into action, should a new National Bank be proposed, and yet something will be expected of the new administration, if not as a substitute for the Independent Treasury, at least as calculated to afford a "better currency" than the existing. But in what that something will consist, we confess ourselves altogether unable to say. A correspondent of the Boston Patriot, a respectable Whig paper, has furnished the following view.—Bicknell.

A NATIONAL BANK.

There is quite a diversity of opinion as to the expediency of chartering a National Bank; many of the Whig and nearly the whole of the Administration party are opposed to it; the party in its favour is however, very large and intelligent, and may succeed in their object.

All intelligent men are now agreed that as fluctuations in market value of property, of late years, have been extremely injurous, that the unlimited power of the States to charter Banks of issue, with the consequent fluctuations in the amount of the currency, has been the most efficient cause of them, and that we can hope to avoid the constant recurrence of these revulsions only by some efficient check upon the Banks. There are two modes in which such a check can be applied; by direct legislation by the several States, or by the creation by the General Government of a counter-balancing power, whose interest it shall be to apply it. In the remarks I am to make, I shall confine myself to the latter mode.

How then, can we, by a National Bank, most efficiently check the undue expansion of the currency by the State Banks?

To enable us to consider this question intelligently, we must understand the nature of the currency and the mode of operation of the Banks. The currency consists of bank bills and specie in circulation and of the deposits in Bank, payable on demand; it is immaterial whether I have my money in bills, in my pocket, or in the Bank, on deposit; it is equally, in either case, at my command, applicable to the business of transfer and equally currency. On examination, it will be found that in the commercial cities of Massachusetts, and I presume, in all the Atlantic cities, the deposits on demand are equal to the bills and specie in circulation, or in other words, constitute half the currency. As to the operations in the Banks—the loan of their capital would produce but six per cent. on its amount; to meet the bounties exacted from them, their taxes and other expenses, they depend upon the profit they can make loaning their bills and their deposits, for which they pay no interest. It is in these loans that their whole danger lies; they must pay their bills and deposits whenever called for, and they have loaned them for notes payable at a future day. It is obvious that the degree of danger depends on the extent of these loans of their bills and deposits; in other words, their loans beyond their capital, these are often most imprudently extended, and the banks jeopardized or ruined. It is, likewise, obvious that a Bank may be bankrupt, without a bill in circulation, should she imprudently have loaned her deposits.—It is not solely by increasing the currency, but, equally, by using currency which does not belong to her, that her danger arises.

Having thus stated wherein the weakness of our Banks consists and of what our currency is composed, we come to the consideration of the practicability of an efficient check upon the State Banks, by the creation of a National Bank.

To give such an institution efficient control, it is obvious she must not, herself, be exposed by these causes of weakness. Her charter should refuse the power to issue bills, or to loan deposits, or to deal in foreign exchange, in merchandise or land. Even with these restrictions, a charter for a Bank might doubtless be so framed as to produce six per cent. on its capital, and to be safe beyond all precedent. An Institution, employed as the fiscal agent of the Government and fairly paid for it, with a capital of fifty millions employed chiefly, perhaps, in domestic exchange, with Branches in the several States, authorized to discount at the rates there legal, with, perhaps, a very small per centage on deposits, such a Bank conducted in good faith, would have averted every one of our suspensions; with no liabilities, it would have had the entire control of the other Banks and have kept them sound; its field of action, in domestic exchanges, would have been immense and extremely profitable, at rates which would merely cover the expense of the transport of specie.

It cannot be doubted that such a Bank would attract an immense amount of capital from Europe, and it would be capital devoted to the immediate purposes of trade, depending on its beneficial employment for its remuneration brought by willing hands; not loaned on unproductive improvements, repaid grudgingly, and jeopardising the faith and prosperity of the community.

The above remarks are made on the supposition that a National Bank may be insisted upon, and if we are to have one, let it be with as few objections as possible. For one, I am opposed to any charter of a Bank by Congress. A little more time may enable us, in a less objectionable mode, to attain all the benefits we could derive from the establishment of an institution lodging such tremendous power in the hands of a few, perhaps of one, competing with our own Banks on such unequal terms, and making such a large advance in favour of the doctrine of liberal construction. L. X.

A shocking case of traffic in human flesh, is detailed in a paper before us. It will be seen that Mr. John Taylor, a young man of highly respectable connexions, and whose father for many years held a responsible post in the colony under the local government, was indicted for conveying away from the island of Barbadoes certain apprenticed labourers, and having conveyed them to Texas, there selling them as slaves.

The facts were fully substantiated.—Several apprentice labourers were induced to enter into articles with Taylor and a man named Ames. The following is a copy of the contract of service under which the poor men were entrapped:—

Contract of Edward Whittaker.

Know all men by these presents, that I, Edward Whittaker, free man of colour, do of my own free will and consent, hereby bind myself for the time of four years, to the service of John Taylor and Thomas Ames, in this and other places, to serve them for that time to the best of my ability, and to serve no one else without their consent, and to acknowledge myself to all intents and purposes to be fully and fairly bound by this agreement, under forfeiture of forty dollars for the non fulfilment of this engagement.

EDWARD WHITTAKER, his ⋈ mark.
Witnesses—WM. RUSH, Lieut. Col.
WM. H. MATTHEWS.

November 22, 1835.

A schooner was fitted out, and, under pretence that they were going to leeward the men went on board. After calling at two places for provisions, and to obtain other hands to navigate the vessel, the negroes were conveyed to Texas, and disposed of as "fine Barbarian negroes," to the Georgian slave dealers. They were then transferred to persons who purchased them of the dealers, who employed them in various ways, and treated them with the severity and cruelty usually practised on the unhappy beings whose hard fate it is to be regarded as "purchased property." By some means, what had taken place came to the knowledge of the authorities. A vessel was despatched for the purpose of inquiry, and to demand and bring back the negroes. Capt. Hamilton, to whom the commission was confided, performed the duty with alacrity; and it is but justice to the American authorities to add, that on reciving the Governor's dispatch, every assistance was afforded to Captain Hamilton, in prosecuting his search after the departed men, and every facility, given him to collect evidence against the parties who had illegally conveyed them from the British Colony. The Jury having returned a verdict of guilty, the Chief-Justice immediately passed sentence in the following terms:—"John Taylor, feeling a sincere regard for your aged and respectable parents, it gives me great pain that I should be placed in a situation where it is my duty to pronounce the sentence of this Court after the verdict of the Jury. You are sentenced to transportation for the term of 14 years."—Bicknell.

The Conventon at London, by their chairman, transmitted to the governors of the several States in the country, a circular on the subject of the abolition of slavery and the slave trade.

The following is the reply of Governor Pennington, of New Jersey, to that circular.

NEWARK, N. J., July 30, 1840.

SIR—I acknowledge with pleasure the receipt of yout communication, in behalf of the convention held in London on the 12th ult. on the subject of the abolition of slavery and the slave trade. Impressed as I am with the importance and the truth of the principles and views therein expressed, it is my earnest desire that this country may, at the earliest day in her power consistent with security and the peace of the Union, join hand in hand with the humane on the other side of the water, in washing out the stain upon her national character. The means to be used, as proposed by your Convention, are of a "moral, religious, and pacific character," and it is by these means alone, I am satisfied, this great object can be attained. New Jersey, by an act passed the 24th of Febuary, 1810, has defined her policy. By that act every child born of a slave within the State since the 4th of July, 1804, or which shall thereafter be born, is declared to be free, but to remain in the character of an apprentice in the service of the master, if a male, until twenty-five years of age, and if a female, until the age of twenty-one years. Under the operation of this law, slavery has become almost extinct with us, and I am happy to say that, so far as my observation extends, the conditon of servitude is of the most mitigated and indulgent forms.

Thanking you for your kindness in communicating the proceedings of the Convention,

I remain, your very obedient servant,
WILLIAM PENNINGTON,
Governor of New Jersey.

Thomas Clarkson, Esq., &c., &c.

A BLOODY TRAGEDY.—The Olive Branch of the 25th ultimo, published at Monroe, La., contains the account of a fatal and bloody rencontre which lately occurred in Mayou Mason, in the Parish of Carrol. The particulars were given to the editor of the Olive Branch by a gentleman from Lake Providence.

It appears that suspicions had long been entertained of a secret association of robbers on Island No. 92, in the Mississippi. The whole country was rife with accounts of their depredations.—After the late murder of a Mr. Webb, on Bayou Mason, it became the determination of the people to use every means for their extermination. One of the clan, a man by the name of Laverty, was known to be at the house of Garret P. Rollins, on the Bayou Mason, and was extensively known as a negro thief. Mr. William A. Colman, deputy sheriff of Carroll, determined to arrest him, and for that purpose started, in company with three others, in pursuit of him. On arriving near the house they separated. Colman and one of the men going in front, and the other two to the back part. Laverty, in the mean time, had been informed that there was a warrant out for him, and when he spied Colman and his companions nearing the house, he snatched up a double barrelled gun and rushed to the door.

Colman commanded him to surrender. He then asked Colman if he intended to shoot him. Colman replied, that unless he surrendered he most certainly would. At this instant they both raised their guns and fired so nearly together, that the difference could scarcely be distinguished. Colman was shot with a double barrelled shot gun, and fell dead on the spot, one buck shot entering his throat, another his chin, and twelve just below the nose. Laverty was shot with two rifle balls, both entering the left side, just below the nipple, and the other about two inches to the right, a little above. He did not fall, but grasped his gun with desperate firmness, and attempted to cock the other barrel. He was then fired on by Colman's companion, who missed him, rushed forward and knocked him down with the but end of his gun. At this instant, one of the other men who had gone to the back part of the house, came up and placing the muzzle of his gun against Laverty's head, fired, and shot him dead.

An old man Marrying his Grand-daughter—The narrative of how it happened by the Antiquated Bridegroom himself.

The event, about which so much gossip ran through the town, has been fully developed; but readers at a distance will not be content unless we print (as we do below) the account which Grand-pa gives of how he came to marry his grand-child. It is certainly too rich to be lost. We shall premise, however, that Alderman Campbell, who married the parties, expressly declares he knew nothing of the relationship which existed between them. Mr. James Eneu, (the grand-father) is said to be aged eighty-four years, and Miss Emma Haines (the grand-child) said to be aged about twenty. The marriage is of course null and void by the laws of God and man, to all intents and purposes. It is perhaps proper to add, that Grand-papa Eneu is represented to be rich. But, we must not longer detain the reader from the account of the affair, penned by himself.—Philadelphia Courier.

THE OLD MAN'S HISTORY.

Sir: On the 19th of November, in looking over your paper, I see a piece concerning an unlawful marriage. I will give a true statement of it as near as is in my power. On the 18th of the same month, I found myself touched to the heart by the treatment I received from my relatives. I did not blame them all, for at the same time I knew that two or three was in the lead. I returned home and went to my bed, but could not find rest, nor could I sleep; I thought of one plan after another, and between 9 and 10 o'clock at night, I got it into my head that the only way to spite them was to marry my grand-daughter, and I got out of bed and called to the girls, "are you asleep," and was answered, no. There were three in bed, but I did not know that there was more than two. I then laid out my plan to Emma, and what was my intentions, and she said that she was agreed to marry me, and I fixed the time in the morning, and according to our agreement we went, between 9 and 10 in the morning, to John Dennis, Alderman, and told him that she was my grand-daughter, and that I wished him to marry her and me, and he asked me if I had made up my mind, and I told him yes. He said that he was not well, and that he would come in the evening; and I thought, being as the mother of the girl was not at home, that it would be better to have it done at once, as I knew that she would be at home in the evening. I then went to Alderman Campbell; he was told, not by me, that I wanted to marry that girl; he asked me no questions, but commenced writing the certificate, and we returned home without knowing what we had done. In the evening, Bishop Kendrick came to my house; he had heard that I had fell out with my relations, and had got married to my grand daughter, and he said that it was against the law of the Almighty, likewise the law of the land. I told him that if it was against the law of the country, I should like to see it; he told me to come to his house the next morning, so I accordingly went, and saw and read it for myself. I told him that I would go to the Alderman and have it cancelled. I called on the Alderman, who told me that it could not be done unless by applying to the Legislature or the Court. I then went to the Attorney at once, and he told me that he must see the Judge, and see if it could not be done sooner by the Court, and he proposed to leave it to the Court, and the petition is already drawn. I expect it is to come before the Court; I hope that it will be acted on as soon as possible. About the laws of the Almighty, He is the Judge of all hearts, and He knows what I done it for, and I trust to Him.

JAMES ENEU, Sen.

ENGLAND AND HER INDIA POSSESSIONS—TROUBLES WITH CHINA.—Removed as far as we are from the scene of England's present most pressing emergency, still the people of this country must feel no little interest and anxiety in the aspect of these affairs. Whether a long and costly war is to grow out of the present contest with China or not, may not be known.—But there is one thing which every one, at all acquainted with foreign politics, knows full well, viz: that the power of England in her East India possessions is too gigantic to be endangered; and that she is not and will not be either unmindful of it, or unprepared for a vigilant defence. Russia, however, looks on with obvious jealousy; and whatever may be her diplomatic skill in keeping to herself the knowledge of her deeply rooted dislike, she never has and never will regard the enormous increase of British power in India with any other feelings than those of cordial disapproval. Indeed, it is scarcely to be discovered how it could be otherwise in most of the European nations. Much as the glory of England is lauded, the Island of Great Britain is nothing when contrasted to her enormous possessions in India. "The British Empire in the East Indies now includes one hundred millions of people, and extends over 1,250,000 square miles of all climates, from the snows on the mountains of the Gaut and Himmelaya, to the burning sands of Hindostan, and twelve hundred miles of the navigable rivers Indus, Junga, Sutlege, Ganges, and Bramapoopta, with large cities like Calcutta, Delhi, Benares, Lucno, Poona, Madras, and Bombay. They hold the Great Mogul and all the reigning princes as their captives, and can bring into the field an army full as large as Russia;" and it will be recollected that Russia has a warlike force of 1,200,000 men.

It must be confessed by all readers, that the last news from China, which will be found in another column, looks warlike. Indeed there does not appear to be any doubt now, as to the course England is to pursue; and it is not possible for other nations to remain longer indifferent in regard to the Chinese war.—Sat. Cour.

SOMETING FOR NATURALISTS.—A correspondent of the Baltimore Sun states that there is a walnut tree now standing in full vigor, in the village of Church Hill, Queen Anne's county, in that State, which bears a nut, one half of which is a walnut, and the other half a hickory nut.

FOREIGN NEWS.

We gave in our last an abstract from the foreing news brought by the Caledonia and British Queen. Since, the Great Western has arrived at New York. We give the following additional particulars from these arrivals, taken from the Philadelphia Saturday Courier.

SPEECH OF LOUIS PHILLIPPE.

The King had made his speech, in which he expressed great confidence in the continuancy of peace. He thus concludes:

Gentlemen: I have never claimed with more earnestness and confidence your co-operation. Anarchical passions have not been discouraged by impotency.—Under whatever form they may be presented, my Government will find in the existing laws, and in the firm maintenance of the public liberties, the necessary arms to put them down.

PROCLAMATION BY MARSHAL SOULT.

The Moniteur of this morning contains a proclamation of Marshal Soult to the French Army, on taking office as Secretary and Commander-in-Chief, calling upon them to act in concert with the National Guard in preserving friendly relations, and preserving the peace of the country.

The War operations—400 Prisoners taken—the Mountaineers rushing in.

TOULON, OCT. 31, ½ past 7, P.M.

"The Consul of France to the President of the Council:

"Malta, October, 27.

"The British war steamer Cyclops arrived here this morning from Seyde, whence she departed on the 21st. She has on board the Emir Bechir, with 15 members of his family and 115 persons of his suite, on their way to England.

"The captain of the Cyclops has confirmed the rising of nearly the whole of the inhabitants of the mountains."

On the night of the 23d, five battalions of Turkish troops, one battalion of Royal Marines, and two companies of Austrian troops, were left to cover the camp of Djouni.

The remaining forces of this army, consisting of four battalions of Turkish infantry, one battalion of Royal Marines, and two detachments of Austrian rocketeers, were formed in the upper position of this camp, with a view to attack, at day-break of the 24th, the advanced guard of Ibrahim Pacha, of 1000 men, under Emir Massoud, entrenched at Ardali in a very strong, mountainous condition, in order to maintain the Pacha's communication from his head quarters at Merouba with Byrout.

After a fatiguing march of five hours over very precipitous ground, and having forded the Kelbson river, Commodore Napier, commanding the whole of the above force, menaced the enemy's position in front with the battalion of marines and a Turkish battalion, whilst he ordered General Jochmus, with the remaining 3d battalion of Selim Pacha's division, to turn the enemy's right flank, which movement Gen. Jochmas executed without delay, succeeding, by the rapidity of the movement, in cutting off the enemy's retreat to the Pacha's head quarters, and thus making 400 prisoners, and dispersed the remaining force by 11 A. M.

The four companies are all taken prisoners, the Albanians fled with Emir Massoud, and the Druses dispersed to their houses.

The mountaineers are coming in from the warlike province of Mata in great numbers. There are at this moment distributing 400 stands of Turkish arms to the people of that district, principally to men of Beckfuja, which place was the focus of insurrection some months ago. One thousand stand of arms were distributed on the 24th and 25th inst.

The troops of the allies bivouked on the field of battle and in the neighboring villages on the 25th and 26th Sept.

By the evening of the 26th the troops had returned into the camp of Djouni, with the exception of one battalion, which remained on the left bank of Kelbson, in order to maintain the now open communication of Djouni with the mountaineers of the province of Kate.

The Turkish troops with the Pacha are deserting in strong numbers, and small detachments are sent into head quarters continually.

All the accounts from the seat of war, received since our last, confirm the news of the success of the allies, the rising of the Syrians, and the defeat and discouragement of the Egyptains.

LATER STILL—A BATTLE—7000 KILLED.—The Malta Times of the 28th has this intelligence.

On the 10th inst., an engagement took place between the allied troops and those of Ibrahim and Soliman Pacha, in which the latter were completely defeated, and took to the mountains with 200 cavalry and only two officers. 7,000 in killed, wounded and prisoners, have, from the result of this engagement, fallen into the power of the Sublime Porte.

The Emir Beschir has capitulated, and is at Malta; the Libanus is in a complete state of insurrection; Ibrahim is straitened in every direction, and, it is thought, will speedily be obliged to evacuate the whole of Syria; St. Jean d'Acre is be seiged.

THE RUIN OF THE CAUSE OF MEHEMET ALI IN SYRIA.—Letters to the 17th, via Egypt, confirms the ruin of the cause of the Viceroy in Syria. According to these letters, the Beschir, with 15,000 men, had gone over to the allies, besides irregular mountaineers. Two Eyptian regiments had also gone over to the allies. Ib him and Soliman Pacha had retreated b fore the victorious allies, and their wh troops were in a state of the greatest moralization.

TYRE AND SIDON TAKEN—560 CAPTIVE

Constantinople, Oct. 4.—On the 24 of September, Admiral Walker, with t Turkish fleet, appeared before Tyre, su moned, and took it with 560 captives. On the 26th Commodore Napier appe ed before Sidon and Saida with two li of battle ships, and with the Austrian vison. The Egyptain commander ha ing refused to surrender, Napier comme ced firing. After two hours' cannona the breach was declared practicable, a 1000 British, with 1000 Turks and 2 Austrians, marched to the storm, and c ried the town. The Archduke Frede ick was first in the breach; 2000 Egy tians laid down their arms. The Aili lost 40 dead and 70 wounded. The sult has been most complete and speed The whole of Lebanon is on fire, a Emir Beschir cannot withstand it. T effect, was even worse on Ibrahim's o troops. The corps of 10,000 men, und Ibrahim, dispersed; and on the news the taking of Saida, 60 officers, wi 4000 men, went over to Napier on t 27th. The four consuls, who had l Alexandria, had joined Napier's fleet.

Constantinople letters of the 7th in states that an Austrian steamer had a rived with despatches, which the frien of the Divan represented as most m nacing for Mehemet Ali. According those statements, Solimon Pacha had t ken refuge in Beyrout after his late d feat, with only 1500 men. The Alli had closely invested the place. Ibrahi Pacha was equally said to have thro himself into St. Jean d'Acre with 25 men.

IMPORTANT FROM CHINA.

By the ship Ann McKim, from Canto at New York, we have papers of 25 June.

The news which we have received b the Ann McKim is of a character whi leaves no doubt as to the result of t great question between Britain and C na. The British force intend to land China and attack its power with 10,0 well disciplined Europeans, 1000 ri men, and 3000 Cameronians, with amp stores of artillery, the whole backed by navel force and four large war steame

The English force did not arrive toget er, and on the arrival of the first or the Alligator, it was immediately enga ed in difficulty, the Chinese having se out fireships to burn the British shippin The boats of the squadron, however, to ed them clear, and got them stranded.

The steamer Madagascar arrived aft the Alligator, and on the 21st June Co modore Gordon arrived with H. M. shi Crusier. Algerian, Rattlesnake, and stea ers Queen and Atalanta, with 18 sail transports, having on board H. M. 49t 28th, (Cameronians) and 18th (Roy Irish) Regiments, with the Sepoy Volu teers, from Calcutta, and a company Sappers and Miners, from Madras.

The blockade of Canton was constit ted on the 28th, by the deposition at t several entrances of ships Druid, Volag Hyacinth, Larne, and the Company Steamer Madagascar. The Admiral, t Hon. George Elliot, is daily expect with his squadron, either direct from t Cape of Good Hope, or from Tincomale The Blenheim 72, Blonde 42, Nimrod 2 Wanderer 18 and the Pylados 18, ha sailed; and the Pique, 42, Inconstant 3 Andromache 36, and Hydra steam frigat are expected to join H. E. in the Indi seas.

Foreign ships would be allowed depart unless detained by the Chinese.

A cargo of poisoned tea, packed small parcels, to be sold to the sailo had, it was reported been sent down the Chinese. It was, however, captur by pirates, and sold to the people on t coast, among whom, in consequence, the had been many deaths.

A part of the squadron had proceeded the North, the object being as is surmis to take possession of Tinghoe district, the province of Chekeang—in oth words, "the island of Chusan." This is "fair, fertile, and populous district," a would be easily subdued.

Every one was preparing to leave Ca ton, and all foreign business would wound up in eight or ten days.

Up to the 25th inst, no other hostiliti had occured.

It was reported in Canton that an ed is just published, offering rewards f Captain Elliot, and the rest of the Englis dead or alive.

The following letter, from the Ne York Herald, contains some interesti particulars:

MACAO, JUNE 23, 1840.

Since writing the proceeding, yeste day, the overland mail has closed, and learn it has been determined that the for shall move immediately to the north, wit out attacking the Bogue forts. The re son of this must be the importance of i mediately landing the troops and putti the transports out of the range of the t phoons. It is whispered that the Chine are preparing to resist the English, son where in the neighborhood of Peki meanwhile, Canton river is to be strict blockaded, and an ingress prevented. But it is thought that ships already in w be allowed to come out, unless prevent by the Chinese. We have accounts fro Canton, 20th June; all parties were pr paring to leave, and the whole busine would be finished there in ten days, which time the Washington, the last sh in, would be dispatched. We are not y aware if it is intended to send the Panan up.

E RECORDER.

ZANESVILLE.

SDAY, ... DECEMBER 9, 1840.

next number we expect to publish both nor's and President's Message. As ur readers take no other paper, these ubt be called for. As these will occupy ie number our corsespondents will have e a little patience with us.

EATHER.—On Saturday and Saturday , we had a snow storm from the east, to the depth of nine or ten inches.

TION OF MUSKINGUM.—The population unty is 38,777,—increase the last ten 42,—so says the Aurora, whose editor completed the census for 1840.

s Scott, the Register of the Land Office, othe, gives notice through the papers, books were opened on the first of this for the purchase of lands, heretofore sube at this town, this office having been by government.

ouisville Messenger severely reprimands liticians who are beginning to agitate tion, already, who is to be the President s hence. For the sake of peace and of the country, it thinks the subject umber for at least three years, and wishake it a capital offence to agitate the s sooner. We go for that measure.

D'HAUTEVILLE CASE.—The late decision ase, is directly contrary to a similar one York, yet both decisions are abundantly d, it seems, by precedent. Why could ave a method of deciding disputed cases ig lots? We have little doubt but juld be about as well balanced, as on the judicial system, and the former would cheaper.

Louisville Messenger of the 26th ultimo, fire broke out, the night before, in the of Allen & Co., Main street, and that ount of property destroyed was estimated y from 20,000 to 50,000 dollars.

s G. Barney returned from England by at Western, which arrived at New York 24th ultimo.

said that the out-lines of a treaty is on between Lord Palmerson and Gen. on, by which the British Government is gnize the independence of Texas.

attempt was recently made, by two men, the mail within some four miles of Schuylidge.

DS UP! DEMOCRATS.—The Jeffersonian of th ult. says, that the wife of Caleb Sherf Carroll, has added THREE to the demofamily since the late election. If you go reasing thus the Whigs will soon be left minority.

Charleston (S. C.) Mercury thinks it is ture, in the press, to announce the certainpeace in Europe, from the success of the in Syria, and from the change of the h Ministry, intelligence of which events brought by he late arrivals from England ditor thinks M. Thiers has not yet exhibitstrength, and France has not been elecby the ashes of Napoleon. Beside, it is ttled whether the allies will not be willing sh their success to an extent which will l France to interfere.

E CASKET.—We have received the Dec. f this valuable periodical, which is the first, lieve, since its connection with Burton's zine. It is accompanied with an elegant of the fashions, and other ornaments. It n able list of contributors, among whom we e name of our friend T. H. Stockton.

e Governor of Virginia has offered a reward ree thousand dollars for the apprehension and conveyance within the limits of his State, hree men who were principal and accessary creting a slave on board the schooner, "Ro Carter," about two years since, by which s he was conveyed to New York, where he mmediatcly arrested and taken back. e men were brought before the Recorder of ity and discharged. The Governor of Vir then issued a requisition upon the Gov of New York to deliver them to the au ties of his State, but the New York Gov r refused. So, he has now offered the above rd.

wford of the 28th ultimo, speaking of the arrivals from Europe, remarks:

In a commercial point, the intelligence by foregoing arrivals is of a higher importance for many years. Aside from the China subit gives evidence, says the Herald, of a dy return of a more favorable state of affa rs. dissolution of the Thiers Ministry, and the rrences in the east, have put at rest the war tion for the present, and have removed the e of the large recent demand for money for tary purposes. An event equally propitious these, has been the settlement of the diffiies between the Russian government and Asiatic, with which hostilities have been ed. The vast demand for money by the Rus government, for warlike purposes, has undoubtedly been the main cause of the adverse e of English exchanges, and assisted by a state of things in France, has caused a powil drain of gold, both from this country and at Britain. In the northern ports of Europe, er has commanded so high a price that it has ced a great deal of coin out of France, where s the standard, and has caused it to be a bet remittance from this country than sterling at a discount of 1½ per cent. In London, continued demand for specie has reached an ent that has called from the Bank measures re stringent than she has been obliged to pt for many years. Although she has not sed the rate of interest, she so restricted the racter of the bills discounted, that very few ne within the limits. The consequence has n severe contraction in all sections of the ntry."

NEW SCHOOL DISTRICT.—We had a school district set off last spring, one and a half, by two miles in length, on which the householders have erected a neat stone School House, 26 by 22 ft. It is finished except the last coat of plastering and permanent seating. Esq. Moore, the township clerk, whose duty it is made by law to visit the schools, says our house is the best District School House in Springfield township, which includes the town of Putnam. It stands about fifty rods east of our office: school commenced last Thursday.

PRICES CURRENT.

BALTIMORE.—Flour is less firm, as we last week stated, and prices of Howard street have given way a fraction, as sales of 600 bbls. in two lots were made yesterday at 4,81½, for good brands from stores. The sales of the week previously amounted to only about 1000 bbls. at 4,87½.—Choice brands are held higher. The car and wagon price is steady at 4,75 per bbl.

The offerings of Beef Cattle in market continue large, the number this week amounting to nearly 1000 head; about half of which were sold at 5 a 6,50, chiefly at the former, showing an advance; those at the former rate were mostly to packers. Live hogs continue much as noticed last week, 6 a 6,25 per 100 lbs. Slaughtered hogs from the wagons and stores sell at about 6 dolls. per 100lbs.—Lyford, Nov. 28.

PHILADELPHIA.—Flour.—The market continues dull for bread stuffs, and some articles have declined. Sales of 2500 bbls. superfine Pennsylvania Flour at 5 dolls., and in one or two instances a reduction of 12½ cts. has been submitted to; 600 bbls. Brandywine at 5,25.

Beef Cattle—860 in market; sales from 4½ to 6½ cts.; 400 left over—330 from Virginia. 230 cows and calves; sales at 22 a 32 dolls; extra 44 dolls. Springers, 16 a 27 dolls. Dry cows, 10 a 17 dolls. 600 hogs—sales from 5 a 5¾ cts.; extra 6 dolls.—200 left over. 2700 sheep; sales from 1 to 1,25: extra 2,75—400 over.—Bicknell, December 1.

NEW YORK.—Flour.—The receipts this week have not been so great as during the previous one. The demand has been good for the season, and prices throughout steady.

For common brands the rates are 4,87½ a 4,94 to 5 dolls. for good brands. Ohio 5, and Michigan 4,81½ a 4,87½. No change in Southern Flour.—Com. Adv. Nov. 28.

PITTSBURGH.—Flour—Stationary at $3 out of wagons, and 3,25 from stores.

Cloverseed—Sales of 60 bushels at $5.

Dried Peaches—Sales 100 bushels at $1,50 and in demand.

Sugar—Sales of 30 hhds very choice, clarified, a prime article, at 8½; 8 hhds choice, 8¼a8½, and 6 hhds good new, 7¾cts per lb.

Feathers—50 sacks Tennessee, 40 cts.

Candles—25 boxes Louisville, 10½ cts per lb.

Pork—price not given.—Harris, Nov. 28.

CLEVELAND, Nov. 19.—Prices on the river. Wheat 62; Corn 30; Oats 30 cts. per bushel; Flour 3,50 per bbl.; Mess Pork, No. 1, $15 00; No. 2, $13 00.

MASSILLON.—Wheat 50; Corn 20; Oats 15; Potatoes 18¾; Corn meal 37½; Butter 7; Eggs 8; Lard 6½; Apples 25; Cheese 6; Wood, per cord, 1,50; Flour 3,00; Pork, per bbl. 12,00; Pork, per 100lbs. 3,00; Salt per bbl. 2,50; White Fish, do. 8,00; Pickerel do. 6,50; Mackerel, do. 20,00; Coffee, best per bag, 15 cents per lb.; Bacon, per 100 lbs., $5 a $6; Buckwheat flour, per 100 lbs. 1,50; Sole Leather, per lb. 22 a 25 cts.—Gazette, Nov. 26.

COMMUNICATION.

For the Western Recorder.

Mr. Editor: With leave of Divine Providence, I propose pursuing the following order of appointments in the Ohio District:

Cincinnati circuit, - -	Dec'r. 6, 1840.
Cincinnati station, - -	" 13, "
At home, (Twin creek ct.)	" 20, "
Miami circuit, - - - -	" 27, "
Finley " - - -	Jan'y. 3, 1841.
Wood county Mission, - -	" 10, "
Lima circuit, - - - - -	" 17, "
Union " - - - -	" 24, "
Springfield circuit, - - -	" 31, "
Xenia " - -	Feb'y. 7, "
Twin creek " - - - - -	" 14, "
Broad Ridge " - - - - -	" 21, "
Ruddles Mills circuit, - -	" 28, "

A. H. BASSETT.

P. S. When convenient to the brethren, I should be glad to be notified, by some means, what points in the circuits I have to strike. My Post Office address is Jacksonburg, Butler county, Ohio. A. H. B.

Business Department.

Br. Stockton will please send his paper, from the first number, to Jeremiah Springer, Meadow Farm, Muskingum county, Ohio, and William Dumm, Brownsville, Licking county, Ohio. We have received the cash, and will forward when we get more. We enclosed you ten dollars a few days since.

We have received a letter from C. C. Chapman, who is now on a missionary tour in Michigan.—He wishes us to say to his family, he expects to be home on Christmas day.

Br. Warren, on the Deersville circuit, calls on the President for another preacher. He adds: if Br. Stephens cannot come, Br. Matthews, near Cleveland, is requested. He also informs Br. Reeves that his next quarterly meeting will be held at Winchester, commencing the 2d of January.

Just as our paper was going to press, we received the 2d number of the Christian World, which had on it, "please exchange." We inform Br. Stockton that we have sent our paper regularly to him since he issued the first number of the Letter-Press. If he wishes to receive it regularly he will have to make some different regulations about the post office.

Since the notice of Br. Warren, was in type, we have received a note from him stating that Br. Burgess had came to the circuit with a regular transfer.

ITEMS.

The Pittsburgh Intelligencer says, that a trunk belonging to Mr. C. H. Wolff, of that city, was cut from behind the stage, while returning from the East, and was found next day by the road side emptied of its contents. The same paper says that a number of attempts at house breaking and robbery have been recently made at Allegheny city.

SENTENCE.—In the Baltimore United States Circuit Court, on Monday, George Philips, convicted of robbing the mail in Hagerstown on the 19th of August last, was sentenced to confinement in the Penitentiary, at hard labor, until the 23d of Nov. 1845.

COUNTERFEIT.—We learn from the Baltimore American that a new counterfeit, in the shape of a fifty dollar note on the Hagerstown bank has made its appearance.

☞FROM FLORIDA.—We have seen a letter from Fort Waucahoote, Florida, says the Philadelphia Inquirer, under date of Nov. 9th, which says: "Tiger Tail, with forty warriors, came to-day at Fort King. A deputation of Seminoles from Arkansas, is also there. I shall be able to give you interesting news in the course of a few days."

The amount of the State debt of Alabama is ten millions eight hundred and sixty thousand dollars, and is invested in the capital stock of the banks.

FATAL CASUALTY.—A boy named Henry Day, a son of Mr. Dudley Day, of Portsmouth, Ohio, while on a visit with his parents at the house of a relative in Allen, Ill., was playing with some other boys of his age under a sand bank, when suddenly the bank gave way and falling upon them, crushed young Day so severely as to cause his death in a few minutes. The other children escaped without much injury.

The pleasant little village of Canajoharie, in the State of New York, was destroyed by fire on the evening of Nov. 9th. About 40 buildings were burned—among others the printing office of the Radii, with all its contents. A little boy about 4 years old is missing, and it is feared he perished in the flames. The loss by this fire probably exceeds 100,000 dollars.

TRIAL OF DARNES.—A letter received at Balmore, dated St. Louis, November 14th, states that the jury empannelled for the trial of Mr. Darnes, charged with the murder of A. J. Davis, proprietor of the Argus, had just come in with a verdict of manslaughter in the fourth degree; subjecting the accused to a fine of five hundred dollars, which was immediately paid.

The population of Wheeling, with its suburbs, number 8,793.

THE ARREST OF SURTEES.—Intelligence has reached town that our fellow citizen, Mr. Gwynne, who went in search of Wm. Surtees, the absconded Cashier of the Mechanics' and Traders' Bank of this city, has succeeded in arresting the fugitive in the Isle of Jersey, in France. Surtees had assumed the name of John Williams. When apprehended, he was passing under the name of John Topham. Here, he hailed as Wm. Surtees: but it is well known that his proper name is John Bugg. He is a native of Spanding, England.—Cincinnati Gazette.

A SAFE PLACE TO KEEP NAPOLEON.—When the question was agitated in London, which would be the safest state to put Napoleon, so that he could not get out, a gentleman who had a long suit depending, advised ministers to put him in a court of chancery.

FIRE IN NATCHEZ.—A fire broke out in Natchez, under the Hill, on the 4th ult., which destroyed an entire square before it was extinguished. The loss is said to be upwards of 30,000 dollars.

BREACH OF PROMISE.—A girl aged 18 years recovered 1,200 dollars at Frederick, Md., for a breach of marriage promise.

TWO CHILDREN LOST.—At Madison, Ia., two children of Mr Absalom Waltz of Tuscarawas, Ohio, fell from a steamboat into the Ohio and were drowned.

An animated controversy has been carried on before the Board of Aldermen of New York, between the Catholics and Protestants, about the application of the school fund,—the Catholics wishing a portion of it assigned to them pro rata, to be applied in their own way, and the Protestants opposing their claim, unless they would come in on the same terms as others. Some Protestant speaker had made an argument against the Catholic doctrine of purgatory, the Catholic bishop in replying remarked, "if our Protestant friends don't like our purgatory, they may go farther and fare worse." This is the most genteel mode of giving folks leave to go to old forkey we have met with.—Weekly Messenger.

THE LARGEST LIBRARY IN THE WORLD.—The largest library in the world is said to be the one in the British Museum. It contains over half a million of printed books, and one hundred and twenty thousand manuscripts. The next largest is the Royal Library of Paris, in which there are over four hundred thousand books, and eighty thousand manuscripts.

VERY AFFECTIONATE AND RATHER SENTIMENTAL.—A sentimental youth having seen a young damsel shedding tears over something in her lap, took the first opportunity to be introduced to her, and made no doubt that she was a congenial spirit.

"What work was it that affected you so much, the other morning? I saw you shed a great many tears. Was it Bulwer's last?"

"I don't know what Bulwer's last is," returned she, "but I assure you I was doing a job which always almost kills me. I was pealing onions."

ANOTHER RAILROAD IN PENNSYLVANIA.—A company has lately been organized and officers elected for the purpose of making a railroad up the Swatara creek, in Schuylkill county, called the Swatara and Good Spring Rail road Company. This road will lead to the heart of what is called the Pine Grove coal region, and will, consequently, give a vent to the vast body of coal and iron deposited there which has hitherto lain dormant for want of a market.

PRICE OF A MAN'S LIFE.—Several days since, we noticed the murder of Dr. Sullivan, of Grand Gulf, by Dr. Morehead of the same place. It took place in an affray, in which the latter used a pocket knife, three inches long The gashings made by this piece of pocket furniture were horrible, causing instant death.—Dr. M. has been held to bail in ten thousand dollars.

On the 16th ultimo, the mother, the wife and two children of Mr. Carley, of New Orleans, were proceeding to pay a visit to a friend at Springfield, Ill. In attempting to cross a bridge over a small creek, 15 miles from Mount Carmel—the bridge being somewhat in a dilapidated condition—the carriage fell off and was upset in the creek, instantly drowning the whole party.

STEAM SAW MILLS IN BATH, ME.—Four large steam mills, for cutting lumber, are in full operation at Bath, Me., day and night; and there is a still larger number of tide, or water power mills, for the same object. It is said that more houses were built last year, and are now in process of erection, than in any other town in that State.

Since Dr. Spring became pastor of the Brick Church 30 years ago, twenty of his co-presbyters, and every member of the session, at that time, have been laid in the tomb. More than 1700 communicants have been added to the church.

A HINT.—"Recollect, sir," said a tavern keeper to a gentleman who was about leaving his house without paying 'reckoning;' "recollect, sir, if you lose your purse, you didn't pull it out here."

Mr. Hunter, late Professor of Mental and Moral Philosophy in Bacon College, Georgetown, Ky., commences a series of Lectures this evening, at the Stuvesant Institute, principally upon the necessity and reality of a Divine Government.—N. Y. paper.

A man named Edward Roney, who sat down to dinner intoxicated, in Chatham, Columbia county, on the 4th ult., was killed instantly by too large a piece of beef, which choked him.—ib.

James Morris, the negro who killed one man named A. C. Cross, and tried to kill more on board a sloop in the Delaware, has been tried, convicted, and sentenced at Philadelphia.

MURDER.—In an affray at the Rolla House, Hanover street, Baltimore, on Wednesday night the landlord shot a man named Ferdinand Plain with a pistol. He died in an hour.

RAILROAD ACCIDENT.—A man named Mason, who was so much injured by some of the machinery of the locomotive engine near Trenton, N. J., on Friday, that he expired on Saturday afternoon. The engine ran over a cow on the track of the railroad, and so bent some of the apparatus of the locomotive, so as to retard its progress. While Mr. Mason was attempting to straighten the bent iron, it suddenly broke, and he fell upon the broken shaft, which so injured him as to throw him into convulsions, which continued until he died.

MEXICO.—Vera Cruz dates to the 27th ultimo, are contained in our Havana papers. Under date of the 30th of September, at Tampico, it is stated that the Federalists, under Canales, after having captured Linares and Villagarran, towns on the borders of Tamaulipas and New Leon, compelled the inhabitants to come out against the Central Government, and also to yield heavy contributions of money, arms and horses, for the support of the Federal cause. It was believed that Gen. Rives, who was fortifying Victoria, would take early steps to punish the marauders.

DREADFUL CATASTROPHE.—We learn from the Trumbull county, Ohio, Democrat, that Mr. Hill, of Coitsville, in that county, while engaged in digging a well at the depth of fifty feet, heard a rumbling noise, but did not know whether it was above or below. On again descending with a candle, at the depth of 20 feet, the carburetted hydrogen gas, in conjunction with the atmospheric air, suddenly ignited occasioned a loud explosion. The flames ascended to the height of thirty feet above the surface. Mr. Hill had fallen to the bottom of the well, and when taken up he was dreadfully burnt, his clothes being reduced to tender. He expired in three days afterwards.

LOSS OF SHIP NORWAY.—A letter from Key West, dated November 10th, states that the ship Norway from Havre, for New Orleans, with a valuable cargo, is totally lost on Key Sal Bank. The passengers were taken off and carried to Key West. The ship bilged, but no lives were lost.

The letter adds: "The Indians are becoming more and more bold every day. Two vessels engaged in turtling, were chased by Indians, in three canoes and one whale boat, taken at the burning of Indian Key—this occurred in the Bay, and a short distance from Key Vacas: unless the government send some force here, I should not be in the least surprised if we receive an attack."

COUNTERFEIT NOTES.—The Cincinnati Gazette cautions the public against new counterfeit five dollar notes of the Farmers' and Mechanics' Bank of Steubenville. The names John Andrews, President, and D. Moody, Cashier, affixed to the bill—letter A. No. 424, payable to J. Wilson, date June 6th, 1840. The general execution is said to be pretty good, though the goddess of Liberty on the vignette is course; paper thin and light.

DISASTER.—The British Queen on the 6th ultimo, latitude 49.6, longitude 59.40, fell in with the brig Margaret, of Leven, from Dalhousie, N. S. to Leith, timber Laden, with mainmast and bulwarks gone, and water-logged; observed several men on her forecastle, stopped the engine and sent the cutter and rescued five men, viz: David Smith, master; John Scott, mate; Robert Dalkee, George Beadmont and D. Manning. Before the British Queen fell in with her, Thomas Scott, carpenter; Samuel Patmer, Francis Brown and C McNab, seamen, were washed overboard and drowned.

A small sail-boat was unfortunately run down by the De Witt Clinton, near Hyde Park, on Monday night, occasioning the death of a lad sixteen years of age. A brother of the deceased, aged eighteen, was rescued by a boat from the steamer. It is stated that the sail-boat, by rounding a point, came suddenly in the way of the steamer, and that it was impossible for the latter to avoid her.

DUEL AT NATCHEZ.—"An affair of honor" took place on Natchez Island, on the 5th of November, between Mr. H. B. Barbour, a lawyer; and Mr. G. C. McWhorter, both of Vidalia, La. At the first fire, Mr. Barbour received the ball of his antagonist in his body which resulted in his death in 20 hours.

FLORIDA.—The attempt to form a treaty with the Seminoles has proved abortive. According to the Pensacola Gazette of the 7th ultimo, the Indians have again broken faith and left the whites to wonder at their treachery. On breaking loose at Tampa, they killed one man, firing seven bullets into his body and scalping him, within a few hundred yards of two thousand five hundred troops. Gen. Armistead started with a regiment of men for Fort King.

FLOUR AND WHEAT.—The quantity of flour and wheat delivered from the Erie Canal, during the third week in November, at the places named below, is as follows:

	Bbls. Flour.	Bush. Wheat.
Schenectady, ...	2,522	 1,762
West Troy, ...	30'578	 40,950
Albany, ...	73,364	..... 16 540
Total, ...	106,464	58,852

NEW LINE OF STEAM SHIPS.—The Commercial Advertiser says, we are at last enabled to announce the establishment of a New York line of steamships between New York and England. The preliminaries are, we understand nearly completed, and within a short time the keels of four gigantic vessels will be laid. They are to be about two thousand tons, with engines of eight hundred horse power. The construction and performance of the English steamships have been narrowly and patiently investigated; and it is intended that the New York steamships shall make the passage in ten days, on an average.

DIVORCE.—In the case of Mr. Enue, the old gentleman who married his granddaughter in Philadelphia the other day, application has been made to the Court of Common Pleas for a divorce between the parties, on account of the marriage being contrary to law, and within the degrees of consanguinity. The regular steps will be taken in the matter, and a divorce decreed as soon as the necessary forms of law are complied with.

MURDER.—The St. Louis Republican, on the authority of a correspondent at West Point, Lee county, I. T., states that Horatio W. Cordell, proprietor of the West Point hotel, was shot dead while at work in his corn field on the 30th ultimo, by a man named John J. Jones. No cause is assigned for the murder. The letter states that Jones had fled.

By a recent decision of the Chancellor, the assignees of the estate of B. Rathbun are directed to pay over to the New York creditors the amount now deposited, seventy thousand dollars, in the Commercial Bank of this city, being somewhat like 40 per cent. on the original claim. This dividend is to be paid in New York city paper, or funds which are at par in that place.—New York paper.

STATE DEBT OF VIRGINIA.—The public debt of the State of Virginia, according to the Norfolk Beacon, is at the present time, six millions five hundred thousand dollars exclusive of its liabilities under acts authorising loans for works of internal improvement, which amount to $3,442,120 more.

THANKSGIVING.—Many of the Governors of the neighboring States have set apart days for general Thanksgiving.—Have we Pennsylvanians no thanks to give? Come, "my friend the Governor," speak out.—Philad. Cour.

PHILADELPHIA AND READING RAILWAY.—The whole amount of tolls collected during the year ending, Oct. 31, was $201,092 26. viz: railway, $110,848 70. motive power, $90,24 56.

Ship Norway of Boston has been totally lost with a valuable cargo, on Key Sal Bank. Crew and passengers were taken off by a brig, and carried to Key West.

HORSES FOR FRENCHMEN.—A Berne journal states that French dealers are continuing to make large purchases of horses in Switzerland, and that strings of from 100 to 200 are constantly travelling towards the frontier. Considerable purchases have also been made for Sardinia. These horses are probably destined for the increase of troops in these "agitating times."

The owner of an omnibus in Boston, has been mulcted in $1500 damages for injuries done to a lady, who fell from the steps as she was attempting to enter.—The driver started before she had got in.

RATHER MORE AGREEABLE.—Col. Laborde, one of Prince Napoleon's followers, has been permitted to spend the two years' imprisonment, to which he was sentenced, by the Court of Peers, in a boarding-house in Paris!

A PLUM.—We see it is stated that a young lady was married in New York a day or two ago, who received a marriage settlement of $100,000.

A WITNESS.—In the trial of Darnes, at St. Louis, for the Murder of Davis, the shattered skull of the deceased was introduced in court as an additional witness.

DEATH BY HYDROPHOBIA.—The Louisville Messenger gives an account of the death of a little boy in that city, the son of a Mr. Thomas Reese, by hydrophobia. He was bitten by a dog some five or six weeks since.

Alabama State debt is over 10 millions of dollars.

St Louis contains 24,585 souls.

THINGS IN PHILADELPHIA.

THE SHENANDOAH—A COLORED CREW.—The packet ship Shenandoah, Captain West, sailed from this port on the 19th inst. with a full crew, consisting of twenty-one seamen and one boatswain, all colored people The only whites on board are the captain, and the first, second and third mates. The objection given by the white sailors to ship on board the Shenandoah, was the misusage received from the officers of that ship. But the latter states that there is a scarcity of sailors in port, and the crew taking advantage of this demanded twenty-five dollars per month, which is seven dollars more than the regular rate of sailors' wages; and used, as their plea for this increase, that they were ill used by the captain and officers. The captain deeming this an attempt at extortion, refused to accede to the demand, and knowing that ships had gone out of New York with negro crews, and that they had perfectly succeeded, determined to try the experiment in his own ship.—Phila. Sat. Courier.

ARREST OF COUNTERFEITERS.—On Friday, five men, suspected of dealing in counterfeit money, and upon whom was found between two and three hundred dollars in counterfeit notes on the Cumberland Bank of New Jersey, and the Wilmington and Brandywine Bank, were arrested by police officers Gideon and Miller, and committed for trial. Their names are Kuff, Morgan, Kregan, and two by the name of Ramsey.

SOMETHING NEW IN MUSIC.—Mr. D. L. Elder, teacher of Sacred Music, 265 Market street, has invented a system of notes which we think cannot fail to aid the learner in compassing church melody.—The notes from A. to G. are distinctly and differently shaped, so that their names and relations are seen and identified thereby, at a glance, without reference to their position upon the lines of the staff, as in the old system. Those interested will do well to look into this matter.—ib.

Doctor Crossman performed the operation for the cure of Strabismus, on four persons, with success.

In the case of Perry Braddock, charged with the murder of his aged uncle, by beating out his brains with an old iron pot, the jury, after a full deliberation upon the facts of the case, returned a verdict of acquittal on the ground of insanity. The prisoner is now held at the disposal of the Court.

Passengers from New York on Sunday by way of the Jersey city Rail Road, came through in four hours and a half. Quick travelling.—ib.

Two men were buried beneath a bank of earth on Monday near Fairmount. One, John Hamilton, aged 27, an Irishman, was dead when he was got out; the other barely escaped with life.

A number of merchants have petitioned Councils for permission to construct turning platforms and curves from the City Rail Road to their stores, near 3d and Market Streets.

The schooner Fox, of Maine, was robbed a few evenings since, of three hundred dollars in specie, the proceeds of a cargo of potatoes that the captain had just sold.

The trimming store of Jane Massey, at the north-east corner of Sixth & Wood streets, was broken open on Monday night by some double distilled villains and robbed of goods to the value of over $200.

A CONFESSION.—James Morris, the negro, sentenced by Judge Barton, in the Court of Oyer and Terminer, on the 11th inst. to be executed for the murder of Aaron A. Cross, the sailor, has made a full confession of his crime.

MISCELLANEOUS.

FEMALE COURAGE.—A striking trait of courage in a lady, forms the subject of conversation at present in the French metropolis. Madame Aubrey lives in a solitary chateau not far from the town of—. The family consists only of M. Aubrey, his wife, a child about a year old, and one maid servant. In the little town every light is cut by 10 o'clock, and of course the most perfect solitude reigns at that hour in their house, which lies off the road and is completely hidden by trees. One night last winter, Madame Aubrey was sitting alone reading. Her husband had left her in the morning to visit a friend some six or eight miles off, and as he expected to bring home a considerable sum of money, he had taken the usual precautions of arming himself with a pair of pistols. At about six o'clock, the lady went up to her room to put the child in bed. Her apartment was a large room on the first floor, filled up on one side by an old fashioned chimney, and on the other by a deep and spacious alcove, near which, stood her infant's cradle. The night was a gloomy one, cold and dark, and every now and then a dash of rain beat against the gothic windows. The trees in the garden bowed to the wind, their branches came sweeping against the casement; in short, it was a night in which the solitude of the mansion was more complete and melancholy than usual. Madame Aubrey sat down on a low chair near the fire, which, by its sudden flashes, cast an uncertain light over the apartment, throwing its antique carvings and mouldings by turn into brighter relief or deeper shade. She had her child on her lap, and had just finished preparing it for the cradle. She cast her eyes towards the alcove to see if the cradle was ready to receive its little occupant, whose eyes were already closed. Just then the fire flashed up brightly and threw a strong light on the alcove, by which the lady discovered a pair of feet, cased in heavy nailed shoes, peeping out under the curtain in front of the bed. A thousand thoughts passed through her mind in an instant. The person hidden there was a thief, perhaps an assassin, that was clear. She had no protection, no aid at hand. Her husband was not to return till eight, at soonest, and it was now only half past six. What was to be done? She did not utter a single cry, nor even start from her seat. The servant girl probably would not have had such presence of mind. The robber probably meant to remain quiet where he was till midnight; and then seize the money her husband was to bring with him. But if he should find he was discovered, and that there was no one in the house but two women, he would not fail to leave his hiding place, and secure their silence by murdering them. Besides, might not the girl be the robber's accomplice? Several slight causes of suspicion occurred to her at once, and all these reflections passed through her mind in less time than we take to write them. She decided at once what she would do, which was to send the girl out of the room.

"You know that dish my husband likes," said she, without betraying her alarm by the least change in the tone of her voice, "I ought to have remembered to have got it ready for his supper; go down stairs and see about it at once."

"Does madam require my help here as she generally does?"

"No, no, I will attend to every thing myself. I know my husband would be displeased if he was to come home after his ride, in such bad weather, and not find supper ready."

After some delays, which increased in the lady's mind that suspicion she was forced to conceal, the girl left the room. The noise of her steps on the stairs died away gradually, and Madam Aubrey was left alone with her child, with those feet, too, motionless at their post, still peeping out under the curtain. She kept by the fire, with her child on her lap, continuing to caress it, and sung to it almost mechanically. The child cried, it wanted to be put to bed, but its cradle was near the alcove—and, near those dreadful feet—how could she find courage to go near them! At last she made a violent effort. "Come, my child," said she, and got up.—Hardly able to stand erect, she walked towards the alcove, close to the robber.—She put the child in the cradle, singing it to sleep as usual.

We may imagine how much inclination she had to sing. When the child fell asleep, she left it and resumed her seat by the fire. She did not dare leave the room; it would arouse the suspicions of the robber, and of the girl, probably his accomplice. Besides she could not bear the thought of leaving her child, even if it was to purchase her own safety. The clock pointed to seven. An hour yet, a whole hour, before her husband would come. Her eyes were fixed on those feet which threatened her with death at any moment with a fascination. The deepest silence reigned in the room. The infant slept quietly. We do not know whether an Amazon, in her place, would have been bold enough to try a struggle with the robber. Madame Aubrey had no arms; besides, she had no claim to valor, but only to that passive courage founded on reflection, which is rarer of the two—Every few minutes she would hear a noise in the garden. In that noise, a ray of hope shone on her for a moment—it was her husband, it was her deliverer! But no, it was only the wind and rain, or the shutters screaking. What an age every minute seemed to her. Oh, heavens! the feet moved! Does the thief mean to leave his place? No. It was only a slight, probably involuntary movement, to ease himself by changing his position. The clock, strikes only once, it is the half hour only, and the clock is too fast besides! How much anguish—how many silent prayers in these trying minutes! She took up a book of devotion and tried to read, but her eyes would wander from the page to fix upon those heavy shoes. All at once a thought arose that chilled her very heart. Suppose her husband should not come.

The weather is stormy, and he has relatives in the village he went to. Perhaps they have persuaded him it was unsafe to traval at night with so large a sum of money about him; perhaps they have forced him with friendly violence, to yield to their invitations to wait till morning. It is striking eight—and nobody comes. The idea we have alluded to, appears to be more and more probable. After two hours of such agony, the unhappy lady, whose courage had been kept by the hope of final rescue, feels her strength and hope fail her. She soon hears a noise under the window, and listens doubtfully. This time she is not mistaken.—The heavy out door creaks on the hinges, and shuts with clamor; a well known step is heard on the stairs, and a man enters—a tall, stout man. It is he, it is he!—At that moment, if he had been the worst of husbands he would have been perfection in his wife's eyes.—He had only taken off his wet cloak and put away his pistols, and delighted at seeing what he most loves on earth, opens his arms to embrace his wife. She clasped him convulsively, but in a moment recovering her self-possession, put her fingers on her lips, and points to the two feet under the curtain.

If M. Aubrey had wanted presence of mind, he would not have deserved to be the husband of such a woman. He made a slight gesture to show that he understood her, and said aloud, "Excuse me, my dear, I left the money down stairs; I'll be back in two minutes." Within that time he returned, pistol in hand. He looks at the priming, walks to the alcove, stoops, and while the fore-finger of the right hand is on the trigger, with the other hand seizes one of the feet, and cries in a voice of thunder, "Surrender, or you're dead man?" He drags by the feet into the middle of the room a man of most ill favored aspect, crouching low to avoid the pistol which was held within an inch of his head. He is searched, and a sharp dagger found on him. He confessed that the girl was his accomplice, and told him M. Aubrey would bring a large sum home that night. Nothing remains now but to give them over to the authorities. Madame Aubrey asked her husband to pardon them, but the voice of duty is larger than that of pity. When Aubrey heard from his wife all she had gone through, he could only say, "who would have thought you so courageous!" But in spite of her courage, she was attacked that night with a violent nervous fever, and did not get over her heroism for several days.—N. Y. Mirror.

The German Reformed Church.—From the proceedings of the late General Synod of this church, we learn that the whole number attached to their communion, exclusive of the Synod of Ohio exhibits an aggregate of about two hundred ministers, 600 congregations and 75,000 members. The periodicals of this church, the "Weekly Messenger," and "Zeitschrift" are represented to be liberally supported, and an effort is being made to swell the subscription list of each to at least 5000. Their literary & Theological institutions located at Mercersburg, Pa., are in a very flourishng condition; and at the late meeting of their general synod, it was resolved that during the centenary year, 1841, special efforts should be made to raise an additional sum of 100,000 for the complete and permanent endowment of these institutions, in connection with the cause of beneficiary education.—Patriot.

FASHIONS FOR NOVEMBER.—Double soled shoes, thick stockings, a flannel petticoat in place of one of thinner material. This is for the sensible portion of the female community exclusively, and those who expect the day may be far distant when their friends will be summoned together to follow their corpse to the place of interment. These are the chief requisites. Those who follow the Atlas' fashions in the above respect will be too sensible to commit any egregious blunders in other clothing. Those ladies who are candidates for death, will continue to wear their silk stockings and very light pumps, so called from their sucking up water.—They will also, as a matter of course, if they can get it by hook or by crook, wear a superb black velvet mantilla or short cloak, lined with white satin and deeply fringed and trimmed with ermine; also an ermine muff to match, by which means they will have the supreme felicity of picking foolish husbands' and fathers' pockets of a few hundred dollars.—Sunday Atlas.

Extent and Population of Syria.—This country is estimated to contain about 50-000 square miles. The whole population is somewhat under a million and a half.—The revenue for 1835, amounted to about £640,000 sterling. The expenditure exceeds the revenue by about 500,000.

ARTIFICIAL COAL.—An artificial or brick coal has been prepared in India, in imitation of the Burdwan coal—composed of the refuse of Burdwan coal, charcoal, oil, sugar, river clay and lime. Mr. Aram, who holds the patent, had received from the Steam Company £1000 for the use of it in India.

HUMOROUS.

Wellerism.—"You will see my face no more," as the lady said when she covered her cheeks with paint.

A Poser.—"Pa?" "Well, my dear; what is it?" "Didn't you tell me this world is round?" "Yes." "Then I'd like to know how it can come to an end?" "My child how often must I tell you not to talk when you are eating?"

Why is the bite of a monkey like an adherent of King James II? Ans. Because it is a Jacko-bite.—[New York Atlas.

"I've screwed my courage to the sticking point." as the soap-lock said when he drew a bowie-knife on his grand-mother.—ib.

"Much remains unsung," as the tom cat remarked to the brick-bat when it abruptly cut short his serenade.—ib.

A notorious miser, having heard a very eloquent charity sermon—'This sermon,' said he, 'proves so strongly the necessity of alms, I have almost a mind to beg.'

Sitting up and Down.—In a recent conversation between two gentlemen on the subject of sitting up at night, with the sick, one of them remarked that he could not stand sitting up, to which the other very gravely replied that he did not mind sitting up if he could lie down.

An old man who had been dreadfully henpecked all his life, was visited on his death-bed by a clergyman. The old man appeared very indifferent, and the parson endeavored to arouse him by talking of the King of Terrors! "Hout, tout, mon, I'm no scar't. The King of Terrors? I've been living sax and thretty years with the Queen of them, and the King cannot be muckle waur."

PARTY SPIRTS.—Doctor afterwards Dean Maxwell, sitting in company with Dr. Johnson, they were talking of the violence of parties, to what unwarrantable lengths party men will sometimes run. "Why, yes, sir," says Johnson, "they'll do anything, no matter how odd and desperate, to gain their point; they'll catch hold of the red hot end of a poker sooner than not get possession of it."

JOHN LOUIS.—This negro, the leader in the late intended revolt in the Parish of Lafayette, is still at large. His master, Mr. C. Monton, offers a reward of 300 dollars for his apprehension and delivery at Vermillionville, or 250 dollars for his head.

GREAT RAIL ROAD IN GEORGIA.—The Central railroad in Georgia is advancing rapidly towards completion. One hundred and twenty-two miles are now in use, and on the section between the finished line and the Oconee the superstructure will be laid down. The last 48 miles are now ready for graduation. The road commences at Savannah, and will terminate at Macon—a line exactly 190¾ miles.

TO THE LADIES.—A Boston editor states that of every thousand females who die of consumption, over three-fourths are sacrificed by the prevailing false idea of beauty of form produced by the continued practice of tight lacing.

COMMUNICATION.

For the Western Recorder.

Br. Springer: I send you the following interrogatories for publication, hoping that our venerable and respected brother Snethen can give satisfactory explanations to them all.

In Br. Snethen's advice to the young preachers, I find the following:

"The primitive christians were babes in Christ. Can babes act the part of revolutionists?"

Did not John thunder the law against adultery in the very ears of the profligate Herod? And that too when the church was in its feeblest infancy. Did not the primitive babes in Christ boldly expose the legalized sin in the face of the Jewish Sandhedrim and the bloated authorities of Rome? Did not young Paul as fearless as old Paul, denounce legalized idolatry? (and will not young Pauls and old Pauls, too, preach against legalized sin when the scales fall from their eyes?)

Again—our brother says:

"With old churches and old ministers, we have no concern. There are things which they may do, because they are old, that we may not do, because we are young."

Have we not as many hoary heads of long tried experience in our ranks, according to our numbers, as older associations? And are we not old enough to preach against sin, and banish all evil from the pales of our beloved Zion, and come out a pure virgin church of the living God?

Again—our brother says:

"Are we then prepared before we have tested the strength of our new attachments, to take our station side by side with veteran churchmen in fierce political party combat?"

Will our brother prove that it is right for veteran churchmen to engage in "fierce party combat?" Would you not deprecate all church associations, whether old or young, joining in "fierce party combat?"

Again, he says:

"I conceive that abolition, so called, has taken on the form of a political party."

Where did it assume this form?

Again:

"But let the all exciting spirit of abolition transformed into political party spirit, come among us, and how will it divide, to destroy! How will it separate chief friends! What limits can be set to the malice," &c.

Has Br. Snethen yet to learn that the great body of abolitionists oppose the third party scheme? I can assure our venerable brother that the party politics that haunts his vision so much is the work of a minority, independent of the society itself—and as a society abolition has nothing to do with it.

Again, he says:

"Bring not these great national and constitutional questions into the pulpit and church."

Who ever brought political abolition into the pulpit and church? Search and see! I have yet to hear it. As a church and as ministers we have to do with all moral and religious subjects. And as citizens we are to discharge all political duties,—and as citizens, is not voting for truth and mercy a moral duty? And if so, why all this dust in the air? Does Br. Snethen know that the Methodist Protestant Church cannot protect her own members from the lust and violence of slavery? And does he not know that slavery is increasing in our church? What young convert in the world has not a 'revolutionary conscience,' that ardently desires the world revolutionized from sin to holiness? Is there one that will not come to the help of the Lord against the mighty to abolish "moral evil" "every where?"

Again, he says:

"So fully persuaded have I been of the existence of the germe of a political party, that I did not dare to join it."

Did you, brother, join in giving your influence in exhortation and prayer against slavery? Did you lift up your warning voice like a trumpet and cry aloud and spare not? Did you weep and groan and pray over a slavery stricken church?

Again:

"We could not have anticipated it, (abolition) and of course could not have provided for it, or its consequences."

Did not you, dear brother, and many other dear brethren, "provide" for the abolition of citizenship in the militant kingdom of Christ, to one whole class of acknowledged members of Christ's body, by inserting the word white, so as to discriminate their right of sufferage out of the pales of our liberty loving church? And did you not help expunge one of the general rules as found in the discipline of the Methodist Episcopal Church, which condemned the buying and selling of men, women and children? And did you not provide a clear, pointed testimony against Sabbath breaking and intemperance? And yet "provide" no testimony against the more dangerous and ruinous sin of slavery, that was even then laying its crushing folds round the vitals of our feeble Zion.

Let me, in conclusion, thank our venerable brother for his kindness. No doubt he sincerely and deeply loves the church, and desires its continued prosperity. But permit me to say the commands,—do unto others as ye would be done by,—and love your neighbor as yourself,—do justice, love mercy, &c., are all plain, simple, moral commands,—the meanest capacity may comprehend them; the wayfaring man tho' a fool need not err. Young and ignorant as we are, when the light shines may we not see it, and love it, too! If, as a church, we are dependent on Almighty God to give prosperity, how vain will all human wisdom be in opposition to His will! And had we not better "come to nothing," nobly contending for the clear, unequivocal precepts of the gospel that ought not to engender any (*) for they are all principles of peace and love—than to shade the whole earth with a corrupt anti-christian greatness? For he that sinneth is of the devil, and slavery being a sin, must we stand by slavery and its father the devil and bask under his sheltering wing, till we gather strength to wage a successful war against our protector and drive him from the field? Why, the devil would give the world and all its glory without a murmur to the Methodist Protestant Church, if they would only fall down and do his majesty homage for it. But we are the Lord's, and Him only will we serve. LEWIS HICKLIN.

Newport, Ia., Nov. 18, 1840.

*Torn out by the wafer.—ED.

Ohio State Journal,

FOR THE SESSION.

THE proceedings of the next General Assembly being looked to with much interest, the publishers of the Ohio State Journal assures its patrons, that his arrangements will insure, as heretofore, reports which may be relied upon for correctness and fairness.

In addition to the general object of the Journal, it will be devoted, during the Session of the Legislature, to a careful and impartial detail of the proceedings in that body. Arrangements will also be made to procure an abstract of the proceedings in Congress; and the readers of the Journal may depend upon the latest and most important news from Washington. For the purpose of extending such information, and increasing its circulation among those who are not its regular subscribers, the Journal will be furnished on the following terms, invariably in advance:

Tri-Weekly, for the session,.....$2,00
Semi-Weekly,.....do..... 1,50

CHARLES SCOTT, Publisher.

Columbus, November 13, 1840.

Notice.

BOOKS, Stationery, and Printer's Ink, for sale by A. LIPPITT.
Zanesville, Nov. 4. 63tf.

DRUGS, Medicines, Paints, Dyestuffs, Oils, and Spirits Turpentine. Cheap for cash or good horses, by A. LIPPITT.
Main st., No. 72, Zanesville, Nov. 4. 63tf

New and Cheap Goods.

POTTS & GRAHAM, are now enabled by a fresh arrival of FALL and WINTER GOODS, to offer to the public a very general assortment of all articles in their line. Their stock is almost ENTIRELY NEW, and embraces a complete supply of DRY GOODS, GROCERIES, QUEENSWARE, HARDWARE, &c. All of which they will sell upon such terms, and conduct their business throughout upon such principles, as cannot fail to afford permanent satisfaction to all who may favor them with their custom.

☞Most kinds of country produce, including any quantity of new Butter, will be taken in exchange for goods.

Putnam, Ohio, Nov. 4. 63tf

GODEY'S LADY'S BOOK,

VOLS. 22 & 23—1841.

EDITED BY

MRS. S. J. HALE & MRS. L. H. SIGOURNEY.

Miss E. Leslie will have a Contribution in every number.

The only Magazine in this country intended for the perusal of Females that is edited by their own sex.

This is an important matter and should be borne in mind by those mothers who intend catering for their own, or their daughters' instruction and amusement.

THE "LADY'S BOOK" has been published by the same proprietor for nearly eleven years, and during that time he can safely say that no article has been admitted in its columns that parents might not with safety read to their children. It has been his constant care to prevent the work from being sectarian, political or disputatious. He has watched its progress from its first appearance in the world of letters to its now almost mature age. How many vain efforts have been made during the period of its existence to establish a rivalry—how many are still making, but in vain! The Book may almost be considered the creation of a taste for periodical literature. There is but one Magazine now in this country that can date its origin from the same period as the Lady's Book; but the latter was the earliest periodical to offer remuneration for literary contributions.

GENERAL CONTENTS.

One original large sized Steel Engraving, by A. L. Dick, in each number.
A Fashion plate, colored, (mark that) every month.
Two pages (generally original) Music in each No.
Forty-eight pages reading matter.

PICTORIAL DEPARTMENT.

The same attention to this department will be displayed. These splendid Steel Engravings, by A. L. Dick, Esq., that gave so much satisfaction last volume, will be continued.

Throughout this year, the plates will be varied, and embrace serious and pleasing subjects, and others that will contain a dash of humor. All tastes shall be consulted.

Engravings from the paintings of Landseer and Collins, two of the most eminent painters of London, will from time to time grace our Book, and as soon as arrangements can be completed, our long cherished plan of original engravings from paintings originally prepared for the Book, will be given, one in each number. Two are now in preparation. Our means gives us the opportunity of embarking in this expensive speculation—we may fail in being remunerated for our outlay, but our subscribers will be benefited.

We give twice as many embellishments as any other Magazine, and each plate is, because we pay more for its engraving, superior to the one of any contemporary, and the price of the Magazine is not increased. Our edition is immense, double any other publication, therefore we are enabled to go to greater expense than any other publisher. A better return may therefore be expected for the price paid for subscriptions.

The voice of the public press has pronounced Godey's Lady's Book at the head of the periodical Literature of the country, and he is determined that it shall retain its proud superiority. With this view he has chosen for its conductors two of the most eminent female writers of this or any other country—Mrs. Hale and Mrs. Sigourney, assisted monthly by one of no less ability, Miss Leslie.

In speaking of our Engravings, we beg leave to call attention to the following published in last volume, viz:

View of Constantinople, Schuylkill Wa'r Works,
The Pilgrim, The Indian Maid,
Happy as a King, The Death of Luath.

With each of these was published a Fashion-plate, containing either three or four figures beautifully and tastefully colored.

Universally pronounced superior to any other Magazine illustrations in this or any other country. Beautiful as they undoubtedly are, we pronounce, without hesitation that those for this year shall be superior. The engravings shall be worth more than the price of subscription. We do not, as many of our contemporaries do, who would scorn to tell a verbal falsehood, pass off second hand plates as original. Ours are undoubtedly so, and the designs selected by ourselves, and they will be continued throughout the year.

GODEY'S BOOK

has been emphatically termed the Ladies' National Magazine, as it is a receptacle for the contributions of the most celebrated Female Writers of America, most of whom of any eminence contribute to its pages.

In a future publication we will devote a column to publishing the names of our contributors. It is too long, except for a separate advertisement.

But let this be remembered, that we never in any instance will mention the name of a contributor from whom we have not the remotest idea of procuring a contribution. There are enough writers in our country, and good ones too, who, if they are paid, will furnish matter sufficient for all our periodicals.

Twenty-one volumes have already been issued. It is usual to announce that a small edition only will be published. Contrary to this, the proprietor of the Lady's Book announces that he will publish AN IMMENSE EDITION, with which he hopes to supply all those who will favor him with orders, commencing with the January number.

It will be seen by this advertisement that every effort has been made by the proprietor of this work to make it superior to any other in America; and as

A NEW YEAR'S GIFT,

the Lady's Book is probably the most proper that could be desired for ladies, edited by their own sex, and assisted, as the Editorial Department is, by the Pictorial Embellishments, it is positively the Parlour Companion.

The Times aptly remarks that "a subscription to this work, would be a much more acceptable present to a fair friend during the coming holiday season, than any of the ginger bread annuals made of Laura Matilda poetry and diluted prose."

There are other publications that advertise Fashion Plates. The publisher of the Lady's Book wishes it to be distinctly understood that the principal Fashions in this work are colored, and in every number; which is not the case with any other work published in this country: unless they are colored they are useless.

THE LITERARY DEPARTMENT

is placed under the superintendence of Mrs. S. J. Hale and Mrs. Lydia H. Sigourney; to ladies so well known to the world, that to mention their names in connection with any publication is at once a guarantee of its morality, virtue, and utility. Of their capability to conduct the Lady's Book, it is presumed no person will doubt, and the proprietor mentions with pleasure that no English or American Magazine can publish in connection with its Literary Department two names so celebrated in the world of letters. It will be recollected that Miss Leslie contributes to each number.

THE MUSICAL DEPARTMENT

is under the superintendence of J. G. Osborne, than whom no person is more capable of doing it justice.

GENERAL FEATURES.

Literature, tales, essays, legends, romantic incidents in history, extracts from the old poets, reviews, poetry, female education, embellishments, fashions colored, lace, embroidery, fac similes, music, &c. &c.

A great deal of curiosity is often expressed to see the Chirography of celebrated persons.—We shall endeavor so far as lies in our power to gratify this feeling, by giving from time to time correct imitations of the most celebrated female writers of the day.

Any embellishments to be found in any other magazine may be looked for in the Lady's Book.

OUR READING MATTER

is about the same in quantity as any similar production, probably a little in favor of the Book. It would be foolish and false to say that it contains more, and the proprietor is not willing to condescend to such means for any supposed advancement of his interest. The paper is of the finest quality for periodical use. And the typographical execution has long been a subject of congratulation with those best acquainted with these matters.

TRANSMISSION BY MAIL.

One advantage the subscribers of this work will have, is early reception. It will be received at the remotest cities of the Union by the first day of the month of publication.

BUSINESS DEPARTMENT.

The price of the publication is Three Dollars per annum—the money to be positively received before a number is sent. No letters will be taken from the post office unless the postage on them is paid. Unless positive orders are given at the time of subscribing, the work is continued after the first year, and if not paid during the year, the price will be increased to Four Dollars.

We still continue to furnish Walter Scott's novels complete and the Lady's Book one year, for Ten Dollars.

For the convenience of persons wishing to subscribe for any of the following publications—Graham's Casket & Gentleman's Magazine—Saturday Courier—Saturday Chronicle—Alexander's Weekly Messenger, or Saturday Evening Post—they will be furnished with the Lady's Book, and any one of these publications one year, upon the receipt of Five Dollars, postage paid.

Address L. A. GODEY,
211 Chesnut street, Philadelphia.
December 2, 1840. 3t

Dissolution.

THE partnership heretofore existing between S. B. Johnson and J. M. Kirkpatrick under the firm of S. B. Johnson & Co. was dissolved by mutual consent, on Thursday 19th inst.

S. B. JOHNSON,
J. M. KIRKPATRICK.

Zanesville, March 31, 1840. 32tf

William Green,

CLOCK AND WATCH REPAIRER, SILVERSMITH AND JEWELLER,

CAN be found at his shop on Main st Putnam, a few doors north of J. C. Gerrie's store, where he will do his best to accommodate customers. He keeps on hand an assortment of spectacles, watch trimmings, pencils,

As far as we have tried Mr. GREEN as a watch repairer he has given us good satisfaction.—
April 22, 1840. 35tf.

Glass Manufactory.

THE subscriber having dissolved his connection with the former company, has taken the GLASS WORKS below town under his own management.

WINDOW GLASS, double and single, of all sizes, and of superior quality will be kept constantly on hand for sale on reasonable terms. The experience of the proprietor, in the manufacture of the article, will insure all made to be of the best quality. Call and see.

S. B. JOHNSON.

Zanesville, Ohio, May 6, 1840. 37

O. WHITE, BOOK BINDER, No. 1 Main Street, Zanesville, Ohio.
January 15, 1840. 21tf

CABINET AND CHAIR FACTORY.

THE subscribers still continue to manufacture and keep on hand, at their old stand a few doors south of the market house in the town of Putnam, a large assortment of

CABINET WARE
AND CHAIRS,

CONSISTING, IN PART, OF

Splendid black walnut and mahogony dressing and plain bureaus,
Peer, card, center, side, dining and breakfast tables,
Sofas, side-boards, washing stands, ottomans,
Dressing and writing tables,
French, fancy and high post bedsteads,
Secretaries, clock cases, cradles, cribs and book cases,
Grecian, rush, cane and windsor chairs,
Sociables, settees and children's chairs.

In short every thing in their line necessary to furnish a house, either in high or common style, and at such prices as will satisfy all who will favor them with their custom. All the recommendation they have to offer, is, that they have been able to secure a continuance of their old customers and friends. They hope by the quality of their work and a strict attention to business to share a portion of the public patronage.

They have for sale a lot of first rate black walnut veneering and a lot of bureau knobs of the best kind and quality.

Turning done in the best style and shortest notice. CHERRY & GRAY.

Putnam, Ohio, October 28, 1840. 62tf

Puff! Puff! Puff!!

CHEAP!

CHEAPER THAN EVER! GREAT BARGAINS!

New York at your door!

SELLING OFF AT COST!

WE so heartily despise the "gull-catching" system that we seldom advertise at all. We however give our friends and the public notice that we have just received a fine stock of

FALL AND WINTER
GOODS.

We don't profess to have brought "New York to your doors," nor to undersell every body else, nor to be "selling off at cost," nor to be "closing up," and all that sort of thing,—but we do say, that our goods are cheap enough to satisfy any reasonable person, even in these "hard times."

A. A. GUTHRIE & Co.

Putnam, Ohio, September 30, 1840. 3w58

Partnership Notice.

THE subscribers have formed a co-partnership under the firm of POTTS & GRAHAM, for the transaction of a general mercantile business; and will occupy for that purpose the old stand of Spear & Helmick, where their friends and others wishing to purchase goods, are respectfully solicited to call.

FRANCIS R. POTTS,
NELSON W. GRAHAM.

Putnam, Ohio, Nov. 4. 63tf

Dissolution.

THE partnership heretofore existing between the subscribers in the PUTNAM FOUNDRY, under the firm of HARTLEY & ANDERSON, was this day dissolved by mutual consent.

The Putnam Foundry will hereafter be conducted by J. J. Anderson & Co.

LEVI HARTLEY,
JACOB J. ANDERSON.

Putnam, Jan. 1, 1840 (Jan. 29: 23.)

Notice.

ALL persons indebted to the late firm of Hartley & Anderson, are earnestly requested to call at the Foundry and make settlement, as the change of owners makes this step absolutely necessary. We ask the attention of all persons concerned, to this notice.

J. J. ANDERSON & Co.

Putnam, Jan. 1, 1840. (Jan. 29: 23.)

Winslow's Compound
BALSAM OF HOARHOUND.

UNRIVALED and unequaled in curing Colds, Coughs, Asthma, Influenza, Whooping Cough, and all diseases of the Breast and Lungs, leading to Consumption, composed of the concentrated virtues of the herbs Hoarhound, Boneset, and several other vegetable substances, warranted pure from any mineral whatever.

Sold by A. LIPPITT and S. GATES.

Zanesville, Nov. 4. 64tf

Session Ohio Statesman.

WE propose to issue the Statesman, during the ensuing session of the Ohio Legislature, on the following terms, viz:

Tri-Weekly, during the session,		$2 00
Semi-Weekly,	" "	1 50
Weekly,	" "	1 00

Persons subscribing will please designate which paper it is that they desire.

No subscription will be received unless payment is made in advance.

We shall have good reporters, and use what industry we are capable of employing on our paper, to give a correct and extensive view of all their doings.

The proceedings of Congress will also be duly given as heretofore.

S. & M. H. MEDERY.

Columbus, Nov, 13, 1840.

THE WESTERN RECORDER.

...PRINGER, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER. | Vol. 2.--No. 17. | ZANESVILLE, OHIO, WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 16, 1840. | Whole No. 69. | JOHN W. WHITE, PRINTER.

...WO DOLLARS PER ANNUM IN ADVANCE. | $2.50, IN THREE MONTHS; $3, END OF YEAR

...VERNOR'S MESSAGE.

...emen of the Senate and House of Representatives.

...ce our last meeting, we have had ... to be grateful for the many bles... which we have received from a kind ...eneficent Providence. The gener... ...lth of the State has been good; the ...have been unusually abundant, and ...eat body of our fellow citizens have ... and still continue, prosperous and ...

...e cause of education and intellectu... ...provement has continued to advance ... our liberal and enlightened system ...truction. At no period heretofore. ...our colleges, academies and com... ...chools been in a more flourishing ...rosperous condition than they are at ...resent time. The deep solicitude ...7 parents generally to see their chil... ...receive a good education, and the ... ambition that characterises so ma... ...our youth to attain this desirable ob... ...cannot fail to excite, in the bosom ...ry patriot and friend to our demo... ...institutions, well groundod hopes ...they will long continue to shed their ...ngs and benefits on a great, prospe... ...nd intelligent people.

...s a fact that cannot be too often re... ...d, or too deeply impressed on the ... of the present and rising generation ...ur free institutions can only be pre... ...d and perpetuated by a virtuous, in... ...ent, and uncorrupted people. The ...y of all free governments admonish... ...f the danger to which public liber... ...most exposed. We are differently ...more favorably situated, it is true, ...any of the republics of ancient or ...rn times. Our population are scat... ...over a wide surface; engaged on ...farms and in their workshops; pur... ...well calculated to promote and en... ...ge the growth of that virtue and ...f liberty, the want of which has been ...al to the cause of free government ...er countries and other times. It is ...great producing classes, which con... ...e and ever must constitute a large ...ity of our population, that we must ...y rely for the preservation of our ...stitutions. They are honest, pat... ...and intelligent, and will so contin... ...less the means of education are ne... ...d, and the onward march of intel... ...l improvement, which so pre-emin... ...characterises the age in which we ...should receive some great and un... ...ted check. Notwithstanding, how... our circumstances and population ...auspicious to the growth and per... ...tion of public liberty and free gov... ...ent, we should not be unmindful of ...eans by which they are to be pre... ...d aad best secured. It is the duty ...ery citizen in the State to promote ...use of virtue, and encourage the ...on of intelligence. But it is pecu... ...the province of those who have been ...ed by the people to discharge the ...tant and highly responsible trust of ...ating for the country, to guard a... the growth of vice, ignorance and ...ption, by encouraging, by all prop... ...ans, the education of the rising ge... ...ion, and thereby enable them to en... ...on the important duty, which, in the ...course of time, will soon devolve ...them, of preserving our free insti... ...is in their original simplicity and ..., and handing them down, unimpai... ...o posterity.

...s in vain to talk about a tariff law, ...e protection of our domestic manu... ...es, and to prevent the excessive im... ...tion of foreign goods, while we have ...er currency for the measure of val... ...which can be increased at the will ...se who control it, to an almost in... ...te extent. The best protection ...can be furnished to the domestic ...factures of this country, and the only ...ney can rightfully claim, except that ...is incidentally furnished by a tariff ...venue, is a sound and stable curren... ...omposed of gold and silver, and that ...a is equivalent thereto. Such a pro... ...on would not only be more effective ...any tariff law short of prohibition, ...t the same time be legitimate and ...r,—oppressive to none—beneficial ...

...e evils above alluded to are not the ...ones entailed on the country by our ... system. There never has been in ...ge of the world, a system devised by ...genuity of man so well calculated ...labor of its hard earnings as this. ...it is the more dangerous to the in... ...e of the laboring part of the commu... ...because its operations cannot readi... ...seen. The people of the U. States ...o the banks, annually, a tax, in the ... of interest and other bank profits, ...ss than thirty millions. So far as ...s paid for the use of their paper, rep... ...ting real capital, that is gold and ..., it is legitimate and proper, but ...hole amount of specie owned by the ...s, does not exceed, at most, fifty ...ns; The interest on which would be ... millions, leaving twenty-seven mil... ...which are annually paid to the ...s, by the people; for the use of their ...t or promissory notes, bearing no in... ...t. This is a heavy tax on the people, ...s paid entirely to credit, not to cap... ...either directly or indirectly, by the ... of the country; for it is unquestion... ...true, that labor produces all the ...h of the country. Whatever is paid ... support of government, state or ...ral, or to the banks, who create no ...h, is a tax, in some shape, on labor. ... extraordinary capacity which has ...given to mere credit to tax labor, ...solve the whole mystery why it is, ...hose who create the entire wealth ...e country, after a life of toil, are, ...aratively speaking, poor, while bank... ...ho have been permitted to use their ...t to tax the industry and labor of ...country, have grown rich in a few ... As you diminish, therefore, the paper system, you lighten the tax on labor as you increase it, you add to the burthens labor has to bear. A system of paper credit, which is such a heavy tax on the labor and productive industry of the country, should yield some great corresponding advantages to the laboring portion of the community.

In May, 1837, when the banks suspended specie payments, their circulation was estimated at about one hundred and fifty millions. Their paper being no longer convertible into gold and silver, at once depreciated on an average of ten per cent., making a dead loss to the people of the United States of fifteen millions. In 1838-9, three hundred and forty-three banks again suspended, having a circulation estimated at about seventy millions. Again their circulation depreciated on an average of at least ten per cent., making seven millions of a loss thrown on the community. Thus, in a little more than two years we have had two suspensions of specie payments by the banks, inflicting on the people of the country an aggregate loss of twenty-two millions by reason of the depreciation of their paper circulation. This loss falls not on the banks, except in a small degree, whose incaution, or improper acts produced it, but on the note holders. So far from the banks sustaining any considerable loss by the depreciation of the paper, it is believed that some of them availed themselves of the opportunity, through their brokers, of buying up their depreciated paper at a discount.

Adopting an estimate made by a committee of the House of Representatives of the United States, in 1832, (who had every means of obtaining correct information,) the loss to the general Government alone, by the banks, at that time, was thirty-five millions. If we add to all this the loss which the public have sustained by other suspensions not alluded to above and the almost incalculable loss sustained by banks breaking, and, from various causes, becoming insolvent, and that occasioned by the total destruction of their notes by the various casualties to which a paper currency is ever subject, we will have an amount of actual loss sustained by the community through these institutions, which will startle the most devoted advocate of the present paper system.

The insolvency of banks has recently become a common occurrence. Scarcely a week passes but we see it announced that some banking institution has failed to a large amount. Who can estimate the extent of individual misery and suffering, the insolvency, want, and starvation produced by the causes to which I have above alluded? We are daily in the habit (and it is one of the high and responsible duties of those entrusted with the law making power) of legislating for the protection of the property of the individual citizen from the depredations of those who are engaged in criminal violations of the right of property. Yet, if all the losses sustained by individuals, by the commission of the various crimes against private property, were added together, the aggregate would fall far short of the losses sustained by the community, in various shapes, through the banking institutions of the country. What difference does it make to the individual citizen, whether he has lost an hundred dollars by the hands of the midnight thief, or by the insolvency of a bank, or the depreciation of its paper. It is true there may be a great difference in the moral turpitude of the two cases, but the consequence to the individual citizen is the same in both. In each case he has been deprived of the same amount of property without consideration. Are we not as much bound to guard and protect, by our legislation, the property of the individual citizen from being taken from him without consideration, through the agency of banks, as we are to protect his property from the depredations and acts of the desperate and lawless criminal? The answer would seem to me to be obvious. This is a subject in which we are all deeply interested. What is one man's case to-day may be another's to-morrow. It is intimately identified with the interest and prosperity of the whole community.

It is remarkable that an attempt to protect the public against the losses to which I have alluded, and to correct the abuses of the banking system, should meet with any formidable opposition from any quarter. The bankers themselves, who are desirous to conduct their business on fair principles, greatly mistake, in my judgment, their true and ultimate interests, by clinging to a system and resisting every effort to reform it, which has entailed on the country such a vast amount of unmitigated evil. A paper system, which has been the occasion of such a large and heavy loss to the government, and which has been the means, in various shapes and forms, of taking millions from the honest labor and industry of the country must be radically defective, hostile to the interests of the people, and cannot long be tolerated in its present shape by an intelligent and honest community, free to choose their own measures for their own prosperity and happiness. It is believed that the evils and various frauds committed through the instrumentality of banks, as now organized, greatly outweigh all the advantages that the public have ever derived from them. But be this as it may it is the duty of those who have been entrusted with the high and responsible trust of legislating for the good of the whole people, to attempt a reform of the evils and abuses of this system, and to remove as far as practicable, both the means and the temptation on the part of the banks, to injure the community they were intended to benefit.

I am not opposed, as I have heretofore stated, to a part of our currency being composed of paper, provided it can be made safe, but only to the excess and improper use of paper money. It should not become, (as it has in a great degree,) the exclusive currency of the country; and the measure of value, instead of gold and silver, the standard of value agreed on by the civilized world. It should never be resorted to barely for the purpose of increasing the circulation; and when issued, should be equal to the standard measure of value, and at all times convertible, at the will of the holder into gold and silver. Its advantages are not in furnishing an every day currency to the people, but in facilitating exchanges, aiding commerce, trade, and the heavy business operations of the country. Under these restrictions, and for these purposes and objects, bank paper may be highly useful and advantageous to an extensive growing, and commercial community, such as we have in the United States. The present system, however, so far from aiding the commerce, trade, exchanges, and heavy business operations of the country, has a contrary influence, and it would seem to have in view, as its main object, to furnish the entire circulating medium of the country, and constitute a new and unsteady measure of value, fluctuating with every expansion and contraction, and subjecting the price of every man's property and labor to the will or caprice of a few irresponsible individuals, who look alone to their own and not the interest of the public.

The country is undoubtedly laboring under some pecuniary embarrassments; but the idea of paying our debts by the creation of more paper money is a gross fallacy. We cannot pay debt by the creation of more debt. Every additional bank note issued is but the creation of a new debt, which the bank owes to the holder. It is not wealth—it is not capital—and it is idle to think of lessening the debts of a country in this way. We may shift or change our responsibilities, but they will still exist in some shape or other, until paid by the creative energies of the hand of labor. The banking capital of the State is now near twelve millions, which is amply sufficient, in the opinion of prudent bankers and business men, to furnish all the means necessary to carry off the surplus produce of the State.

The creation of a U. S. Bank, with a capital of fifty or a hundred millions, is advocated by some as the most effectual means of restoring stability, uniformity, and safety to our currency. Throwing out of view the constitutional objections to such an institution, and viewing it merely as a question of expediency, I am forced to believe that such an institution would but add to the insecurity and evils of our paper system; and, in its political tendency, endanger public liberty.—What additional security would belong to an institution deriving its corporate powers and privileges from the General Government, over a similar institution deriving the same powers and privileges from a State Government? It is not proposed by any one to make the General Government, in any event, liable for the debts of the bank, further than a common stockholder. Is it a matter, then, of any consequence to an institution, whether it derives its corporate powers and privileges from a State or the General Government? So far as its real and substantial security is concerned, it can make no difference. In each case its credit must, or ought to depend on its ability to meet the demands against it, and the skill and integrity with which its affairs have been conducted.—In each case the institution has to be controlled and managed by individuals subject to the same errors of judgment, the same passions, impulses and feelings that belong to mankind in general. What reason is there, therefore, to hope that a United States' Bank would be governed by more wisdom, prudence, and skill than State institutions? What reasen have we to believe that it would not be characterized by the same round of alternate expansion and contraction—the same system of hazardous speculation and unsafe banking, that we have witnessed in a large majority of the local banks, as well as in the late Bank of the United States? These are evils that appear to be inseparable from the very system itself, and the sources from whence a bank may derive its powers and privileges, can make no difference as to its action or its disposition to do good.

A United States' Bank, it is said, would derive a credit from its national name and character. This may be true; but such credit is unreal, unsubstantial, and delusive, and is calculated rather to deceive than to benefit the public. The credit of a bank, like that of an individual, should always rest on something real and substantial; not on a mere name that can be of no service to the creditor or the bank, in the hour of real difficulty. Such fictitious credit as is thrown around a bank by its national character, may give to its paper a wider range of circulation; but this is only calculated to lead to excessive banking and over issue, without furnishing any corresponding ability in the institution to meet the demands against it. Such was the case with the late bank of the United States. The history of the times prove, that at every period of excessive banking, from 1816, when it was created, down to 1836, when its charter expired, it was the first to expand, and the first to contract its circulation. It is a fact, proved from unquestionable data, that in every expansion that occurred during the whole time of its existence, it increased its circulation in a far greater ratio than the increase of the currency by the other banks. At two different times, it was brought to the very brink of insolvency, as admitted by its own officers. During its existence we had no less than four ruinous expansions and corresponding contractions, with all their attendant evils. For a very considerable portion of its duration, the exchanges were in a more deranged state than they are now.—The prostration of business and prices, from 1816 to 1826, are without any parallel in the history of this country. In this State, the bank was so universally considered as the principal agent in producing this mischief, that the Legislature, by an almost unanimous vote, passed a law taxing the branch located here, with the sole view of expelling it from our borders.—At this time, and upon this subject, there was but one party and but one opinion in Ohio.—Every one saw and acknowledged the mischievous and ruinous operations of the United States' Bank. So deep and intense was the feeling among the great body of the people, against the Bank, that all united in the propriety of the State exercising her sovereign power, in ridding the country, as far as practicable, of the existing evil.

Its power to act as a regulator is nothing more, as is proved by experience, than a power to induce the local banks to expand as it expands, and to compel them to contract when it contracts. But the same experience proves that it stands full as much in need of a regulator as the local banks themselves. And why should it not? Its object is the same—to make large dividends for its stockholders. Its temptations are the same, and it is subject to the same laws of trade. It was organized on the same principles, and subject to the same impulses with like institutions created by the States. It is, therefore, unreasonable to expect, that in its administration there would be more safety than in similar State institutions; or, that it would be capable of regulating the local banks beneficially, when it has proved to be incapable of regulating itself.

The late Bank of the United States, on the expiration of its charter, in 1836, received a new one from the State of Pennsylvania, conferring equal, if not greater powers and privileges, than the former. Its capital was the same; its stockholders the same, and its management continued in the hands of the same officers. It was said, by the President of the Bank, when the new charter was presented to the stockholders for their acceptance, that it was then in a safer, stronger, and more prosperous condition than it ever was; and that the connection which had existed between the Bank and the General Government was an unnatural one, beneficial neither to the Bank or the Government. The stockholders were pressed to accept the new charter from the State, on the ground that it was in every respect more desirable than the old charter granted by the General Government. Yet, notwithstanding all these boasted advantages under the new charter, so far from its being able to regulate the exchanges and the currency, and keep the other banks in proper check, it is now universally admitted to have been one of the leading and most active agents in producing the difficulties under which the country has been laboring for the last eighteen months. So far from its regulating the other banks, it was the first, as under its former charter, to expand its circulation and engage in hazardous trade and speculation. It was among the first to suspend specie payments, and the last to resume. We have seen it, instead of exerting its power to restore to the country a sound currency, using all its influence to prevent the other banks from redeeming their notes in specie. We see this institution now, after having been in operation between four and five years under its new, and, as was claimed, advantageous character, utterly prostrated, in a state of suspension, and asking aid from surrounding institutions in order to save it from bankruptcy. What reason have we to believe that the fate or the influence of this institution would have been different, if it had received its corporate powers and privileges from the General Government instead of the State of Pennsylvania? As I before remarked, the source from which it derived its charter could neither add to, nor take from, its means to meet its engagements, or have prevented it from pursuing that course of policy that has involved it in its present difficulties.

Whether, therefore, we are guided by the light of experience, or by opinions drawn from a critical investigation of the natural tendencies of a United States' Bank, we are forced to believe that such an institution would but add to the derangement of the currency, and by greatly increasing, in a corresponding ratio, the specie basis, tend to involve the whole paper system, sooner or later, in one common ruin. It is not, by the creation of a United States' Bank, or by the multiplication of paper money, that the evils attendant on the present banking system are to be remedied.

The danger to be apprehended from such an institution, in a political point of view, is not to be overlooked or disregarded. Its friends claim, that it would possess the power of regulating the nine hundred and fifty-four local banks, with their capital of three hundred and twenty-four millions. Admitting that it would possess this power, what would be the political consequences, if it should act in friendly alliance with the National Executive, and wield this vast money power for political purposes? It is claimed, that the patronage of the National Executive is already too great, and dangerous to public liberty. If we add to the already extended patronage the entire money power of this country, controlled by one common head, it would, indeed, constitute a mass of power, which would make the patriot tremble for the fate of our free institutions. It is vain to suppose, that such an institution, after its creation has become a party question, would not be political. We but deceive ourselves, when we suppose it would be otherwise.

The most effectual means within the power of the General Government, to provide against the abuses and evils above alluded to, are to be found in the provisions of the law establishing the Independent Treasury. This measure, by separating the funds of Government from the banks, and placing them in the custody of the agents of the people, who are prohibited from using them for private purposes, or speculation, under severe penalties, not only increasing the security of the public funds, but withdraws that stimulant to over-banking, which they were calculated to create, while possessed and controlled by the banks. The evil most to be feared, being exclusively banking, the remedy must be something that will restrain the banks. The Independent Treasury law, though it will have but a partial influence in restraining the banks, and consequently will not remedy the evils of the paper system, only to a limited extent, yet, its general influence on the whole currency of the country, in the course of time, must be beneficial. By requiring, at the end of four years, the revenues of the General Government to be paid in gold and silver coin, a demand will thereby be created in this country for the precious metals. As that demand increases, they will flow in to satisfy it: for there is no fact better established, or the truth of which is more universally admitted, than that the precious metals will find their way to that point where they are in the greatest demand; and the reverse is consequently true, that they will leave the point where they are the least in demand. This being the case, what is the effect on the currency produced by the Independent Treasury law? By creating a demand for the precious metals, and extending the uses to which they are applied, they will flow into this country to supply the demand. What is the effect produced by the paper system? Directly the reverse. By furnishing a currency composed almost entirely of paper money, based principally on credit, and not on specie, the uses to which the precious metals are applied, are greatly diminished, and consequently the demand for them is diminished in a corresponding ratio. The Independent Treasury law, therefore, has a tendency to attract, while our paper system has a tendency to repel, the precious metals.

The fears that some entertain, that by requiring the revenues of the General Government to be paid in coin, the precious metals would accumulate in the Treasury to an injurious extent, are without foundation. It should not be the policy of the General Government to collect more money than may be wanted to defray the expenses of an economical administration. In that case the public money would be received one day and paid out the next. It would not, and could not accumulate to any considerable extent. It will be paid out not merely to public officers in the shape of salaries; (this constitutes but a small part of the amount disbursed by the General Government;) it will be paid out to our seamen in the navy—to our soldiers in the army—to our laborers employed in erecting fortifications, improving our harbors, building ships, and in the various other public works in which the country may engage. It will be paid out to our farmers for their corn, beef, pork, and other articles necessary to supply our army and navy. In this way, the gold and silver received and paid out by the Government will be diffused through the entire community, increasing every year, until, in the course of time, it will form an every day currency for the people, furnish a more extended specie basis for the banks, and enable the Legislatures of the States, with more ease, to confine bank paper to its legitimate objects:—heavy business transactions, and the commercial and exchange operations of the country. Such important advantages to our currency should not be disregarded for the purpose of ministering to the avarice and cupidity of banks. They have no right to the custody of the public money to speculate on and swell their profits. They have no more right to complain of the Government withdrawing its funds from them, and dispensing with them as fiscal agents, than they have to complain of the merchant or farmer who withdraws his deposits. The Independent Treasury law leaves them in the full enjoyment of all their rights and privileges, under their charters. And it is to be hoped that a measure so well calculated to aid in restoring a sound constitutional currency, place the Government beyond the control of irresponsible corporations, and secure the public moneys from embezzlement by public officers, will not be disturbed, either for the purpose of restoring the local banks as fiscal agents of the Government, or the unconstitutional and still more objectionable measure—the creation of a United States' Bank.

The banks of our own State, which constitute a part of the whole of which I have been a speaking, are as unguarded and defective, and present as many opportunities to commit frauds on the public with impunity, as those of most other States in the Union. If we have had less cause of complaint here than the people have had elsewhere, it is owing to the limited temptations to engage in hazardous speculations and unsafe banking—not to any superiority in the organic structure in our bank charters.

It does not unfrequently happen that when a bank fails, the stockholders, or those who manage its affairs, are largely the gainers. This fraud, with impunity, results from that principle, contained in all our bank charters, of a limited liability. The banks, generally, are authorized to issue three dollars of their own notes for every one dollar of capital paid in; and the capital paid in is all that is liable for the payment of their debts. A bank that may be disposed to act fraudulently, can put out three dollars of its own paper for every one that is liable to be applied to the redemption of its notes in circulation. By breaking, the banker looses the one dollar of stock, but gains the three that were issued upon it. This may not often occur; but it is sufficient to know that it has occurred, and that it may again take place, to authorize the Legislature to guard against it. This limited liability of the stockholders, not only furnishes an opportunity to commit fraud with impunity, but holds out an inducement to engage in excessive banking. The banks are not restrained in their operations, because they know that if successful; they are gainers; if unsuccessful, the greater part of the loss may be thrown on the public. The inducement should be the other way. The temptation to commit fraud, or to engage in excessive banking, should be taken from them.—This can only be done by increasing the personal responsibility of the stockholders, and placing the banker on the same footing, as to liability for the payment of his debts, with the farmer, merchant, manufacturer, or other citizen. Is there any reason why the whole community should be made liable for the payment of their debts, while the banker should alone be exempt? If an association should be formed for the purpose of erecting a manufacturing establishment, and, after having exhausted all their means, become involved in debt, each member is liable for the whole of the debts of the association, although they may have lost their joint property by some great misfortune which no prudence could have guarded against. If a similar association obtain a charter, and embark their capital in the business of banking and fail, fraudulently or otherwise, they are personally exempt from the payment of any of their debts. All that can be reached is the stock paid and the assets of the bank, and in nine cases out of ten the creditors can neither find stock, or other assets. Is there any reason for this distinction? Is there any justice in it? The business of manufacturing is as honorable and useful, and as much entitled to legislative protection (and much more so,) as that of banking. Why exempt the one from personal liability and not the other? It is said that, if bankers were made personally responsible for their debts, as other citizens, they would not invest their money in bank stock. Why would they not? Is there any thing more hazardous in banking than in merchandizing, manufacturing, or other ordinary pursuits of life? So far from this being the case, capital is more secure when invested in legitimate banking than in almost any other business, and is equally, if not more productive. If those who own the banks, and have the control and management of them, are unwilling to trust each other, and are fearful of losing their capital, it would seem to be unreasonable that they should ask the public to take their notes and trust them. They ask the public to incur all the risk, or the greater portion of it, while they receive all the profits of the business. Such claims should not be tolerated. Bankers should be placed on the same footing with other individuals, made responsible for their debts like other citizens, and, being so responsible, they would conduct their business with more prudence and regularity, and consequently with more safety to the public.

In my last annual message, I took occasion to state, in detail, my views as to the restrictions, limitations, and additional guards, which, in my opinion, should be imposed on the banks for the public security; to which I would beg leave to refer you.

Having ascertained the evils and imperfections of the present system of banking, it will be your duty to provide, as far as practicable, suitable remedies. In doing this, it must ever be borne in mind, that the interest of the people is the paramount object to be secured.

As the subject of a State Bank is again agitated in the public mind, you may be called upon to consider of this measure. I cannot think that such an institution would be calculated to promote the interest of the public. It would have no advantages over the local banks, unless the State would become a stockholder to the amount of the capital stock, or a considerable portion of it. In order to do this, the State debt would have to be increased to the amount of the stock subscribed by the State. When we shall have finished our public works, now under contract, the State debt, on interest, will exceed sixteen millions. The interest on this, will be yearly over nine hundred thousand dollars. This sum will have to be raised, annually, from the tolls on our public works, and by direct taxation. When paid, the greater portion of it will go direct to England, where the larger portion of our State stock is held. Our State will thus be annually drained of at least half a million of coin to pay the holders of our stock in England. This enormous State debt, which has been accumulating for years, has already become burdensome, and its increase should be arrested. The taxes of the people are already oppressive, and instead of being increased, should be diminished. Would it, therefore, be wise policy to swell the State debt eight or ten millions in order to engage in the banking business? and thus increase our State stock in the hands of English stockholders, and, consequently, increase the drain of specie out of the State? Such a policy in my judgment, is deadly hostile to our true interest. It is true, it may be said that the profits of the bank would pay the interest on the money borrowed. This would depend on the skill and prudence with which the institution would be managed, and whether the times were propitious or otherwise, for banking. It is not probable that a State institution would be as profitable as like institutions owned and controlled by private individuals.

A State Bank, in which the State would own but a nominal amount of stock, would be but lending the name of the State to give credit to the notes of individuals, which is an unsubstantial and delusive credit, only calculated to deceive and mislead the public. In these times of high party excitement, such an institution would be drawn into the party conflicts of the day.—Whatever political influence it might wield, would not be favorable to public liberty or the rights of the many. The influence of money, when brought to bear, either directly or indirectly, in a political contest, is always a corrupt influence, and fatal to democratic institutions.

The causes which have produced the extraordinary scarcity of money for the last fifteen months, and the consequent low price of produce and labor, are worthy of your investigation.—That the price of produce, labor, and every description of property, is materially affected by the amount of the circulating medium, is a fact admitted by all. If wheat will command two dollars a bushel when the currency is ten millions, it will command but one dollar when the currency is reduced to five millions. The power of creating money, or that which is called money, (bank notes,) has been legislatively lodged in the banking incorporations of the State. We have conferred on these institutions one of the most delicate attributies of sovereign power, that of furnishing a currency or standard of value for the whole country; the power of saying whether the currency shall be great or small; the power of fixing, at their arbitrary will, the price of every man's labor and property in the community.—Whether this extraordinary power has been exercised for the good of the public, or otherwise, cannot fail to enlist your attentive consideration, when investigating the subject of Banking and the Currency.

(Concluded on 4th page)

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

WASHINGTON CITY, Dec. 9, 1840.

This day at 12 o'clock the President of the United States transmitted to both houses of Congress the following message:

FELLOW CITIZENS OF THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Our obedient gratitude is due to the Supreme Being for having graciously continued our beloved country, through the vicissitudes of another year, the invaluable blessings of health, plenty and peace. Seldom has this favored land been so generally exempted from the ravages of disease, or the labor of the husbandman more amply rewarded; and never before have our relations with other countries been placed on a more favourable basis than that which they happily occupy at this critical conjuncture in the affairs of the world. A right and preserving abstinence from all interference with the domestic and political relations of other States, alike due to the genious and distinctive character of our Government and the principles to which it is directed; a faithful observance, in the management of our foreign relations, of the practice of speaking plainly, dealing justly, and requiring truth and justice in return, as the best conservatives of the peace of nations; a strict impartiality in our manifestations of friendship, in the commercial privileges we concede, and those we require from others: These, accompanied by a disposition as prompt to maintain, in every emergency, our own rights as we are from principle averse to the invasion of those of others, have given to our country and government a standing in the great family of nations, of which we have just cause to be proud, and the the advantages of which are experienced by our citizens throughout every portion of the earth to which their enterprising and adventurous spirit may carry them. Few, if any, remain insensible to the value of our friendship, or ignorant of the terms on which it can be acquired, and by which alone it can be preserved.

A series of questions of long standing difficult in their adjustment, and important in their consequences, in which the rights of our citizens and the honor of the country were deeply involved, have, in the course of a few years: (the most of them during the successful administration of my immediate predecessor,) been brought to a satisfactory conclusion, and the most important of those remaining are, I am happy to believe, in a fair way of being speedily and satisfactorily adjusjusted.

With all the powers of the world our relations are those of honorable peace.—Since your adjournment, nothing serious has occurred to interrupt or threaten the desirable harmony. If clouds have lowered above the other hemisphere, they have not cast their portentious shadow upon our happy shores. Bound by no entangling alliances, yet linked by a common nature and interest with the other nations of mankind, our aspirations are for the preservation of peace, in whose solid and civilizing triumphs all may participate with a generous emulation. Yet it behoves us to be prepared for any event, and to be always ready to maintain those just and enlightened principles o national intercourse, for which this government has ever contended. In the shock of contending empires, it is only by assuming a resolute bearing, and clothing themselves with defensive armor, that neutral nations can maintain their independent rights.

The excitement which grew ont of the territorial controversy between the United States and great Britain having in a great measure subsided, it is hoped that a favorable period is approaching for its final settlement. Both Governments must now be convinced of the danger with which the questiou is fraught; and it must be their desire, as it is their interest, that this perpetual cause of irritation should be removed as speedily as practicable. In my last annual message you were informed that the proposition for a commission of exploration and survey promised by great Britain had been received, and that a counter-project including also a provision for the certain and final adjustment of the limits in dispute, was then before the British Government for its consideration. The answer of that Government, accompanied by additional propositions of its own, was receieved, through its minister here, since your separation. These were promptly considered; such as were deemed correct in principle, and consistent with a due regard to the just rights of the United States and of the State of Maine, concurred in; and the reasons for dissent from the residue, with an additional suggestion on our part, communicated by the Secretary of State to Mr. Fox. That minister, not feeling himself sufficiently instructed upon some of the points raised in the discussion, felt it to be his duty to refer the matter to his own Government for its further decision. Having now been for some time under its advisement a speedy answer may be confidently expected.—From the character of the points still in difference, and the undoubted disposition of both parties to bring the matter to an early conclusion, I look with entire confidence to a prompt and satisfactory termination of the negociation. Three commissioners were appointed shortly after the adjournment of Congress, under the act of the last session, providing for the exploration and survey of the line which separates the States of Maine and New Hampshire from the British Provinces; they have been actively employed until their progress was interrupted by the inclemency of the season, and will resume their labors as soon as practicable in the ensuing year.

It is understood that their respective examinations will throw new light upon the subject in controversy, and serve to remove any erroneous impressions which may have been made elsewhere prejudicial to the rights of the United States. It was, among other reasons, with a view of preventing the embarrassments which, in our peculiar system of government, impede and complicate negotiations involving the territorial rights of a State; that I thought it my duty, as you have been informed on a previous occasion, to propose to the British Government, through its minister at Washington, that early steps should be taken to adjust the points of difference on the line of boundary from the entrance of lake Superior to the most northwestern point of the lake of the Woods, by the arbitration of some friendly Power, in conformity with the 7th article of the treaty of Ghent. No answer has yet been returned by the British Government to this proposition.

With Austria, France, Prussia, Russia and the remaining Powers of Europe, I am happy to inform you our relations continue to be of the most friendly character. With Belgium, a treaty of commerce and navigation, based upon liberal principles of reciprocity and equality, was concluded in March last, and having been ratified by the Belgian Government, will be duly laid before the Senate. It is a subject of congratulation that it provides for the satisfactory adjustment of a long standing question of controversy; thus removing the only obstacle which could obstruct the friendly and mutually advantageous intercourse between the two nations. A messenger has been despatched with the Hanoverian treaty to Berlin, where according to stipulation, the ratifications are to be exchanged. I am happy to announce to you that, after many delays and difficulties, a treaty of commerce and navigation, between the United States and Portugal, was concluded and signed at Lisbon, on the 25th of August last, by the Plenipotentiaries of the two Governments. Its stipulations are founded upon those principles of mutual liberality and advantage which the U. S. have always sought to make the basis of their intercourse with foreign powers, and it is hoped that they will tend to foster and strengthen the commercial intercourse of the two countries.

Under the appropriation of the last session of congress, an agent has been sent to Germany for the purpose of promoting the interests of our tobacco trade.

The commissioners appointed under the convention for the adjustment of claims of citizens of the U. S. upon Mexico, having met and organised at Washington, in August last, the papers in the possession of the Government, relating to those claims, were communicated to the board. The claims not embraced by that convention are now the subjects of negotion between the two Governments, through the medium of our minister at Mexico.

Nothing has occurred to disturb the harmony of our relations with the different Governments of South America. I regret, however, to be obliged to inform you, that the claims of our citizens upon the late Republic of Colombia have not yet been satisfied by the separate Governments into which it has been resolved.

The charge d'affairs of Brazil having expressed the intention of his Government not to prolong the treaty of 1828 it will cease to be obligatory upon either party on the 12th day of December 1841. when the extensive commercial intercourse between the United States and that vast empire will no longer be regulated by express stipulations.

It affords me pleasure to communicate to you that the Government of Chili has entered into an agreement to indemnify the claimants in the case of the Macedonian, for American property seized in 1819 and to add, that information has also been received which justifies the hope of an early adjustment of the remaining claims upon that Government.

The commissioners appointed in pursuance of the convention between the U. States and Texas; for marking the boundary between them, have, according to the last report received from our commissioner, surveyed and established the whole extent of the boundary north along the Sabine river, from its entrance into the Gulf of Mexico to the thirty-second degree of north latitude. The commissioners adjourned on the 16th of June last, to re-assemble on the 1st of November, for the purpose of establishing accurately the intersection of the thirty-second degree of latitude with the western bank of the Sabine, and the meridian line thence to Red River. It is presumed that the work will be concluded in the present season.

The present sound condition of their finances, and the success with which embarrassments in regard to them, at times apparently insurmountable, have been overcome, are matters upon which the people and Government of the U. States may well congratulate themselves. An overflowing treasury, however it may be regarded as an evidence of public prosperity, is seldom conducive to the permanent welfare of any people; and experience has demonstrated its utter incompatibility with the salutary action of political institutions like those of the United States. Our safest reliance for financial efficiency and independence has, on the contrary, been found to consist in ample resources unencumbered with debt; and in this respect, the Federal Government occupies a singularly fortunate and truly enviaole position.

When I entered upon the discharge of my official duties in March 1837, the act for the distribution of the surplus revenue was in a course of rapid execution. Nearly twenty eight millions of dollars of the public moneys were, in pursuance of its provisions, deposited with the States in the months of January, April and July, of that year. In May there occurred a general suspension of specie payments by the banks, including, with very few exceptions, those in which the public moneys were deposited, and upon whose fidelity the Government had unfortunately made itself dependent for the revenues which had been collected from the people and were indispensable to the public service. This suspension, and the excesses in banking and commerce out of which it arose, made unavailable the principal part of the public money then on hand, suspended the collections of millions accruing on merchant's bonds; and greatly reduced the revenue arising from customs and the public lands. These effects have continued to operate, in various degrees, to the present period; and in addition to the decrease in the revenue thus produced, two and a half millions of duties have been relinquished by two biennial reductions under the act of 1833, and probably as much more upon the importation of iron for railroads, by special legislation.

Whilst such has been our condition for the last four years in relation to revenue, we have, during the same period been subject to an unadvoidable continuance of large extraordinrry expenses necessarily growing out of past transactions, and which could not be immediately arrested without prejudice to the public interest—Of these, the charge upon the Treasury, in consequence of the Cherokee treaty alone, without adverting to others arising out of Indian treaties, has already exceeded five millions of dollars; that for the prosecution of measures for the removal of the Seminole Indians, which were found in progress, has been nearly fourteen millions; and the public buildings have required the unusual sum nearly three millions.

It affords me, however, great pleasure to be able to say, that from the commencement of this period to the present day, every demand upon the Government, at home or abroad, has been properly met. This has been done, not only without creating a permanent debt, or a resort to additional taxation in any form, but in the midst of a steady progressive reduction of existing burdens upon the people, leaving still a considerable balance of available funds which will remain in the Treasury at the end of the year. The small amount of Treasury Notes, not exceeding four and a half millions of dollars, still outstanding, and less by twenty-three millions than the United States have in deposite with the States, is composed of such only as are not due, or have not been presented for payment. They may be redeemed out of the accruing revenue, if the expenditures do not exceed the amount within which they may, it is thought, be kept without prejudice to the public interest, and the revenue shall prove to be as large as may justly be anticipated.

Among the reflections arising from the contemplation of these circumstances, one, not the least gratifying, is the consciousness that the Government had the resolution and the ability to adhere in every emergency, to the sacred obligations of law; to execute all its contracts according to the requirements of the constitution; and thus to present, when most needed, a rallying-point by which the business of the whole country might be bro't back to a safe and unvarying standard—a result vitally important as well to the interests as to the morals of the people. There can surely now be no difference of opinion in regard to the incalculable evils that would have arisen if the Government, at that critical moment, had suffered itself to be deterred from upholding the only true standard of value, either by the pressure of adverse circumstances or the violence of unmerited denunciation. The manner in which the people sustained the performance of this duty was highly honorable to their fortitude and patriotism.—It cannot fail to stimulate their agents to adhere, under all circumstances, to the line of duty; and to satisfy them of the safety which a course really right, and demanded by a financial crisis, may, in a community like ours, be pursued, however apparently severe in immediate operation.

The policy of the Federal Government in extinguishing as rapidly as possible the national debt, and, subsequently, in resisting every temptation to create a new one deserves to be regarded in the same favorable light. Among the many objections to a national debt, the certain tendency of public securities to concentrate ultimately in the coffers of foreign stock holders, is one which is every day gathering strength. Already have the resources of many of the States, and the future industry of their citizens, been indefinitely mortgaged to the subjects of European Governments, to the amount of twelve millions annually, to pay the constant accruing interest on borrowed money—a sum exceeding half the ordinary revenues of the whole United States.—The pretext which this relation affords to foreigners to scrutenize the management of our domestic affairs; if not actually to intermeddle with them, presents a subject for earnest attention, not to say of serious alarm. Fortunately, the Federal Government, with the exception of an obligation entered into in behalf of the District of Columbia, which must soon be discharged, is wholly exempt from any such embarrassment. It is also, as is believed the only Government which having fully and faithfully paid all its crediters has also relieved itself entirely from debt. To maintain distinction so desirable to our national character, should be an object of earnest solicitude. Never should a free people if it be possible to avoid it, expose themselves to the necessity of having to treat of the peace, the honor, or the safety of the Republic, with the Governments of foreign creditors, who, however, well disposed they may be to cultivate with us in general friendly relatiens, are, nevertheless, by the law of their own condition, made hostile to the success and permanency of political institutions like ours. Most humiliating may be the embarrassments consequent upon such a condition. Another objection scarcely lest formidable to the commencement of a new debt, is its inevitable tendency, to increase in magnitude, and to foster national extravagance. He has been an unprofitable observer of events, who needs at this day to be admonished of the difficulties which a Government habitually dependant on loans to sustain its ordinary expenditures has to encounter in resisting the influences constantly exerted in favor of additional loans; by capitalists, who enjoy themselves by Government securities for amounts much exceeding the money they actually advance—a prolific source of individual aggrandizement in all borrowing countries; by stockholders, who seek their gains in the rise and fall of public stocks, and by the selfish importunities of applicants for appropriations for works avowedly for the accommodation of the public but the real objects of which, are, too frequently, the advancement of private interests. The known necessity which so many of the States will be under to create taxes for the payment of the interest on their debts, furnishes an additional and very urgent reason why the Federal Government should refrain from creating a national debt, by which the people would be exposed to double taxation for a similar object. We possess within ourselves ample resources for every emergency; and we may be quite sure that our citizens, in no future exigency, will be unwilling to supply the Government with all the means asked for the defence of the country. In time of peace there can at all events be no justification for the creation of a permanent debt by the Federal Government. Its limited range of constitutional duties may certainly under such circumstances, be performed without such a resort. It has it is seen been avoided during four years of greater fiscal difficulties than have existed in a similar period since the adoption of the constitution, and one also remarkable for the occurrence of extraordinary causes of expenditures.

But, to accomplish so desirable an object, two things are indispensable. First, that the action of the Federal Government be kept within the boundaries prescribed by its founders, and, secondly, that all appropriations for objects admitted to be constutional, and the expenditure of them also subjected to a standard of rigid but well considered and practical economy. The first depends chiefly on the people themselves, the opinionss they form of the true construction of the constitution, and the confidence they repose in the political sentiments of those they select as their representatives in the Federal Legislature; the second rests upon the fidelity with which their more immediate representatives, and other public functionaries, discharge the trusts committed to them. The duty of economizing the expenses of the public service is admitted on all hands; yet there are few subjects upon which there exists a wider difference of opinion than is constantly manifested in regard to the fidelity with which that duty is discharged. Neither diversity of sentiment, nor even mutual recriminations, upon a point in respect to which the public mind is so justly sensitive, can well be entirely avoided; and least so at periods of great political excitement. An intelligent people, however, seldom fail to arrive in the end, at correct conclusions in such a matter.—Practical economy in the management of public affairs can have no adverse influence to contend with more powerful than a large surplus revenue; and the unusually large appropriations for 1837, may, without doubt, independently of the extraordinary requisitions for the public service growing out of the state of our Indian relations, be, in no inconsiderable degree, traced to this source. The sudden and rapid distribution of the large surplus then in the Treasury; and the equally sudden and unprecedentedly severe revulsion in the commerce and business of the country, pointing with unerring certainty to a great and protracted reduction of the revenue, strengthened the propriety of the earliest practicable reduction of the public expenditures.

But, to change a system operating upon so large a surface, and applicable to such numerous and diversified interests and objects, was more than the work of a day. The attention of every department was immediately, and in good faith, directed to that end; and has been so continued to the present moment. The estimates and appropriations for the year 1838, (the first over which I had any control,) were somewhat diminished. The expenditures of 1839 were reduced six millions of dollars. Those of 1840, exclusive of disbursements for public debts and trust claims, will probably not exceed twenty-two and a half millions, being between two and three millions less than those of the year 1837. Nor has it been found necessary, in order to produce this result, to resort to the power conferred by Congress, of postponing certain classes of the public works, except by defering expenditures for a short period upon a limited portion of them, and which postponement terminated some time since, at the moment the Treasury Department, by further receipts from the indebted banks, became fully assured of its ability to meet them without prejudice to the public service in other respects. Causes are in operation which will, it is believed justify a still further reduction, without injury to any important national interest. The expenses of sustaining the troops employed in Florida, have been gradually and greatly reduced, through the persevering efforts of the War Department, and a reasonable hope may be entertained that the necessity for military operations in that quarter will soon cease. The removal of the Indians from within our settled borders is nearly completed. The pension list one of the heaviest charges upon the treasury, is rapidly diminishing by death. The most costly of our public buildings are either finished or nearly so, and we may, I think, safely promise ourselves a continued exemption from border difficulties.

The available balance in the Treasury 1st of January next is $1,500,000. This sum, with the expected receipts from all sources during the next year, will, it is believed, be sufficient to enable the Government to meet every engagement, and leave a suitable balance in the Treasury at the end of the year, if the remedial measures connected with customs and public lands heretofore recommended, shall be adopted, and the appropriations by Congress shall not carry the expenditures beyond the official estimates.

The new system established by Congress for the safekeeping of the public money, prescribing the kind of currency to be received for the public revenue, and providing additionnl guards and securities against losses, has now been several months in operation. Although it might be premature, upon an experience of such limited duration, to form a definite opinion in regard to the extent of its influences in correcting many evils under which the federal Government and the country have hitherto suffered—especially those that have grown out of bank expansions, a depreciated currency, and official defalcations—yet it is but right to say that nothing has occurred in the practical operation of the system to weaken in the slightest degree, but much to strengthen the confident anticipations of its friends. The grounds of these have been heretofore so fully explained as to require no recapitulation. In respect to the facility and convenience it affords in conducting the public service, and the ability of the government to discharge through its agency every duty attendant on the collection and disbursement of the public money with promptitude and success, I can say, with confidence, that the apprehensions of those who feel it to be their duty to oppose its adoption, have proved to be unfounded. On the contrary, this branch of the fiscal affairs of the government has been, and it is believed may always be, thus carried on with every desirable facility and security. A few changes and improvements in the details of the system without affecting any principles involved in it, will be submitted to you by the Secretary of the Treasury, and will, I am sure, receive at your hands that attention to which they may, on examination, be found to be entitled.

I have deemed this brief summary of our fiscal affairs necessary to the performance of a duty specially enjoined upon me by the constitution. It will serve, also, so, to illustrate more fully the principles by which I have been guided in reference to two contested points in our public policy, which were earliest in their developement, and have been more important in their consequences, than any that have arisen under our complicated and difficult, yet admirable system of government; I allude to a national debt and a national bank. It was in these that the political contests by which the country has been agitated ever since the adoption of the constitution, in a great measure, originated; and there is too much reason to apprehend that the conflicting interests and opposing principles thus marshalled, will continue, as heretofore, to produce similar, if not aggravated, consequences.

Coming into office the declared enemy of both, I have earnestly endeavored to prevent a resort to either.

The consideration that a large public debt affords an apology and produces, in some degree, a necessity also for resorting to a system and extent of taxation which is not only oppressive throughout, but likewise so apt to lead, in the end, to the commission of that most odious of all offences against the principles of republican government, the prostitution of political power, confessed for the general benefit, to the aggrandizement of particular classes, and the gratification of individual cupidity—is a one sufficient, independently of the weighty objections which have already been urged, to render its creation and existence the source of better and inappeasable discord. If we add to this, its inevitable tendency to produce and foster extravagant expenditures of the public money, by which a necessity is created for new loans and new burdens on the people; and, finally, if we refer to the examples of every Government which has existed, for proof, how seldom it is that the system, when once adopted and implanted in the policy of a country, has failed to expand itself, until pulic credit was exhausted, and the people were no longer able to endure its increasing weight it seems impossible to resist the conclusion, that no benefits resulting from its career, no extent of conquest, no accession, of wealth to particular classes, nor any, nor all its combined advantages, can counterbalance its ultimate but certain results—a splendid Government, and an impoverished people.

If a national bank was, as is undeniable, repudiated by the framers of the constitution as incompatible with the rights of the States and the liberties of the people; if, from the beginning, it has been regarded by large portions of our citizens as coming in direct collision with that great and vital amendment of the constitution, which declares that all powers not confered by that instrument on the General Government are reserved to the States and to the people; if it has been reviewed by them as the first great step in the march of latitudinous construction, which, unchecked, would render that sacred instrument of as little value as an unwritten constitution, dependent, as it would alone be, for its meaning, on the interested interpretation of a dominant party, and affording no security to the rights of the minority;—if such is undeniably the case, what rational grounds could have been conceived for anticipating aught but determined opposition to such an institution at the present day?

Could a different result have been expected, when the consequences which have flowed from its creation and particularly from its struggles to prepetuate its existence, had confirmed in so strtking a manner, the apprehensions of its opponents; when it had been so clearly demonstrated that a consecrated money power, wielding so vast a capital, and combining such incalculable means of influence, may, in those peculiar conjunctures to which the Government is unavoidably exposed, prove an overmatch for the political power of the people themselves; when the true character of its capacity to regulate, according to its will and the interests of its favorites, the value and production of the labor and property of ev man in this extended country, had b so fearfully developed; when it was n rious that all classes of this great com nity had, by means of the power and fluence it thus possesses, been infecte madness with a spirit of heedless sp lation; when it had seen that secure the suport of the combination of infl ces by which it is surrounded, could late its charter, and set the laws at fiance with impunity; and when, to had become most apparent that to lieve that such an accumulation of p ers can ever be granted without the tainty of being abused, was to indulg a fatal delusion.

To avoid the necessity of a perman debt, and its inevitable consequence have advocated, and endeavored to ca into effect, the policy of confining the propriations for the public service to s objects only as are clearly within constitutional authority of the Fed Government; excluding from its expen those improvident and unauthor zed gra of public money for works of internal provement, which were so wisely ar ted by the constitutional interpose of predecessor, and which, if they had been so checked, would long before time have involved the finances of General Government in embarrassme far greater than those which are now perienced by any of the States; of limit all our expenditures to that simple, u tentatious, and economical administra of public affairs, which is alone consist with the character of our institutions collecting annually from the customs, the sales of public lands, a revenue adequate to defray all the expenses incurred, but, under no pretence wha ever, to impose taxes upon the people a greater amount than was actually ne sary to the public service, conducted u the principles I have stated.

In lieu of a national bank, or a depe ence upon banks of any description, the management of our fiscal affairs recommended the adoption of the sys which is now in successful operatio That system affords every requisite fa ity for the transaction of the pecuni concerns of the Government; will, confidently anticipated, produce in ot respects many of the benefits which h been from time to time expected f the creation of a national bank, but wh have never been realized; avoid the m ifold evils inseparable from an institut diminish to a greater extent than co could be accomplished by any other meas of reform, the patronage of the Fed Government—a wise policy in all G ernments, but more especially so in like ours, which works well only in portion as it is made to rely for its s port upon the unbiassed and unadultera opinions of its constituents; do away, ever, all dependence on corporate bo either in the raising, collecting, s keeping, or disbursing the public re nues, and place the Goverment equ above the temptation of fostering a d gerous and unconstitutional institutio home, or the necessity of adapting its icy to the views and interests of a more formidable money power abroad.

It is by adopting and carrying out th principles, under these circumstances most arduous and discouraging, that attempt has been made, thus far succ fully to demonstrate to the people of United States that a National Bank at times, and a national debt, except i incurred at a period when the honor safety of the nation demand the temp ry sacrifice of a policy, which should abandonod in such exigencies, are merely unnecessary, but in direct deadly hostility to the principles of t Government, and to their own permar welfare.

The progress made in the developm of these positions, appears in the pr ding sketch of the past history and present state of the financial concern the Federal Government. The f there stated fully authorize the asser that all the purposes for which this G ernment was instituted have been acc plished during four years of greater cuniary embarrassment than we ever fore experienced in time of peace, in the face of opposition as formidabl any that was ever before arrayed aga the policy of an administration; that has been done when the ordinary re nues of the Government were gener decreasing, as well from the operatio the laws, as the condition of the coun without the creation of a permanent p lic debt, or incurring any liability, er than such as the ordinary resource the Government will speedily discha and without the agency of a natio bank.

If this view of the proceedings of Government for the period it embra be warranted by the facts as they known to exist; if the army and navy h been sustained to the full extent auth sed by law, and which congress deem sufficient for the defence of the coun and the protection of its rights and its nor; if its civil and diplomatic service been equally sustained; if ample provis has been made for the administratio justice and the execution of the law the claims upon public gratitude in half of the soldiers of the revolution h been promptly and faithfully discharg if there have been no failures in def ing the very large expenditures grow out of that long continued and salu policy of peacefully removing the Ind to regions of comparative safety and p perity; if the public int. has at all time everywhere, been most scrupulously m tained by a prompt discharge of the merous, extended, and diversified cla on the treasury;—if all these great prominent objects, with many others might be stated, have, for a serie years, marked by peculiar obstacles difficulties, been successfully accompl ed without a resort to a permanent d or the aid of a national bank; have we a right to expect that a policy, the obj of which has been to sustain the pu service independently of either of th fruitful sources of discord, will rece al sanction of a people whose unbind fairly elicited judgment upon affairs is never ultimately wrong.

embarrassments in the pecuniary ns of individuals, of unexampled and duratioon, have recently exis-his, as in other commercial comes, is doubtless true. To suppose ssary to now trace these reverses r sources, would be a reflection
e intelligence of my fellow citi-
Whatever may have been the ob-in which the subject was involved the early stages of the great re-
, there cannot now be many by the whole subject is not fully un-bd.

deeming it within the constitu-powers of the general government pair private losses sustained by reof fortune, having no connection e public service, either by direct priations from the treasury or by legislation designed to secure ex-privileges and immunities to indi-or classes in preference to, and expense of the great majority ne-ly debarred from any participation n, no attempt to do so has either nade, recommended, or encouraged present executive.

believed, however, that the great es for the attainment of which the al Government was instituted have en lost sight of. Intrusted only ertain limited powers, cautiously rated, distinctly specified, and de-with sufficient clearness and precis-ich would seem to defy misconion, it has been my constant aim to e myself within the limits so clear-ked out and so carefully guarded.
g always been of opinion that the preservative of the union of the is to be found in a total abstinence the exercise of all doubtful powers part of the Federal Government, than in attempts to assume them ose construction of the constitution ngenious perversion of its words, ndeavored to avoid recommending easure which I had reason to ap-nd would, in the opinion even of a erable majority of my fellow citibe regarded as trenching on the of the States, or the provisions of llowed instrument of our union.—
ng the aggregate powers of the al Government as a voluntary conn of the States, it seemed to me such only should be exercised as at the time intended to be given.
ve been strengthened in the proof this course by the conviction that rts to go beyond this, tend only to e dissatisfaction and distrust, to exalousies, and to provoke resistance.
d of adding strength to the govern-, even when successful, they must rove a source of incurable weak-by alienating a portion those whose ion is indispensable to the great ag-te of united strength, and whose tary attachment is in my estimation ore essential to the efficiency of a nment strong in the best of all pos-strength—the confidence and attach-of all those who make up its constielements.

as believing it has been my purpose ure to the whole people; and to ev-member of the confederacy, by gen-salutary, and equal laws alone, the fit of those republican institutions it was the end and aim of the con-on to establish, and the impartial ine of which is, in my judgment, insable to their preservation. I can-ring myself to believe that the last-appiness of the people, the prosperi-the states, or the permanency of union, can be maintained by giving rence or priority to any class of cit-in the distribution of benefits or leges, or by the adoption of mea-which enrich one portion of the at the expense of another; nor can in the interference of the Federal rnment with the local legislation and ved rights of the states a remedy for ent, or a security against future dane first, and assuredly the greatest, rtant step toward relieving the coun-rom the condition into which it had plunged by excessive trade, bank-and credit of all kinds, was to place usiness transactions of the govern-t itself on a solid basis, giving and re-ing, in all cases, value for value, and her encouraging nor countenancing, hers that delusive system of credits which it has been found so difficult cape, and which has left nothing beit but the wrecks that mark its fatal er.

at the financial affairs of the government ow, and have been, during the whole period ese wide spreading difficulties, conducted a strict and invariable regard to this great amental principle, and that by the assumpand maintenance of the stand thus taken e very threshold of the approaching crisis, than by any other cause or causes whatever, community at large has been shielded from incalculable evils of a general and indefinite ension of specie payments, and a consequent hilation, for the whole period it might have d, of a just and invariable standard of val-will, it is believed, at this period, scarcely be tioned.

steady adherence, on the part of the gov-ent, to the policy which has produced such tary results, aided by a judicious state legis-on, and, what is not less important, by the stry, enterprise perseverence, and economy he American people, cannot fail to raise the le country, at an early period, to a state of l and enduring prosperity, not subject to be n overthrown by the suspension of banks, or explosion of bloated credit. It is for the ple, and their representatives to decide wheor not the permanent welfare of the coun-(which all good citizens equally desire, how-widely they may differ as to the means of its mplishment) shall be in this way secured; ther the management of the pecuniary con-ns of the government, and to a great extent, se of individuals also, shall be carried back to condition of things which fostered those conctions and expansions of the currency, and se reckless abuses of credit, from the bale-effects of which the country has so deeply sufd—a return that can promise no better results n to reproduce the embarrassments the gov-ment has experienced; and to remove from shoulders of the present to those of fresh vic-s, the bitter fruits of that speculative spirit which our countrymen are so liable, and upon ich the lessons of experience are so unavail-
. The choice is an important one, and I sin-ely hope that it may be wisely made.

A report from the Secretary of War, presenting a detailed view of the affairs of that department, accompanies this communication.

The desultory duties connected with the removal of the Indians, in which the army has been constantly engaged on the northern and western frontiers, and in Florida, have rendered it impracticable to carry into full effect the plan recommended by the Secretary for improving its discipline. In every instance where the regiments have been concentrated, they have made great progress; and the best results may be anticipated from a continuance of this system.—During the last season, a part of the troops have been employed in removing Indians from the interior to the territory assigned them in the west—a duty which they have performed efficiently, and with praiseworthy humanity; and that portion of them which has been stationed in Florida continued active operations there throughout the heats of summer.

The policy of the United States in regard to the Indians, of which a succinct account is given in my message of 1838, and of the wisdom and expediency of which I am fully satisfied has been continued in active operation throughout the whole period of my administration. Since the spring of 1837, more than forty thousand Indians have been removed to their new homes west of the Mississippi; and I am happy to add, that all accounts concur in representing the result of this measure as eminently beneficial to that people.

The emigration of the Seminoles alone has been attended with serious difficulty, and occasioned bloodshed; hostilities having been commenced by the Indians in Florida, under the apprehension that they would be compelled, by force, to comply with their treaty stipulations. The execution of the treaty of Payne's Landing, signed in 1832, but not ratified until 1834, was postponed, at the solicitation of the Indians, until 1836, when they again renewed their agreement to remove peaceably to their new homes in the west. In the face of this solemn and renewed compact, they broke their faith, and commenced hostilities by the massacre of Maj. Dade's command, the murder of their agent, General Thompson, and other acts of cruel treachery.—When this alarming and unexpected intelligence reached the seat of Government, every effort appears to have been made to reinforce General Clinch, commanding the troops then in Florida. General Eustis was despatched with reinforcements from Charleston; troops were called out from Alabama, Tennessee, and Georgia, and General Scott was sent to take the command, with ample powers and ample means. At the first alarm, General Gaines organized a force at New Orleans, and, without waiting for orders, landed in Florida, where he delivered over the troops he had brought with him to Gen. Scott.

Governor Call was subsequently appointed to conduct a summer campaign, and, at the close of it, was replaced by Gen. Jesup. These events and changes took place under the administration of my predecessor. Notwithstanding the exertions of the experienced officers who had command there for eighteen months, on entering upon the administration of the Government I found the Territory of Florida a prey to Indian atrocities. A strenuous effort was immediately made to bring these hostilities to a close; and the army, under General Jesup, was reinforced until it amounted to ten thousand men, and furnished with abundant supplies of every description. In this campaign a great number of the enemy were captured and destroyed; but the character of the contest only was changed. The Indians, having been defeated in every engagement, dispersed in small bands throughout the country, and became an enterprising, formidable, and ruthless banditti. General Taylor, who succeeded Gen. Jesup, used his best endeavors to subdue them, and was seconded in his efforts by the officers under his command; but he, too, failed to protect the Territory from their depredations. By an act of signal and cruel treachery, they broke the truce made with them by General Macomb, who was sent from Washington for the purpose of carrying into effect the expressed wishes of Congress, and have continued their devastations ever since. General Armistead, who was in Florida when General Taylor left the army, by permission, assumed the command, and, after active summer operations, was met by propositions for peace; and from the fortunate coincidence of the arrival in Florida, at the same time, of a delegation from the Seminoles who are happily settled west of the Mississippi, and are now anxious to persuade their countrymen to join them there, hopes were for some time entertained that the Indians might be induced to leave the Territory without further difficulty. These hopes have proved fallacious, and hostilities have been renewed throughout the whole Territory.

That this contest has continued so long, is to be attributed to causes beyond the control of the government. Experienced generals have had the command of troops, officers and soldiers have alike distinguished themselves for their activity, patience and enduring courage; the army has been constantly furnished with supplies of every description; and we must look for the causes which have so procrastinated the issue of the contest, in the vast extent of the theatre of hostilities, the almost insurmountable obstacles presented by the nature of the country, the climate and the wily character of the savages.

The sites for moving hospitals on the lakes and rivers, which I have authorized to select and cause to be purchased, have all been designated; but the appropriations not proving sufficient, conditional arrangements only have been made for their acquisition. It is for Congress to decide whether those conditional purchases shall be sanctioned, and the humane intentions of the law carried into full effect.

The navy, as will appear from the accompanying report of the Secretary, has been usefully and honorably employed in the protection of our commerce and citizens in the Mediterranean, the Pacific, on the coast of Brazil, and the Gulf of Mexico. A small squadron, consisting of the frigate Constellation and the sloop-of-war Boston, under Commodore Kearney, is now on its way to the China and Indian seas, for the purpose of attending to our interests in that quarter; and Commander Aulick, in the sloop-of-war Yorktown, has been instructed to visit the Sandwich and Society Islands, the coast of New Zeland and Japan, together with other ports and Islands frequented by our whale-ships, for the purpose of giving them countenance and protection, should they be required. Other smaller vessels have been, and still are, employed in prosecuting the surveys of the coast of the United States, directed by the various acts of Congress; and those which have been completed will shortly be laid before you.

The Exploring Expedition, at the latest date, was preparing to leave the Bay of Islands, New Zeland, in further prosecution of objects which have thus far been successfully accomplished.—The discovery of a new continent, which was first seen in latitude 66 deg. 2 m. south, longitude 154 deg. 27 m. east, and afterwards in latitude 66 deg. 31 m. south, longitude 153 deg. 40 m. east, by Lieutenants Wilkes and Hudson, for an extent of eighteen hundred miles, but on which they were prevented from landing by vast bodies of ice which encompassed it, is one of the honorable results of the enterprise. Lieutenant Wilkes bears testimony to the zeal and good conduct of his officers and men; and it is but justice to that officer to state that he appears to have performed the duties assigned him with an ardor, ability, and perseverance, which give every assurance of an honorable issue to the undertaking.

The report of the Post Master General, herewith transmitted, will exhibit the service of that Department, the past year, and its present condition. The transportation has been maintained during the year to the full extent authorized by the existing laws; some improvements have been effected, which the public interest seemed urgently to demand, but not involving any material additional expenditure; the contractors have generally performed their engagements with fidelity; the Post Masters, with a few exceptions, have rendered their accounts and paid their quarterly balances with promptitude; and the whole service of the Department has maintained the efficiency for which it has for several years been distinguished.

The acts of Congress establishing new mail routes, and requiring more expensive services on others, and the increasing wants of the country, have, for three years past, carried the expenditures something beyond the accruing revenues; the excess having been met, until the past year, by the surplus which had previously accumulated. That surplus having been exhausted, and the anticipated increase in the revenue not having been realized, owing to the depression in the commercial business of the country, the finances of the Department exhibit a small deficiency at the close of the fiscal year. Its resources, however, are ample; and the reduced rates of compensation for the transportation service, which may be expected on the future lettings, from the general reduction of prices, with the increase of revenue that may seasonably be anticipated from the revival of commercial activity, must soon place the finances of the Department in a prosperous condition.

Considering the unfavorable circumstances which have existed during the past year, it is a gratifying result that the revenue has not declined as compared with the preceding year; but, on the contrary, exhibits a small increase; the circumstances referred to having had no other effect than to check the expected income.

It will be seen that the Post Master General suggests certain improvements in the establishment, designed to reduce the weight of the mails, cheapen the transportation, ensure greater regularity in the service, and secure a considerable reduction in the rates of letter-postage—an object highly desirable. The subject is one of general interest to the community, and is respectfully recommended to your consideration.

The suppression of the African slave-trade has received the continued attention of the Government. The brig Dolphin and schooner Grampus have been employed during the last season on the coast of Africa, for the purpose of preventing such portions of that trade as was said to be prosecuted under the American flag. After cruising off those parts of the coast most usually resorted to by slavers, until the commencement of the rainy season, these vessels returned to the United States for supplies, and have since been despatched on a similar service.

From the reports of the commanding officers, it appears that the trade is now principally carried on under Portuguese colors; and they express the opinion that the apprehension of their presence on the slave-coast has, in a great degree, arrested the prostitution of the American flag to this inhuman purpose. It is hoped that, by continuing to maintain this force in that quarter, and by the exertions of the officers in command, much will be done to put a stop to whatever portion of this traffic may have been carried on under the American flag, and to prevent its use in a trade which, while it violates the laws, is equally an outrage on the rights of others and the feelings of humanity. The efforts of the several Governments who are anxiously seeking to suppress this traffic must, however, be directed against the facilities afforded by what are now recognized as legitimate commercial pursuits, before that object can be fully accomplished—Supplies of provisions, water-casks, merchandise, & articles connected with the prosecution of the slave-trade, it is understood, are freely carried by vessels of different nations to the slave factories; and the effects of the factors are transported openly from one slave station to another, without interruption or punishment by either of the nations to which they belong, engaged in the commerce of that region. I submit to your judgments whether this Government, having been the first to prohibit, by adequate penalties, the slave-trade—the first to declare it piracy—should not be the first, also, to forbid to its citizens all trade with the slave factories on the coast of Africa; giving an example to all nations in this respect, which, if fairly followed, cannot fail to produce the most effective results in breaking up those dens of iniquity.

M. VAN BUREN.

Washington, December 5, 1840.

FIFTY YEARS SINCE.

In 1794, I don't think there were six Piano Fortes in the city; now I suppose there may be ten thousand. The lasses were all better employed, they were the true yoke fellows always drawing equal; helping and cheering their good men, as they trudged along with the cares and burthens of life. The mother and girls made all the clothes in the family. No merchant tailors and their five hundred dollar bills in those days; no notes laying over. In fact for the first fifteen years I lived in New York, I never heard of a protested note. Hence I infer that the pressure in the money market is owing to the increase of play houses and piano fortes; because the solitary little play house at the time, I don't think would hold over three hundred people; but now we have seven or eight play houses, and those so large as probably to hold three thousand each. I have heard that thirty thousand dollars a week won't support the play houses. Now only think how many butchers' and bakers' bills might be paid with this money. I heard of a man living in a five story house one day while at dinner, had the baker's bill amounting to $70 50, brought up to him; he took out his pocket book, his wife looks across the table, "See my dear that you leave money enough to buy the tickets." Ten dollars were wanted for the tickets—there were but fifteen in the book; so the baker had to call again, and the play got the ten dollars. Next morning they had nothing for their money but waking dreams. Now how many thousand supernumerary door keepers and stage sweepers, men singers, lamp lighters and fidlers are killing time in these concerns! If all the men were feeling trees and hoeing corn, and all the women making cloth and knitting stockings, there would be no high pressure in Wall street, and the baker would not need call again for his bill.

When Washington was President his wife knit stockings in Philadelphia, and the mothers made dough nuts and cakes between Christmas and New Year's—now the married ladies are too proud to make dough nuts, besides they don't know how, so they e'en send to Madame Pompodour, or some other French cake maker, and buy sponge cake for three dollars a pound. In these days New York was full of substantial comforts; now it is full of splendid misery; and there were no gray headed spinsters, (unless they were very ugly indeed) for a man could get married for a dollar, and begin house keeping for twenty, and in washing his clothes and cooking victuals the wife save more money than it took to support her. Now I have known a minister lately to get five hundred dollars for buckling a couple; then wine, cake and other etceteras, five hundred more, wedding clothes and jewels, a thousand, six or seven hundred in driving to the spring or some desert mountain; then a house must be got for eight hundred per annum, and finished at an expense of two or three thousand; and when all this is done, his pretty wife can neither make a cake nor put an apple in a dumpling. Then a cock must be got for ten dollars per month; a chambermaid, landress and seamstress at seven dollars each, and as the fashionable folly of the day has banished the mistress from the kitchen, those blessed helps aforesaid reign supreme; and while master and mistress are playing cards in the parlour the servants are playing the devil in the kitchen; thus lighting the candle at both ends it soon burns out. Poverty comes in at the door and drives love out at the window. It is this stupid and expensive nonsense which deters so many unhapay old bachelors from entering the state of blessedness; hence you find more Deaths than Marriages in the papers.

Forty-five years ago, our real wants were few and easily supplied, our imaginary wants, none; now our real wants are just as few, but the world and all its stores cannot supply our imaginary ones. In those days men got married at night, and went forth to work in the morning, with all the sober realities of life on their back; now they get married in the morning, and start off spending money, as if the wedding day would last through life.

Much has been said and sung about the improvements of the age, going to Albany in ten hours and England in twelve days, etc. It may be so; but what then? I know the folks were happier when we took 3 days in going to Newburg, eight to Albany, and three months to Europe. Then people had time to live and enjoy life; when the wind came ahead, we furled our sails or dropped anchor; when the tide turned we floated up; with ten or twelve passengers we had no lack of amusement. Then we had no harrowing thoughts about home, our wives kept the keys of the money drawer, and sat in the store either knitting or sewing, to see that the shop boys make the entries and behaved well to the customers. The goods and furniture were insured and we had no notes to take up. Now to be sure, you may go ot bed in N. York, and wake up in Albany, run round, collect money, and be at home in time to take up your note; but all the time you are worried; for if detained an hour by accident, your note must be protested. Well, you get home, five hundred short, you go from house to house, and at 3 o'clock P. M., the note is taken up. It is too late for family dinner and you take a cup of coffee and a cold cut, plod away to your office, turn over the leaves in search of means to return the five hundred to-morrow, and get ready for another note which is payable Saturday. You are at home 7 P. M. sore, fatigued and jaded, both in body and mind. For fifty long hours your wife has not seen your face, she hears your foot, she meets you at the door with one of her sweetest smiles.—Your mind is soured, you can scarcely find a kind word to give her in return, nor half an hour to sing a song to the baby; you drop on a chair, fling your hat to the winds; you are fired, and in thirty minutes your head is on a pillow, where you dream of bank bills and brokers till daylight in the morning. These men breathe, they don't live. Before steam was got up man's life was compared to a journey; now it's most emphatically a race, and unhappy is he who is foremost.—N. Y. Mirror.

A HORRID DEATH.

A correspondent narrates the following facts concerning the unfortunate fate of Mr. Jonathan L. Hill of Coitsville, this county.

Mr. Hill was engaged in digging a well for a Mr. Young of Weathersfield, and had sunk the shaft to the depth of fifty feet, with every appearance of being near water. To ascertain the fact, he drilled a hole in the middle of the well, and heard a rumbling noise, but could not tell whether it was above or below him, supposed, however, to be running water below. He then ascended to the top to make preparations for walling up the well next morning. The noise still continuing, about 7 o'clock in the evening, he again descended for the purpose of bringing up his tools, carrying a candle with him. When let down about twenty feet, the candle coming in contact with carburrated hydrogin mixed with common atmospheric air, occasioned a powerful explosion threw the windlass from its rigging, and enveloped the whole cavity in a blaze of livid fire. The flames shot up in the air to the height of thirty feet.

The windlass was righted as soon as possible, and a rope let down to the unhappy sufferer, who after falling thirty feet, was still strugging in the flames. He seized hold of the rope, fastened it to the bucket which fell with him, and was brought out of the well, literally burned up. His clothes, except the vest were all consumed. He survived from Wednesday, the day on which the melancholy event occurred, until Saturday evening; at which time he died, leaving a wife and seven small children to mourn his untimely end.—Warren O. Paper.

THANKSGIVING. Gov. Shannon has set apart Tuesday, the 22d December inst to be observed as a day of Thanksgiving and Prayer, throughout the state of Ohio.

OHIO REPUBLICAN.

ZANESVILLE:

Saturday, December 12, 1840.

Correspondence of the Republican.

COLUMBUS, Dec. 8 1840.

MR. PETERS: I have looked in vain over the long columns of the last Ohio Republican for my letter giving you a faithful account of the proceedings of the college of electors assembled last week in our city. Perhaps you thought that letters from Columbus could possess no interest until after the meeting of the Legislature. Well, both Houses are organized. All the Senators present, and but one member of the House absent, Mr. Reece of Hamilton, detained I learn by indisposition. The Senate, which you know the popular voice has not yet fully reached, elected their last year's Van Buren officers. The House elected Mr. Ford of Geauga Speaker. Mr. John M. Gallagher of Springfield Clerk, and Mr. Chapman of Harrison County door-keeper—all whigs. Mr. Ford has been several years in the House and has distinguished himself by his labors on the committee of Finance. He has done the State much service, for he has saved it some hundreds of thousands of dollars. I like his address upon taking the chair. Though a very modest man, he makes no foolish display of diffidence; indulges in no hypocritical expressions of reluctance in accepting a station which he probably deserved, but plunges at once in medias res, and tells the House they are assembled there to do the peoples' business and the sooner they set about it, the better. The Clerk Mr. Gallagher was favorably known as the former editor of the State Journal, and more recently of a paper in Springfield. Mr. Chapman is of more advanced age than the usual occupants of that station, but is I doubt not well qualified to discharge its duties. This election gives me more than ordinary pleasure and you desire to know why.

To day at 3 o'clock the Governor message was read in both houses. I listened to the whole medley of an hour and a half from the gallery of the House. For the information of such of our readers as have heard Governor Shannon on the stump during the past summer it will be quite unnecessary to print much of it. He begins with an allusion to the blessings we enjoy, touches upon the flourishing condition of our public schools, and then enters upon his favorite topic of Bank-Reform one hour's length of the message was the precise speech I heard him make during the canvass in the summer. He said that every bank in the state had violated its charter, and they were therefore all at the mercy of the Legislature. He touched very happily upon frauds in elections, and t is to be hoped that legislative action will grow out of his recommendation to the effectual suppressing of all such frauds hereafter. He stated the State debt at near 15 millions, and that $2,438,000 would be necessary to complete the public works. He wound up with the usual recommendations of an effective militia system.

Immediately after reading the message, an attempt was made in each house to cut off some of the unlawful perquisites of the State Printer. It seems that by the rules of the two houses, when a paper is laid upon the table, it becomes the duty of the Clerks to send a copy to be printed for each member, and for this printing the State Printer has his fees. In the course of a day or two thousands of extra copies of a Governor's message are ordered to be printed, and although the extra copies are only additional copies worked off the same form of types already set up, yet the printer receives the same fees as though the first form was broken up, the type distributed, and the whole set anew. In other words he is paid twice for a service which he performs but once. The house determined, as I understand by an unanimous vote, to suspend the order to print until the number of copies wanted was ascertained. The Senate adjourned before the question was taken.

The snow which fell on Saturday has nearly disappeared. Columbus seems rather more crowded than is usual the first week of a session—The accommodations are good. Corwin's Inauguration will be some day next week. O. K.

The Bishop of Calcutta has contributed £20,000 from his private fortune to the funds of the society for propagating the Gospel in foreign parts.

General Harrison, was born on the 9th of February 1774—he will be 67 years old in February next.

The electoral vote of Virginia, was cast for Van Buren and Johnson.

Stage to Marietta.—The enterprising proprietor of the line of stages from here to Marietta, has determined to continue the same during the winter, running three times a week. This will be a great accommodation to travellers, for which the proprietor deserves the thanks and patronage of the public. See advertisement.

The official result of the Presidential election in Illinois, gives Van Buren 1939 majority.

Louis Bingham, Jr. of Mississippi, was married a few days since to Miss E. A. Livingston, of Duchess county, N. York. The marriage settlement was $100,000.

Snow fell to the depth of nine inches in this place on Saturday night last. Of course—there was considerable sleighing.

There was a heavy snow storm along the sea board and extended west as far as Frederick, Md. last Saturday—it has caused considerable derangement in the mails.

MR. LANGDON, of the Troy, O. Times, was selected by the Electoral College of Ohio, to be the bearer of the Presidential vote of this state to Washington.

FOR THE OHIO REPUBLICAN.

MR. DARBY.—It will be recollected that Professor W. Darby delivered several lectures to our citizens about a year ago, which embodied a vast mass of statistical facts, relating to the history of the country, and were listened to, with a high degree of interest. Mr. D. has perhaps, devoted more time to the statistics of this country than any man living, and is the author of several valuable works on the subject. He proposes to visit Zanesville about the 20th inst. for the purpose of raising a class. We would suggest that the directors of the Institute enter into an agreemnet with Professor D. so that he may deliver his course of lectures before that body, and such citizens as may subscribe. We doubt not that an agreement of this kind might be entered into, which would prove satisfactory to both parties.

*

FOR THE OHIO REPUBLICAN,

At a meeting of the Physicians of Zanesville, and its vicinity, held Nov. 30th, 1840, Dr. H. SAFFORD, was called to the chair and Dr. Wm KEITH appointed Secretary.

The following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas it has pleased the Almighty to remove from amongst us our late and much esteemed friend and brother practitioner, Dr. DAVID CHAMBERS, therefore,

Resolved, That this dispensation of Divine Providence in taking from us, in the beginning of his usefulness, one, who was an ornament to his profession, and who had endeared himself to society by the urbanity of his manners and his exemplary deportment, is to us a source of deep and unfeigned regret.

Resolved, That in his recent connexion with the Ohio Lunatic Asylum, in the honorable post of assistant physician he had secured a reputation seldom attained by one so young.

Resolved, That we deeply sympathise with his bereaved family in the painful loss which they have sustained by this melancholy event.

Resolved, That as a testimony of respect and regard for the deceased we will wear the usual badge of mourning for 30 days.

Resolved, That Doct. HILDRETH present a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased and that they be published in the papers of the town.

Resolved, That we adjourn to meet at the late residence of the deceased, at the hour appointed for his funeral.

ROBERT SAFFORD, Chair'n.
WM. KEITH, Sec'y.

DOCTRINE AND PRACTICE.—The tendency of a former age was to cherish doctrine and omit practice, that of the present is, to exhort to practice, and sneer at doctrine. One man frames a house and neglects to finish it, another seeing his folly, attempts to construct an edifice of mere ashes and mortar. The former cannot shelter its owner, and the latter falls about the ears pf its occupant.

Baptist Advocate.

American Ostrich.—The Great Western brought down some fine specimens of these large birds, new entirely to us of this region. They are 3 in number, quite tall, nearly 4 feet, and resemble their namesake of the old continent in action and external appearance. A gentleman of Charlanque county has them in charge.

Buffalo Com. Adv.

Important discovery.—The Hartford (Ct.) Congregationalist contains an interesting account of the success of Mr. William Jones of Manchester, Ct., in rearing silk worms, from which it appears that the use of air-stacked lime sprinkled over the shelves and lightly over the worms themselves once in two or three days during the latter part of the feeding produced a very decided and favorable effect. Mr. J. produced FIFTY BUSHELS of cocoons from a single crop of 200,000 worms.

SAILOR'S YARN.—A sailor was once telling of a country where the sun was so hot that the inhabitants used no fire.

"How do they bile their vittles, then?" said an elderly lady.

"Why, you see," said Jack, "a big glass is rigged in the tops of the chimneys which brings the sun in a focus, right into the kettle."

"La me, what a curis world," said the old lady as she replaced her spectacles on her nose.—Syracuse Signal.

Married.

On Tuesday last by the Rev. W. A. Smallwood, Dr. ALFRED CADWALLADER, of Thornville, and Miss EMMA ROSALIE, daughter of the late Dr. D. W. Rhodes, of this place.

AN APPRENTICE WANTED.

THE subscriber wishes to take a boy of 12 or 15 years of age, to learn the TAILORING BUSINESS. One from the country will be preferred. Applicants must come well recommended.

W. BIRKSHIRE.

Main street, Putnam, Ohio,
December 16, 1840. 69

Within the last two years there has been a great and extraordinary curtailment of the banks throughout the Union. This has been forced upon them, to a great extent, by their previous enormous, imprudent and ruinous expansion.—"It is the return of the paper flood to the fountains from which it had issued." Although each State, in its political existence, is sovereign and independent, yet, in a commercial point of view, the States are all one, and operated on alike by the same general causes. The consequence is, that the reduction of the circulation by the banks, for instance, in the State of New York, where a great portion of our produce is shipped for market, has as sensible an influence on the price of our wheat and other staple productions, as a similar reduction by our own banks. And so it may be said, with some modification, of the reduction of the circulation in the other States.

In New York the banks reduced their circulation in one year, ending the first of January, 1840, near nine millions; and in the same time they reduced their discounts between fifteen and sixteen millions. A like reduction took place to a greater or less extent, in all the other States, thus diminishing, suddenly, the circulating medium of the country to an extent unprecedented. In our own state a like reduction has been going on. On the 30th of April, 1839, the circulation of the banks of this State was $8,157,873. On the 30th of September last it was but $3,697,098. Thus showing a reduction in the circulating medium of this State of $4,460,775, within the short space of about seventeen months. This extraordinary curtailment of the circulation of our own, and every other State in the Union, together with the unusual abundance of bread stuffs for the last two years, will sufficiently account for the low price of wheat, which has been the cause of so much complaint. Are not the causes to which I have alluded abundantly sufficient to account for all the reduction that has taken place in the price of every thing, without seeking for others?

Having shown that the scarcity of money is the main cause of the low price of produce and labor, and that the banks are the cause of the scarcity of money, the conclusion follows, that they have been the principal agents in bringing about a reduction of prices.

It is said that the banks have been compelled to curtail their circulation by reason of the acts of the administration of the General Government. If so, what acts can be pointed to as having placed them under such necessity? Not the Independent Treasury bill, as that act did not pass into a law until the fourth of July last, and produce had fallen to its lowest point, and the principal curtailment of the banks had taken place previous to that time. What other act will be pointed to? Surely no other of this Administration. It cannot be seriously claimed that the acts of the late Administration—the veto of the United States Bank, the removal of the deposits, and the specie circular—have suddenly, in 1839-40, many years after they occurred, begun to act on the banks and their interest so as to compel them to curtail their circulation. They had no such effect or influence at the time they took place. The banks, long after these acts at the late Administration, continued to increase in number, and extend their circulation, until, in 1836, when the tide of paper money became so great that it began to roll back upon them.

The charge that those who have been intrusted with the administration of the General Government, have made war on the banks, and that, therefore, they have been compelled to curtail their circulation, is not warranted by the facts. Almost the first act that Congress did, after the present Administration came into power, was to repeal the Specie Circular, which the banks complained of as injurious to their interest. In May, 1837, when the banks closed their vaults, with many millions of the public money, which they were unable to pay, Congress, in accordance with the views of the Executive, allowed them a liberal time to make payment, although the Government was forced to issue Treasury notes to supply the deficiency. So far, therefore, from the Government making war on the banks, or taking any harsh measures towards them, a lenient course was adopted, with the view of aiding them to extricate themselves from difficulties into which they had become involved by their mismanagement. There has been nothing, therefore, in the action of the late or present Administration, to justify the banks in the extraordinary curtailment of their circulation.

The charge that the scarcity of money, and consequent low price of produce, has been caused by the Legislative action of the two last sessions of our General Assembly, is equally unfounded. It would be a sufficient answer to this charge, to refer to the diminution of the currency, and the fall in the price of produce, in every other State in the Union. What has caused the scarcity of money and low price of produce in the States of New York, Pennsylvania, Kentucky, Indiana, and, I might add, in every other State? It has been, undoubtedly, owing to the general cause, which has acted alike on all, and produced the same effects and consequences every where. I am aware that many of the banks, actuated by motives which we are left to conjecture, have curtailed their circulation to a much greater extent than was imposed on them by any actual necessity.

What are the acts of which the banks complain, and which they may call on you at this session to repeal? The first is the act to prohibit the banks from issuing, or putting in circulation, notes under the denomination of five dollars. Is there any necessity for repealing this law?—Has it come to this, that the banks are unable to do business, profitably, unless they are permitted to issue small notes? I admit that small notes are the most profitable issues a bank can make. By putting them in circulation at a distant point, many of them are worn out or destroyed, and never returned to the bank for redemption. This is so much clear profit to the bank, and is estimated by experienced bankers to be worth 15 per ct. But what the bank makes in this way is as much of a dead loss to the public. On a small note circulation of two millions, the banks would make, by the loss and destruction of their notes, fifteen per cent., or three hundred thousand dollars. This would be taken from the community without any consideration, and would be unjust and inequitable; and when the issuing of small notes is resorted to with the view of obtaining this profit, it is a gross fraud on the public. The very reason, therefore, that may make it desirable to the banks to exercise this power, ought to be a conclusive one for not permitting them to do so. There is no necessity for permitting the banks to put in circulation their small bills, and thus drive out of circulation everything in the shape of coin, leaving the public nothing but a paper currency.

The second act complained of is the one that prohibits the establishment within in this State of any branch, office, or agency of the United States' Bank of Pennsylvania, or any other bank or corporation incorporated by the laws of any other State. This act was obviously proper, and demanded by public policy. It certainly cannot be claimed that, because the Legislature has prohibited foreign banks from locating branches here, such prohibition has been injurious to the banks of this State. So far from this being the case, it was intended to protect them from the injurious competition of doubtful institutions over which the Legislature had no control, and the people from a spurious and worthless currency.

The third act objected to, prohibits the banks from issuing bank paper made payable at any other place than where issued, or payable at a future day, or at any other time than on demand, or which is made payable in bank notes, or any thing other than gold or silver; and it makes all notes, which, on their face are made payable at a future day, payable on demand. Is there any thing in this act which imposes on the banks improper restrictions? Is it not right and proper, in order to preserve a sound currency, to prohibit the banks from flooding the country with their post notes, payable at a distant day, or notes payable at some obscure place, or in a worthless currency.

The fourth act, and the one of which the banks have complained the most, is generally known as the Bank Commissioner law. These four acts comprise all the principal legislation of the two last sessions, with the view of reforming the banks and the currency. The last named act provides, among other things, for the appointment of three Bank Commissioners, whose duty it shall be, at least once in every year, to examine thoroughly every banking institution in the state, and oftener, if necessary to the public safety, and to examine the officers of such institutions under oath, as to their affairs. It requires the officers of each banking institution to publish a monthly statement, showing the true situation and condition of the bank. It provides, further, for instituting judicial proceedings against any bank that shall refuse to redeem its notes in gold and silver for more than thirty days in one year, and points out the mode of closing a bank that has become insolvent, and of securing the assets of such institution for the payment of its debts. All these provisions are intended for the security of the public against the insolvency of banks, and they are such as no bank ought to object to. What objections can an honest bank, or one in a sound condition, have to an examination of its affairs by an officer of State? What objections can the banks have to publishing to the world a true statement of their condition, so that the public may see and know whether they are worthy of confidence or not? If they have conducted their affairs prudently, and are in a sound and solvent situation, they ought to desire an opportunity of spreading before the world their true condition. It would give them credit, increase public confidence, and promote their interest. It is only when they have been engaged in illegitimate banking, have violated their charters, or are in an unsafe and insolvent condition, that they should object to an examination, or refuse to publish to the world a true statement of their affairs. Any bank that would refuse to comply with these provisions of the Bank Commissioner law, furnishes just ground to suspect its solvency, and its integrity as a public institution. Its payment should at once be prohibited at the Treasury, or in payment of public dues.

Previous to the passage of this law, the public had no means of knowing whether a bank was worthy of credit or not, until it openly proclaimed its insolvency, and then, in most cases, it was too late to secure any of its assets for the payment of its debts. The whole operations of our banks were to the public as a sealed letter, until the means were provided in this act to enable the public to know and judge of their true condition. It is a law for the benefit of the people, and no way prejudicial to honest banking.

This act further provides, that the actual circulation of the notes of any banking institution, shall not exceed three times the amount of specie, exclusive of deposites, in its vaults, and actually belonging to such bank; and in case of excess the directors, under whose administration it may happen, shall be liable for the same in their individual capacities. The policy and absolute necessity of this provision, will be made manifest by reference to the report of the Auditor of State, showing the condition of the banks in May, 1837, from which it will appear that in many of the banks the amount of specie bore no reasonable proportion to the amount of paper in circulation. For instance, the Western Reserve Bank had seven dollars of paper in circulation for one of specie in its vaults; the Mount Pleasant Bank had six and a half to one; the Bank of Circleville had ten to one; the Urbana Bank had nine to one; the Bank of Massillon had over thirteen to one; and the Canton Bank had twenty-three to one. The consequence to this latter bank is too well known to be mentioned here. In order to prevent this dangerous disproportion between the circulation and specie of the banks, the above provision was incorporated into the Bank Commissioner Law. With regular bankers, both in this country and England, it has always been considered unsafe to extend the circulation beyond three dollars in paper to one of specie, and the Legislature only adopted the proportion which had been fixed on as safe and proper by legitimate and experienced bankers. But what is the penalty inflicted by this law on banks, that may extend their circulation beyond three dollars of paper to one of specie? Not that they shall be liable to be closed up by the bank commissioners, or prevented from continuing their business. A violation of this provision of the act by a bank, gives the commissioners no additional control over it. The only penalty which the law imposes, is, that the directors, under whose administration more than three dollars of paper to one of specie has been put in circulation, are made liable for the excess in their individual capacity. A penalty which bankers, intending to redeem their paper, would not consider as presenting any very serious obstacle to an extension of their circulation.

That the banks were compelled to curtail their circulation to a considerable extent, owing to the embarrassments which their imprudent expansions had brought on the country, and the unsafe limits to which they had extended their circulation, is undoubtedly true. But a number of the banks of this State have contracted their circulation much below any actual necessity. The excuse which has been offered to the public is the above provision of the Bank Commissioner law. A reference to their condition, as exhibited in the last quarterly statement of September 30th, 1840, will show how far this excuse will avail them. Take, for instance, the Franklin Bank at Columbus, the Bank of Chillicothe, Belmont Bank of St. Clairsville, Franklin Bank of Cincinnati, Bank of Dayton, and the Farmers' and Mechanics' Bank of Steubenville, all located at important agricultural and commercial points, where their contraction would be more sensibly felt by the public than at any other points in the State. These six institutions have an aggregate capital of $2,608,835.—Their circulation was $289,487, and their specie $462,423; thus showing the excess of specie over their entire paper circulation of $172,936. They might have put in circulation $1,387,262 of their own notes, instead of $289,487, and still have been within the provisions of the Bank Commissioner law. Many of the banks might have greatly increased their circulation, and still have been within its provisions; while some have had a circulation beyond three dollars of paper to one of specie. It will appear, therefore, from this data, that it is not the provisions of the Bank Commissioner law that have compelled the Banks of this State to reduce their circulation. They appear to have paid no regard in this particular to its provisions. Some have gone beyond, while others have fallen far below, the proportion prescribed by this law as proper between their circulation and specie. Why a number of the banks have reduced their circulation greatly below their specie, while others have shipped their specie out of the State, and sold it in the eastern cities at a premium, are subjects worthy your investigation. When banking institutions, that are always created for the supposed public good, cease to be so, or if they so act as to oppress the community they were intended to benefit, from political or other considerations they should at once, for the like considerations that induced their creation, be stricken out of existence. All these institutions, it is believed, have, in some shape or other, violated their charters, and hold them now at will of the Legislature. You will have no difficulty therefore, it is presumed, in adopting such proceedings against any banking institution in the State that you may deem no longer worthy of public confidence, as will cause its discontinuance.

All corporations ought to be made to know they are subjects of the law; that they are created for the public good, and are amenable to the people. The legislature has made ample provisions, in the various enactments to which I have alluded, to protect the public against a spurious currency and the frauds of banks.

What would be the effect and consequences, if you would repeal these laws? You would thereby permit the banks to issue their small notes; allow foreign institutions, not amenable to our laws, & of questionable integrity, to locate branches in this State, and fill the country with a worthless currency. You would virtually give a license to the banks, to flood the country with their post notes, payable at a distant day, and notes payable at remote and obscure points, and in currency, or something other than in gold and silver. You would permit the banks to shut their doors on the people, conduct their business in secret, and deny to the public all means of knowing whether they are worthy of being trusted or not. You would permit institutions, about to become insolvent, to keep their true condition from the world, until they had made way with their assets; and when they shall have proclaimed their insolvency, you will leave the public without any adequate remedy against them. And you would allow the banks, as in 1837, to extend their circulation, without having any reference to the amount of their specie. These are the objects which would be obtained, and the consequence which would result, to the public, by the repeal of the laws which have been passed by the two last legislatures, for the reformation of the banks, and the improvement of the currency.

A strict and rigid enforcement of the laws, now in existence, would go far to remedy existing evils. Many of the banks have disregarded all law, and seem to claim the right of acting as sovereign and independent powers. They have disregarded the law against the issuing of post notes, evaded that passed against small bills, trampled with impunity on the act creating the Board of Bank Commissioners, and closed their doors against officers appointed by the legislature to examine their condition. In short, they have placed themselves above the law, deranged and vitiated the currency, and now deride the efforts of the legislature to reform existing abuses. It is in vain to pass salutary laws for the reformation of the banks, and the improvement of the currency, if they are permitted to trample on them with impunity, and point to the consequences of their own violation of law, and total disregard of all existing legal enactments, as an argument to prove the utter futility of all attempts at reform. It is for you, who are the guardians, for the time being, of the public interest, to make suitable provisions for the enforcement of the existing laws against the moneyed corporations of the State. The whole subject is one of great importance, and in which the people have a vital interest, and I commend it to your careful and special considerations.

Your attention is respectfully called to the propriety of a reorganization of our election laws, with a view to render them more intelligible The present statute is construed differently in different parts of the State not only with regard to what constitutes an elector, but as to his right to vote in other counties or districts than those in which he actually resides. All obscurity should be obviated, in order that an uniform construction might prevail throughout the State.

The penalties attached to fraudulent voting, or to an improper or corrupt exercise of power on the part of the trustees and clerks of elections are deemed insufficient. In the recent elections, it is strongly apprehended, that the sanctity of the ballot-box has been disregarded, to a considerable extent; that individuals have voted from other States, having no right to vote, while others have voted in different counties and in several townships, on the same day. It is believed that judges of elections, in some instances, have not been sufficiently careful in the discharge of their official duties, and have permitted persons to vote, when under the law they should have been excluded. No party excitements can palliate a violation of the sanctity of the ballot-box. No excuse can be offered for double voting, or giving or receiving illegal votes, knowing them to be such. It is an assault on the sovereign power of the people, an attempt to break down the majority, and place the minority in power by fraud, and, if successful, is as completely an usurpation of this Government by the minority, as though they had displaced from office those legally elected, at the point of the bayonet. It is moral treason against the State, and those who are guilty deserve severe and exemplary punishment.

One of the fundamental principles of our Government is, that the will of the majority shall rule, when legally and constitutionally expressed; and it is the duty of every good citizen to submit to that will. Fraudulent and illegal voting are designed to destroy this principle, and substitute the will of the minority for that of the majority. The right of suffrage is one of which every American citizen is justly proud.—But this is of no importance, if the power it confers is to be destroyed by the fraudulent votes of others. In what do the citizens of this country differ from the subjects and despots of the old world? Mainly in the fact that they possess the right of suffrage, and the right to keep and bear arms, which principally distinguishes the freeman from the slave. It is by means of this right that the people govern; that they legislate for themselves, and execute the laws when made, through agents of their own choice. Take this right from us, and we are no longer free. Preserve it from fraud and corruption, and we never can be slaves.

It is a matter of vital importance to preserve the confidence of the people in the ballot box. This cannot be done while men are permitted, with impunity, to pass from State to State, from county to county, and township to township, to destroy the will of the majority, by illegal and fraudulent votes. The evil is not confined merely to our own State. In various sections of the Union, developements have recently been made of frauds, in different shapes, at the ballot boxes, of the most astounding and startling character. The fraudulent voting complained of in this State, appears to be but a part of a great system, that would seem to have been deliberately planned and executed with the view of obtaining political power. The evil appears to be wide-spread, and of growing magnitude, and demands prompt legislative action in order to arrest it. The majority of all parties are doubtless honest, patriotic and virtuous, and desire to see the integrity of the ballot box preserved. The true interest of all, and the safety and harmony of the Union, and the people, require this to be done. When the purity of the ballot-box shall be habitually disregarded, there will be an end to civil liberty; and it requires but little foresight to anticipate the consequences. We know they cannot be favorable to the happiness, harmony and prosperity of our country. The extent of the evil complained of may be overrated, while on the other hand, it may not be comprehended. It is enough to know that the ground of complaint is well founded to a certain extent, at least, and that the evil is of sufficient magnitude to excite the fears of a large portion of our fellow citizens, to justify you in taking up the subject, and giving it your careful consideration, with the view of providing, by suitable legislative enactments, against the abuses complained of. I would therefore recommend a careful revision of the law regulating elections; that it be made a penitentiary offence for any person to vote more than once at the same election, or for any person to come within this state and vote, knowing that he had no right so to do; that it be made highly penal for any judge of an election to knowingly receive any illegal vote, or for any person to offer to vote after having voted at the same election; or to vote or offer to vote in any other congressional or legislative district other than the one in which he resides. These provisions, with others which will naturally suggest themselves to your consideration, would throw around the ballot box such additional checks and guards as would at least add greatly to its security, and preserve its purity unsuspected.

The following statement, from the Auditor's books, will show the present amount of the State debt on which interest is paid, and the amount on which no interest is payable; and the sum that will be required to complete the public works now under contract, as estimated by the acting commissioners. It also exhibits the condition of the State Treasury, and the different funds of the State.

The total amount of the public debt is,	$14,809,477 14 0
The amount due Turnpike Companies on which no interest is payable,	1,084,721 16 0
Aamonnt subject to interest,	13,724,755 98 0
The amount that will be required to complete the public works is estimated by the acting commissioners, at	2,438,000 00 0
The total amount of revenue this year is		306,498 20 2
The amount of bills redeemed at the Treasury	222,407 73
Transferred to Canal and State Common School Fund,	72,683 20 9	295,090 93
Balance in Treasury,		11,407 34 3
The amount of State Common School Fund subject to distribution is,		200,000 00 0
Virginia Military School Fund,		19,263 08 0
U. States Military School Fund,		7,065 80 0
Section sixteen interest,		50,351 58 7
Connecticut W. Reserve Fund;		9,519 54 0
Total School Fund,		286,200 01 5
The receipts from the National road have been		51,442 94 0
The payments on the same		51,382 62 0
Balance in Treasury,		60 32 0

The amount of tolls, fines, and water rents on the several public works, after deducting repairs, superintendence, and awards of damages, is as follows:

Ohio Canal,	$288,212 00 0
Miami Canal,	40,973 56 0
Miami Canal Extension,	4,454 50 0
Hocking Valley Canal,	1,898 14 0
Muskingum Improvement	1,687 69 0
Turnpike Dividends	16,555 92 0
Total,	354,781 82 0

The Hocking Valley Canal and Muskingum Improvement have been in operation but a few months. The Warren county Canal has not paid costs of collection and contingencies. The increase of tolls received from our public works this, over last year, is twenty-one thousand two hundred and sixty-nine dollars.

Our public works have progressed during this year, with a rapidity and success fully equal to our expectations. The embarrassments which were anticipated in the spring as likely to result from the difficulty in obtaining money to meet our engagements on the public works, have not been experienced, except to a limited extent.

Since the opening of the Ohio Canal for navigation in the spring, very little interruption has been experienced. Notwithstanding the very great deficiency in the imports, which ought not to be a matter of regret, the exports have so much increased that the revenue derived from tolls has far exceeded the most sanguine expectations.

The limited appropriation of last winter, prevented the completion of the Walhonding Canal this season; but should a small appropriation be made during the present session, this work can be completed early next summer.

The Hocking Valley Canal is so far completed as to permit the opening of navigation to Nelsonville, about fifteen miles above the town of Athens, the point of termination. Boats, laden with coal, salt, and other products of the valley, have passed through this Canal to different ports on the Ohio Canal. Of the remaining fifteen miles of this line, one-fourth of the work is done.

The Muskingum Improvement is so far completed, that flat boats are enabled to pass from the pool of the dam above McConnelsville to the Ohio river, and from Taylorsville to the Ohio Canal at Dresden. Should future payments be promptly made to the contractors, this improvement can be completed early the ensuing summer.

One half the whole length of the Wabash and Erie Canal, in detached portions, has been completed; and it is confidently expected that the whole line of this improvement will be finished by the first of November, 1841. During the month of September last, the water was let into an eighteen mile level, between the head of the Rapids and Maumee city, on which portion of the Canal boats are now running.

Fifteen miles of the Western Reserve and Maumee road west of Portage river are completed; and a seventeen inch course of metal has been put on ten miles of the road east of Portage river, leaving but five miles between Lower Sandusky and Perrysburgh not covered with stone.

The Miami canal has done a more profitable business this year than any former one—the nett profits arising from the tolls exceeding six per cent. on the total cost of construction.

The Miami canal extension has all heretofore been put under contract, except 33 miles at the northern end, which is easy of construction, and will cost less, in proportion, than any other part of the work. To complete the whole line will require an additional appropriation of about one million of dollars.

The National road is in good repair, and much improved since last year. The amount received from tolls is less than it was last year by $11,053 16. This is not owing to the diminution of the travel on the road, but a reduction of the tolls which was much demanded by the public.

The report of the Board of Public Works will give you a more detailed and satisfactory statement of the condition of our Public Works, than the limits of this communication will allow me to do.

There are about 75 pupils in the Deaf and Dumb Asylum at this time, being a small increase over last year. The institution is moving forward steadily and successfully in accomplishing the high object for which it was established—that of bestowing moral and intellectual culture on that portion of our community who, by the mysterious dispensations of Providence, are deprived of the advantages which others enjoy, and whose minds cannot be reached by the ordinary methods of instruction.

The Institution for the instruction of the Blind is in a flourishing condition, in all its departments. The number of pupils is thirty-two, being an increase of thirteen since the last annual report. Their improvement in the various studies and mechanical branches that are taught in the institution has been highly satisfactory, and gives the most gratifying evidence of the practicability of instructing the blind, and of the benevolence of the legislature.

In the Lunatic Asylum, one hundred and one insane persons have been admitted during the past year, and fifty-three have been restored to the use of their reason and discharged, to enjoy the privileges and blessings of society. The Asylum is now full, and a number of applications pending from different counties in the State for admittance. Upwards of twenty pressing applications have been received from surrounding States, which were rejected for the want of room—not being able to accommodate all our own citizens who are laboring under this fearful disease. The inability of the institution to accommodate all who require the medical and moral care which can only be conferred in a well regulated public institution, is a source of regret.—The number, however, that have been restored to their health and reason, and the melioration of the condition of others, cannot fail to be highly gratifying to the public, as furnishing the best evidence of the usefulness of the institution, and the blessings it is destined to confer on an unfortunate class of our citizens in time to come.

The condition of the Ohio Penitentiary is favorable as could be desired. The present faithful Warden is entitled to great credit for his ability and attention in superintending the institution. Under his care and management its fiscal affairs are in a more prosperous condition than they ever have been. The total receipts the last year, ending November 30, will be, say 44,000 dollars. Total cash payments 27,000 dollars; leaving a nett balance of 17,000 dollars. The whole amount of the earnings of the institution will be 52,000 dollars; from which deduct the expenditures for general support, and there will be a balance of 25,000 dollars over the expenses. The number of convicts confined in the Penitentiary on the 30th of November last, was four hundred and eighty-eight. The general health of the prison has been unusually good the past year, having lost but four by death. This favorable result has been owing, in a great degree, to the skill and strict attention of the Physician having charge of this institution.

In pursuance to the act entitled "An act relating to the management and sale of certain Canal Lands of the State of Ohio," passed March 19, 1838, I appointed in April last, John A. Bryan, Esq. special agent to proceed to Washington city, in order to procure from the proper authorities, a final decision in relation to the claims of this State, for an additional quantity of land under the several grants made by the general government to the State of Ohio for canal purposes. The report of the special agent, which is herewith transmitted, and to which I invite your special attention, will give a full and satisfactory statement as to the character of the claim of Ohio, and the decision of the law officer of the government on the same. I am happy to be able to state, that the opinion of the Attorney General of the United States sustains the legal claim of Ohio, in particular; and that under his decision will obtain an additional quantity of under the Wabash and Erie Canal grant of not far short of fifty thousand acres.

I would respectfully call your attention to the subject of our canal lands, and commend that some system be adopted for their sale. The quality of the lands renders them an object worthy consideration in various points of view. The aggregate quantity of Miami canal land now owned by the State is 185,000 acres; and of the Wabash and Erie canal land, including the amount obtained under the above decision of the Attorney General, is 243,553 acres; making the entire quantity of canal land now owned by the State, 379,552 acres. This large quantity of land not being subject to entry or purchase by actual settlers, is calculated to retard the improvement of the rich and fertile region of country which it is situated. I would suggest the policy of putting in market at least each alternate quarter or half quarter section. In this way you would encourage the settlement and improvement of the country, add to its health and resources, and at the same time double its value, at an early period, of the remaining lands owned by the State.

This measure would seem to me to be dictated by justice towards the actual settlers in the sections of country where our canal lands are situated, as well as the pecuniary interests of the State.

In obedience to a resolution of the 2d of March last, I appointed John Brough, Esq. a special agent for the purpose of procuring a settlement, at the treasury of the United States, of our three per cent fund. The very satisfactory report of the special agent, which is herewith transmitted, and to which I would invite your attention, will give all the information on this subject that you may desire.

The collated laws, ordered by the general assembly, at their last session to be printed, will not be published as soon as was expected, owing partly to unavoidable delay in procuring paper, and partly to the nature of the work. As soon as the paper was received, in the latter part of the month of July last, a power press was procured expressly for the purpose of three or four hand-presses were put up, the work, and about five hundred pages have been printed. All reasonable efforts have been made to hasten the publication, consistent with a careful revision of the sheets, and proper attention to the press work. Thus far, the typographical execution is highly creditable to the officer engaged in the publication.

The old penitentiary has been fitted up under the supervision of the quartermaster general, as an arsenal. The public arms are now deposited in it, and consist of the following military stores: 3,45[illegible] muskets, 2,980 sets of equipments, 1,9[illegible] rifles and accoutrements, 130 carbines and equipments, and eight new iron cannon and six old ones. All the above public arms were received during last spring and fall, except the cannon, sabres, pistols, and carbines, which were received in 1808—'9, and are now for distribution under the law. The quartermaster general has not been furnished with correct and full reports from all the divisions, so as to enable him to make that equitable appointment contemplated by the law.

In my last annual message, I took occasion to call the attention of the General Assembly to the subject of reorganizing the Militia Law of this State, and ventured to suggest some defects in the present Military system, which in my judgment, should be remedied; to which I would beg leave to refer you for my views on this subject.

It is admitted by all, that our present militia system is greatly defective, and has entirely failed to secure the great object in view—a well organized militia. We cannot flatter ourselves that we will always be exempt from the calamities of war. Nor should we forget that our main reliance, in the hour of danger, must be on the militia; and that in peace we should prepare for war. I hope that this subject will receive your careful consideration, and that a system will be adopted, that will render our militia more effective and better able to defend our country and her institutions against the assaults of a foreign or domestic foe.

WILSON SHANNON.

December 8, 1840.

Accident.—On Monday afternoon last Mr. Shields, living west of the river, on Mr. Bostwick's farm, met with a sad accident, from the accidental discharge of his fowling piece—it lacerating one side of his face in such a manner as to render his situation very critical.

THE WESTERN RECORDER.

INGER, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.
DOLLARS PER ANNUM IN ADVANCE.

Vol. 2.--No. 18. ZANESVILLE, OHIO, WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 23, 1840. Whole No. 70.

JOHN W. WHITE, PRINTER.
$2.50, IN THREE MONTHS; $3, END OF YEAR

FIRST CONGRESS—FIRST SESSION.

nday Mail Report.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, March 4, 1830.

ion, of Kentucky, from the Committee Offices and Post Roads, to whom the als were referred for prohibiting the rtation of the mails, and the opening Offices on Sundays, made the following e memorialists regard the first day of as a day set apart by the Creator for exercises, and consider the transporta- e mail, and the opening of the post of- tat day, the violation of a religious du- all for a suppression of the practice.— counter memorials, are known to en- different sentiment, believing that no of the week is holier than another.— olding the universality and immutabil- Jewish decalogue, believe in the sanc- e seventh day of the week as a day of levotion; and by their memorial now committee, they also request that it apart for religious purposes. Each has been left to the exercise of his own and it has been regarded as the proper of Government to protect all, and de- r none. But the attempt is now made about a greater uniformity, at least in and, as argument has failed, the Gov- been called upon to interpose its au- settle the controversy.

is acts under a constitution of delega- mited powers. The committee look in hat instrument for a delegation of pow- izing this body to inquire and determine of time, or whether any, has been set the Almighty for religious exercises. ontrary, among the few prohibitions ontains, is one that prohibits a religious another, which declares that Congress no law respecting an establishment of r prohibiting the free exercise thereof. hittee might here rest the argument up- und that the question referred to them, come within the cognizance of Con- the perseverance and zeal with which rialists pursue their object, seems to re- rther elucidation of the subject. And, osers of Sunday mails disclaim all in- unite Church and State. the committee feel disposed to impugn their motives; ever may be advanced in opposition to re, will arise from the fears entertained l tendency to the peace and happiness ion. The catastrophe of other nations the framers of the constitution a bea- wful warning, and they evinced the ossible care in guarding against the

, as it now exists, makes no distinction days of the week, but is imperative postmasters shall attend at all reason- , in every day to perform the duties of es: and the Postmaster General has instructions to all postmasters, that, at s, where the mail arrives on Sunday, is to be kept open one hour, or more, af- rrival and assorting the mail; but in would interfere with the hours of pub- , the office is to be kept open for one the usual time of dissolving the meet- s liberal construction of the law does y the memorialists. But the committee that there is no just ground of com- less it be conceded that they have a g power over the consciences of others. ss shall, by the authority of law, sanc- measure recommended, it would con- legislative decision of a religious con- in which even christians, themselves, ue. However suited such a decision an ecclesiastical council, it is incom- with a republican legislature, which is political, and not religious purposes. individual character, we all entertain and pursue a corresponding practice subject of religion. However diversi- may be, we all harmonize as citizens, h is willing that the other shall enjoy liberty which he claims for himself.— r representative character, our individ- cter is lost. The individual acts for he representative for his constituents. sen to represent their political, and not views—to guard the rights of man; not t the rights of conscience. Despots d their subjects as their property, and Divine prerogative of prescribing their faith. But the history of the world the melancholy demonstration, that the n of one man to coerce the religious another, springs from an unchastened rather than a sincere devotion to any

The principles of our Government do nize in the majority, any authority minority, except in matters which re- conduct of man to his fellow man. A onarch, by grasping the holy censer, lost sceptre and his freedom; a destiny as e envied, may be the lot of the Ameri- e, who hold the sovereignty of power, if he person of their representatives, shall o unite, in the remotest degree, Church e.

the earliest period of time, religious have attained great ascendency over the the people; and in every nation, an- modern, whether Pagan, Mahomedan, or , have succeeded in the incorporation religious tenets with the political insti- f their country. The Persian idols, the oracles, the Roman auguries, and the priesthood of Europe, have all, in their n the subject of popular adulation, and ts of political despotism. If the mea- mmended should be adopted, it would be or human sagacity to forsee how rapid e the succession, or how numerous the measures which might follow, involving st rights of all—the rights of conscience. haps fortunate for the country, that the on should have been made at this early hile the spirit of the Revolution yet full vigor. Religious zeal enlists the prejudices of the human mind; and, directed, excites the worst passions of re, under the delusive pretext of doing ice. Nothing so infuriates the heart to rapine and blood; nothing is so inces- ts toils; so persevering in its determina- appalling in its course; or so danger- s consequences. The equality of rights y the constitution, may bid defiance to itical tyrants; but the robe of sanctity glitters to deceive. The constitution e conscience of the Jew as sacred as he christian; and gives no more author- opt a measure affecting the conscience itary individual, than that of a whole ty. That representative who would his principle, would lose his delegated , and forfeit the confidence of his con- . If Congress shall declare the first day eek holy, it will not convince the Jew Sabbatarian. It will dissatisfy both; sequently, convert neither. Human torts vain sacrifices; but Deity alone can l the affections of the heart. It must cted, that in the earlier settlement of this country, the spirit of persecution which drove the pilgrims from their native homes, was brought with them to their new habitations; and that some christians were scourged, and others put to death, for no other crime than dissenting from the dogmas of their rulers.

With these facts before us, it must be a subject of deep regret, that a question should be brought before Congress, which involves the dearest privileges of the constitution, and even by those who enjoy its choicest blessings. We should all recollect that Cataline, a professed patriot, was a traitor to Rome; Arnold, a professed whig, was a traitor to America; and Judas, a professed disciple, was a traitor to his Divine Master.

With the exception of the United States, the whole human race, consisting, it is supposed, of eight hundred millions of rational beings, is in religious bondage; and, in reviewing the scenes of persecution which history every where presents, unless the committee could believe that the cries of the burning victim, and the flames by which he is consumed, bear to heaven a grateful incense, the conclusion is inevitable, that the line cannot be too strongly drawn between Church and State. If a solemn act of legislation shall, in one point define the law of God, or point out to the citizen one religious duty, it may, with equal propriety, proceed to define every part of divine revelation; and enforce every religious obligation, even to the forms and ceremonies of worship; the endowment of the church, and the support of the clergy

It was with a kiss that Judas betrayed his Divine Master, and we should all be admonished, —no matter what our faith may be—that the rights of conscience, cannot be so successfully assailed as under the pretext of holiness. The christian religion made its way into the world in opposition to all human Governments. Banishment, tortures, and death, were inflicted in vain to stop its progress. But many of its professors, as soon as clothed with political power, lost the meek spirit which their creed inculcated, and began to inflict on other religious, and on dissenting sects of their own religion, persecutions more aggravated than those which their own apostles had endured. The ten persecutions of Pagan Emperors, were exceeded in atrocity by the massacres and murders perpetrated by christian hands; and in vain shall we examine the records of Imperial tyranny for an engine of cruelty equal to the Holy Inquisition. Every religious sect, however meek in its origin, commenced the work of persecution as soon as it acquired political power. The framers of the constitution recognized the eternal principle, that man's relation with his God is above human legislation, and his rights of conscience inalienable. Reasoning was not necessary to establish this truth: we are conscious of it in our own bosoms. It is this consciousness which, in defiance of human laws, has sustained so many martyrs in tortures and in flames. They FELT that their duty to God was superior to human enactments, and that man could exercise no authority over their consciences; it is an inborn principle which nothing can eradicate.

The bigot, in the pride of his authority, may lose sight of it—but strip him of his power; prescribe a faith to him which his conscience rejects; threaten him in turn with the dungeon and the faggot; and the spirit which God has implanted in him, rises up in rebellion and defies you. Did the primitive christians ask that Government should recognize and observe their religious institutions? All they asked was toleration; all they complained of, was persecution. What did the Protestants of Germany, or the Hugenots of France ask of their Catholic superiors? Toleration. What do the persecuted Catholics of Ireland ask of their oppressors? Toleration.

Do not all men in this country enjoy every religious right which martyrs, and saints ever asked? Whence, then, the voice of complaint? Who is it, that, in the full enjoyment of every principle which human laws can secure, wishes to arrest a portion of these principles from his neighbor? Do the petitioners allege that they cannot conscientiously participate in the profits of the mail contracts and post offices, because the mail is carried on Sunday? If this be their motive, then it is worldly gain which stimulates to action, and not virtue or religion. Do they complain that men, less conscientious in relation to the Sabbath, obtain advantages over them, by receiving their letters and attending to their contents? Still their motive is worldly and selfish. But, if their motive be to induce Congress to sanction, by law, their religious opinions and observances, then their efforts are to be restrained, as in their tendency fatal, both to religious and political freedom. Why have the petitioners confined their prayers to the mails? Why have they not requested that the Government be required to suspend all its executive functions on that day? Why do they not require us to enact that our ships shall not sail? that our armies shall not march? that officers of justice shall not seize the suspected, or guard the convicted? They seem to forget that government is as necessary on Sunday as on any other day of the week. The spirit of evil does not rest on that day. It is the Government, ever active in its functions, which enables us all, even the petitioners, to worship in our churches in peace. Our Government furnishes very few blessings like our mails. They bear from the centre of our Republic to its distant extremes, the acts of our legislative bodies, the decisions of the judiciary, and the orders of the Executive. Their speed is often essential to the defence of the country, the suppression of crime, and the dearest interests of the people. Were they suppressed one day of the week, their absence must be often supplied by public expresses; and, besides, while the mail bags might rest, the mail coaches would pursue their journey with the passengers. The mail bears, from one extreme of the Union to the other, letters of relatives and friends, preserving a communion of heart between those far separated, and increasing the most pure and refined pleasures of our existence: also, the letters of commercial men convey the state of the markets, preventing ruinous speculations, and promote general, as well as individual interest; they bear innumerable religious letters, newspapers, magazines and tracts, which reach almost every house throughout this wide Republic. Is the conveyance of these a violation of the Sabbath? The advance of the human race in intelligence, in virtue, and religion itself, depends in part upon the speed with which a knowledge of the past is disseminated. Without an interchange between one country and another, and between different sections of the same country, every improvement in moral or political science, and the arts of life, would be confined to the neighborhood where it originated. The more rapid and the more frequent this interchange, the more rapid will be the march of intellect, and the progress of improvement. The mail is the chief means by which intellectual light irradiates to the extremes of the Republic.— Stop it one day in seven, and you retard one-seventh the advancement of our country. So far from stopping the mail on Sunday, the committee would recommend the use of all reasonable means to give it a greater expedition and a greater extension. What would be the elevation of our country, if every new conception could be made to strike every mind in the Union at the same time? It is not the distance of a Province or State from the seat of Government, which endangers its separation; but it is the difficulty and unfrequency of intercourse between them.— Our mails reach Missouri and Arkansas in less time than they reached Kentucky and Ohio in the infancy of their settlements; and now, when there are three millions of people extending a thousand miles west of the Allegheny, we hear less of discontent, than when there were a few thousands scattered along their western base.

To stop the mails one day in seven would be to thurst the whole western country, and other distant parts of this Republic, one day's journey from the seat of government. But, were it expedient to put an end to the transmission of letters and newspapers on Sunday, because it violates the law of God, have not the petitioners begun wrong in their efforts? If the arm of government be necessary to compel men to respect and obey the laws of God, do not the State Governments possess infinitely more power in this respect? Let the petitioners turn to them, and see if they can induce the passage of laws to respect the observance of the Sabbath: for, if it be sinful for the mail to carry letters on Sunday, it must be equally sinful for individuals to write, carry, receive, or read them. It would seem to require that these acts, should be made penal, to complete the system. Travelling on business or recreating, except to and from church; all printing, carrying, receiving and reading of newspapers—all conversations and social intercourse, except upon religious subjects, must necessarily be punished, to suppress the evil. Would it not also follow, as an inevitable consequence, that every man, woman, and child, should be compelled to attend meeting? and, as only one sect, in the opinion of some, can be deemed orthodox, must it not be determined, by law, which that is, and compel all to hear those teachers, and contribute to their support? If minor punishments would not restrain the Jew, or the Sabbatarian, or the Infidel, who believes Saturday to be the Sabbath, or disbelieves the whole, would not the same system require that we should resort to imprisonment, banishment, the rack, and the faggot, to force men to violate their own consciences, or compel them to listen to doctrines which they abhor? When the State Governments shall have yielded to those measures, it will be time enough for Congress to declare that the rattling of the mail coach shall no longer break the silence of this despotism. It is the duty of this Government to afford to all—Jew or Gentile, Pagan or Christian, the protection and the advantages of our benignant institutions, on Sunday, as well as every day of the week. Although this Government will not convert itself into an ecclesiastical tribunal, it will practice upon the maxim laid down by the founder of Christianity —that it is lawful to do good on the Sabbath day. If the Almighty has set apart the first day of the week as a time which man is bound to keep holy, and devote exclusively to His worship, would it not be more congenial to the precepts of Christians, to appeal exclusively to the Great Lawgiver of the Universe to aid them in making men better—in correcting their practices by purifying their hearts? Government will protect them in their efforts. When they shall have so instructed the public mind, and awakened the consciences of individuals, as to make them believe that it is a violation of God's law to carry the mail, open post offices, or receive letters, on Sunday, the evil of which they complain will cease of itself, without any exertion of the strong arm of civil power. When man undertakes to be God's avenger, he becomes a demon. Driven by the frenzy of a religious zeal, he loses every gentle feeling; forgets the most sacred precepts of his creed; and becomes ferocious and unrelenting.

Our fathers did not wait, to be oppressed, when the mother country asserted and exercised an unconstitutional power over them. To have acquiesced in the tax of three pence upon a pound of tea, would have led the way to the most cruel exactions; they took a bold stand against the principle, and liberty and independence was the result. The petitioners have not requested Congress to suppress Sunday mails upon the ground of political expediency, but because they violate the sanctity of the first day of the week.

This being the fact, and the petitioners having indignantly disclaimed even the wish to unite politics and religion, may not the committee reasonably cherish the hope, that they will feel reconciled to its decision, in the case; especially, as it is also a fact, that the counter memorials, equally respectable, oppose the interference of Congress, upon the ground that it would be legislating upon a religious subject, and therefore unconstitutional.

Resolved, That the committe be discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

COMMUNICATIONS.

For the Western Recorder.

To the General Assembly of the State of Ohio:

Your petitioners, citizens of the State of Ohio, respectfully represent to your honorable body, that we labor under an intolerable burden in consequence of the excessive rate of tolls demanded upon the National Road in Ohio, and the payment being required in coin, renders the burden still more onerous. Your petitioners believe, that by proper legislation, these burdens may be greatly relieved. We, therefore, ask, that a law be enacted changing the mode of collecting the tolls, and in conformity with the following outline:

Divide the road into sections of ten miles, with one toll-gate, as already erected, for each section.

Place each section under contract for a term of —— years.

And provide that each section shall be let to that contractor who will keep the road in complete repair for the lowest rate of tolls collected by himself; and provide, that in bidding for contracts, the present law (or one more equitable) fixing the rates of tolls and compounding therefor, shall be the basis whereon to bid for the contracts, and provide that each contractor shall give freehold security for the permanent repair of his section of the road, and provide that —— per cent. of the tolls collected, by each contractor, be paid into the "National Road Fund" to pay a superintendent, whose duty it shall be (after organizing) to visit each section once a year to report thereon, with other provisions necessary to carry this plan into complete effect.

Your petitioners believe that contracts can be thus let at one-half or one-third the present rates of toll, and that thereby, the travel would be increased in about the same proportion, and that the road will be then kept in better repair, because the contractor will be always present and will have a direct interest in keeping the road in perfect repair, and unlike the present mode, which requires such a large proportion of the tolls for "gate keepers" and others; nor do we forget that they are rewarded liberally out of our pockets, without enriching the State—while it is notorious, that many have enriched themselves. Nor shall we urge that many of the superintendents have "devoted their time" to other than their official "duties;" nor do we even submit whether this would be a legitimate inquiry for your honorable body; nor can we conceive that any opposition will arise in any quarter, except from that above alluded to, for the State derives no revenue from this road. She does not hug it for this purpose, as a treasure constructed as it was, at the expense of the general government; the State can assume no such control. The permanent repair of the road will be secured by the bonds of the contractors, and the public reap an advantage by reducing the rates of toll. We, therefore, ask, that the plan herein proposed, may receive the serious attention of the General Assembly, and this or some other mode be adopted, which will be fixed fair, certain, and free from liability of embezzlement of the tolls, and which will reduce the rates thereof to something like what it is on this road in other States, or even down to the fair prices on company turnpikes, and thereby, prevent the Cumberland Road in Ohio, from becoming a desert waste of dust. And your petitioners will ever &c. [NAMES.]

Editors friendly to the objects of this petition, will please publish &c.

Individuals like friendly, will each attach a copy of the Petition to a roll of paper and procure names, and forward them to his Representative. Let all friendly to this object emulate each other, and strive to obtain the greatest number of citizens' names in the shortest time —if convenient, unite several rolls together under one copy of the petition and forward to Columbus in the early part of the session.

Let us convince our Representatives that we are in earnest in this matter, and show them by our numbers that there are too many of us to be disregarded with impunity, and they will act vigorously or hereafter reap the consequences. Let, in short, all who feel an interest, exert themselves—reduce the rates of tolls by this method, and the road will be too narrow hereafter to contain the travel thereon.

A TOLL PAYER.

December 7, 1840.

For the Western Recorder.

A FEW THOUGHTS ON A FEW THINGS.

NO. III.

ON DRUNKENNESS.

As much as has been said and written on this lamentable evil, it still abounds in our land to a fearful extent. It has proved itself to be an evil ever since the days of Noah. An evil that has carried its millions to the tribunal bar of a righteous God; and its thousands (no doubt) to the dreary regions of the damned. Hear the word of God: "Be not among wine bibbers, for the drunkard shall come to poverty."—Prov. xxiii. 20, 21. Jesus, the son of God, the Saviour of sinners, thus warned His disciples: "Take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness."—Luke xxi. 34. Paul, when animating the christian to a holy warfare remarks, that "every man who striveth for the mastery is temperate in all things."—1 Cor. ix. 25. And when the Apostles are describing some of the vilest men, they speak of them as "feeding themselves without fear; whose god is their belly; whose glory is their shame; whose end is destruction."—Jude 12; Phil. iii. 19.

Just consider how mean it is to pamper a frail and dying body; how foolish to bring dullness and stupidity over the noble powers of the soul; how ungrateful to abuse the bounty of God; how dreadful to contract a habit, a root so apt to grow, and which exposes to the heaviest condemnation!

That men should delight in overturning their reason, that they should voluntary choose, by swallowing a medical draught, to brutify themselves, must appear to other orders of beings wonderfully shocking. No man can bear the least reflection upon his understanding, whatever he may on his virtue; yet men will indulge a practice by which experience convinces them they will effectually lose their understanding and become idiots! Unthinking persons are wont to look with great contempt on natural fools; but in what light ought they to view a fool of his own making? What can be conceived more unsuitable to the dignity of human nature than a drunkard with his eyes staring, his tongue stammering, his lips quivering, his legs tottering, and his stomach heaving! The only being on earth formed to be immortal, sunk into sensuality. There is no other vice that so effectually and so suddenly unhinges and overturns all virtue, and destroys every thing valuable in the mind. It takes off every restraint, and opens the mind to every temptation: so that there is no way so expeditious for a man to corrupt and debauch himself—to turn himself from a man into a demon, as by intoxicating himself with strong liquor; nor is there, perhaps, any other habit which so soon becomes unconquerable, as drunkenness. Hear it, then, ye slaves of RUM, BRANDY, and GIN!—ye WINE-BIBBERS and BEER SOTS! I call upon you, in the name of generations yet unborn, to TREMBLE while you learn that ruin "stops not here;

Sin kills beyond the tomb."

Let me invite you, then, to view the all-sufficient remedy, provided by the God of heaven for all your maladies. Yes, blessed be God! all is not yet over; the decree of death is not yet gone forth; the sentence of wrath is not yet pronounced; the damning vengeance of our insulted God has not yet overtaken you; there is yet "balm in Gilead;" still there is a physician there. Flee to Him then without delay, for Life is a lamp, while if it burn,

The vilest sinner may return.

Now, as a young friend, let me warn you

"By the sacred tears
Of widows, orphans, mothers, sisters, sires,
Forbear! No other pestilence has driven
Such myrids from the joy of heaven;
To groan, to wail, to gnash and weep
Amongst the damned in the fearful deep."

Therefore, repent of thy sins; forsake them all; turn to God with full purpose of heart; cast thy helpless soul upon Him, relying upon Jesus Christ, whose merits alone procure salvation, and thou shalt realize that "joy which is unspeakable and full of glory."

Heaven grant thee success, is the ardent prayer of a fellow youth.

J. D.

For the Western Recorder.

Br. Disciple: In your last, you charged me with unfairness. Your charge is, that I gave all my, "questions fully, but did not give your answers."

I did not think it necessary for me to transcribe your answers, and thus spin out my communication, to an improper length, when all your readers could turn to them at pleasure. I do not wish to charge you with unfairness, yet, I think in some cases I might do it, with as much propriety as you have me as above. For instance, in reference to Math. 12th and 50th, you labor to make the impression upon your readers, that I said there was nothing "embraced in the passage but relationship." I remarked that Christ acknowledged relationship, with those, who did the will of his Father. But how much more it embraced I did not pretend to say.

I called on you to inform me what the will of the Father is. This you have not attempted. Had you attended to this, my 2d question might have been answered. Please attend to this.

You refer me to Heb. 2d, 11th, for an answer to the 2d question. From this passage I learn that Christ calls those his bretheren who are sanctified, but this still does not say by what means they came into that relation. You seem somewhat hasty in passing over my question in order to reach my answer to yours. You say "the most exceptionable part is your answer to my four questions, by including baptism in the means of salvation on the the matter of present salvation." In connecting baptism with other things in order to salvation or pardon, I quoted Peter's words; so, if you take exceptions to it I will leave you and the Apostle to settle it.

You reject baptism as a condition of salvation, or pardon. Christ says, Mark 14th and 16th, He that believeth and is baptised shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be damned. Here the Saviour promised salvation to the believing baptised person, yet to connect baptism with other means, in order to salvation is with my Br. Disciple very exceptionable. Again, the Apostle Peter, in answer to the inquiry of the penitent Jews, told them to repent and be baptised in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins. Acts 2d and 38th. Again, Ananias addressed Saul of Tarsus, thus, "And now why tarriest thou; arise and be baptised, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord." Acts 22d, 16th. Mr. John Wesley had the following note on this passage; "Baptism, to real penitents, is both a means and a seal of pardon; nor did God ordinarily, in His primitive church, bestow his blessing on any except through this means." Ah! Mr. Wesley, this is very "exceptionable" with modern disciples. Before I close, Br. Disciple, permit me to call on you to point to one case where an individual is said to be saved before he was baptised, from the time the Apostles first made the proclamation, under their last commission, down to the close of the book.

Earnestly desiring my Brother Disciple the constant enjoyment of Salvation in this life and a glorious immortality in the world to come, I close.

TIMOTHY

December 4th, 1840.

For the Western Recorder.

NO. III.

The great starting point in this new kind of doctrine is the day of Pentecost, where Peter preached baptism for the remission of sins; but even this case proves too much for him, and is out of place in this century;—my friend cannot find a congregation of people in precisely the same circumstances with them. What were the prominent points in their case? we answer: they were Jews, guilty of rejecting Christ, and they had said, let His blood be upon us and our children forever. Peter proved in his sermon that this person was God's messiah;—therefore, it was in view of this, that they invoked Peter thus: "What shall we do?" We have said, let His blood be upon us and our children forever, "Why, repent (they did then believe,) and be baptized, and by that act, show to the world that you have renounced Mosaicism and turned to the Lord." Therefore, every reader of the Bible must see, at once, that this is altogether a dissimilar case to all that can happen in all after time to the end of the world; therefore, my brother had better wait till he finds a nation or congregation of people in the same predicament with the Jews, and then preach to them precisely as Peter did. Again, we are informed in the same chapter, that the number of the disciples were about a hundred and twenty. Can my Br. Timothy prove that this number were ever baptized, at all, in water? I think it will puzzle him,—and he must do it to make his position good,—that baptism is a means of pardon. My worthy Br. Timothy, and those that teach with him in the reformation, lay it down as a general rule, that baptism is for the remission of sins, but we have found an exception to this general rule in the case mentioned above; therefore, it ceases to be a general rule. We believe, with our worthy friend, that the kingdom of Christ and God is governed by laws that never will be repealed to the end of time.—These laws are faith and repentance to salvation. Is there one exception to these rules or laws in all the broad history of man, since the days of the Apostles? Not one. The third law or rule of the kingdom, is baptism to introduce and connect us with the discipleship of Christ, then we must be correct in preaching to Jew and Gentile, bond and free, and all of our republican folks, as did Peter in the 3d chapter of Acts and at the 19th verse: "Repent ye, therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord."—Br. Timothy, we have only began on this subject.

A DISCIPLE.

For the Western Recorder.

Dear Sir: We are disposed to rank the following amongst the marvellous. The death of Andrew Whitter, which took place on July 25th, at Mr. Raney's, near Cambridge, Ohio, at the extreme age of 125 years, lacking one month. One year ago, last harvest, he reaped eight sheaves of wheat and shocked them; but being some fatigued he fell down, and told the hands if harvest was not cut until he should do it, it would not get done.

To the last, he retained his senses; and his appetite was good, until the day before he died. He seemed quite unconcerned about the state of his mind and its prospects hereafter. We are sure of one thing, however, in his case, that God's mercy was great in sparing him a long time, in order to his salvation.

W. MARSHALL.

December 2, 1840.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

CAMBRIDGE CIRCUIT, December 2, 1840.

Mr. Editor: We closed our quarterly meeting on the 16th of November. It was a precious season. Six united with us, and many more are seeking the Lord, as the fruits of this meeting. We had the labors of our Conference Missionary, Br. Reeves, and my neighboring good Br. Woodruff. Their zealous and well aimed efforts will not soon be forgotten on this circuit. Yours, W. MARSHALL.

HACKERS CREEK CIRCUIT, VA. November 27, 1840.

Dear Br. Springer: I inform you that the Lord is doing great things for us on this circuit. I held a protracted meeting, and there were fifteen came out and prayed the Lord, and gave their names to the church. The good Spirit is still working in this place. Twenty-one have joined since conference. The Lord is on the giving hand; glory be to God for His kindness to us! There is a good work on the circuit, in several classes. We may expect better times now—the election excitement is over. We have nothing to fear if we will enforce discipline and live holy. Your friend and brother,

S. CLAWSON.

PENNSVILLE CIRCUIT, Nov. 28, 1840.

Br. Springer: By your permission, I will say to the friends of Zion, that the work of the Lord is still progressing in this part of God's moral vineyard. At our first quarterly meeting, on the first Sabbath of November, we had a time of rejoicing to many; the old vetrons of the Cross were strengthened—the lukewarm stirred up to diligence—and the backslider reclaimed; whilst many sinners were pricked to their hearts. The meeting closed on the following Wednesday, after a feast of love. Several joined the church. Br. Reeves labored for souls; Edwards and Aikins, local brethren, were diligent in the work. May the Lord prosper them, and bring them, with their charge, to inherit eternal peace at God's right hand forevermore.

On the following Friday evening, we commenced another protracted meeting in Roxbury, and our labors were blessed of the Lord. The enquiry was made, "What shall I do to be saved?" and they were pointed to the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world. Many were added to the church;—the meeting closed with the special blessings of the Great Head of the church. "Bless the Lord, O my soul! and forget not all His benefits." Yours, truly,

D. Y. OSTROM, Sup.

WESTON, VA., DEC. 4, 1840.

Br. Springer: Through the tender mercy of God, I have been enabled to meet, thus far, my appointments, and to enjoy some interesting seasons of grace. It was not until the third Sabbath after the conference, that I entered upon the regular labors of the District.

My first visit was to Youngstown, October 7th. It was considered a profitable meeting. On the evening of the Sabbath, by special request, and with the consent of the members, visited a neighborhood eight miles north of Youngstown. Several were added to the church.

My next appointment was Grand river circuit. The meeting was held in Lenox. We have no society in this place, but an organization was contemplated in a short time

The following week I visited Farmington, and found one of the most pious and interesting societies I ever knew. I allude, particularly, to this society, from the fact, that, they have been recently driven from the M. E. Church by persecution. Br. Piper is doing well in this region, and the same may be said of all the preachers, whose fields of labors I have visited.

The next was Mahoning circuit. The meeting was held in Salem. The meeting house bad, the weather cold and the congregation uncomfortable.

Wellsville was my next appointment. The members were united and persevering in the good cause, notwithstanding they were destitute of a regular pastor. Br. Matthews is now in charge of the station. In New Lisbon, among my old and well-tried friends, we had a pleasant, and I trust, a profitable meeting, the following week.

You have had information of my visit to the Monongalia circuit, and also the organization of seventy-seven members in the south part of Fayette county, Pa., in a letter from Br. Hopwood. My next visit was to Clarkesburgh circuit. We had a gracious revival of religion, the particulars of which, you will have in a letter from Br. Simonton. On last Sabbath, I visited Sutton, and found an interesting membership; had a good meeting; preached three times on my return, and arrived safely in Weston last evening.

Br. Mercer is released from his charge and transferred to the Illinois Conference. Br. Heath is appointed to the Sandusky circuit. Br. Chapman is released from New Garden, and appointed to the Adrian Mission. Br. Browning is released from the Deersville circuit, and Br. Burgess appointed with Br. Warren. Br. Pinnell is hereby informed, that I have no authority to assign him a field of labor not recognized by the Annual Conference.—I would also inform Br. Reeves, that the brethren on the Monongalia circuit, desire a visit from him.

In conclusion, I would remark, that the District, so far as I have been able to ascertain, is in a prosperous condition.

Yours, affectionately,
Z. RAGAN,

Please publish the following appointments:

Pittsburgh station,	January	3,	1841.
Ohio circuit,	"	10,	"
Steubenville station,	"	17,	"
Marshall circuit,	"	24,	"
Tyler "	"	31,	"
Woodsfield "	February	7,	"
Georgetown circuit,	"	14,	"
Mt. Pleasant "	"	21,	"

Yours, &c,, Z. RAGAN.

NEW CASTLE, PA., DEC. 10, 1840.

Mr. Editor: Under considerable discouragement I arrived at Youngstown circuit, about three weeks after conference, and have been laboring alone, as Br. Stevens is unable to travel yet, on account of sickness. But, glory to God, in whom I have trusted, He has been with me.

We have been holding a protracted meeting in this place for the last nineteen days, and our labors, in the Lord, have not been in vain. Some fifty souls have professed religion within that time; thirty-six of whom have been added to the M. P. Church, and eight to the M. E. Church, and a number have not yet united with any church. The work is still going on.

We are looking for Br. Brown, or Br. Clarke, and if either of them come to our assistance, we intend, still, to continue the meeting as long as we are able, or the Lord continues to work with the people. For my part, I am about done over, and cannot preach more than once in forty-eight hours. We have got established in this place, notwithstanding the powerful opposition we have met with. We had only four members in town when we commenced, and they were almost discouraged, but not forsaken. The class numbered, in all, 10 or 11 members, some of whom live five miles off; consequently seldom had class or prayer meetings. Prejudice has been made to flee before the power of God. Our M. E. brethren came and proffered us their house, after our meeting had been in progress for eight days in a school house, which we accepted, and they came up to the help of the Lord against the mighty. All sectarian bigotry has, to all human appearance, been buried, and we can meet now in the same house, and pray with and for each other, and for sinners too. Taking all things into the account, it has been a good meeting. We intend to make an effort to build a church in this place, as soon as our meeting is concluded.

This circuit is looking up. We have added, in all, since conference, fifty members, and at some of my appointments there is a good state of religious feeling.

Yours, &c. P. INSKEEP.

WESTERN RECORDER.

ZANESVILLE:

WEDNESDAY, ... DECEMBER 23, 1840.

On our first page will be found JOHNSON'S Sunday Mail Report. We publish it, principally, in order to have it on file, in our possession, as it is a document that has been issued to the public, containing the reasons for the decision of an important public question.

To a well informed mind, it will be seen, at once, that the Report evinces great research.—That it is the production of the Vice President's mind, no one acquainted with the subject, could, for a moment, admit. He unquestionably had aid in the production of this instrument.

The Report contains many trueisms, very clearly and very forcibly stated. But most of them have but a very remote connection, indeed, with the question at issue. For instance, what relation can there be between destroying the tea at Boston, and running the United States mail stages on the Sabbath day.

We mentioned, some months since, that the redoubtable Dr. Glover, of the Senate of this State, in his Report, last year, against extending protection to the worship of God, had borrowed most of his document from this Sunday Mail Report, and a considerable portion of it without any credit whatever. Take the following quotation from the Dr.'s Report as a specimen:

"The history of the world furnishes the melancholy demonstration, that the disposition of one man to coerce the religious homage of another, springs from an unchastened ambition, rather than a sincere devotion to any religion. The principles of our Government do not recognize in the majority, any authority over the minority, except in matters which regard the conduct of man to his fellow man."

From the earliest period of time, religious teachers have attained great ascendency over the minds of the people; and in every nation, ancient or modern, whether Pagan, Mahomedan, or Christian, have succeeded in the incorporation of their religious tenets with the political institutions of their country. The Persian idols, the Grecian oracles, the Roman auguries, and the modern priesthood of Europe, have all, in their turn, been the subject of popular adulation, and the agents of political despotism. If the bill, recommended by the memorial, should be adopted, it would be difficult for human sagacity to forsee how rapid would be the succession, or how numerous the train of measures which might follow, involving the most sacred rights of all—the rights of conscience.

"Religious zeal enlists the strongest prejudices of the human mind; and, when misdirected, excites the worst passions of our nature, under the delusive pretext of doing God service. Nothing so infuriates the heart to deeds of rapine and blood; nothing is so incessant in its toils; so persevering in its determinations; so appalling in its course; or so dangerous in its consequences."

From these facts we make two inferences: 1st, this Sunday Mail Report, as we had said, is a document containing maxims of very general application, which can be wielded, not only to wink at the violation of the Sabbath, but (as by the Doctor,) as arguments to excuse legislators from protecting the worship of Almighty God from the cupidity and ruffianism of the country: 2dly, the Legislature must have been hard run, when they found it necessary to place such important matters in the hands of men who have no ideas themselves upon the subject, and are under the necessity of borrowing what had probably been borrowed before.

In this paper will be found the form of a Petition to the Legislature relating to the tolls on the National pike, which we have been requested to publish. Something, most certainly, should be done by the Legislature to relieve the public from the burden of tolls demanded on that important thoroughfare. About one year ago two dollars were exacted for a common one horse Dearborn wagon, from Zanesville to Bridgeport, 73 miles, which is nearly three cents per mile and carry yourself. No apology can be received for such public swindling as this. Turnpike companies will vest their capital for constructing roads, and then keep them in repair for less than one-half the rate of tolls that our economists charge for simply keeping in repair a road made ready to their hand.—It strikes us that the plan of farming out the road, on the principles of the Petition, will be the better way to dispose of the subject. We ask our readers, especially those along the pike, to take an interest in the immediate circulation of this Petition.

The following extract is from an address, unanimously adopted by the students of the University of Virginia, on the distressing occasion of the murder of Professor Davis:

"Some years ago, a large body of students were dismissed on the 12th of November, and since that time, there has always been a riot on the night of that day. Each succeeding year, however, the disturbance has grown less and less, until the approach of the last 12th excited little or no general attention in College. Some time after nightfall, two, and only two, persons in disguise were seen walking about the Lawn, firing pistols and making other noises. Up to the time when the fatal ball was discharged, the effort at a row was ridiculed, and pronounced a failure. The disorder, however, continued until Mr. Davis was shot. The news spread like wildfire.—Very soon students from every quarter of the College collected before his house. Grief at their Professor's situation, mingled with indignation against the authors of the outrage, was felt and expressed by all. The promptest and most active measures were immediately taken for his detection. The zeal of the students unabated, and their efforts unrelaxed. One who confesses that he was engaged in the disorder, was soon discovered. He, however, has been acquitted, not only of the guilt of Mr. Davis's death, but of aiding and abetting in it. Another student has been arrested and charged with his murder. With his guilt or innocence, God forbid that we should meddle. He is in the hands of the law, and awaits his trial before a tribunal of his country. There we leave him."

Bicknell, of the 18th instant, states that arrangements are completed, on the part of the Philadelphia Banks, to resume specie payments on the 15th proximo. The local banks of Philadelphia, not including the United States Bank, have negotiated a loan of two millions five hundred thousand dollars at Boston, and one million of dollars at New York, which have been received with a view to the resumption. The editor remarks:

"In little more than five weeks, therefore, we shall have specie payments. Of course, money will grow scarcer, and our merchants and traders generally, should conduct their affairs accordingly. We may mention for the information of our friends at a distance, that the only Philadelphia notes in circulation at the present time are those of the United States. All the other banks pay out the paper of the 'monster,' and receive it freely on deposit. Of course, when they resume, they will pay specie for it, altho', should the resumption movement pass off with little excitement or no alarm, as we anticipate it will, we shall soon find our banks issuing their own notes as freely as in former times.

"Our Banks, generally, are in a wholesome state, most of them having been in a condition for resumption for some months, and no difficulty in the way except the balances due the East.—These balances have been satisfactorily arranged, and we now indulge a hope that from the present time, confidence will revive and business assume a greater degree of activity."

The M'Grew Robbery—Robbery of the Oneida Bank—The Wife of Harvie was from Philadelphia.

We have before acquainted our readers of an extensive robbery which took place in Cincinnati, from the Jewelry store of Mr. McGrew. Since that time the whole property has been recovered. The Republican states that it was given to the Marshal by the wife of the burglar, whose name is Harvie. He is an Englishman by birth, and resided for a considerable time in Canada, during which time he and another individual robbed the Oneida (N. Y.) Bank of $100,000; the money was divided between them, and this man Harvie remained in the neighborhood without being suspected for a considerable period; he at length commenced purchasing property, and suspicion fell upon him. When called upon by the bank officers, he agreed for the sum of ten thousand dollars, and on condition that they would not prosecute him, to divulge the whole matter. The circumstance was known to some persons here and they knew Harvie, and as soon as they heard of McGrew's robbery, they suspected him, and communicated their suspicions to the Marshal, and Mr. McGrew.

When the Marshal, on the next morning, went in, the wife immediately said, "I presume you are an officer, and I know what you came for, there are the goods,"—pointing to them. She is represented as quite an intelligent and interesting woman, says she is from Philadelphia, and, that she married Harvie after the Oneida Bank robbery. She did not appear disposed to conceal anything in relation to the burglary. She said her husband had no accomplices in the business, that he went to the store between 7 and 8 o'clock, and brought home one handkerchief full, and then returned and brought home another, all before 8 o'clock.

When asked why she continued to live with such a man, she said he had been kind to her; he was also intelligent, and a gentleman in his manners, and that her attachment for him was such that she could not leave him. She said she had often talked to him of the danger to which he exposed himself, but all to no purpose. When something was said in her presence of the probability of Harvie having been the person who had stolen the cloaks and coats that have recently been taken from various houses in the city, she repelled the charge with apparent indignation, and said her husband never engaged in such thefts.

HORRID NEWS FROM MEXICO.—New Orleans papers of the 30th ult. contain accounts that the Federal Chiefs, Molona, Canalus, and Candemas, who escaped in March last into Texas and induced a number of the young and daring spirits of that country to join their standards, against the central government, after carrying them into that country, and finding that their enterprise was likely to be unsuccessful, treacherously agreed among themselves to deliver those volunteers up to the Government, and that upwards of 100 Texians were barbarously murdered. Dates one day later state that the besieged Texians turned upon the enemy and killed over four hundred of them.

MOST SCANDALOUS OUTRAGE.—The Detroit Advertiser of the 26th ult. gives an account of a most atrocious outrage, which took place at the town of Highland, Oakland county, whereby a Mr. Phiness L. Davis had the whole of the fine stock on his farm killed, destroyed or taken away. He had succeeded in making his farm one of the best stocked in the country by procuring the best and most expensive breeds of animals. It appears that on Sunday morning of last week, before day-light, twenty five men, armed with knives and other missles, came to the farm in wagons, and without any ceremony proceeded to the barns and out-houses and killed some twenty hogs, and drove off some twenty or thirty others, four fine horses, one double wagon and harness, one bull, twenty-three sheep, six hundred bushels of oats, three hundred bushels of corn, besides several harrows, ploughs, and other farming utensils; and, worse than all ripped open several fine breeding sows, of the Berkshire breed, by which brutal act between sixty and eighty pigs were destroyed!

Mr. Davis on hearing of his misfortune, took active measures to arrest the perpetrators, and, in a short time, succeeded in arresting nineteen of them, and great hopes were entertained of bringing to justice the remainder of the gang.

The death of Miss Eleanor Macomber, a devoted missionary among the Burmese is noticed in the last Baptist Advocate. She died at Maulmein, 11th of April, aged 39 years.

Bicknell's Reporter, of the 8th instant, says: "The Board of Brokers of Philadelphia, have adopted the rule lately put in practice in New York, to charge one quarter of one per cent. on the par value of all stocks, loans, &c., which shall pass through their hands—no commission to be less than 6¼ cents per share. For instance, the commission to the broker for sometime past on the sales of the stock of the United States Bank has averaged about 17 cents; under the present rule, the par value of the stock being $100, the commissions will be 6¼ to 25 cents. So far as this movement will tend to check speculations in fancy and valueless stocks, it is worthy of commendation, but when it is remembered that when the Bank of the United States and other stocks sold above par, that the brokerage was charged on the whole amount obtained, the new regulation, now that stocks are so terribly below par, does not strike us as exactly the fair thing."

THE BANKS OF GEORGIA.—The Milledgeville Journal of the 24th inst. says: "The joint committee on Banks to whom the several bills relative to specie payments by the banks were referred, have reported a bill, requiring the banks to resume specie payments on all their liabilities, on the first day of February, 1841. On failure of any bank so to resume, the Government is to cause judicial proceedings to be instituted for the forfeiture of their charters, and the assignment of its assets. The Governor is authorized to employ counsel in aid of the Solicitor General. The bills of such defaulting banks are not to be received for any public dues—except those of the Central Bank, and those only for taxes and debt."

A GENTLEMAN PICKPOCKET.—In Philadelphia on Wednesday night, at the Walnut Street Theatre, an individual came up to a gentleman who was standing engaged in conversation with some friends, and inquired, in the politest manner, "if he had lost his pocket book?" The gentleman examined his pockets, and replied in the affirmative. "Then I have found it," said the stranger; "you dropped it upon the seat where you had been sitting, and I am happy in being able to restore it to you." The gentleman cordially thanked him, and the other withdrew. Shortly afterwards, having occasion for some money, he pulled out his pocket-book, which had contained one hundred and twenty-five dollars, and found but two dollars remaining. A similar incident happened at the same establishment two or three weeks since. There is no doubt that in both instances the polite restorers were the theives. So says the ledger.

SHIPWRECK.—The Portland Advertiser states that the schooner Free Trade, Bowe, (late Hacker,) of Portland, arrived at that port on Sunday morning, a complete wreck, and the crew in a distressed condition. She had a cargo of molasses, and was bound for Boston. She left Havana on the 14th October last, and came on to the coast inside of Cape Hatteras, on the 1st of November, since which time she has experienced a continued gale of wind. November 6, the Captain, Isaac Hacker, was lost overboard, but the gale was so severe at the time, that no means could be used for his recovery. On the same day, a part of her cargo was stove, in order to save the vessel. The crew had been on a small allowance about a fortnight, and had used the last drop of water yesterday morning. Capt. Hacker was a worthy and industrious young man, and has left a wife and one or two children in Westbrook, with numerous other friends to lament his loss.

POPULATION OF OHIO.—We give below a very interesting statement of the population of Ohio, obtained through the politeness of Mr. Patterson, Marshall of the State. The whole population of the State, it will be seen is a little over a million and a half.

Recapitulation.

Whole number of free white males,	779,709
Do do white females,	718,824
Do do colored males,	8,637
Do do colored females,	8,465
Total population of Ohio.	1,515,695

Total number of

Pensioners for revolutionary or military services,	616
Universities or Colleges,	16
Students in Universities or Colleges,	1,577
Academies and Grammar Schools,	66
Primary and Common Schools,	4,974
Scholars in Common Schools,	164,317
Scholars at public charge,	37,249
White persons over twenty years of age who cannot read and write,	34,552
Total,	247,264

A LITTLE EMPIRE.—The State of Ohio by the recent census numbers 1,500,000 inhabitants, all freemen. It is certainly the third if not the second State in the Union, for Pennsylvania and New York only stands before it. We believe it to be destined to become the most powerful State in the Union; both from its situation and its inexhaustable resources.—Literary Souvenir.

THE WHITE WATER MONEY.—The Cincinnati Chronicle of a late date says: "We are requested to say one word on this vexed business. That the Company, the City, the Brokers, or whoever are most concerned, must keep this paper at a regular and certain discount, or the result must be its entire rejection. At present it is neither fiish nor fowl. Should it be suffered to go down, the company will have to pay specie ultimately, what they now might easily redeem at ninety per cent."

NEW ALLOYS OF METALS.—A curious and valuable discovery has just been made in the alloy of metals. A manufacturer of Paris has invented a composition much less oxidable than silver, and will not melt at less than a heat treble that which silver will bear, the cost of it is less than 4*d* an ounce. Another improvement is in steel; an Englishman at Brussels has discovered a mode of casting iron, so that it flows from the furnace pure steel, better than the best cast-steel in England, and almost equal to that which has undergone the process of beating. The cost of this steel is only a farthing per pound greater than that of cast iron.—Mining Association.

Mr. C. M. Clay, of Kentucky, a member of the State Legislature, has published a spirited pamphlet, being a review of a speech of Mr. R. Wickliffe, Jr. on the "Negro Law," in which he has denounced Mr. Clay as an abolitionist. Mr. Clay though he wishes not to be considered an emancipationist—far less an 'abolitionist,' says, "I declare here, in the face of all men, that I believe slavery to be an evil morally, economically, physically, intellectually, socially, religiously, politically—evil in its inception, in its duration and in its catastrophe—an unmixed evil, without palliation or defence save in necessity."

POWER OF STEAM.—The greatest load lifted by any engine now at work in this country, was done by one in the consolidated mines which raised a load of 9000 lbs. every double stroke it made, and did this nine times a minute, amounting to 277,022 tons, lifted seven feet six inches in 24 hours; and this astonishing machine could be started, stopped, or regulated by a little boy.

FROZEN TO DEATH.—A letter published in the Bay State Democrat, dated Wiscasset, December 3d, states—"Schr. Tiberius, Brookings, arrived here last evening, picked up yesterday off Seguine a boat with three men and and two boys in her; one of the latter was frozen to death.—They belonged to a small schooner bound to Waldoboro', which was upset in the squall on Monday night. The feet of the captain and the boy are badly frozen."

OUR REVENUE CUTTERS.—An order has been issued by Levi Woodbury, Secretary of the Treasury, to the commanders of Revenue Cutters on winter service. While cruising, they will speak all vessels approaching the coast which they may fall in with, and afford to those requiring aid or relief such assistance as may be adapted to their condition and necessities.

The Mexican Congress passed, on the 17th October, a law to the following effect: That the government is authorised to contract a loan of $2,000,000, pledging for the payment thereof the 17 per cent. duty; and the President may issue bonds for that amount, which shall be sold to the best bidder, within thirty days—two-thirds of the proceeds of said loan to be expended in acquiring a marine and other necessaries for prosecuting the war against Texas.

MR. VAN BUREN.—A correspondent of the Boston Courier, writing from Washington, says, in allusion to the manner in which the next Ex-President endures his late defeat:—"To all appearance he bears his misfortune with all the indifference of an ancient Stoic, and all the gravity of a modern Turk. He smiles as affably as ever, and a stranger, who should be introduced to him, would not discover by any tale-telling of the countenance, that he is not President for life.

IMPORTANT LEGAL DECISION.—The Assistant Vice Chancellor of the First Circuit has recently decided in a case before him, that a mortage of goods and chattles, unaccompanied by an immediate delivery, and not followed by an actual and continued change of possession, is in the absence of all fraud, good and valid as against creditors, &c., where the same or a true copy thereof shall have been filed, pursuant to the provisions of the statue of 1833. This decision is of much importance, as the Supreme Court of this State has expressed a different view.—N. Y. paper.

THE SNOW STORM AND THE MAIL.—The snow storm at the South seems to have been even more severe than it was with us. The cars which left here on Saturday evening for Philadelphia were detained on the road many hours. Most of the lady passengers had received no nourishment since leaving Mew York seventeen hours before. They were but three miles from Bordentown by the railroad, and gentlemen had to travel eight miles in sleighs to reach them.—N. Y. paper.

SCHOOL MISTRESS WANTED.—G. H. Boon, at the gate foot of the Broad Mountain, advertises in the Minor's Journal for a female teacher for a common school in BARRY township, Schuylkill county. This is the township that rejected the common school system, and whose election returns were lately rejected because they were illegible. We hope the school mistress may go among them. May her industry be equal to the demand.—Phil. Sentinel.

SPURIOUS MEDICINE.—The N. Y. Tattler states that one of the firm of a drug store in Market st., in this city, has been taken up and held to bail in the amount of five thousand dollars, for counterfeiting vegetable pills.

The New York Herald says:—"...morals, and finance are all on a p... Philadelphia. Banks refuse to disch... their obligations with impunity, ... laugh at law and equity. A father, ... for example, murders his daughte... der circumstances of unexampled ... city, and a jury refuse to convict hi... a vague suspicion that his intellect... disordered. An unredeemed doctor, ... ELDRIDGE, robs half the banks in the ... and a Jury acquit him, because he ... tact enough to disguise his person so ... a blunderhead of a clerk could not ... tify him. Chevalier D'HAUTVILLE, ... miable, worthy, and exemplary hus... brings a writ of habeas corpus to rec... possession of his child, his own flesh ... blood, & it is refused, because, forsooth ... a foreigner, and his wife's father is a ... man. There seems to be an utte... moralization in every department o... and finance in the city of Brotherly L... A man might as well look for holine... Pandemonium, or mercy from the ac... istrators of Lynch law, as justice in ... adelphia.

CENSUS—MISSOURI, PENNSYLVANIA, JERSEY.—The census of Missouri ... 137,750 as the population. Increa... four years, about 51,000.

Pennsylvania has, it appears, by ... late census, a population of 1,348,23...

New Jersey has 373,272 inhabit... This is an increase in ten years o... 493.

A LUNATIC ASYLEM.—The Goverr... North Carolina in his recent messag... commends the building of a Lu... Asylum. The returns of the Sheri... the thirty-six counties show the nu... of lunatics in that State to be two hu... and forty-nine.

FEMALE COUNTERFEITER.—We ... from the Louisville (Ky.) Gazette t... the recent session of the criminal co... that city, Mrs. Brigham, who was ... on an indictment charging her with ... sing counterfeit money, was convicte... sentenced to two years imprisonme... the penitentiary.

SINGULAR ORIGIN OF FIRE.—Anth... coal should be well broken. Cavit... it contain gasses sealed up, the expl... from which may be most desastro... The cotton mill of Mr. S. Holbroo... Northbridge, (Mass.,) was destroy... cently by such an explosion settin... to the cotton.

MRS. KINNEY INDICTED.—The ... Jury of Boston, after a long and lab... inquisition, on Friday found a tru... against Mrs. Kinney for poisoning ... husband, George T. Kinney. She ... arraigned and pleaded not guilty.

A new sect called "Come Outists," ... Christian Journal says, has re... sprung into being in Massachuse... Their leading, or sectarian views ar... Opposition to a regular ministry. I... one should be his own priest. 2. O... tion to regularly organized church... Every one is a church by himself. ... disregard of the Sabbath, all day ... alike. Meetings have been establis... Centerville, Cape Cod, and Lynn. ... object seem to be to preach against p... ing, to organize against church org... tions, and to hold meetings on the L... day to put down the Christian Sabba...

VESUVIUS IN COMMOTION.—Galig... Paris Messenger learns from Naple... subterranean commotions had for s... days been perceptible along the ... of the ground which crosses the roa... ding from the frontiers of Citerior ... bria to the Roman States, and that ... vius had for two days been emm... dense volumes of smoke, spreading ... phurous odour, so that an eruption ... mountain was expected.

A Hamburgh paper states that ... schild, at Frankfort, had the news ... taking of Beyrout a week before it ... generally known; but kept it st... secret, and sent orders to all the ... exchanges to sell. The actual oper... of that house, in fact, contribute m... the depression of the funds.

WHO DESERVE REMEMBRANCE?—... year of Napoleon's assumption o... imperial Crown, a few and obscure ... lanthropists succeeded in originati... British and Foreign Bible Society. ... influence of each has been felt, bu... differently.

A POLITICAL COINCIDENCE.—It is ... incidence not a little singular, th... total vote cast in Pennsylvania fo... ney, the Abolition candidate for Pres... is precisely the same number as ... majority of the Harrison over the ... Buren electoral ticket in that State.

SUICIDE.—A most melancholly s... was committed on Friday, near Ch... in this State. The victim was a ... and beautiful girl, about 18 or 19 ... old. She had, for sometime, been af... with a religious monomania. Sh... shortly to have been married to a ... gentleman of that vicinity, upon ... she doated.—Phil. Courier.

THE MORMONS AND THEIR NEW C... This sect have recently purchase... steamboat Desmoines, formerly ... by the United States, and have pu... complete order, changing the na... that of their new city—Nauvoo. ... boat will run from St. Louis to N... Galena and Dubuque. The Mormo... ulation of Nauvoo, is estimated ... present time at 3000, and six hu... persons of the same sect are said ... now on their way from England.

President Lamar, of Texas, is ... be dangerously ill and wholly un... attend to his official duties.

HE RECORDER.

ZANESVILLE.

NNESDAY, ... DECEMBER 23, 1840.

vill be seen by reference to Mr. Marshall's unication on the first page, that Andrew ter, a soldier of the revolution, died, a few is past, near Cambridge, Ohio, at the aston- ; age of one hundred and twenty-five years, g one month.

e mill, near Irville, Muskingum county, rly belonging to Mr. Sidle, was consumed e, a few weeks since.

NG WINDED MESSAGES.—This is a disease affects nearly all our executive officers ghout the United States. Cure; the Press termine not to publish any Message which ds four or five columns in length.

. Henderson, of the Senate, will please ac- our thanks for the Inaugural Address which ad the goodness to forward to us. We will eatful for any documents he may favor us

R GLASS FACTORY AGAIN.—We have recent- ed 72 lights from the Zanesville glass facto- our new school house windows. It is with pleasure we state that we have not before a more perfect article. It is clear and ith; but its greatest excellency is, being true, s so level in the grooves of the sash as to but little tinning down in glazing. Al- gh the Judge did, perhaps, unintentionally, us with an advertisement, and we him with mlet, what of all this?—we believe he is a deserving mechanic;—that he is redeeming character of the establishment, and while he us such an article, on as good terms as his bors, we shall give him the preference of our onage.—☞See the advertisement of S. B. son on our last page.

e commend to the reader's notice the arti- om Blackwood's Magazine, on the progress European influence in Asia," on our last . It contains an enlightened and interest- view, of the silent, but overwhelming arrange- ts of Providence, in carrying forward the ences of religion and civilization, to the and benighted nations of the earth,—caus- even the "wrath of men to praise him."— live in an extraordinary age. The energies he human mind are developing with a rapidi- perhaps, unparalleled in the history of our . From every view of the subject we are au- ized to look for great events. But, really, article under notice, exhibits the buddings blossoms of a dispensation which astonishes o contemplate.

he following, without much uncertainty on subject, is the result of the late election President:

Harrison.		Van Buren.
w York,	42	South Carolina,	11
nsylvania,	30	New Hampshire,	7
o,	21	Virginia,	23
ntucky,	15	Missouri,	4
yland,	10	Illinois,	5
nnessee,	15	Alabama,	7
ine,	10	Arkansas,	3
rgia,	11		—
ssachusetts,	14	Total, ...	60
th Carolina,	15
necticut,	8
de Island,	4
iana,	9
w Jersey,	8
higan,	3
aware,	3
mont,	7
isiana,	5
sissippi,	4
	—
Total, ...	234

ole number of Electoral votes, ... 294.
cessary to a choice, ... 148.

OUNTERFEITS.—The Clarkesburgh, Va., Whig s, there are many ten dollar counterfeit notes the Bank of Hamilton, Ohio, in circulation, that part of Virginia. Letter A; signed C. Smith, Cashier, John Woods, President, da- 1835; paper coarse, and engraving roughly cuted.

☞CASSIE QUIRE.—The two outside quires each ream of paper, heretofore, have generally n made up of defective sheets, unfit for com- n use, and are called Cassie or Quasi quires. e paper manufacturing establishments at heeling, Steubenville and Zanesville, as we rn from recent transactions with them, have within a short time past, quit this practice, d give all good quires. The reason of this dification, of an old custom, probably is, these per makers are all Whigs, and they are deter- ned our State printer shall have no more cassie quisites.

We see that a number of Petitions have al- dy been forwarded to the Legislature, asking ther protection for religious meetings. A ref- nce has been made of them to committees, the respective Houses, on the Judiciary. In Senate was where the principle opposition se last year to a law for this purpose. Mr. sell is the chairman of the Senate's committee the Judiciary this year. Much will depend this officer in relation to the object of this ss of petitioners. We are told he is a well posed man, but that he had scruples about e constitutionality of such a law as the peti- ners prayed for. All the petitioners ask, is, to permitted "to worship Almighty God accord- g to the dictates of conscience," (which is the nguage of the constitution itself,) without be- g drove from the sacred altar by the mobs which set of vagabond grog and cake sellers bring ound them. The Legislatures of Maryland d Pennsylvania did not think such a law un- nstitutional, and gave one, when asked, with- t any difficulty.

The Rev. George Brown, now of Pittsburgh, d the venerable Daniel Hitt, deceased, got up e Petition to the Pennsylvania Legislature, d forwarded a copy of the Maryland law, ask- g in their prayer for a similar statute, and that intelligent and dignified body accorded to the request of the petitioners without hesitancy.

In fact, the outrage practiced upon the worship of God, in consequence of the inefficiency of the present laws of Ohio, is a disgrace to the State.

GLENTWORTH CASE.—The Grand Jury adjourned after presenting Recorder Morris, who went at midnight in company with the Mayor of New York and seized the Glentworth papers at the house of Mr. Pierce. But nothing has yet been done to those person who were charged with corruptiug the polls, &c.

CONGRESS.—A remarkable snow storm, such as had not occurred to the recollection of the oldest settlers, so early in the season, prevented a quorum until the 3d day of the session.

In the House on Thursday, Mr. Tillinghast, of Rhode Island, submitted a resolution, which was laid over under a rule of the House, calling upon the Secretary of the Treasury to report how far, and in what manner, the Sub-Treasury law has been carried into execution. On the same day, Mr. Calvary Morris, of Ohio, gave notice that he should on the next, or some subsequent day of the present session, ask leave to introduce a bill to repeal said act.

Br. J. H. Thomas suggests the propriety of some of our ablest correspondents writing essays on the various doctrines of the Christian Theology. We approve of the suggestion, if suitable pens could be engaged for the purpose. Brs. Snethen, Shinn, Brown, Reeves and others, could do justice to these subjects. Will they all favor our readers with, at least, an occasional treatise on doctrinal points.

Br. John Clarke, of Pittsburgh, thinks the advertisement of Br. Crall, which we published sometime since, indicates that he embezzled the notes alluded to, and chides us severely for publishing it. Although, we confess that we could see no reason for the publication of that notice, we did not understand it as charging Br. C. with embezzlement, or we should not have published it. For, although, we hold our paper for free investigation and free discussion, we cannot permit it to be a medium of crimination and recrimination. Neither can we agree to be held responsible for the misdoings of others. If there were any thing wrong in the insertion of that "advertisement," at the request of an officer of the Institution, to which the notes belonged, do not ask the public to censure us for the deed—censure the man who had the notice inserted. Although we could not see why this advertisement was sent for publication, yet, as we were not in possession of all the facts of the case, we did not know but its publicity might be called for. And under such circumstances we do not feel free to reject the communications of our correspondents. If we were to act our own private judgment, in all these things, there would be a considerable amount of matter that we publish, which would be rejected.

It is due to Br. Clarke, however, to say, that he has furnished, for our private satisfaction, the copy of a certificate from Br. Bassett, his successor to the agency of Dearborn College, that he "settled" with his predecessor, and received from him "all moneys, books, papers and property of every description, belonging to the said institution," &c., and that after spending some eight days in examining the books of the institution, as kept by J. Clarke, he was satisfied they were "kept on the principle of strict integrity;" and, also the copy of a resolution of the Ohio Conference, expressing thanks for his "faithfulness" in the discharge of his duties as agent, &c.

We have given more general satisfaction in our editorial labors than we anticipated we should be able to do in the outset. Out of the many expressions to this effect, which we are constantly receiving, we shall take the liberty to give the two following. Br. Ragan, the President of the Pittsburgh District, in a communication from Weston, Va., of the 4th inst. which we received on Saturday, says: "the Recorder is one of the best and most popular papers in the western country; and ought to be supported, especially, by all the friends of Methodist Protestantism in the west." Br. Hughes, the Literary Agent, in a letter from Clarksburgh, Va., 9th inst., after giving the names of some subscribers, adds: "the paper is very popular in this section of the District. The postmaster at Connelsville, Penn., thinks it the best paper which comes to his office."

These brethren, since conference, have passed generally through the upper end of the District, and have an opportunity of knowing public opinion on the subject.

We do not give these commendatory notices to gratify any principle of vanity in our own breast. We have reached that period of life, and have that experience with the world, which, we trust, enables us to appreciate such precisely as they should be. Our object in making these references is, to satisfy the public of our claims to patronage. We have not yet as many prompt paying subscribers as will insure the continuance of our paper. We have nearly enough if they would all fork up. But the deficiency of so many is a serious draw back upon the concern. We are afraid that some of our agents are not sufficiently careful whose names they send us, for we have ascertained, in reference to many, that there never could have been any prospect of their paying. If we are broke down it will be by this kind of boreing.

In an article already in type we have asked our friends to renew their efforts in our behalf.—Who will present us with the most subscribers as a New Year's gift? Whoever forwards to us the greatest number of good subscribers against the 14th of January, we will present with a file of three volumes of the Methodist Correspondent.

MARKETS.

ZANESVILLE.—Wheat 44 cents; Flour 3 dollars; Pork 3,50 a 4,00.

PHILADELPHIA, December 15.—FLOUR. The receipts of Flour having been light this week, and the open state of the navigation facilitating shipments, most of the factors are firm at 4,75 per bbl. for Pennsylvania superfine, at which rate sales to some extent have been made.

PROVISIONS.—The demand is small, and prices declining. Mess Pork, 15 dollars and 15½ per bbl. Lard—new, 10 a 11 cents. There is but little call for Bacon. Butter in kegs 9 a 10 cts. per lb. Mess Beef 13,00; prime do. 10,50 a 11; New York prime 8,00 per bbl. New Pork is selling at 4½ a 5 cents per lb.—Bicknell.

BALTIMORE, December 12.—FLOUR—There have been very few operations in Flour since our last report; the market, notwithstanding the light stocks and reduced receipts this week, of Howard street, remains excessively dull; and if there have not been sales made at a decline on last week's rates, there are indications, although we quote the store price for good common brands, $4,75 per bbl. with the sales of 200 bbls. in a lot, at that price. The receipt price, as we anticipated, has been established at $4,62½. We continue to quote City Mills 4,87½ a 4,81½, credit and cash; and 4,75 for Susquehanna. Sales of Ohio, at 4,62½.

THE HOME MARKET.—There was only a small lot of Beef Cattle in Market this week, in consequence of the unfavorable state of the weather, and prices therefore advanced. The offerings amounted to about 300 head, nearly all of which were taken at 6 a 6,50; a few inferior sold at 5,50. Hogs are selling at about 6 dollars per 100 lbs.; some at a small advance, 4 mos. Slaughtered Hogs sell at 5,25 a 5,50, the latter for prime quality for Family Pork. Wood has advanced; good Oak now sells from the wharf at 4,75 a 5, and Pine 4 dollars per cord.—Lyford.

PITTSBURGH, December 11.—Business is becoming dull, and we notice a great falling off and preparations for the new year.

Wheat, 55 cents.

Flour, little coming. Sales from wagons 3,00, stores 3,50 per bbl.—Harris.

STEUBENVILLE, December 16.—Wheat 45 cents per bushel.

Flour from the mill and stores, from 3,00 to 3,25 per bbl.

Beef, from 6 to 7 cts. per lb.

Butter, fresh, 10 to 12½ cts. per lb.—Herald.

OHIO LEGISLATURE.

SENATE.

John C. Wright has contested the election of Mr. Holmes, the Senator from Hamilton, on the ground of illegal votes. Mr. H. was elected, we believe, over Mr. Wright by some 15 or 20 votes, only.

Mr. Taylor introduced a resolution, instructing our Senators in Congress, and requesting our Representatives, to procure the passage of a law, fixing on the same day, in all the States, for the election of President, so as to prevent frauds at the polls.

HOUSE.

A resolution was offered by Mr. Harlin to instruct the committee on the Judiciary, to inquire into the expediency of so amending the act regulating interest, as to give it the following features: 1st, that in all contracts where there was no stipulation as to the amount of interest, it should be six per cent. 2d, that any agreement between the parties for any amount of interest not exceeding 12 per cent. should be collectable by law. But over twelve per cent. to be followed by different degrees of penalty, according to the exorbitancy of the interest.

A Bill was introduced by Mr. Worthington, of Ross, "to repeal so much of an act therein named, as prohibits the reception, as dues of the State, by county Treasurers and others, of bank bills of a less denomination than five dollars." This bill passed on the 14th instant, by a majority of 50 to 21, which appears to have been a strict party vote. It will probably be lost in the Senate, where the administration party have a small majority.

The House is restricting its expenses by refusing to have unimportant bills printed, and the State printer calls it persecution.

By the politeness of Mr. Henderson, our Senator, we were favored with Mr. Corwin's Inaugural Address to the Legislature, in time for this paper, but as we were pre-occupied with other matter, we shall have to defer it until our next, when we will give it either in whole or in part.

ITEMS.

The ochre mine recently discovered in Vermont, is now worked at the rate of 12 barrels per day. It is an important discovery.

The population of Texas is estimated at near 200,000.

PENNSYLVANIA.—A State Temperance Convention is to assemble at Harrisburgh on the 2d Tuesday of January next.

TO THE POINT.—Gov. Yell of Arkansas, has set an example in his annual message, which is the fourth of a newspaper column in length.

Vermont, according to the late census, contains 281,848 inhabitants, of whom there are about 1500 more males than femals, but, after all the charming girls there are wedded, there is a consolation to know they may cross over into other States for help-mates.

Gen. Harrison was born on the 9th of February, 1773, and is consequently nearly 68 years old.

It is stated by the New York Sun, that the distillers of that city consume nearly three times as much grain, as the citizens do for bread stuffs.

A man named Edward Larkin was recently frozen to death, in the neighborhood of St. Louis.

BURNT—The cotton mill of Mr. Holbrook of Northbridge, Mass. Loss $20,000.

THE SCHOOLMASTER WANTED.—In the county of Rockingham, Virginia, as shown by the late census, there are 1394 white persons, over 20 years of age, who can neither read nor write.

WILLIAMS, THE MISSIONARY.—The sum subscribed in England up to the 5th of November, for the widow and family of this deeply lamented individual who fell a victim to the savages of New Zealand in 1839, amounted to $8,300.

The Pennsylvania Reporter compares an advertisement in a newspaper to "a circle in the water," continually spreading itself.

"Pete, are you into them sweatmeats again?" "No marm, them sweatmeats are into me."

Timothy Dwight, formerly President of Yale College, and Aaron Burr, were first cousins.—Their mothers were daughters of the elder Jonathan Edwards.

Brigadier General Atkinson has published a Card in the Globe, contradicting a report of his having an attack of paralysis.

One hundred and twenty persons took the total abstinence pledge, at the St. Peter's Catholic church, at Wilmington, Delaware, on Sunday last.

A Draining Company has been formed at New Orleans, with a capital of $4,000,000, for the purpose of draining and rendering fit for cultivation the immense tract of land in the rear of the city.

Four theatres and one circus are now open in the city of brotherly love.

The steamboat Flying Dutchman was sunk, two or three weeks ago, in the Mississppi, with 200 tons of freight, principally sugar, all of which was lost.

Col. G. W. Phillips, a member of the Louisiana Legislature, from the Assumption, was killed, a few days since, by the bursting of the boiler of a steam engine in his sugar house.

The Richmond Whig says that a man named Benjamin Shephard died in the jail at that place for want of fuel and covering to keep him warm.

James C. King and Richard Richardson, commonly known as "Dick Richardson," have been arrested at Cincinnati, as the murderers of the mulatto Scott, near that city.

Counterfeit Spanish half and quarter dollars are in circulation, in great number, in Quebec.

☞The Richmond Whig says: The trial of Semmes, charged with the murder of Professor Davis, has been, on application of the accused, postponed until Monday week.

John Evans was recently executed at Savannah, Ohio, for a murder. On the gallows, about to launch upon his destiny, he warned the bystanders to beware of intoxicating drinks, ascribing to their influence his own most unhappy condition.

The new steamboat Louisiana arrived at New Orleans on the 20th ult. from Louisville. She is the largest steamboat on the river, measuring 720 tons—and can carry 4000 bales of cotton!

It is ascertained that the population of Ohio is but a fraction less than 1,800,000. This will make her the third State in the Union in point of population—New York and Pennsylvania only having a greater. At the next census, Ohio will be second to New York only.

The last St. Louis Argus says: Yesterday the Court of Chancery decided that the trust set forth in the will of the late John Mullanphy, Esq. are null and void.

The boundary line between the United States and Texas, when established, it is said will leave Miller county, Arkansas, wholly within the limits of Texas.

A gentleman from New York city is now laying down a railroad from Neuvitas to Principi, in the Island of Cuba—distance over 40 miles.

The Hon. Henry A. Wise, of Virginia, was married on the 26th of November, to the accomplished daughter of Hon. John Sergeant, of Philadelphia.

The editor of the Charleston Mercury, a Van Buren paper, says, with a good deal of force, "Have we not been badly beaten, and shall we be denied the inalienable right of grumbling? On that point we defy the world. 'We know our rights, and knowing, will maintain them.'"

The authorities at the Cape of Good Hope, in removing from circulation the paper money of the Colony, found that the amount of £26,589 had been added to the circulation by forgery or fraud.

Captain Coffin, of the schooner John, of Baltimore, from Porto Cabello, reports the State of New Grenada in a total state of revolution.

The case of the United States vs. Wm. M. Price has been deferred till the next term of the U. S. Circuit Court in April next.

At Philadelphia, Thomas Payne, a native of London, committed suicide by cutting his throat with a razor, while laboring under a fit of insanity.

Mr. Abner P. Johnson was killed, at Barre, on Tuesday last, by a tree falling on him, which one of his companions was cutting down. He was 28 years of age.

A man in Philadelphia recently took the cradle and bed from his infant child and sold it to obtain liquor. What a couple of abominable beasts were both the seller and the purchaser of the liquor under such circumstances.

THE NATIONAL DEBT.—The amount of Treasury Notes outstanding on the 1st instant, according to the monthly statement just published by the Secretary of the Treasury, is $4,432,823 38. A considerable portion of these notes bear interest.

HEAVY DAMAGES.—A Mr. Samuel Jones, of Stockbridge, Mass., has obtained a verdict of $2000 damages for injuries sustained while a passenger on board of the steamboat De Witt Clinton, of which Robert Dunlap, Esq., is owner, by being thrown into the water, and placed in imminent danger of his life, while landing at West Point.

Two students from the South, named John Robinson and Augustine Saunders, left this city on Monday to fight a duel in New Jersey—but having first informed the police, they were arrested and committed for trial.—Phil paper.

Jennings and Ortman, convicted before the Court of General Sessions some months since, of participating in the Kensington Rail Road riots, were pardoned by Governor Porter, on Tuesday of last week.—ib.

ELECTIONS.—The official majority in Virginia is 1843; Illinois, 1939; Michigan, 1837; Missouri, according to a Jefferson correspondent of the Missouri Republican, 6288.

MELANCHOLY.—The St. John (N. B.) Chronicle of 27th ult. says: "We are informed that a vessel which left St. John, evening of 23d for Boston, was totally lost, and that every soul on board, nine in number, perished."

FROM WASHINGTON.—The Balt. American of yesterday says: "We learn by last night's train that there was a quorum present in the House of Representatives yesterday, but not in the Senate. The House adjourned a few minutes after twelve. Previous to the adjournment, Mr. Adams gave notice that he would submit a motion to the House to-day to rescind the order adopted the last session, which order forbids the reception of petitions, &c. in relation to Abolition.—New World.

The Norfolk Beacon mentions as a report, that Mr. Van Buren has tendered the hospitalities of the White House to the President elect who it is said contemplates visiting the City of Washington sometime in the month of Febuary; preparatory to the Inauguration on the 4th of March.

Nathaniel P. Howard, Esq., has been appointed Professor of Law in the University of Virginia, to fill the vancancy occasioned by the melancholly death of Professor Davis.

The trial of Dr. Eldridge, on some of the other indictments against him, commenced on Wednesday last.—Philadelphia Courier, 5th inst.

A bill has been reported in the Legislature of Georgia, to abolish capital punishment.

The whole population of the State of New Jersey, is 373,272, in 1830 it was 320,779—increase, 52,493.

IMPORTANT TO CABINEL MAKERS.—An invention is in progress in England, to supercede the necessity of using horse-hair for stuffing chairs, sofas, &c. The substitute is, cork, cut into the minutest particles, which is found upon trial to be superior to horse-hair in every respect, and the saving is about 200 per cent.

Business Department.

RECEIVED PAY FOR RECORDER.

From C. S. Hamilton for J. L. Fleming,		$2 00
" A. C. Barnes for F. A. Harris,		2 00
" James Russell,		50
" C. C. Chapman (not current) for J. Mills,		2 00
" J. A. Mills for J. Stephens,		50
" John Besant, second volume,		2 00
" L. Davis,	" "	2 00
" J. McCoy,	" "	2 00
" J. Flood for J. Woodward, 2d vol.		2 00
" John Guest for M. C. Ewings,		3 00
" " for J. Swaney,		2 00
" " for W. Eckles,		2 00
" " for A. Warner,		1 00
" " for B. Sparr,		1 00
" " for W. Roller,		1 00
" E. West, (1, not current,)		1 00
" D. Y. Ostrom for Shad. Johnson,		2 00
" A. K. Earl for B. Sawdy,		2 00
" E. Collins for G. Hudson,		2 00
" " for W. Monroe,		2 00
" R. T. Boyd for A. Hopper,		2 00
" T. Foster for J. Stoner,		2 00

LETTERS RECEIVED.

R. Simon, 2 subs.; "A Deciple," C. C. Chapman, 2 subs.; M. Lyon, M. N. Warren, "Timothy," J. A. Mills, S. Burton, W. Marshall, 2 subs.; W. Maynard, S. Clawson, J. McCoy, J. H. Thomas, A. Buskirk, W. Marshall, J. Fordyce, J. Guest, 2 subs.; W. Dowdney, E. West, D. Y. Ostrom, 1 sub.; J. L. Loydd, Jr., J. Clarke, A. K. Earl, 1 sub.; D. McCarty, R. Mitchell, Z. Ragan, Geo. Hughes, 2 subs.; R. T. Boyd, P. Inskeep, 4 subs.; E. D. Norris, J. M. Young, J. C. Hunt, A. Hozey, "L. K. P." J. W. Williams, T. Foster.

The second quarterly meeting for Pennsville circuit will be held the 2d of January, at Sears's meeting house, Morgan county, Ohio.

A protracted meeting will be held in Cambridge, Ohio, under the superintendence of Br. W. Marshall, to commence on New Year's day, and to be continued over Sabbath. We are invited, but it is doubtful if we can attend—will, if we can.

We have transferred two dollars from A. Fordyce to the credit of Wm. Cole, at the direction of John Fordyce. A. F. is now credited with four dollars.

T. B. Graham, at Port William, refuses to take his paper from the office. He owes us three dollars and fifty cents. Will our agent on that circuit see to this matter?

Wm. Collins at Winnomac, Ia., refuses his paper; he owes two dollars. We would be glad if our agent there, would see to this.

Br. Earl requests Br. Stockton to send his paper to Payne & Watkins, Morgan, Ashtabula, Ohio, and as soon as he collects five dollars the cash shall be forthcoming.

Br. Bassett, Mr. Clarke, of our office, forwarded a business letter to you, to Charlestown, Ia., about the time of your leaving; he wishes to know if it has been received.

Br. Clarke, we now send two papers to Sharpsburgh, to John Cooks. We distinguish them on our books by J. Cook, 1st and 2d. The 1st, is charged with the paper from the 48th number, and is credited two dollars; the 2d, from the 66th number, and is credited nothing.

The post master at Bloomington, Ia., informs us that N. Smith does not take his paper from the office, stating that his year is out. He has not paid us, and if he will look at our terms, he will see we don't discontinue until arrears are paid.

As we will have need for a considerable amount of money shortly, we solicit our subscribers to pay up their subscriptions as soon as possible.

We ask our agents to make a renewed effort to get us some more subscribers—cash in advance, if possible. As the election is now over, the people may relish something beside politics.

Br. Stockton is requested to send his paper to Rev. George I. Miles, one of the Baptist clergymen of Zanesville, Ohio, and the money shall be forthcoming.

Br. Inskeep wishes Br. Stevens to come to his help, if he should be able to do nothing but aid the brethren in New Castle.

Br. Bassett is informed that we sent his paper regularly to Indiana, until he ordered us to change it, and we then sent him two or three back numbers to Jackson, whither he desired it transferred. We will forward to him all the missing numbers we have, and the two numbers of the Correspondent to complete his file.

HYMENEAL.

MARRIED—At West Chester, Harrison, O., on the evening of the 26th ult., by the Rev. M. N. Warren, Dr. DAVID H. BELKNAP, of Cadiz, O., to Miss RACHEL STUBBINS, formerly of the same place.

An Apprentice Wanted.

THE subscriber wishes to take a boy of 12 or 15 years of age, to learn the TAILORING BUSINESS. One from the country will be preferred. Applicants must come well recommended.

W. BERKSHIRE.
Main street, Putnam, Ohio.
December 16, 1840. 69

A Rich New Year's Present.

YOUTH'S CABINET.

For Families and Sunday Schools, weekly, at $1 per year, in advance.

THE fourth volume of this well known and highly approved Juvenile paper commences the first week in January, 1841, edited by N. Southard. It is made up of choice Narratives, original and select, pleasing Moral and Religious, Literary and Scientific Instruction, a variety of Useful Information, Juvenile Poetry, Anecdotes, &c., all designed to promote the best good of the young. It inculcates impartial Benevolence, Temperance, and all other Christian Virtues.

It is neatly printed on half a royal sheet, and each number contains one or more engravings. It has been highly recommended by one hundred editors, and many parents and teachers, in notices and letters like the following:

From a Mother in Springfield, Mass.

"My little girl is delighted with the Cabinet. She can scarcely wait for the week to come round; and when the little welcome messenger arrives, her work or play is laid aside, to have a feast, as she calls it, with the welcome guest. She is willing to make any sabrifice rather than give up her paper."

From a Clergyman in Central New York.

"My little daughter, eight years old, is very much delighted with your paper; and indeed, I read it myself with great interest."

We would refer those who wish for a neat, appropriate paper for their children, to the Yout's Cabinet, which they will find all they could desire in such a publication.—Green Mountain Emp.

We hope all the young who can afford it, will have the opportunity of reading the Youth's Cabinet.—N. H. Baptist Register.

We must say, that it is decidedly the most interesting youth's paper we have seen.—N. York Weekly Messenger.

Mr. Southard, its Editor, has a happy faculty to convey instruction in an interesting manner, so as to leave a strong impression upon the minds of his juvenile readers. Its moral influence is decidedly good. If any family of children should unite and send one dollar, post paid, they will never be sorry that they had paid out their money for so good a paper.—Oberlin Evangelist.

☞Orders should be addressed, post paid, to the editor, at No. 9, Spruce street, New York, or 25, Cornhill, Boston.

December 23, 1840. 70

LITERARY SOUVENIR.

ON the first of January, 1841, will commence the third volume of the Literary Souvenir, enlarged and materially improved. Its form will be changed from that of folio, its present form, to a large quarto of eight pages. It will occasionally be embellished with Engravings, and also Music, arranged for the piano forte, flute, guitar, &c.

We have concluded to make the above arrangement from the fact that, on the account of the large amount of valuable matter contained in the Souvenir, many are anxious to bind their numbers for preservation. The quarto form will render them convenient for that purpose, and though the expense of publishing the paper according to the plan proposed, will at least be double the present expense, the price will not be increased. The music alone, would cost at the music stores more than the price charged for the paper, to say nothing of the engravings.

The character of the Souvenir will be somewhat changed, so as to conform more strictly with the meaning of its title—a literary remembrancer. Its columns will be filled with the choicest reading, embracing the various literary and scientific, and moral and religious subjects of the day, together with such items of news and miscellany as shall be deemed most important and useful to the general reader. While we may sometimes attempt to amuse as well as well instruct, the utmost care will be taken to avoid every thing calculated to offend the tastes of the most chaste and refined. The mechanical execution of the paper will be in a superior style, and, in short, no effort shall be wanting to render the Souvenir a fit ornament for the centre table in the parlor of the wealthy, or a desirable and useful companion for those in humbler life.

TERMS:—$2,00 per annum, payable in advance. No subscriptions received for less than half a year.

It is hoped those who wish to commence with the volume will send in their subscriptions previous to the first of January. People in the country, wishing to become subscribers, can apply to their postmaster, who will probably forward their names and money free of expense, but in case he will not, we will pay the postage, provided the cash accompanies the name.

All communications should be addressed, free of expense, to A. B. F. HILDRETH.

Lowell, Mass., Dec. 23, 1840. 70

LITERARY REPOSITORY

THE second volume of the Literary Repository will commence on the first of January next. It will be enlarged so as to contain about one-third more reading matter than at present, and will be embellished with music and engravings. The Repository is designed more particularly for the patronage of the ladies. A number of ladies will contribute to its columns, and it will contain almost every variety of reading calculated to interest the female reader, such as Poetry, Biography, History, Moral and Sentimental Tales, Religious Tales, Religious Miscellany, Science, the Fine Arts, &c. &c.

TERMS:—The Repository will be published as formerly, every other week, in quarto form, at the extremely low price of one dollar a year, payable in advance.

A title page and index will be furnished at the close of the volume.

Those who are already subscribers and wish to continue, are requested to send in the subscriptions previous to the commencement of the new volume, otherwise the paper will be discontinued.

A. B. F. HILDRETH,
Publisher & Proprietor.

Lowell, Mass., Dec., 23, 1840. 70

MISCELLANEOUS.

The following striking review of the progress of European influence in Asia, is the conclusion of an article upon the relations of England and Russia, in the October number of Blackwood's Magazine.—Charleston Mercury.

It will be little to have raised a scruple in the reader's mind on the propriety of considering Great Britain and Russia as natural enemies, if we should neglect to notice that great revolution of mankind, which at this very moment seems likely to force them into friendship. It is, by comparison, a slight thing to have negatived a foolish tendency in men's opinions which never had any facts to support it, when the dawn is already reddening in the sky of an alliance between Russia and England—not to be evaded by either—inevitably—rending like a system of wedges the old cohesions of Asiatic tyranny with Asiatic superstition—and pregnant with far more than political consequences. Already in the sublime language of Wordsworth,

"The aspiring heads of future things appear;"

already, in the mists and vapours which settle on all things which are vast, on all things which are distant, and on all things which in part belong to the future, we see those forces moulding themselves steadily which are destined to the total recasting of the Oriental world. Asia never can be Asia again. Two vast forms of Christian power have now interlocked themselves with the whole machinery of Oriental power or of Oriental influence so effectually, that, even for the sake of securing their hold upon what is won, they cannot dare to relex their grasp. No longer do we behold little teazings of the Eastern nations at their outlying maritime extremities; no longer a Portuguese fort, with a riband of land attached, an English or French factory on the continent, a Dutch one on an island; little local molestations, that spread no sense of power to the centre, hardly, by report, ever reaching the distant head or the heart. At present, we behold the following system of forces applied to Asia. That great Christian power, that depends most on physical agencies, the power that in some features most approaches a barbaric power, we behold in absolute, undisputed possession of Northern Asia, through all degrees of latitude; one clear moiety of the vast continent being gathered into unity under her sceptre. The other great colonizing power of Christendom, depending, most of all nations, upon her civilization and least upon her mere number, we behold in absolute possession, without tyranny, of a region which may be held to constitute one fifth section of Southern Asia—of that part which was not already in Christian hands. We would behold these two great potentates, Britain and Russia, the Colossus of civilization and the Colossus of physical strength, almost meeting in the centre of Asia—and from that centre destined to an expansive radiation, which if, in one sense incalculable, viz: as to the precise lines on which it may travel, is thus far subject to the clearest calculation, that it must terminate in propagating new moral agencies, a mode of civilization peculiar to Christianity, and finally (though more slowly) Christianity itself.

But this is no more than half the case: here we have but half the premises.—Looking north and south in Asia, we have seen the two frontier nations of Europe, the westernmost and easternmost, travelling with gigantic strides upon a stage of gigantic proportions. Now, look east and west, along the whole huge zone of central Asia, and at every interval of a thousand miles you see the levers of European force, moral force reposing on mighty armies, already applied to the frail structure and the false foundation of Oriental grandeur. The first Mahometan power to the westward, and interesting otherwise as the acknowledged head of Islamism, commences to the west of the Bosphorus and the Hellespont. Here is seen the shell, the crater, of a great power that in former times for two centuries, rode up to the gates of Vienna, and kept all christendom militant for ages. Never was there beheld such another instance of power cancered from within, its foundations undermined, props withdrawn or crumbling, but still self-deluded by hollow pomps and mockeries of ancient forms. Turkey, as a self-supporting power, is gone; crazy, paralytic. She is kept erect, she is held up from collapsing into ruins, by mere open force openly applied. To the charity of the great leaders of christendom, operating through their prudent jealousies of each other, the Sultan owes it that his name is not absolutely extinct. The population, properly Turkish, is gone down into a mere shadow of itself, as it stood even two centuries ago. Fortunately for Turkey, as regarded the observation of external enemies, ruinously in the sense of self-delusion, this great decay has been partially concealed by the large intermixture of other races, not exposed to the same unhappy influences. At this moment, there is no reason to suppose the genuine Turkish people, the real Osmanlis, to exceed a total of four millions from the Balkin to Bagdad. The line of Othman have reached the last stage of their career: the race is dying out, their days are numbered, and their names will soon be a fable among fables. For this system of Mahometan power, which includes Asia Minor, Egypt, Syria, in short, all that lies west of the Tigris, so completely is it coming within the net work of Christian civilization, were it merely through steam power, European travellers, commerce, and the growing necessity felt in every thriving city of throwing itself on Christian aids of science,—that, even without the late intervention of the Great Power, by the ever memorable treaty of July 15, 1840, all this region would gradually become a neutral frontier for intercourse (on as much of a liberal scale as Mahometanism can ever tolerate,) between that sensual superstition and the purity of Christian truth. It is true, no such absurd scheme will be realized as the re-colonization of Palestine by the Jews; and for this simple reason, if there were nothing otherwise in agricultural habits inconsistent with the training of men reared chiefly in towns, viz: that the land of Palestine happens to be in private occupation already wherever it is worth culture. But without this extensive scheme of colonization, local colonies may, and probably will be introduced in very many parts of Asia Minor, which, at present, is miserably under peopled; that sort of policy, which the Christian powers will compel the Sultan to introduce, cannot but invite settlers.

But this belongs to futurity. What is now certain, for all this section of Asia, is the supremacy of Christian control.—Now, travel onward from the Bosphorus to the heads of the Euphrates, and the regions of Ararat. You have advanced a thousand miles, and you find yourself on the dangerous frontier of another great Mahometan empire; but, like Turkey, a ruin, a wreck, an anarchy, and a mere wilderness over many a vast region, once populous with life. This is the beginning of Persia. And here again you find a great Christian power, and amongst the ancient Christians of Armenia, standing ready with its levers to throw the old tottering edifice from its base as circumstances of invitation offer. A vast fortress (Erivan) renders all partial reserves of no account. A powerful army—Russian in its main elements, but fitting into its discipline, whatever martial qualities or martial means are offered by the wild nations around the Caspian—is kept reined up tightly, but ready, and on the fret for any opening made to its advance.

Thirdly, move from the Tigris a thousand or twelve hundred miles to the east. You have been travelling across Persia, and you find yourself on the Indus. Ask not, for it is of no importance, how much of this country still owns the authority of the Schah, how much the authority of the Doorance prince Schah Sooja, or of minor sovereigns. All this has fluctuated since the time of Nadir Schah—that is, for the last period of 100 years. But the Persian Schah is quite as much a wreck, a phantom, as the Turkish Sultan. An inquiry made by order of Napoleon into the amount of the Persian population, reported, that in the vast area, which (if you assume for the natural limits of the Tigris to the west, the Indus to the east, the Oxus and the Caspian to the north) would repeat the dimensions of Hindostan and ought therefore naturally to carry a population of ten times thirty-two millions (the population of France) there were—how many? Something under twelve millions.

On the Bosphorus stands the whole representative force of Christendom ready for operating upon that section of Asia. A thousand miles to the west, in Armenia, stands a Russian system of power and moral force prepared to act southwards and eastwards. A thousand miles further to the east stands an English system, of the same mixed quality, in Affghanistan. A thousand miles further to the east of that stands a permanent system of British influence acting upon Burmese Asia, &c. And finally, at a thousand miles east of this is now going on such a demonstration of British aggressive power, as must place our future intercourse with China upon a footing suited to our dignity. Even in the extreme part of Asia, a new influence will probably arise for Christian nations upon the inert masses of the East.

But for the present that is less important. It is sufficient that from the Ganges and Burrampooter, westwards to the Bosphorus, comprehending three stages of a thousand to twelve hundred miles each, the Oriental population is henceforwards interveined and penetrated by Christian civilization, in a way that secures the rapid triumph of both elements in that compound power. The European civilization will come first; then Christianity, which has been the parent of that civilization, will in this case, follow—it will follow in the train of what for ourselves have been its results. To the most timid of speculators this cannot appear doubtful, because the major part of the problem has been already accomplished. The population of Hindostan, which is really great in a positive sense, though very small in relation to the extent of India, has been already placed under the influence of European civilization. A law code, modified by our lights, regulates their jurisprudence. Their commerce, diplomacy, taxation, war, treating of prisoners, &c., all are thoroughly British in their moral principles, and Asiatic only in the adaptation of those principles to climate or ancient usage. What has been actually accomplished for the population of Hindostan, may be anticipated with less difficulty for the much smaller population to the West. In the first great chamber westwards, stretching from the Indus to the Tigris, two Christian powers are now operating, instead of the one which has revolutionized India. The second great chamber westwards from the Tigris to the sea of Marmora, is now not only under the operation of all Christian nations who trade to the Levant, but is actually taken under the superveillance of the great Christian powers. In this instance we see the slow but sure advance of European light. At the end of the last century, when France made a lawless invaison of Egypt, no interest was excited by that act, (apart from that of curiosity,) except in England, and there only from anxiety for India. Egypt was shut out from the European balance of power. Now, creeping like a tide over a flat surface of shore, gradually the European system of diplomatic calculations has reached Egypt, Syria, and Asia Minor. Another generation will probably carry this tide beyond the Tigris; and if Persia should still exist at that era, she, like Turkey, will have her ruins propped up by a Congress of European princes.

But whatever may be the fate of particular sovereigns or dynasties, nobody can fail to see in this regular succession and chain of European armies, (acting, observe, everywhere as organizing forces, not as blind conquerors;) in these repeating telegraphs for carrying European influences over the whole of southern Asia, (that is, the whole of Asia not already in Christian hands,) that the great preliminary work is finished, of posting and bringing to bear the machinery of a new civilization. All the powers have taken up their positions. It ought to strike every man who fancies that Mahometanism (because better than idolatry) is compatible with a higher order of civilization, that it has never yet succeeded under any circumstances in winning for a people these results: 1. Civil liberty, or immunity from the bloodiest despotism. 2. The power of terminating from within any intestine tumults: nothing but the sword ever heals dissensions in the East. 3. Any such cohesive power as enables a people to resist foreign invaders; military conquest passes like a gale of wind thro' eastern nations. 4. Above all, any progressive state. In every thing the East has been always improgressive.

Now, in the certainty that this state of things must at length come to an end, and that the vast regions of southern Asia, (soon to have vast proportionate populations,) will begin to partake in the great movements of the human race as now occupying the two continents of Europe and America, we see a pledge of pacific counsels for both Russia and England. The ground is so vast, and Persia to much of a nearer temptation to Russia, that we see no opening even for a future ambition pointing to India. The petty objects of ambition that might have arisen on a more limited scale, are absorbed by the grander necessities opened upon each nation through the new civilization which both have assisted to diffuse.

Bible for the Blind.—The lords of her Majesty's treasury have just awarded the sum of £400 towards printing a bible for the blind, under the superintendence of a committee at Glasgow, contained in fifteen volumes, large super royal quarto, and in all there will be 3,300 volumes printed. There will be in each 2,470 pages, each containing 37 lines, and will consist of 1,100 reams of paper, weighing 9,860 pounds. The New Testament has been already completed in 4 volumes, and contains 42 lines in each page. No fewer than 10,850 volumes have already been published by the Glasgow Society for the instruction of the Blind.—London Sunday Chronicle.

Dr. S. G. Howe, of Boston, the able and excellent director of the New England Institution for the Blind at Mount Washington near Boston, carried into successful and perfect effect the printing of Bibles for the Blind, years ago. For that act, Dr. Howe deserves the "effectual, fervent prayers" of righteous men in all countries, and the gratitude of the world. It was an act which, in its effect on the minds of the unfortunate blind, resembled the great command "Let there be light and there was light."—New World.

Temperance in Russia.—A letter received from Mr. Baird at the office of the American Temperance Union, states, that he had a very pleasing interview with the Emperor of Russia, at his palace at Psarskoe Zelo, and dined with the royal family. His Majesty and the Grand Duke manifested much interest in the cause of temperance—permitted the publication of the History of Temperance Societies in the Russ, and expressed a wish that it might also be translated into the Finnish. A distinguished Russian nobleman in Courland was so convicted, by reading the history in German, of the evils of drinking ardent spirits, that he agreed to pay the government the sum which the retailers had undertaken to pay for their licences, in order to have no brandy sold on his extensive estates—a fact worthy of the best times of Temperance in any country.

The Siamese Twins, Chang and Eng.—A correspondent of the Tennessee Mirror states that in an excursion in North Carolina he paid a visit to Chang and Eng, at their residence in Wilks county, 18 miles east of Wilksborough.—He says they speak their opinions on all subjects, freely, though in moderation.—They have taken the necessary steps to become naturalized, that they might enjoy the right of suffrage and citizenship, which right of suffrage, they for the first time exercised in the contest for Governor, each one being allowed a vote.

The taxable property of Kentucky is stated to amount to over two hundred and seventy-two millions of dollars.

Resources of Ireland.—Notwithstanding all that is said about the poverty of Ireland, it will be found that she has within herself great resources. She has recently opened a new branch of trade which is likely ta be very profitable, viz: the exportation of pyrites, or sulphur prepared from the iron and copper mines. English papers state that the manufacturers find it nearly as good as the Sicily copper, and it can be furnished to them at a little more than one-third of the price. The Irish mines are increasing in productive value. The copper mine of Knockmahon stands at the head. Its weekly produce, as sold recently, amounts to $24,000; the proceeds of the first week in September amounted to $36,604. The principal lead mines are those of Asburn, Armaugh, and Cairn.—Phil. paper.

COMMUNICATION.

For the Western Recorder.

Mr. Editor: With leave of Divine Providence, I propose pursuing the following order of appointments in the Ohio District:

Cincinnati circuit, - -	Dec'r. 6, 1840.
Cincinnati station, - -	" 13, "
At home, (Twin creek ct.)	" 20, "
Miami circuit, - - - - -	" 27, "
Finley " - - -	Jan'y. 3, 1841.
Wood county Mission, - -	" 10, "
Lima circuit, - - - - -	" 17, "
Union " - - - -	" 24, "
Springfield circuit, - - -	" 31, "
Xenia " - -	Feb'y. 7, "
Twin creek " - - - - -	" 14, "
Broad Ridge " - - - - -	" 21, "
Ruddles Mills circuit, - -	" 28, "

A. H. Bassett.

P. S. When convenient to the brethren, I should be glad to be notified, by some means, what points in the circuits I have to strike. My Post Office address is Jacksonburg, Butler county, Ohio. A. H. B.

Dissolution.

THE partnership heretofore existing between the subscribers in the Putnam Foundry, under the firm of HARTLEY & ANDERSON, was this day dissolved by mutual consent.

The Putnam Foundry will hereafter be conducted by J. J. Anderson & Co.

Levi Hartley,
Jacob J. Anderson.

Putnam, Jan. 1, 1840 (Jan. 29: 23.)

Puff! Puff! Puff!!

CHEAP!

CHEAPER THAN EVER! GREAT BARGAINS!

New York at your door!

SELLING OFF AT COST!

WE so heartily despise the "gull-catching" system that we seldom advertise at all. We however give our friends and the public notice that we have just received a fine stock of

FALL AND WINTER

GOODS.

We don't profess to have brought "New York to your doors," nor to undersell every body else, nor to be "selling off at cost," nor to be "closing up," and all that sort of thing,—but we do say, that our goods are cheap enough to satisfy any reasonable person, even in these "hard times."

A. A. Guthrie & Co.

Putnam, Ohio, September 30, 1840. 3w58

Partnership Notice.

THE subscribers have formed a co-partnership under the firm of Potts & Graham, for the transaction of a general mercantile business; and will occupy for that purpose the old stand of Spear & Helmick, where their friends and others wishing to purchase goods, are respectfully solicited to call.

Francis R. Potts,
Nelson W. Graham.

Putnam, Ohio, Nov. 4. 63tf

Winslow's Compound

BALSAM OF HOARHOUND.

UNRIVALED and unequalled in curing Colds, Coughs, Asthma, Influenza, Whooping Cough, and all diseases of the Breast and Lungs, leading to Consumption, composed of the concentrated virtues of the herbs Hoarhound, Boneset, and several other vegetable substances, warranted pure from any mineral whatever.

Sold by A. Lippitt and S. Gates.

Zanesville, Nov. 4. 64tf

Notice.

BOOKS, Stationery, and Printer's Ink, for sale by A. Lippitt.

Zanesville, Nov. 4. 63tf.

DRUGS, Medicines, Paints, Dyestuffs, Oils, and Spirits Turpentine. Cheap for cash, or good horses, by A. Lippitt.

Main st., No. 72, Zanesville, Nov. 4. 63tf

New and Cheap Goods.

POTTS & GRAHAM, are now enabled by a fresh arrival of FALL and WINTER GOODS, to offer to the public a very general assortment of all articles in their line. Their stock is almost entirely new, and embraces a complete supply of DRY GOODS, GROCERIES, QUEENSWARE, HARDWARE, &c. All of which they will sell upon such terms, and conduct their business throughout upon such principles, as cannot fail to afford permanent satisfaction to all who may favor them with their custom.

☞Most kinds of country produce, including any quantity of new Butter, will be taken in exchange for goods.

Putnam, Ohio, Nov. 4. 63tf

S. C. Haver,

IN the flourishing town of Putnam has on hand 40 or 50 SADDLES ready for sale, of different qualities, comprising nearly all the varieties in fashion in our Buckeye State.

A good assortment of Bridles and Martingales: Riding and driving Whips: between 180 and 200 Carriage and heavy draft Collars, which will compare and wear with any others made here or elsewhere.

Also, fine York, Dearborn, heavy team and common Farming Harness. A lot of first rate Carriage and Buggy Harness, (brass and silver plated.)

Trunks, vallises, saddle-bags, and double covered wagon whips, varying in quality and price to suit purchasers.

The only recommendation he now offers for his work, is the testimony and long experience of his old customers and friends. He is still anxious to please and accommodate those who may call on him, and hopes to share so much of the public patronage as his attention to his business shall merit.

Putnam, April 29, 1840. 28tf

GRAHAMS MAGAZINE

AND THE

Ladies' & Gentleman's

WORLD OF LITERATURE

And Fashions.

The Casket and the Gentleman's united.

A NEW VOLUME under the above title, of the well established and fashionable Magazine, the Philadelphia Casket in conjunction with the Gentleman's Magazine, which has been every where pronounced the most readable and popular of the day, will be opened on the first of January, 1841, with an array of Contributors secured by the union, of talent and fame, which no periodical in the country can boast or pretend to rival. The December number will, however, be a specimen of the new volume. The volume will be opened with a new and beautiful type, the finest white paper, and with the first of a series of embellishments unsurpassed by any which have yet appeared in any Magazine. The style of elegance, the beauty and finish of these illustrations, and the extensive improvements which will be made in its typographical appearance, and above all the tone of its literary department, by the brilliant array of Contributors, whose articles have enriched the pages of each number, will give it a character, second to no Magazine in the Union. The character of the articles which shall appear in its pages, will be equally removed from a sickly sentimentality, and from an affectation of morality, but while a true delineation of human nature in every variety of passion is aimed at, nothing shall be found in its pages to cause a blush upon the cheek of the most pure.

THE LITERARY CHARACTER

will be sufficiently guaranteed by the reputation of both Magazines thus united, for years past.—Writers of the first rank have been regular Contributors to their pages, and the tales and sketches published in them have been widely copied and read, and the firm and independent tone of the criticisms, upon the current literature of the day, has been every where approved and commended.

THE LIST OF CONTRIBUTORS

embraces the names of most of the principal writers in America, with a respectable number of English authors. Original articles have appeared, during the last year, from the pens of the following:

Professor Ingraham,	David Hoffman, Esq.
" John Frost,	C. W. Thompson,
" N. C. Brooks,	Judge Tremper, N. Y.
" C. F. Wines,	John Du Solle, Esq
Gaptain Marryatt,	Grenville Mellen, N. Y.
Morton McMichael, Esq	P. B. Elder, Pa.
Hon. R. T. Conrad,	The author of 'Stanley,'
W. Gaylord Clark, Esq.	Edgard A. Poe, Phil'a.
C. J. Patterson, Esq.	T. G. Spear, "
Rev. T. H. Stockton,	Au'r of How. Pinckney,
Samuel W. Stockton,	Mrs. L. H. Sigourney,
E. Armstrong, Esq.	Miss C. H. Waterman,
Gen. G. P. Morris, N.Y.	Mrs. Ann Stephens,
Leigh Hunt, England,	Benson Hill, England,
Mrs. F. Kemble Butler,	Dr. J. K. Mitchell,
Park Benjamin, N. Y.	Jas. Montgomery, Eng.
Douglas Jerrold, Eng.	A. M'Makin, J.E.Dow,
Joseph C. Neal, the American Boz!	E. Holden, Esq.
	J. Beauchamp Jones,
James F. Otis, N. Y.	Mrs. E. F. Ellett,
R. S. Elliott, Pa.	Dr. T. D. English.

In addition to this brilliant array of names known to fame, the distinguished services of a host of anonymous writers of no ordinary abilities, have given worth and character to the pages of the Magazines. The series of well known nautical papers entitled, "Cruizing in the Last War," have had a run, unequalled by any series published in any Magazine, for years. The author promises to open the first of a new series of

TALES OF THE SEA,

and from his known abilities as a depictor of sea scenes and life, much may be relied upon from him in maintaining the popularity of the Magazine. Papers may be expected during the volume, also from the author of the well know articles entitled, "The Log of Old Ironside." The author of "Syrian Letters," will also lend his powerful and graceful pen, to sustain and increase the reputation of the work. The valuable aid of the author of "Leaves from a Lawyer's Port Folio," has also been secured,—and we may expect something still more thrilling from the capacious stores which a long life in the profession has enabled him to amass. An occasional Chit-Chat, with "Jeremy Short," and "Oliver Oldfellow, is also promised; with a variety of choice articles in prose and verse, from various writters of celebriety, as Contributors to the prominent Magazines of the country. The editors of both Magazines continue their services under the new arrangement. With such an array of talent, a Magazine of unrivalled attractions, may safely be promised the coming volume.

FASHIONS AND ENGRAVINGS.

In compliance with the almost unanimous wish of our lady subscribers, we shall the ensuing volume furnish them with a beautiful and correct plate of Fashions Monthly, a feature, it is believed, that will neither be unwelcome nor unpopular. These fashion plates shall be drawn from original designs from Paris and London, and may always be depended upon as the prevailing style in Philadelbhia and New York for the month in which they are issusd. These however, shall in no wise interfere with the regular and choice engravings, and music which accompany each number of the work. The splendid Mezzotint engravings from the burin of Sartain; which have been so justly admired, will be followed during the volume by several from the same hand, while the steel engravings in the best style of art, from interesting scenes shall still enrich the Magazine. The choicest pieces of music for the Piano and Guitar shall accompany each number of the work.

TIME OF PUBLICATION.

The work will be published on the first of the month in every quarter of the Union. The most distant subscriber will consequently receive it on that day, as well as those who reside in Philadelphia. In all the principal cities agents have been established, to whom the Magazine is forwarded, prior to the time of issuing it so that they may be delivered to resident subscribers by the first of the month. This is an important arrangement to distant subscribers, who become tired, importunate, and eventually discontinue many works, in consequence of the great delay by publishers.

TERMS.—THREE DOLLARL per annum. Or two Copies yearly for FIVE DOLLARS, invariably in advance, post paid. No new subscriber received without the money, or the name of a responsible agent. For the accommodation of those who may wish to subscribe for either of the following Philadelphia perodicals, this is made. For Five Dollars current money free of postage, we will forward Graham's Magazine, and Godey's Lady's Book, for one year.

LIBERAL PROPOSAL

Address, post paid Geo. R. Graham,
South-west corner of Chesnut and Third streets, Philadelphia.

December 23, 1840. 70

Notice.

ALL persons indebted to the late firm of Hartley & Anderson, are earnestly requested to call at the Foundry and make settlement, as the change of owners makes this step absolutely necessary. We ask the attention of all persons concerned, to this notice.

J. J. Anderson & Co.

Putnam, Jan. 1, 1840. (Jan. 29: 23.)

Dissolution.

THE partnership heretofore existing betwe[en] S. B. Johnson and J. M. Kirkpatrick, u[nder] the firm of S. B. Johnson & Co. was dissol[ved] by mutual consent, on Thursday 19th inst.

S. B. Johnson,
J. M. Kirkpatrick

Zanesville, March 31, 1840. 32tf

William Green,

CLOCK AND WATCH REPAIRER, SILVERSMIT[H] AND JEWELLER,

CAN be found at his shop on Main stre[et] Putnam, a few doors north of J. C. Gut[h]rie's store, where he will do his best to accomm[o]date customers. He keeps on hand an assor[t]ment of spectacles, watch trimmings, pencils, &[c.]

As far as we have tried Mr. Green as a wat[ch] repairer he has given us good satisfaction.—E[d.]

April 22, 1840. 35tf.

Ohio State Journal,

FOR THE SESSION.

THE proceedings of the next General Assembly being looked to with much interest, th[e] publishers of the Ohio State Journal assures i[ts] patrons, that his arrangements will insure, a[s] heretofore, reports which may be relied upon f[or] correctness and fairness.

In addition to the general object of the Jou[r]nal, it will be devoted, during the Session of th[e] Legislature, to a careful and impartial detail [of] the proceedings in that body. Arrangement[s] will also be made to procure an abstract of th[e] proceedings in Congress; and the readers of th[e] Journal may depend upon the latest and mos[t] important news from Washington. For the pu[r]pose of extending such information, and increas[ing] its circulation among those who are not it[s] regular subscribers, the Journal will be furnishe[d] on the following terms, invariably in advance:

Tri-Weekly, for the session,.....$2,00
Semi-Weekly,.....do..... 1,50

Charles Scott, Publisher.

Columbus, November 13, 1840.

Glass Manufactory.

THE subscriber having dissolved his connexion with the former company, has taken th[e] GLASS WORKS below town under his ow[n] management.

WINDOW GLASS, double and single, a[s]seizes, and of superior quality will be kept con[-]stantly on hand for sale on reasonable terms.—The experience of the proprietor, in the manufacture of the article, will insure all made to b[e] of the best quality. Call and see.

S. B. Johnson.

Zanesville, Ohio, May 6, 1840. 37

O. WHITE, BOOK BINDER, No. 10[4] Main Street, Zanesville, Ohio.

January 15, 1840. 21tf

CABINET AND CHAIR

FACTORY.

THE subscribers still continue to manufacture and keep on hand, at their old stand a few doors south of the market house in th[e] town of Putnam, a large assortment of

CABINET WARE

AND

CHAIRS,

CONSISTING, IN PART, OF

Splendid black walnut and mahogony dressing and plain bureaus,
Peer, card, center, side, dining and breakfast tables,
Sofas, side-boards, washing stands, ottomans,
Dressing and writing tables,
French, fancy and high post bedsteads,
Secretaries, clock cases, cradles, cribs and book cases,
Grecian, rush, cane and windsor chairs,
Sociables, settees and children's chairs.

In short every thing in their line necessary to furnish a house, either in high or common style and at such prices as will satisfy all who will favor them with their custom. All the recommendation they have to offer, is, that they have been able to secure a continuance of their old customers and friends. They hope by the quality of their work and a strict attention to business to share a portion of the public patronage.

They have for sale a lot of first rate black walnut veneering and a lot of bureau knobs of the best kind and quality.

Turning done in the best style and shortest notice. Cherry & Gray.

Putnam, Ohio, October 28, 1840. 62tf

Session Ohio Statesman.

WE propose to issue the Statesman, during the ensuing session of the Ohio Legislature, on the following terms, viz:

Tri-Weekly, during the session,		$2 00
Semi-Weekly,	" "	1 50
Weekly,	" "	1 00

Persons subscribing will please designate which paper it is that they desire.

No subscription will be received unless payment is made in advance.

We shall have good reporters, and use what industry we are capable of employing on our paper, to give a correct and extensive view of all their doings.

The proceedings of Congress will also be duly given as heretofore.

S. & M. H. Medery.

Columbus, Nov, 13, 1840.

THE

WESTERN RECORDER

IS PUBLISHED EVERY WEDNESDAY.

☞The office of the Recorder is five and a half miles west of Zanesville.

TERMS.

1. The Western Recorder will be published weekly, on an imperial sheet, at $2 00 per annum, in advance: $2 50 at the end of three months; $3 00 at the end of the year.

2. No discontinuances will be allowed, except at the discretion of the publisher, until all arrearages are paid.

3. To all ministers having regular pastoral charges, who do any thing at all for the paper, if they will direct us where, a copy shall be sent gratis; any other who forward to us $10 00 for new subscribers, shall have six copies sent to any address he may give.

4. All letters designed for the paper, must be directed to "C. Springer, Meadow Farm, Muskingum, Ohio."

5. A failure to notify a discontinuance before the expiration of the subscription year, will be considered a new engagement.

CHARACTER.—The pages of the Western Recorder will be open to discussion on all moral questions;—it will give articles on Literature, Mechanics, Agriculture,—an abstract of Religious and Political intelligence, and whatever may be interesting and instructive to families in general. A portion of its columns will be open to Advertisements and Prices Current,—another portion to sustain the interests of the Methodist Protestant Church in the West.—These two latter objects will not likely occupy more than one page.

The Recorder will take a firm stand against Clerical Supremacy.

THE WESTERN RECORDER.

SPRINGER, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER. TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM IN ADVANCE. | Vol. 2.--No. 19. | ZANESVILLE, OHIO, WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 30, 1840. | Whole No. 71. | JOHN W. WHITE, PRINTER. $2.50, IN THREE MONTHS; $3, END OF YEAR

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

WITHAMSVILLE, O., DEC. 12, 1840.

Br. Springer: It appears to be the duty, according to Discipline, of a minister in the M. P. [Church] who is a superintendent of a station or circuit to report the condition thereof, to the [Conference] of the District, once a quarter if practicable. In the discharge of this duty I beg a place in your useful miscellany.

I commenced my ministerial labors on the Cincinnati circuit, embracing Hamilton and part of Butler counties, immediately after the adjournment of the Ohio Annual Conference, which was held in Cincinnati in August last.

There are ten or eleven places for preaching on this circuit, each of which is to be supplied once in the word of life every two weeks. I should rejoice were it in my power, to report the conversion of dozens and scores of souls. This I cannot do. It is, however, a matter of gratitude to God that we have an existence as a people, and humbly hope we constitute a part of God's [spiritual] church on earth, which shall be saved in heaven.

Notwithstanding the many failures and declensions in religion, all over the land, all things considered, I think there is a considerable amount of piety within the bounds of our charge among men and women of deep piety, who love God and delight to do His will on earth. Those who have taken up the cross—those who, if I mistake not, would suffer martyrdom in preference to a recantation of their faith in Christ. May they be blessed a little longer with the temptations of sin for the faith once delivered to the saints, and they will crown them with everlasting victory.

Notwithstanding the admission, that we have a large number of pious souls among us, it is a lamentable fact that there is too small a portion of real christianity among many of us; we, as a church, I tremblingly fear, are defective in spirituality—our piety is too superficial. The primitive object in raising up and organizing the people called Methodists, was to spread holiness over the land; that they should be a holy people, a peculiar people zealous to maintain good works. Is not every sermon or address from the pulpit, every prayer from the altar, and our secret [meetings] from the closet, aim at this object, and all made subservient to bring about a greater amount of holiness in the church?

Our first quarterly meeting was held at Bethesda [Chapel], a neat brick church about ten miles from Cincinnati. The meetings were solemn; the people were attentive to the word preached. The congregation on Sabbath large and respectable. The Lord's Supper was administered to a number of devout communicants. No special excitement nor conversions professed or made known yet, all things considered, it was a good meeting. Blessed be the name of the Lord.

In Withamsville we have a society which promises well. It was much increased the last conference year by the labors and superintendency of Br. Crall, my predecessor on the circuit. Would to God his successor may be blessing near as successful in winning souls and leading them to the church as he was.

The society stands greatly in need of a house for public worship, at present the school house is used for that purpose I am happy to say that society has come to the determination to make a vigorous effort to erect a neat and commodious building to be dedicated to the worship of Almighty God, for the benefit of the Methodist Protestant Church. The contemplated house, it is supposed, will cost from eight hundred to one thousand dollars. But how can this [sum] be raised by such a small society, with so few wealthy members? says one. "Faith laughs at impossibility, and says it shall be done."—Without attempting to suggest the method of raising funds to build the house, permit the writer to say, that it is important to our prosperity, and existence as a church, that a suitable building should be erected at or near Withamsville. We expect to be a permanent people in any good or respectable neighborhood, unless we have houses to worship in? I think not. The congregation at Newtown is on the increase, and more encouraging than otherwise. Many listen to the word of truth attentively. May it sink deep root in their hearts.

[Withamsville] as I know, the people here are respectable of all kind. But what is the reason more do not come out on the side of the Lord and take a stand in the ranks of the virtuous, pious and holy? Revivals of religion have been numerous in our happy country, of late years. They are all necessary and should be prayed for and labored after, by every proper means. Would it not be well to walk about Zion; mark her bulwarks; examine her spiritual condition; and see if declensions are visible to the eye, and things to do good—there to make a vigorous and concentrated effort in preaching, expostulation, religious conversation, singing, reading, prayer, and other means of grace, in view of holiness in time, and heaven in eternity.

Br. Bassett will please accept this through you [for the] report.

Your affectionate brother in Christ,

REUBEN T. BOYD.

ADAMSVILLE CIRCUIT, OHIO, DEC. 6, 1840.

Br. Ragan: I would inform you, through the [columns] of the Western Recorder, that our circuit is looking up. We held our first quarterly meeting at Hopewell, on the 21st of November, and were favored with the labors of Brs. Springer, Reeves and Lesslie. Three were added to the church at this meeting. It lasted four days, and closed in a good state of feeling.

In consequence of the affliction of my preacher Br. Inskeep, this circuit had but little preaching last year. Several classes were much disturbed and scattered. I am trying to gather up the fragments that remain, and have some prospect of folding and saving the stray sheep.

We held a protracted meeting at Union meeting house, commencing Dec. 1st. Although we had no accessions at this meeting, yet one professed the remission of sin, and the members were much refreshed. We have an excellent society of forty-five members at this place.

Yours, &c., T. FOSTER, Sup.

UNION CT., OHIO CON., DEC. 9, 1840.

Br. Springer. Since conference, we have a cheering prospect in several places on this circuit, a number of conversions, and an addition of thirty-eight members. May the Lord cause revival to succeed revival, until the circuit shall be in a general flame, and until the whole world shall be christainized and liberalized!

I. C. HUNT, Superintendent.

WESTMINSTER, ALLEN, O., DEC. 14, 1840.

Br. Springer: For the information of the President, and encouragement of the church, I would inform you, that this circuit has received several valuable additions, while the church has been much revived. Our next quarterly meeting will be held in Westminster, Jan. 30, 1841. Brs. Isaac Hunt, Flood, Jr., and David Moore are respectfully invited to attend.

JOHN M. YOUNG.

WABASH CT., TIPPECANOE COUNTY, IA., December 9, 1840.

Mr. Editor: The conference appointed me as superintendent of Wabash circuit, which lies west of the Wabash river, commencing ten miles below Lafayette, in Tippecanoe county, and extends up through the battle ground, across Tippecanoe river, through Carroll and White counties, and into Logansport, Cass county.

The members on this circuit appear to be a kind, loving, and God-fearing people, ready to weep with those that weep, and rejoice with those that do rejoice. Many of them appear to be on the wing for Heaven.

Our quarterly meeting closed on the 7th inst. We had a time of refreshment from the presence of the Lord. Our President, Br. Hannah, and Br. Kains were in attendance, and preached with acceptance to large and attentive congregations. Our next quarterly meeting is to be held at Reaves' school house, six miles west of Lafayette, on the 2d Saturday of February, 1841. We request the assistance of brethren, at a distance, on that occasion.

A. HOZEY, Sup.

MISCELLANEOUS.

From the Lady's Book.

DOCTOR WINTER'S NOTIONS.

BY MRS. S. J. HALE.

"The glorious feelings which give us life, Grow torpid in the worldly throng."—Faust.

They had been discussing the merits of a new novel, when one of the young ladies, somewhat abruptly, asked Doctor Winter if he did not think it wrong, or very foolish for parents to prohibit their children from reading works of fiction.

"Why," replied the Doctor, "that is a question which must be decided by circumstances. If the parents are agreed in sentiment on this point, if their example is such as uniformly to command the respect as well as love of their children, and if they have sense, taste, and intelligence to direct their pursuits and amusements to noble or more useful objects, then they may not fear to prohibit novels, but as a general rule, I think the prohibition does more injury than good."

"Then you would not prohibit them?"

"No—I would rather teach those under my care to discriminate for themselves that which was worthless; I would cultivate that moral taste till they could not relish the vile, vulgar trash which fills so large a portion in our circulating libraries—I would hear them read and discuss the merits of our popular authors, and make them feel that they could confide in my judgment, when I decided that a work was not suitable for their perusal."

"But it takes so much time," said Miss Barker, "to do all you have described, and fathers are busy earning money and mothers in spending it—and their poor daughters are left to their own ardent desires, the chief of which is novel reading."

"And if that were prohibited," said the Doctor, "what would be your resource?"

"Why, I fear we should break the rule," said Miss Maria.

"I fear so too," rejoined the Doctor, "and I think there are worse consequences resulting from the loss of family confidence, than the perusal of the most idle romance, can usually cause. I once witnessed such a scene, and the impression has never left me."

The young ladies urged him to tell the story.

"It is several years since," he resumed. "I recollect it was my first visit to Boston. I had letters to some of the most distinguished families, and was introduced into what is called by courtesy, "the first circle." I passed my time very pleasantly, in a round of dinner parties, balls, and the usual fashionable amusements, and had been nearly three weeks in the city, before I found leasure to return the early call one of my father's friends had made me.

"Mr. Tuttle was a very rich man, and highly respected 'on 'Change,' as rich men are—but his strictly religious character, which he was very scrupulous to sustain, prevented his associating much in fashionable parties. He had been liberally educated, and designed to become a clergyman, but when he had completed his theological studies, the state of his health was such that he was obliged to go on a voyage at sea, and finally he entered business as a merchant. He had been very successful, was a millionare, and his daughters great matches.

"I sent up my name—Mr. Tuttle was out—but his wife met and welcomed me with all a woman's cordiality and grace, when she wishes to please; very different indeed, from the formal reception I had anticipated. She assured me they had been expecting my visit, that she felt quite acquainted with me, because she had entertained so high an opinion of my father, and so on. Compliments cost nothing, would that railroads were as easily made. Mrs. Tuttle led the way to her private parlor, observing, that she wished to introduce me to her daughters as they were. In this she showed a managing mother's tact; for her daughters really needed no foreign aid of ornament. They were lovely enough in their morning dresses; indeed so very beautiful were the two eldest, that I wondered that I had not seen them at the balls I had attended. I soon found it was not for want of interest in such amusements, for they overwhelmed me with inquiries respecting how I had enjoyed them, and then came a sigh and those protentious words—'Papa does not approve of balls!'

"I endeavored to change the conversation by alluding to the book which had so chained their attention when I entered, remarking that I supposed they enjoyed their leisure more that the trifling did society. As I ended I laid my hand on the volume, it was 'Eugene Aram,' then just published!

"I have serious objections to the Bulwer novels, though they have some high merits; but I should never recommend 'Eugene Aram,' for a young lady's reading. However, I found they had no scruples on the subject. They began and poured out their eulogiums on Bulwer and his 'charming novels.' 'Pelham was so interesting, so witty, and full of such delightful descriptions of high life,' and 'Paul Clifford,' was such a fascinating hero—so brave and generous. What signifies his robberies?—Adelaide, the second daughter, declared she should have loved him as well as she did. And then the 'Disowned,' 'what lofty sentiments, what deep, powerful pathos,' &c., &c. Thus they went on while their delighted mother told me, though how she edged in the words no one could tell, that Susan and Adelaide were so fond of Bulwer's works, they had read through 'Eugene Aram,' since the preceding afternoon.

"I tried hard to make them praise my favorite writers, Miss Austin and Miss Sedgwick—but it would not do. The former was too natural, and only seemed to know the middle classes—no lords or ladies of any note figured in her volumes; and Miss Sedgwick, who only described American life and scenery, could not expect to be read—except by country girls. We want pictures of fashionable manners of the beau monde in Europe, said Miss Susan. 'There is not any spirit or originality in the works of Miss Austin,' said Miss Adelaide.—'One might as well read a tract or sermon.'

"I do rather like 'Pride and Prejudice,' said Rosanna, the youngest and much the plainest of the three. I thought at the moment she was prettier than her sisters, for there seemed more of the true woman's delicacy in her nature. In the midst of these discussions on novels and fashionable life, Mr. Tuttle entered, unexpectedly, I presume. The conversation ceased instanter. I observed that Susan dexterously threw her handkerchief over the 'charming book,' and gathering it up placed it behind her on the sofa, and then hastily reaching her work from the table, seemed wholly absorbed in the progress of her needle.

After the usual salutations, inquires, and welcomes, to me, Mr. Tuttle, who appeared very fond of his children, told Adelaide that her eyes looked heavy, and he feared she confined herself to her work too closely, (she was knitting a bead purse,) and inquired if she had been out that morning."

"No papa—I have been so engaged."

"To finish that purse, I presume. I wish my dear," turning to his wife, "you would be more particular, and see that these girls walk out every pleasant morning. I do not wish to have them so constantly engaged at their work."

"You know, my love, their work is designed for charity. How can they be better employed?" And Mrs. Tuttle looked so innocently on her husband.

I thought of 'Eugene Aram,' and determined to probe the matter a little.—Perhaps I was wrong, but I wished to learn the father's opinion of his daughters' studies. So I asked him if there were any new books worth reading in the 'Literary Emporium.'

He replied that really he did not know. He found little time for reading, except the newspapers; but his daughters could tell me.

"O," said I, with a very grave face, "I was not alluding to the new novels."

"Novels!" he repeated, with a solemnity of accent that was almost severe—"my daughters never read novels; I never permit them to be brought into my house." Here the young ladies looked at each other, and their mother grew fidgety.

"But you do not utterly discard novels?" said I, inquiringly.

"Indeed I do, sir. I know exceptions are often made by Christians, nor will I say that all novels are bad. But the habit of novel reading is bad, most pernicious to young ladies, and my girls, as they have never been in this exciting and dangerous mode of killing time, find, as you see, their amusements in such employments as are either beneficial to ourselves or others. They never read novels, Mrs. Tuttle being entirely of my way of thinking."

"Were not the ladies utterly confounded?" said Miss Barker.

"Not in the least," replied the Doctor—"on none save Rosanna; she blushed crimson, and looked so pretty, that I half fell in love with her; but the mother and her two eldest daughters wore an air of the greatest nonchalance. It was quite a scene for a drama.

"Whom do you think most to blame in this matter?" inqured Miss Barker.

"The mother. Mr. Tuttle was wrong, very wrong, in devoting his whole time, as he did, to the acquisition of wealth. No doubt that this first laid the foundation of the mischief—the want of sympathy and confidence between the husband and wife. He had made business the duty of his life, till he had no taste for any other worldly pursuit. It was easy for him to renounce all pleasures but the one of money getting—so he called all others sinful, forgetting that the word of God has declared, the love of money is the root of all evil. It was this bitter root which was destroying his family. His riches had given them leisure and the means of luxury, and they felt the want of amusements. He could not spare time to regulate these or to teach them the true principles of self-government. He was proud, indeed, to bestow on them every means of self-indulgence. And this led the mother, a vain woman, whose object of ambition it was to get her daughters into the most fashionable society, to a series of falsehoods and dissimulations in order to give them accomplishments considered most fashionable. Novel-reading was one of these; she foolishly supposed it would teach them the beau ideal of European manners. To obtain these graces, she was willing to sacrifice truth, that pearl of the soul, the reverence for which, when once lost, is rarely restored."

"Did you become acquainted with them?" inquired Miss Maria.

"No—I never saw them afterwards. But their history might serve for a warning to many of our would-be-fashionables. Mr. Tuttle failed a year or two since, and is now with his family, gone to the "far West," to build up some new settlement among the back-woodsmen. I doubt not, that he will be a much better man for this reverse; but his wife and daughters will have hard lessons to learn. I hope one will be that of sincerity."

WESTERN RECORDER.

ZANESVILLE:

WEDNESDAY, ... DECEMBER 30, 1840.

Inaugural Address

OF THE

GOVERNOR OF THE STATE OF OHIO,

DELIVERED TO

BOTH BRANCHES OF THE LEGISLATURE,

December 16, 1840.

Gentlemen of the Senate and House of Representatives:

Having been properly advised of my election to the office of Governor of the State, I am here, in obedience to the law, to enter upon the discharge of those duties which the Constitution and laws of Ohio devolve upon that officer.

Few and comparatively unimportant as are the duties which our Constitution has assigned to the Chief Executive Magistrate of the State, still it is obvious that an upright and faithful discharge of these is due to the interests, as well as the just expectations of the people.

Whilst I am fully impressed with that truth, so prominent in all systems of representative government, that every public functionary, chosen by the people, is but the instrument selected for the execution of those principles of government which prompt the bestowment of their suffrages upon him, yet I cannot omit the present, as the most proper occasion for expressing the deep sense I entertain, of the honor which, in this instance, that selection has conferred upon me. The grateful recollection which I shall ever cherish of this distinguished testimonial of its confidence, with the interest I cannot but feel, in common with every citizen, for the advancement of the lasting prosperity and true glory of the State, will, I trust, furnish at all times adequate motives to myself, and sure guaranties to the people, for at least an honest and faithful effort, in all things falling within the constitutional limit of Executive duty.

The narrow limits within which Executive power is circumscribed by the Constitution of Ohio, has been the subject of much curious speculation, of no little censure by some, and of high encomium by others. Neither the Constitution of the United States, nor those of few, if any of the States in the Union, furnish a parallel to this strongly defined feature in ours. With us the Executive has no agency whatever in the enactment of laws, except the very feeble and humble one, if agency it may be called, of "RECOMMENDING such measures as he may deem expedient." The laws, when passed through both branches of the Legislature, are not submitted for Executive approval; nor has he in any contingency that "Veto power" which, by one class of political philosophers, has been deemed essential to protect the people against a supposed hasty, impolitic, or unconstitutional action of the legislative department. Except in one or two instances of very subordinate character, the power of appointment to office by the Governor is limited to such vacancies as may occur in the recess of the Legislature; and such appointments, when made, expire, by express limitation, at the close of the next succeeding session of that body. The admirers of a strong Executive, have, in my judgment, most erroneously supposed, that a large patronage, resulting from the power of appointment to office, was a necessary branch of Executive power, in order to give stability to the government, and secure a prompt and faithful execution of the laws. The denial of this, as well as the VETO POWER, to the Executive, by our Constitution, (forming as they do a striking peculiarity,) can probably only be rationally accounted for, by reference to the history of the time which gave it birth.

The Constitution of Ohio was formed in November, 1802, very soon after a most animated struggle between two great political parties in the United States, which had resulted in the election of Mr. Jefferson to the Presidency. Of the questions which divided the people of that day, that touching the powers and patronage of the Executive was prominent. They who favored a restricted power, and stinted Executive patronage prevailed; and of this school (then denominated Republican) was the convention that framed our Constitution. A fearful jealousy of Executive power, with a strong conviction of the pernicious influence of Executive patronage, all will agree, are indelibly impressed upon their work: and our experience of nearly forty years, has given abundant proofs of the wisdom which (in this respect at least) exerted its influence upon their labors. Under this system, Ohio, it is believed, has advanced, with a pace equal to any of her sister States, in the augmentation of her population, and in the development of her resources: nor in those laws and social institution which advance the intellectual and moral condition of a people, need she fear a comparison with much older communities, governed by different organic laws. Under this Constitution, the rights of person and property have been fully protected; all the guaranties of civil liberty have been preserved, and in the vicissitudes of war and peace, the laws have in general been promptly and vigorously enforced. If occasional, and even flagrant exceptions, to this view of our history, are to be found, it will be readily seen, that they were of short duration, and had not their origin in the want of Executive power to prevent or control them. After an interval of forty years, the people of the United States have again agitated the subject of a strong or restricted Executive action in the Federal Government, and again decided it, as they did in 1800—furnishing to the citizen of Ohio another proud testimonial of the excellence, in this particular, of the Constitution under which he lives.

I advert to this subject now with no view to particular legislation, but upon the supposition that a contingency may arise when it may become the duty of the Legislature to express, in the usual way, the opinions of the State upon it, in reference to some modification of the Executive power, as defined in the Constitution of the United States.

Under our complex system of government, no subject has given rise to greater difficulty, nor variety of opinion, than that of the true division of the legislative power, under the Constitution, between the General Government and the States.

On all subjects of this character, prudence and patriotism alike demand, that both parties should forbear, if possible, to enter the field of conflict in pursuit of a questionable claim of jurisdiction. That spirit of concession, so powerfully operative in the formation of the Federal Constitution, should always be invoked by those, whose duty it may be, either as officers of the General or State authorities, to fix its true interpretation. When we regard, however, the invariable tendency of power to reach after still further and more extended dominion; and when we consider the obvious advantage, which the National Government enjoys in a conflict with a single State of the Union, arising from its greater wealth and patronage, and by consequence its superior influence over public opinion, it becomes the obvious duty of the State Legislatures to watch with vigilence, and, on all questions not within the province of the judiciary, to assert, in a peaceful, yet resolute tone, the claims and powers of the weaker party. The present financial condition of our State, as well as the intrinsic importance of the subject, will, I am sure, justify me in bestowing, at this time, a passing notice, on a claim often preferred by Ohio, with many other States in the Union, the adjustment of which, though at one time on the point of completion, still remains a subject open for the consideration and final action of Congress.

Several years ago, Congress, by very full majorities in both branches, passed an act providing for distributing the moneys arising from the sale of public lands among the States. This act was predicated upon the proposition that the public lands were held by Congress in trust; that the objects of the trust were specified in the deeds of cession comprehending these lands; that these deeds of cession were compacts; that the parties to these compacts had agreed that the lands so ceded should be sold by the General Government, and the moneys arising from the sale should be appropriated to the payment of the then National Debt, and then the remainder should be distributed among the several States of the Union in a specified proportion. At the time of the passage of this bill the National Debt was entirely extinguished, and it was believed by Congress that the contingency had occurred, upon which the distribution among the States should commence. This argument, derived from the notion of a compact embracing the subject matter of the bill, did not comprehend that portion of the public domain embraced within the purchase of Louisiana and Florida, ceded directly to the General Government, by France and Spain respectively.

The propriety of subjecting this last class to the principle of distribution, was founded on a variety of considerations. It was believed by many, whose opinions are entitled to great consideration, that the public domain was not properly, nor ever should be, considered a source of revenue to the national treasury. A belief then prevailed, to such extent as to amount to almost universal admission, that under any properly adjusted system of impost duties on foreign goods, the moneys arising from that source would be always equal to the wants of the General Government in time of peace, whilst those wants should be limited by that strict economy and republican simplicity which should always characterize the institutions of a free people. The principles of administration, then and since avowed by the General Government, also give to this claim of the States an equity, which under other circumstances, might not be clearly appear. With very few exceptions, the General Government will expend no money out of the national treasury for the internal improvement of the country. This necessarily left the whole expense of prosecuting a system of internal improvement to be borne by the States, and for which the States have contracted debts that bear heavily upon their citizens, in the shape of direct taxes. Many of the works thus undertaken, were of a character truly national, and demanded alike by the enterprising spirit of the age, and the true interests of the whole country. In the same spirit of enlightened patriotism, and believing that our institutions are based upon equality, and that every such system implies equality in knowledge, and the means of attaining to it as nearly as possible, systems of common school education, carrying its benefits alike to the high and the lowly, the rich and the poor, have been adopted by many of the States. These impose additional taxes upon the people of the States, which, though as yet cheerfully paid, I am proud to declare, in our State, do nevertheless go to promote objects of vital import, as well to the nation collectively, as the States, considered in their separate and sovereign character. Against any appropriation for this great and essentially national object, the doors of the Federal treasury have been, and probably in all time to come will remain forever closed. These and other kindred considerations brought Congress, the legitimate trustees of the fund, to the conclusion that it should be distributed among the States. The Federal representation of each was assumed as the most equitable rule of distribution, and adopted accordingly.

It would seem that the justice and propriety of conceding this claim to the States, should not now be a question.—By the passage of the act to which I refer, Congress, the proper trustees of the fund, and the only legitimate guardians of the national treasury, has acknowledged the right, and given its sanction to the expediency of the measure. The reason, and the only reason, why we are not at this moment in the enjoyment of our proportion of this rich fund, is to be found in the fact, that the President, then in the Executive chair, refused his assent to the bill for that purpose; thus, by the will of one man, nullifying the combined resolves of the representatives of both the People and the States. It is a singular fact, and worthy our attention, as illustrating the operation of the veto power of the President; and the influence it gives to the opinion of one man, over the opinions of many, that a majority of the sovereign States of the Union have, at various times, insisted on the distribution of this fund, as a matter of policy, and many of them as a matter of positive right, and Congress have, in pursuance of this undoubted expressions of the wishes of the States and People, enacted a law; and yet, by the simple interposition of the will of one other branch of the Government, the will and power of the People and the States are rendered of no effect.

Neither duty nor inclination invite me to bring to your notice all those subjects to which your attention has been called by my predecessor, in the proper discharge of his duties; yet, in the present condition of our affairs as a State, and in view of the onerous taxation, which must continue for some time to press heavily on the People, I have thought it my imperative duty, at the earliest possible moment to solicit your attention to this subject.

It is scarcely possible to suggest an idea touching the proper revenues of the State or our prospects as a People, without associating with these, in our thoughts, the condition of that currency which is the measure of value to all property and labor, and which therefore may be considered as one of the indispensable elements of a social state of existence. Wherever society has advanced to the point where there is such a division of labor, as that the products of one become necessary to another, there some representative of the value of such exchangeable commodities has been invented. As any community advances in population, and multiplies the variety and quantity of its productions, this representative of value also increases in amount, so as to ensure a ready and convenient transfer of the labor of one portion to another, without the slow, and in many instances, impracticable process of barter between the two. Wherever a thriving and industrious community, with ample means to apply its labor to future acquisitions, has been found, there the proceeds of that labor in the future have supplied the place of this medium of exchange, in the form of credit; and this last has, by experience, been found in general so safe, that in governments where a stable order of things prevails, and the rights of the citizens are well protected, it has obtained universal prevalence. Amongst the inventions of nations most commercial, and farthest advanced in civilization, to supply this medium of trade, banks of circulations, as modern institutions of that sort are called, have borne a conspicuous part. After the experience of hundreds of years since their first appearance, they still survive, and may be said at this time, to be more prevalent than at any former period. So thoroughly have these institutions been wrought into the texture of the affairs of the world, that they have, even in our country, been chartered and sustained by the common consent of those who differed widely on every other great question of public policy. It is not now, therefore, a question whether banks shall continue amongst us in Ohio; but only, under what modifications and restrictions they shall be permitted to live. With three or four exceptions, the charters of all the banks in Ohio will expire in two years from this time. They have, I believe, at this time a debt due them, which in the aggregate amounts to about ten millions of dollars. If their charters are not to be renewed, then it is not merely the dictate of prudence, but the command of necessity, that they should cease to make further issues, and by every proper means endeavor to collect their debts, and close finally their entire business. Should the great curtailment, almost ruinous, which has taken place in the circulation of the banks of this State within the last eighteen months be followed by the collection of the debts due the banks, while their capital remains unemployed, it must produce a state of things in this country which has never been paralleled by any of those contingencies in trade, or unusual expansions and contractions in banking, which in former times we have had occasion to deplore. With the present Legislature it remains to determine whether the permanent interests of the State are to be promoted by encountering such a crisis.

As the establishment of some permanent system of banking in this State devolves on the Leaislature, and as that responsibility must be encountered now, and as the subject is one of such pervading and deep moment, I have thought that my duty would not be discharged without adding my recommendation to the universal expectation of the people, that it should receive your early and most anxious consideration. I am aware that the subject has been, and is considered one of great difficulty in theory, and hazardous in practice.

If we analize all the objections to banks, as instruments for furnishing a currency, it will be found that they resolve themselves mainly into two, which are said in practice to be the natural results of the system.

In the first place, it is said that the banks use the credit which their charters give them to extend the circulation of their paper; that, either from imprudent management, or from fraudulent motives, they at times refuse to pay gold or silver for their notes; that this depreciates the value of their paper, and to the extent, more or less, of such depreciation, occasions a loss to the holders of their bills.—That instances have occurred in the past history of the Banks, to warrant this objection, no one can deny. But it is not true that this has been either an invariable or general consequence of our system of banking. The occurrences upon which this objection is founded, have been occasional, with chartered institutions, and not general. If we compare the losses sustained by the community, from the partial and total failures of incorporated banks to redeem their promises, with the failures and bankruptcies of individuals engaged in trade, to the same extent, we shall find the latter exceed those of the former class by an almost incalculable sum. That banks under the management of men, like all others of our race, not perfect, either in integrity or wisdom, have sometimes failed, is a fact not less rationally inferred, from the imperfection of all human institutions than it is clearly shown, by historical facts. It could not be expected that any contrivance of man would always and invariably, produce the good, and nothing else, which it was designed to effect. Our admirable system of government sometimes, through the wilful delinquency of those to whose care it is entrusted, fails to bring us all the blessings it is calculated to bestow; yet, for these occasional failures, no American statesman thinks of abandoning our system of republican liberty, and going back to the royal or despotic governments of former times, for a better state of things.

If the community were deprived of that credit which is now furnished by banks, any one conversant with the enterprising spirit of our people will, at once, see that individuals and voluntary associations would furnish that credit in other forms. It then becomes a question, which of these two is safest to the laboring and productive classes? If this be the true question, and our experience is not utterly deceptive, its solution at once results in favor of incorporated companies, guarded by every provision which the wisdom of the Legislature may suggest.

The second objection to banks is, that they expand their circulation at one time to an unnatural extent, and thus raise the price of labor and property; and by a sudden withdrawl of that circulation, either from necessity or choice, reduce the value of both,—thus, reducing the value of the debtor's means of payment, in effect augmenting the amount of the creditor's demand against him. That this may be, and has been often done by banks, is certainly true; but that the same amount of credit in any other form, or a sudden influx of the precious metals, and its sudden efflux, would produce the same evils is equally true. Instances of the latter kind are numerous, and too well known to justify me in recapitulating them here, in which banks had not the remotest influence; happening in countries too, where a metallic was the only currency.

In those instances, however, in which banks have produced either of the evils complained of, it is worthy of consideration, whether the fault lay in the institutions themselves, or originated in an extraneous influence exerted upon them.—In the notable instance of suspension of specie payments by the Bank of England in 1797, it is a well known fact, that an order of the King and Council given to the bank, produced it, and that it was continued by act of Parliament from time to time, until the year 1823, when by the judicious arrangements of the bank, it resumed payment without producing any derangement in the commerce of the country, or prejudice to the finances of the kingdom. The large issues, and consequent suspensions of the banks in our country, which took place from 1812 to 1820, have been, with great justice, ascribed to the loans made by the Government of the banks which were the only means of prosecuting the war; which, returning upon them at the close of the war, with a foreign demand for specie, with the failure in business, at that time, of many of their debtors, rendered suspensions inevitable, and in many instances were followed by an ultimate close of business. Amongst the causes that produced the recent suspensions in 1837, the influence of the Government, though by no means intended, is nevertheless distinctly perceivable. The whole revenues of the General Government were deposited with them, under an injunction from the Treasury Department, to use them as banking capital. A confidence in their strength, arising from this connexion with the Government, natural enough, though, as the event proved, delusive, contributed greatly to those large issues prior to 1837, of which so much complaint has been made. The contractions, too, which have followed, producing the most disastrous effects upon the country, although to a great extent a necessary consequence of previous over issues, were nevertheless hastened and pushed too rapidly forward, by well meant endeavors on the part of the Legislature to improve the currency. Surveying the past history of such institutions and availing ourselves of a dispassionate view of our own errors, as well as theirs, we may hope that a faithful effort at this time, to establish them on a firm and secure basis, will be attended by happy results. To this end I have to suggest a brief outline of those plans which appear to embrace a preventive of the two great evils I have noticed—insolvency of the institutions and consequent loss to the community—and unnatural expansions and contractions of the currency. The first is a State Bank, with a convenient number of branches, at proper points in the State, with a capital of such amount as the business of the country would seem to require. Each branch to own its own stock as its own separate property; but to receive its paper from a common source, and be subject to the control of a parent board chosen by the stockholders of all the branches. In this plan, the whole capital employed in the State should be bound for the redemption of every branch—the parent board having power, under proper limitations, to control the business of all the branches. As the whole capital is to be pledged for the liabilities of each seperate branch, a board representing the capital should have full power to protect it against the mismanagement of those for whose conduct in this scheme it is made ultimately responsible. In this plan, it is proposed to give the State a proportion of the stock, not exceeding one fifth of the whole, which should be represented in a corresponding vote in the election of officers. The books of all the institutions should be open at all times to the inspection of the parent board, and subject also to the inspection at any and all times of the Legislature, in such mode as it should direct. The amount of circulation at any and all of the branches to bear a proportion to their capital, to be fixed by the Legislature in their charter. It is especially desirable, that the charter should specify the cases, if any, on which a forfeiture of the charter should follow, and that the facts in such cases should be found by a trial, in proper form, in the judicial courts of the State. In this scheme, also, it would seem to be proper to make the notes of each branch receivable in payment of debts at every branch in the State. To withdraw from the directory all inducement to extravagant and injudicious issues, and to put an end to the practice, said to prevail to some extent, of adopting improper methods to avoid the provision of law, which forbids the receipt of more than six per cent. per annum on loans, it should be provided that the amount of dividends, when they exceeded a given per cent. per annum, should be paid into the State Treasury.

The second plan, which had been much the subject of discussion, and which would seem to be a great improvement on the existing system, embraces the proposition of re-chartering so many of the present banks of the State, as shall be thought necessary, and such of them only, as on thorough examination shall be found to be in a sound and healthy condition.

In this scheme, it is proposed to compel all that shall receive charters to unite in the election of a Board of Control; each bank being entitled to vote in proportion to its capital. This board, who may, or may not hold stock in any bank, as the Legislature shall determine, to issue all paper, and to sign it by officers to be chosen by it, to receive reports from each bank at stated periods, embracing all its transactions, verified by the oaths of its officers. It is proposed, also, to vest the board with power to examine into the affairs of all the banks at stated periods, to be fixed by law, and oftener, if they deem it necessary; and to close the business of any bank, when in its judgement, such bank had conducted its business in such a manner as to render it unsafe to permit its further continuance; and in all such cases the assets of such bank should be transferred to the board for the purpose of liquidating all claims outstanding against it.

In this plan it is also proposed, to make the capital of each bank, and all of them, who shall accept of charters, liable for the debts of every other bank and to compel them to receive the notes of each other at all times in payment of debts, and to redeem each its proper proportion of the notes of any other that may suspend specie payment, or be closed by the Board of Control.

It would also be a salutary provision in this scheme, to limit the dividends to stockholders, and bring into the State Treasury all the profits arising from the operations of the banks above such limitation; and also to limit in the charter the amount of circulation as compared with the capital of the several banks.

I have, as it must be obvious, only thought it necessary to sketch an outline of some of the most prominent features of the scheme proposed. I have been impelled at this, as to some it may seem, unusual time, to bring them to the view of the Legislature, as the loud call of the People of the State summons it to immediate action, of some sort, upon this all important subject.

In either of the plans which are here suggested, it is believed sufficient guards are provided against over issues, leading to a dangerous expansion of the currency, whilst a capital varying from six to ten millions of dollars, with all property of the banks, are pledged as a perpetual security to the holders of the paper of every bank embraced in the scheme. It is undoubtedly proper, that the Legislature should reserve the power to inspect the books and examine into the affairs of the banks, by such agents as they may from time to time select, and that the Board of Control should make an annual report to the Legislature, embracing a full statement of the business and condition of the banks under its supervision. It is important in this, as in every other charter, which creates a compact between the State and its citizens, that those acts, which should work a forfeiture of the corporate powers granted, should be specifically named; and the mode of adjudicating such forfeiture clearly pointed out.

It is believed that the establishment of the banking capital of the State on a permanent and sure basis might be the means of great occasional relief, in the future prosecution of our public works.—The want of funds for this purpose, arising from the temporary derangment of the money market abroad, could be supplied by the banks of our own State, were they assured of the further continuance of their charters, on proper principles.

The losses which have been sustained by contractors and laborers, at times, occasioned by a failure of the State to make punctual and frequent payments, might in such cases be avoided. They might be made useful to the State in this way, in enabling it to fulfil, as it always should with rigid precision, its compacts with both its foreign and domestic creditors; an object which it is hoped will never be lost sight of by any who may be charged with the preservation of the character and honor of the State. The high reputation which our stocks have maintained in the markets of the world, has been earned by a scrupulous fidelity in complying without contracts. The public improvements of the State, those enduring monuments of her enterprise, are the fruits of that character. That faith-keeping principle which shrinks with abhorrence from the idea of a broken promis , is alike the offspring of the pure morality of a christian people, and that lofty public honor which is a prominent characteristic of our republican institutions.—Whatever theoretical speculators upon the nature of legislative compacts may argue, he has been but a superficial observer of the People of Ohio, who does not know that their tax payers would gladly pay taxes fifty fold more burthensome than the present, rather than endure, for a day, the deep disgrace which attaches to broken promises and violated public faith. Such an idea is the less tolerable in western America, because of its boundless resources, and the constantly increasing energy and numbers of its people.

Our present position as a member of the Union, compared with the past, cannot fail to awaken in the bosoms of our citizens proud and gratifying reflections Our State occupies a commanding position in the great valley west of the Alleghany mountains; a valley which, by the estimates of these well informed, contains a greater quantity of productive soil than is to be found in one body else more on the face of the globe. Though many parts of Ohio presents to the eye of the Western American what seems to him a crowded population, yet it is certain, when compared with its capacity to sustain and feed its people, no portion of our territory has yet been filled. If we glance our eyes over the statistics of other parts of the world, not more fruitful in whatever contributes to the sustenance of a dense population and see to what extent the productive powers of the earth may be carried, which population has long pressed upon subsistence, we shall find, that any portion of Ohio, compared with such, is as yet little better than an untenanted and uncultivated waste. Looking forward to the time when the yet occupied agricultural and manufacturing powers of the State shall be fully developed, and taken our past progress as a guide to the future, we may, without egotism, indulge proud hopes of the ultimate destinies of the State. When we entered upon a State government in the year 1802, our population numbered sixty thousand. Now, after a laspe of thirty-eight years, we count a million and a half within our borders. Then we were a few scattered settlements, trembling in the presence of the lately subdued Indian tribes that still hovered on our frontier, and were entitled to but one representative in the popular branch of Congress; now we rank third in numbers amongst the twenty-six States of the Union, and have a larger share of power in the Legislature of the Nation, than many of the oldest States whose settlements began two hundred years before the white man built his first cabin within the limits of the State.

Through the valley lying between the Rocky mountains on one side, and the Alleghany range on the other, following the course of the Mississippi, Ohio, and Alleghany rivers, we have an uninterrupted steamboat navigation, of twenty-four hundred miles length. This great channel of commerce on one side, and the Lakes of the north on the other, intersected by canals, roads and rivers, with a rich soil and a healthful climate, while they account for our past history, furnish certain and most cheering augury of our future progress.

The direction which shall be given to that future, under our Constitution, mainly depends upon the legislative department. To subject to useful purposes all the physical resources of the State, and through these to ensure the great ends of our existence, the moral and intellectual improvement of all the people, to the highest attainable point. These are the great objects of legislative regard. To the Legislature belongs the lofty glories that awaits a wise exertion of that power; and on it devolves, also, the fearful responsibilities which its high position imposes.

Fully assured, that your deliberations will all aim to advance the interests, and secure the happiness of our common constituents; as it has become my duty, so shall it be my greatest pleasure, within my proper sphere, to extend a most hearty co-operation.

THOMAS CORWIN.

Columbus, Dec. 16, 1840.

Later from Rio Janeiro and the La Plata.—By the ship Douglas, Capt. Bourne, the editors of the Journal of Commerce have Rio Geneiro papers to the 30th Oct. containing Monte Video dates to the 5th of October.

The transports with troops despatched from Rio Ganeiro for Rio Grande, had reached their destination. The negociation with Bento Gonsalves, the leader of the insurgents in that province, had failed of success. The war was about to be prosecuted with new vigor on both sides.

Advices from Monte Vedio to the 5th of October, state that a British ship of war had just arrived from Buenos Ayres, with a new proposition from Governor Rosas to the French Admiral. The state of things at Buenos Ayres remained as before. Rosas is said to have committed fresh acts of cruelty.

Amistad Case.—This case, which is to come before the Supreme Court of the nation, during next month, for a final adjudication, is already in its preliminaries, before the lower house in Congress. It came before the House of Representatives by a resolution presented by the Hon. John Q. Adams, asking for the appointment of a committee, with power to send for persons and papers to ascertain wether the document transmitted by the President during last session, had not been falsified, and made to differ from the manuscript; if so, to ascertain by whom the falsification was made

Mr. Adams states his immediate object to be, the justification of the President, and the translator of the department of State, and then to ascertain by whom such a fraud was committed upon the House of Representatives, and upon the country.

He quotes Judge Jay's criticism at large upon the fraud, and upon the two Spanish terms Ladinos and Bozals, paying Judge Jay at the same time, great deference, but not greater than he is entitled to. If the term Ladinos is applicaple to these Africans, then Montez and Ruez, by the laws of Spain, had a right to ship them from Havanna to the place to which they were destined. If the term Bozals applies to them, they were freemen, and could not be made slaves, and they, Montez and Ruez, were doing it in violation of the laws of Spain, and of the treaty of Spain with Great Britain.

Upon the application of these terms, to these Africans, will depend their release or their delivery up to the Spanish authorities. The object of Mr. Adams further is, to ferret out the fraud, supposed to have been perpetrated at Havana, in applying to these men the wrong term, and to ascertain, and prove, if possible, that they are Bozals, and therefore free, and to be released. They have been proved to be Bozals by the language they speak and from their own showing, as well as from Dr. Maddan's testimony, who was then just from Havana, and knowing about the case. Mr. Adams is just the man, he will leave no stone unturned, we are glad to see the favorable dispsition of the House, in adopting the resolution by a large majority.—Colored American

The Post Office and the Press.—Mr. Coddington, the Post Master of this city, has commenced legal proceedings against us for sending, in a package enclosing a newspaper, a sheet on which was printed the contents of the New World for a certain week. The Post Master of the office to which the paper was directed, opened the enclosure, detained the handbill from the agent, and returned it to Mr. Coddington, as evidence of an intention to vioate the following section of the Post Office laws;—New World.

"If any person shall enclose or conceal a letter, or other thing, or any memorandum thereon, which he shall have delivered into any post office, or to any person for that purpose, in the order that the same may be carried by the post free of letter postage, he shall forfeit the sum of five dollars for every such offence."—Sec. 30, Art. 2. March, 1817.

LATER AND BETTER.

From the New Orleans Bulletin Dec. 1.

Retreat of the Xexophons!—Slaughter of the Murderers and escape of the Texian Patriots.—Since our publication of yesterday, in which the accounts from our correspondent at Matamoras left more than one hundred young Texians at Saltillo, about to be sacrificed at a shrine of cowardice—we have conversed with a passenger from Texas, by the New York, Mr. Ed. Dwyer, of San Antonio, who has communicated to us some new and heart cheering facts. Mr. D. was only six days from San Antonio to Houston, and on the journey put up at houses where Col. Jordan (the commander of the 114 Texians whom the Mexicans had planned to murder) had just before stopped for refreshment.

Mr. Dwyer learned, and has no doubt of the correctness of the information, that when the Texians became convinced of the intentions and treachery of the Mexicans, they retired by themselves to a walled enclosure in the vicinity determined to face the worst. At this time the citizens of the place, considering the contest at an end, opened their houses and gave the solders whatever they wished to eat or drink. The consequence was, that the bulk of them got beastly drunk; and in this situation they were ordered by their commander to attack the outlaws, (as the Texians were termed.)

The battle commenced about 2 P. M. and lasted near nine hours. The Texians were all protected from the fire of assailants—and were moreover well armed, and abundantly supplied with ammunition. The result was, that the ignorant and intoxicated cowards who assailed them, incapable of inflicting injury were slaughtered on all hands. At this juncture the beseiged sallied forth and captured three peices of artillery, which they turned upon the enemy, and mowed them down like grass. More than FOUR HUNDRED of the treacherous foes were left lifeless on the ground that night, by this small branch of the Anglo-race.

The Texans, having cleared the supplied themselves with appar which they were much in want other spoils of victory, and comm their march homeward, and pursue way without molestations, having lo four companions killed in the figh one who died from disease.

From the Commercial Adver

Latest From Africa.—By the br lanta, Captain Lawlin, from the Co Africa, we have letters to the 26th tober, and the papers to the 20th sive.

The Slave Trade.—We copy th lowing from the Liberia Herald of tember 30th.

Escape.—Captain Monroe, of the ican sch. Kathleen, informs us that th
Viper made a successful escape from Cess, about ten days ago, with 680 s
This vessel was formerly called the la dore," and about eight years ago a load of emigrants to this place.

Extract from a letter from Gov
Buchanan to Dr. Proudfit, the ven
Corresponding Secretary, dated,

Monrovia, Oct. 24, 18

Rev. and Dear Sir: As the Atala
Philadelphia, is expected to leave t or to-morrow, for the United St avail myself of the opportunity to

The colonly is at present in an u al healthy state, and every thing prosperous and flourishing. The culties which threatened us last s have all passed away, and perfect and security are again established thr out all our borders.

But the commanding influence the colony has obtained during th year, we have been able to negotiat cessfully with all the tribes in our n borhood, and some at a considerabl tance, for the termination of their h ties with each other; and the whole try, from Bo Porto to Cape Palmas, this moment, I believe, enjoying the perfect tranquility—a thing which not been known before in the memo man.

At those points along the coast
we have routed the slavers, the n have been obliged to turn their atte to more honest and peaceful pursuit already find their advantage in in ed prosperity, comfort, and safety;
our enterprising merchants are b ted by an enlarged traffic in the sta native production.

Very sincerely yours,

Thos. Buchan

Body of Napoleon.—The ship met, Capt. Shreve, which arrived a ton on Sunday from Canton, left St.
na, Oct. 21. On the 17th the cere of exhumation of the remains of leon took place with great parade.
body, which on his death was emb by French chemists, was found in a of complete preservation, the feau being preserved. It will be remem that Napoleon died May 5, 1821.
body was conveyed on board the Poule, which with the Favorite, sail France on the 19th. These ships s from France July 7, and arrived
Helena, Oct. 8th.

Pretty Fair.—A London paper that a Yankee has offered Congr build ships of India Rubber, conta more valuable properties than wooden or iron vessels. Congress i to have thrown every discourageme his way, fearing that in sailing acros line, the ships may rub it out.

The Collector of Pitt Township, gany county, Pa., is stated to have ab ded, taking with him what money h collected, and leaving his bail to bea responsibility as best he can.

There is an article in the way of B ing lately come out in London cal
"Ne Plus Ultra," which is entirel perceding Day and Martin's, War
&c. The inventor is a Mr. Robert geant, lately of Hamden New-H
Connecticut; it has been introduced the Queen's household, and that of se of the nobility.

Medal.—In the late battle, a s medal, about the eighth of an inch in t ness, and two and a half inches in di ter, was taken from an old Indian, posed to have been upwards of 100 y of age, who was killed; one side w presents a profile, in relief, of James ison, with the words "James Mad
President of the United States, 180
The reserve presents clasp hands, the calmut and tomahawk, and the w
"Peace and Friendship."—Austin (T City Gazette.

Mr. Editor: The very appropriat marks which you have recently mad the Register upon the sin of irrever in our approaches to God, called u memory the following anecdote, whi the knowledge of the writer, is fully thentic. A little boy in the villag
C———, in this State, had been hea a somewhat distinguished revivi whom every body was praising, but withal, was remarkable for the appe familiarity of his public addresses t Throne of Grace. Among others, little boy was asked by some one his ion of the preacher. He replied, "I like him a bit." "But why?" said individual questioning him. "I don't to hear him pray," said he, "becaus is so saucy to God."—Babtist Regist

HE RECORDER.

ZANESVILLE.

NESDAY, ... DECEMBER 30, 1840.

. CORRESPONDENTS.—We have no doubt but are scores of young men, members and s of the Methodist Protestant Church, who take the liberty to send us communica- that they would send to no one else. They ore at home and can take greater freedom is than others. Being persuaded of this 've desire to deal as tenderly towards such, as ity to the character of the paper will per- One design of our periodical is to make s. And, with a view to this object, we h many essays from young beginners, with hill, without scrutinizing them too closely. nowever, occasionally receive a communi- n, that we cannot, in justice publish, and we are compelled to decline, it gives us

We have now on hand, several pieces of merit, which we think will not quite do for ress. We shall take the liberty to pass a iendly criticisms, occasionally, upon those are beginning to compose, with a view to improvement.

e received a communication, a few days , from an esteemed youth, who signs him- Evangelist." His manuscript is well writ- his words correctly spelled, the hand wri- quite legible, and the general sentiment . But the violation of that rule of rhetoric h forbids the use of mixed figures, spoils the e piece. Take a specimen or two. Speak- of the late political excitement, the writer :

"The great political campaign commenced; the political parties drew themselves in array nst each other; every one enlisted. The of political excitement came sweeping down," gain:

"The victors have appointed their days of joli- cion, and given their shouts of triumph.— conquered and disappointed are being re- iled to their fate.—the waters have abated."

ere the two great contending political par , of the country, are figuratively represented rawn up in battle array—in military style; the next minute they are turned into a l of waters. If this error had occurred but e or twice, it might have been mended, but uns throughout the piece, and could not be ected without essentially altering the whole y.

t is not young writers only who are guilty of practice of using mixed figures, but sometimes ters of experience, for the want of attention, culpable on this ground. Instance the poet:

bridle in my struggling muse with pain,
Which longs to launch into a bolder strain.

re his poetic genius is figuratively represented a horse restrained with a "bridle;" but unch" is the quality of a ship. To "bridle" orse, therefore, to keep him from launching is nsense. Whenever a figure is introduced, no perty should be attributed to it but what be- g thereto.

Our young friend would do well to read Blair's etoric. Or, he will find connected with Mur- 's larger Grammar an excellent treatise on rules of composition. He has no cause of couragement, for his first essay is far better, haps, than the first attempt of many who have imately succeeded to admiration. Persever- ce is every thing in a matter of this kind.

GOV. CORWIN'S MESSAGE.—Having given Gov. annon's Message to the Ohio Legislature, it due that we should give Gov. Corwin's Inau- ral to the same body, accordingly it will be nd in this paper. We commend the document the gentlemany and respectful style in which is coutched. In this respect it is an example public functionaries.

We cannot allow ourself to take any party ound, in relation to the question of the Banks, c., of which this document mainly treats. In- ed, we are satisfied that the correct course, on is subject, lies directly between those of the o great political parties of the day. That anks, in an extensive commercial community ce ours, are indispensable, we think will not denied, by well informed and candid men; on e other hand, when organized, that they will disposed to oppress the public unless proper- restricted, will be admitted by every man read the school of human nature. The difficulty ith the honest of all parties, appears to be about hat amount of restriction should be laid upon em. If you tie their hands so they can do you o harm they will be able to do you no good; ive the power to do good and you give the pow- r to do harm. Experience, and not abstract heory, will have to teach us on this subject.

Gov. Corwin's address before us, appears to take uite a liberal view of this subject. One of our ealous democratic neighbors is well pleased with he Governor's sentiments on the currency.

SECESSION FROM THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—A secession of some fifteen or twenty persons from the society in Putnam, opposite this town, has recently taken place. Among them is the Rev. John Goshen, one of the oldest and most substantial Methodists in this county.—The cause, as we have been informed, is the arbitrary character of the episcopal government. They have not yet, we believe, attached themselves to any church, nor have they determined to what branch they will go. They ought, in justice to the cause of liberal Methodism, to unite with the Methodist Protestant enterprise. But whether they will is doubtful, from the fact, that some of them censured us pretty severely for leaving the old ship for the very same reason; and to unite with us would be virtually saying that they had blamed us wrongfully, and we find it is the toughest thing in all the world, for human nature to say, either directly or indirectly, I am wrong. But let them go where they will they shall have our sympathies.

We have heard it indicated from some of our old episcopal brethren that we rejoice at such events. This is all a mistake. But we do deeply regret that the ministry does not modify a government which we believe to be anti-scriptural, and which will never set easy upon American shoulders. If they would conform their ecclesiastical polity to the genius of the gospel and the spirit of the times, it would tend to preserve the purity of their body, and qualify them to do as much good as any church in the land.

THE OHIO LEGISLATURE

Has done but little yet, except spar about retrenchments. The State Printer complains that they are all at work to reform him, and thus laboring to establish a new maxim that charity begins from home.

A resolution has passed the House, by a majority of 38 to 28, that unimportant bills and reports of committees shall not be printed except by order of the House. This resolution, it is said, will save considerable expense to the State.

Mr Dunham, of the House, has asked leave to introduce a "Bill more effectually to provide against damage to sheep and other property, by dogs." A provision of this kind is most certainly called for. Such has been the destructive operations of the dogs, in this neighbor hood, for many years, among sheep, that many farmers will not risk their capital in that kind of stock.

The Senate has had considerable excitement as to who shall bear the expenses of the contest of Mr. Holmes' election, whether the parties contending for the seat, or the State. They have decided by a vote of 19 to 16 that the State shall defray expenses, and S. F. Vinton and T. L. Hamer are appointed commissioners to examine testimony on behalf of the State.

CONGRESS.

Nothing yet of importance has been done in this body.

Mr. Adams has offered a resolution in the House, calling on the President to give a history of our past and present relations with China.

Mr. Clay has introduced nto the Senate a bill to repeal the Sub-Treasury law.

Mr. Tappan, of Ohio, introduced into the Senate, a bill to limit the term of office of the Judges of the Federal Courts of the United States; and Mr. Duncan has given notice that he will introduce a bill to repeal the Naturlization Laws, he has also given notice that he will bring in a bill to fix a particular day for the election of President and members of Congress throughout the Union.

The Senate has elected Rev. Mr. Cookman, of the M. E. Church, Chaplain, and the House Rev. Mr. Braxton.

Mr. Talimadge introduced into the Senate a joint resolution to amend the Constitution so as to render the same individual ineligible to the Presidency for more than one term of four years.

Mr. Webster took up that portion of the President's message relating to the Finances, and gave his views at length on that subject, showing the inaccurrency of some of the conclusions of the President.

COLD BLOODED MURDER.—An elderly man by the name of Samuel Johnson, was cooly murdered by a man by the name of Heffron, of Philadelphia, for a few dollars in cash. He was found by his wife, a short time afterwards, in Heffron's shed, connected with his doggery. The circumstances of this murder have produced a great excitement in Philadelphia.

ANOTHER COLD BLOODED MURDER.—Mr. Sydham, Cashier of the Farmers' and Mechanics' Bank of New Brunswick, New Jersey, disappeared, a short time since, under very mysterious circumstances. The first impression was that the affairs of the Bank might have caused his departure; on examination, however, every thing was found straight and correct. But the mystery is now cleared up; he has been found buried under the floor of a man by the name of Peter Robinson, who is supposed to have murdered him, to get from him a mortgage on his property, held by Mr. Sydham, for the amount of sixty dollars, only. It is supposed he was killed while calculating the interest on the mortgage in Robinson's house, by the latter striking him with some deadly weapon from behind.

NAVIGATION OF THE MUSKINGUM.—The McConnelsville Standard of the 24th inst. states, this navigation to be in a miserable condition; that a lot of flour and salt boats, after being detained hy the dams, and some of them injured and others destroyed by jumping them, had all but five reached Marietta, and at that time lay there blocked up with the ice.

JAMESTOWN, O., DEC. 17, 1840.

Friend Springer: I now begin to observe that with all your liberality, you cannot quite publish things directly opposed to your own traditions. My short essay vs. Baptism coming in the room of Circumcision, has not been published. That tradition is so old that it has with many become as sacred as though it were really a part of divine revelation, whereas I think I can shew that it has neither shadow nor substance in the Bible.—But when an editor speaks of the lack of time to reply to a correspondent, it shews that he is tired of him, and when he speaks of his production as not worthy of a reply, it (to me) indicates that he lacks arguments wherewith to reply—or that he is disposed to treat his correspondents with contempt, by calling them ignoramuses, or fools, beneath his notice.

I shall not urge you, however, to publish things opposed to your own views, where you are conscious you cannot sustain them. And if you were confident of the ability to sustain your views, it would be unnecessary to urge you to it—for you you would certainly do it. Yours, &c.

M. WINANS.

We remark on this communication:

1st. In reference to refusing to publish for our Br. Winans we deny the charge. To the best of our recollection we have published every article for him which he has forwarded to us for that purpose. If any thing has been omitted it has been through mistake. The very communication he complains was not published, will be found on the first page of our 61st number.

2d. We are chided severely for complaining of the want of time to reply to correspondents whose sentiments we disapprove of. If our friend knew our situation he certainly could not be so severe on us: first, our office is six miles from town; it takes us nearly one day in the week, on an average, to go thither to do the business connected with our agricultural and publishing interests Secondly, we both edit and publish a paper; the latter duty requires something like one day in each week—for the accounts of such a concern are often times very perplexing—Thirdly, as a minister of religion, we are often called on to attend funerals, protracted meetings, &c., which consumes a considerable portion of our time. Fourthly, we do not rely on the proceeds of our paper for the support of our family, but on our agricultural pursuits. We have have spent for the last year upon our farm, in labor and attention, near two days on an average in the week. Fifthly, we have, the past year, been wonderfully promoted in the civil department. We were elected supervisor of the public highway; appointed director and treasurer of school district No. 10, and Postmaster at Meadow Farm. These important offices all demand a portion of our time. Substract all the items of time spent at these other matters, and we will have little more, on an average, than two days out of each week to select the matter and write for the paper, and a considerable portion of this time is spent in reading proof sheets and correcting the press. Now, Br. Winans, do you believe all this? If so, you certainly will never censure us again for complaining about the want of time for writing for our paper.

3d. We think your charge against us for treating our "correspondents" with "contempt," or as "beneath notice," is peculiar unkind. You certainly must have suffered your feelings, my brother, in this instance, to overcome your better judgment. It is, most assuredly, our highest ambition to treat all our friends and correspondents with proper courtesy. We certainly design to treat no man with contempt, unless his actions are contemptible, then we simply wish to treat him character.

4th. As the only shadow of objection you can possibly have against us, is, that we have not noticed your arguments, &c., we will try and remove even that difficulty, if you will wait until the holidays are over, and until there comes a big winter storm, so that we cannot get out of the house. We shall then notice your "Circumcision" article. If we are not mistaken, we shall succeed in convincing others, if we cannot yourself, that it is not so formidable as you suppose.

CHRISTIAN WORLD.—We received, before the issue of our last paper, the 3d number of this work, but being pre-engaged, had not time to look it over. Since, we have taken time to give it a cursorary examination. Our attention was particularly called to a long article, in which, the "World" ably defends itself against the attacks of the Emancipator, of New York. The editor of that paper had mistated the fact with regard to the price of the "World," putting it at $1,50, instead of $1,25; attacked its literary character by representing that there was nothing in it which "indicated the hand of a master spirit;" but that it was filled with a kind of "after dinner sort of reading," &c.; and then with that keenness of scent which distinguished the old Monk, who received a dispensation from the Pope, to hunt relics in the Holy Land, by which he could smell one forty miles, the editor smells abolition heresy in the "Christian World," which he charges upon it by a total perversion of its meaning. The whole attack of the Emancipator was entirely uncalled for. It contains as much unfairness,—bile and bitterness as would be discreditable to a Turk.

We have before expressed the opinion, that it was a pitty abolitionists could not get men of a little more discretion and self-command to conduct their public journals. The colored man ought to be free, and will be free, and the sooner the better. But the rashness of such men, who exhibit a "zeal without knowledge," greatly retards the work of emancipation. Their conduct is calculated to disgust the minds of calm and candid men, who will feel an aversion to cooperate with such "master spirits" in promoting any cause, whatever.

We do not bring this charge against all abolition editors; as far as we have noticed, the editors of the "Charter Oak," the "Observer," in its day, and the "Christian Witness" refrain from such bitter personal attacks. But, really, it would seem as though the editors of the "Philanthropist," "Watchman" and "Emancipator" spent a considerable portion of their time in chewing crab-apples and spitting vinegar upon their neighbors. All, whether abolitionists or otherwise, with whom they come in contact, and who will not go in the leading strings of these "master spirits," have to be strangled in the overflowings of their gall.

We are at a loss to know how any man of a correct moral principle could be guilty of such an unprovoked attack as this under notice. The Rev. T. H. Stockton, the editor and publisher of the "Christian World," is a man of superior talents. His life has been spent in constant efforts to do good. His claims upon public patronage are, at least, equal to any of his neighbors'. And while the "Emancipator" was sneering at the price of his paper, indicating that it was an imposition upon the community, and ridiculing its literature, as though it were the judge, it might just as well, according to our moral code, have been picking its neighbor's pocket. We should not have expected such treatment as this, save from a philanthropist.

But even on the mooted question of abolition, we had thought the Rev. Stockton had given evidence to satisfy the "Emancipator" itself, of his orthodoxy. We heard him assert in open conference, before slave holders and a promiscuous crowd, that slavery was "an evil; a natural evil; a moral evil; a political evil; a domestic evil;—yea, a thrice accursed evil." We know, that after his election to the editorship of the "Protestant," the central organ of the church, the Book Committee, who had a supervision over that periodical, passed a resolution to exclude the discussion of slavery from its pages, that he, from principle, resigned the editorial charge, before he entered on the duties of his appointment. Has the New York editor, himself, given such evidence as this, of his attachment to the interests of the slave? He sticks to the "Emancipator," and well he may, for it feeds him. But where has he ever, as in this case, sacrificed his bread and cheese to principle?

We apologize to the reader, if he should think our remarks severe, for we feel peculiarly indignant at the coarse and ungentlemanly attack of the "Emancipator" on the "Christian World," while struggling for existence. Especially, as there is not an allegation brought against it, but what is founded in perversion or misrepresentation.

P. B. Wilcox, Esq., has been appointed Reporter for the Supreme Court of Ohio, in place of Charles Hammond, Esq., deceased.

PRICES CURRENT.

ZANESVILLE.—Wheat 44 cts.; Flour $3; Pork 3,00 a 3,75.

We were in one of our best flouring mills a few days since which was standing idle for the want of wheat. On a proposition, some two weeks since, to deliver wheat at 50 cents and wait for the pay, say until April, as paying interest seemed to be an object with the purchaser, it was declined on his part, who expressed a fear that the prospect would not justify that price; but he offerred to take wheat on deposite and give the rise of the market. But the same person now offers to accept the proposition. There can be no doubt but wheat must be up in a few days, or else the mills will all be idle. There is an abundance of wheat in the country, but the farmers will not sell it for less than 50 cents. And all correct enough too, for it is worth 37 to feed the stock, and 6 will not take it to market. The millers had better raise at once to fifty cents, and be content with a less profit, than keep their mills and hands on expense idle. Then they will get the wheat and not before.

PHILADELPHIA December 22.—Flour is firm with rather an upward tendency. The receipts are light, and the demand for Eastern and other maket fair Sales Penn. at 4,75; some factors ask 4,87½ per bbl.—Bicknell.

NEW YORK, December 22.—Flour per bbl. Ohio, 4,94 a 5,12; Troy, 4,87½; Western Canal, 4,81 a 5,00; Michigan, 4,81¼ a 4,4,87½; Philadelphia, 5,25 a 5,50; Baltimore Howard street, 5,25 a 5,37½; Richmond C. M. 6,25; do country, 5,25 a 5,50.

BALTIMORE, December 19.—Flour.—The price of flour has further declined, and sales of Howard street to the extent of 6 a 700 bbls. in lots. have been made from store at 4,62½ per bbl. for good brands; a few hundred bbls. fancy brands have sold, also in lots, at 4,75. The wagon price, paid in Franklin street, has been uniform this week at 4,50; the last car price paid was 4,62½, the next settling price will be 4,50. Sales of City Mills and Susquehanna have also been made this week at 4,75, and the above were the market prices at the close of yesterday, with the further offers of Howard street at the same price. The stocks are not large.

Western Transportation.—The rates of freight for wagons to Pittsburgh and Wheeling, remains as noted last week; 1,37½ to the former, and 1,62½ to the latter, per 100 lbs.—Lyford.

MASSILLON, December 25.—Wheat 50 cts; Corn 20; Oats 15; Potatoes 18¾; Corn-meal 37½; Butter, per lb. 7 cents; Flour, per bbl. 2,75; Pork, per bbl. 12,00; Pork, per cwt. 3,00; Salt, per bbl. 2,75; White Fish 8,00; Pickerel 6,00; Mackerel 20,00.—Gazette.

HYMENEAL.

MARRIED—On the 15th inst. by the Rev. W. Munhull, Mr. JAMES MILLER to Miss NANCY IRVIN, both of Licking county.

On the evening of the 22d inst. by the Rev. James Gurley, Mr. SAMUEL CHAPMAN, Jr. to Miss REBECCA BESANT, both of this county.

On the 15th inst. by the Rev. G. I. Miles, Mr. WILLIAM SIMMS to Miss ELIZABETH ROBINSON, both of this place.

On the 24th inst. by the same, Mr. GEORGE SMITH to Miss SAMANTHA DAVIS, both of this place.

In Dresden, on the 20th inst. by Benjamin Adams, Esq., Mr. MANSFIELD G. CARTER to Miss MARGARET JANE DEWAR, both of this county.

On the 22d of November last, by the Rev. I Thrap, Mr. GEORGE FONDERSMITH to Miss MARY CAMP, both of Coshocton county, Ohio.

OBITUARY.

From the Maine Wesleyan Journal.

Died on Saturday morning, 21st ult., Francis Asbury Springer, son of the editor of this paper, aged 11 years and 2 months. His disease was typhus fever, of which he had been sick a little more than three weeks. Francis was a child of many prayers. He possessed a most amiable disposition, and was a pattern of filial obedience. He had been for years in the practice of daily prayers. He professed experimental faith in Christ, during the revival in this city last spring, since which especially he has appeared to those intimately acquainted with him, as a child of God. With his parched and dying lips he assured his afflicted father that he loved the Saviour. He was indeed a plant too precious for the uncongenial clime of earth, and his Heavenly Father has early transplanted him to Heaven.—Even so, Lord, for it seemed good in thy sight. What thou doest we know not now, but we shall know hereafter.

FOREIGN NEWS.

BY THE PACKET SHIP SHERIDAN.

Louis Philippe sustained by the Chambers—Certainty of Peace—Disasters in India.

We have our regular files by the Sheridan, and from them and the New York papers, we glean the following items of foreign intellegence. The Liverpool dates are to the 14th, the Paris to the 11th of November. The intelligence is dicidedly pacific.

The King of the French had been fully sustained by the Chambers.

The allies continued to be every where successful in Syria. Acre, the last post, being on the point of surrendering. At Beyrout, tranquility was restored, and business measurably resumed.

No disturbance followed the progress or speech of the King of the French, on meeting the Chambers.

The news is decidedly in favor of continued peace. The Chamber of Deputies have elected all the Ministerial candidates, for Presidency and Vice Presidency, by large majorities.

The candidates put forward and the number of votes stood as follows:

M. Sauzet,	220 votes
M. Odillon Barrot,	154
M. Theirs,	4
M. Berreyer, M. Dauphin, and M. Dufaure, one each.

In the minor elections of vice presidents and secretaries, the cabinet were equally successful. The four vice presidents elected were M. Calmon, M. Dufaure, M. Jacqueminot, and M. Salvandy. These results are considered to indicate that the chamber will support the ministry in a peaceful policy.

PARIS, Nov. 9.

The seizure of the National yesterday, on account of its article on the army under the late ministry, in which it attacked with great virulence, the Dukes of Orleans and Nemours, charging them with having been the cause of disasters in Africa—and the late Minister of War for entrusting command to them, to the injury of the service, appears to have given general satisfaction to all the friends of order and good discipline—the object of the National being evidently to create a deep feeling of dissatisfaction in the army. It is not yet quite certain, however, whether the Procureus du Roi will go on with a prosecution against the editor.

It is of little interest here. Among the topics of congratulation are the abundant harvests of this year.

The intelligence from China is not later than we have direct.

From India it is both later and disasterous. The Morning Post of the 12th gives this summary:

From India the intelligence is disastrous and gloomy in the extreme, and the miserable results of the premature withdrawal of our troops from Schinde and Affghanistan are now being reaped. In the interval that had elasped since the deprature of the previous mail from Bombay, accounts had been received there of the British arms having sustained more reverses, and of the loss of a greater number of officers and men than during the whole of the Caboul campaign.

Khelat, the stronghold, which General Willshire captured in such gallant style, has been retaken; the whole of Upper Scinde was in a state of insurrection, and every day intelligence of fresh disasters was received at Bombay. The 1st Bombay Grenadier Regiment had been nearly cut to pieces in an engagement with the Beloochees, when marching through a pass in the mountains to the relief of Kahun.

Five officers and 200 men were killed, and all the baggage, consisting of upwards of 1000 camels, laden with supplies, horses, ammunition, and between 40,000 and 50,000 rupees in hard cash, fell a prey to the Belooches. "Such," says our correspondent, "is the effect of the premature withdrawal of our troops from the country—such the result predicted by the Duke of Wellington, more than a year and a half ago, of the foolish attempt to conduct extensive warlike operations on a peace establishment." Vigorous efforts were making at Bombay to retrieve the disasters, brought about entirely by Lord Auckland's penny wise and pound foolish measures.

Business Department.

The post master at West Carlisle, Ohio, says that W. Henderson, of that place, has not taken his paper from the office since the 1st of October, of course he took it until then. Our first volume, for which he paid us, was out the 19th of August. He has taken, if the post master be correct, some five or six numbers of the second volume which included the Minutes of conference, and then quit without informing, having us to send half the 2d vol. before we find out he does not take his paper from the post office. Our terms says: "a failure to notify a discontinuance before the expiration of the subscription year, will be considered a new engagement." We shall, therefore, continue to send the paper "until he pays arrears." If paid immediately, one dollar will do.

We inform Br. W. Davis, on examination of the subject, we found the fault, of his paper not coming, was ours. We regret its occurrence in reference to so good a subscriber. When we see him we will explain. It was not intentional.

We inform Br. Chapman that the three dollar note he sent us, on the Oneida Bank, is counterfeit. We have credited the two names he forwarded us, and charged him with four dollars, and will return the note so soon as we know where to send it.

The second quarterly meeting for Newark circuit will be held at Bethlehem meeting house, to commence on Friday 11 o'clock, A. M., January 29, 1841.

Brs. C. Springer, T. Fairchild, Marshall, Munhall and Kinney are invited to attend, and make their arrangements to tarry with us one week at least, as we expect to continue the meeting for that length of time. I. THRAP.

CORRECTION.

Br. Springer: In looking over the 68th No. of the Western Recorder, I noticed two mistakes, (perhaps I did not write plain,) referring to our second quarterly meeting, fot 2d of January read "23d," and for Winchester read "West Chester," and confer a favor on M. N. WARREN.

Br. Williams, of Tyler circuit, expects to hold his next quarterly meeting, to commence on Saturday preceding the second Sabbath in February, [but he has not said where,] and invites the assitance of Bros. Waddle, Simonton, Allen and Clawson.

We owe an apology to Br. Boyd for not inserting his marriage notice. We cut the slip out of his letter containing it, and, as we thought, sent it to the office for our last paper; but it has disappeared somehow, and we cannot lay our hands on it. We'll do better next time.

It is now asserted that the shameful project of completing the Bunker Hill Monument with the avails procured by the feats and exposures of Fanny Elssler has been abandoned. The sum, though impliedly accepted by the President's answer to the dancer, has never been received by the Treasurer; and such is the indignation expressed universally at the proposed pesecration, we presume it will never be.—N. Y. Evangelist.

THE LARGEST AND CHEAPEST

FAMILY NEWSPAPER

☞IN THE WORLD.☜

ONE DOLLAR PER ANNUM!

When subscribed for in Clubs of ten or more.

COMMENCEMENT OF A NEW YEAR.

ALEXANDER'S

WEEKLY MESSENGER

Will be materially improved in its typographical appearance, at the beginning of the next volume, in January, 1841. The publisher has made such arrangements as to justify him in announcing to the public, that this paper shall continue to take precedence of all its competitors, as it has heretofore done, and all the facilities which his extensive printing establishment can afford, with the aid of his numerous literary correspondents, at home and abroad, shall be united to make the WEEKLY MESSENGER still more satisfactory to its THIRTY-FIVE THOUSAND PATRONS, distributed as it is, thro' every section of the Union. Every exertion will be used to keep equal pace with the advancement which is constantly making in the character of the newspaper press, and the publisher pledges himself that his journal shall, in all departments, afford to its readers a full and comprehensive view of the important events which are continually transpiring in our own Country and the European World! The actual fact is, that the Weekly Messenger is just such a newspaper as persons living out of large cities, require, and will be pleased to receive—and the publisher, after an association of twenty years with the newspaper press, pledges himself that his journal shall not be excelled, either as respects its moral and literary reputation, or the early dissemination of news and other important and useful information. "Go a-head," is his principle, and he has never failed to carry it out to the fullest extent.

The WEEKLY MESSENGER is published every Wednesday, on a beautiful white sheet, of the largest class. Single copies are forwarded to subscribers, every week during the year, for Two Dollars, in advance—or ten persons clubbing together, can have it for the same period, by forwarding the publisher a Ten Dollar Note, free of postage, which is less than any paper of the same size can be furnished by any other office in the United States.

A variety of beautiful engravings will be given in regular succession, which will be accompanied by appropriate sketches of such a description as to render them particularly deserving the attention of the public.

Over Thirty Thousand.

With the immense circulation that has been received for the Weekly Messenger, during the 4 years past, since its commencement, we are bold to say, that no paper has ever been distributed to the same number of patrons with fewer causes of complaint—in fact, we have the most careful and trustworthy Clerks now in our employ, and no inducements are withheld to make them attentive and systematic in the discharge of their various duties; therefore, persons subscribing for the Paper at a distance, may rely on receiving it regularly and punctually by the due course of the mail.

All the contemporary Weekly Press in the Atlantic cities head their subscription papers with the imposing caption of "Largest and Cheapest!" Now, we propose that no person who cannot satisfy himself after one year's trial that the Weekly Messenger is emphatically what we have said it is, and therefore is best entitled to patronage, that we will confer on every one making such discovery, a Free Subscription for the space of another year.

At the expiration of the term subscribed and paid for, by Clubs the paper is invariably discontinued, unless the Subscriptions are renewed. All letters must be post paid, or they will not be taken out of the Post Office. Address

CHARLES ALEXANDER,
Athenian Buildings, Franklin Place, Phil.

PREMIUMS

FOR FIFTEEN SUBSCRIBERS.

Any Agent or Postmaster who shall forward to our address Fifteen Dollars, will be entitled to Fifteen Copies of the Messenger for one Year, and either of the following works:

Alexander's Travels, in two volumes.
The Art of Dining, a popular book.
Andrew, the Savoyard, a novel in two volumes.
Charcoal Sketches, by Neal.
Genius and Wisdom of Shakspeare.
Henrietta Temple, a novel in two volumes.
Health and Beauty, a volume much asked for.
Indecision, a favorite novel.
Miss Leslie's Cookery, for married folks.
The Picture of Philadelphia.
Whispers to a Newly Married Pair.
The Prayer Book, 18mo. Neatly bound.
Every Body's Album, with engravings.

FOR THIRTY SUBSCRIBERS.

Any agent or post master who shall forward thirty dollars to our address, will be supplied with thirty copies of the Messenger for one year—and also to be entitled, as a premium, for the same, to one copy of either of the following valuable works:

Gooch on Females and Children.
American Flower Garden Directory.
Gregory's Mathematics.
Pambour on Locomotive Engines and Railways.
Scott's Life of Napoleon.
Pilgrimage to Jerusalem and Mount Sinai, by Baron Geramb, two volumes.
1000 Night's Entertainment, five volumes.

FOR FIFTY SUBSCRIBERS.

A copy of either of the following works will be furnished to any agent procuring a club of fifty subscribers—or, if it should be preferred, two of the first named premiums will be given instead.

Lockhart's Life of Walter Scott.
Treatise on the Management and Disease of Cattle.
Holy Bible, quarto, with beautiful engravings.

TERMS OF THE

Weekly Messenger,

PER ANNUM—Payable in advance:

One Subscription, - - - - - - - -	$2 00
" " six months, - - - - -	1 00
Four Subscriptions (a 1,25) - - - - -	5 00
Ten Subscriptions (a $1) - - - - -	10 00

All who desire to secure the paper from the commencement of the volume, will please forward their names immediately.

☞Postmasters and other gentlemen, who interest themselves to extend our circulation, may rest assured that the most strict and early attention will be given to their orders.

☞To secure agents and others from imposition, we guarantee to forward our paper to all who send us payment in advance, directed to the Philadelphia Post Office, which order, if received there, with the remittance, will be our acknowledgment of the same, and consequently the paper will be regularly sent for the time stipulated. CHARLES ALEXANDER,

December 30, 1840. 6w71

COMMUNICATIONS.

For the Western Recorder.

A FEW THOUGHTS ON A FEW THINGS.

NO. IV.

ON LUKE, x, 42.

"One thing is Needful."—This is the declaration which the Lord Jesus Christ made to Martha, and with strict propriety, may be applied to every soul who, though favored with ever so large a portion of this world's treasure, is unconcerned about this one thing needful, upon the possession of which, depends their present and eternal happiness; for, though a man enjoyed the whole creation, and were destitute of this one thing, he would be like the church of Loadicea, wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked. In Christ are all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge; in Him we have present and eternal happiness or good; for He is all and and in all, to the believer. This one thing needful, is pure and undefiled religion. O reader! whatever else thou lackest, be careful thou art a possessor of this one thing needful; thy eternal all depends upon it. If thou art sensible of thy need of this blessing, and hast a fervent desire to enjoy it, go to Jesus; He invites such to come to Him; and He will freely give himself unto thee, without money and without price; for He has been pleased, graciously, to promise, "Him that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out."

Lovers of pleasure, more than God,
For you He suffered pain;
Swearers, for you He spilt His blood:
And shall He bleed in vain?

Misers, His life for you He paid,
Your basest crimes He bore;
Drunkards, your sins on Him were laid,
That you might sin no more.

J. D. G.

For the Western Recorder.

Br. Timothy, Must think that he can chase a thousand. In his last communication, he appears to think that "Clerical Supremacy is based on the doctrine (or notion) as he calls it, of praying for seekers at the mourner's bench."—Then he goes on to teach us, that we are to pray for kings, and for rulers, and all that are in authority. Can the Br. tell us, whether the kings, or rulers, or all that are in authority, belong either to Israel or Judea? if not, he, as well as the Protestant clergy, belong to one of the branches of Popery. Neither he, nor I, neither any one belonging to the Protestant Church, believes that God will pardon any man, if he is a king, in his own unbelief; but, we do not believe, and so must he, if he is a consistent man, that when a sinner is seeking salvation, it is right and proper to pray for him as we are informed, Mat. xvii, 19. Again, I say unto you, that if two of you shall agree, on earth, as touching any thing, that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father, which is in heaven. Then, I do hope, that no one will be deterred from asking the Lord, in prayer, to convert mourners in Zion, as one of the things they may ask for.—May the Lord give His people more of a disposition to pray for sinners, and aliens, and all men. I do candidly think, that many of the Protestant clergy, know as much of the world, and the church, and God, and religion, and real enjoyment in it, as my worthy friend, Br. O.

A DISCIPLE.

For the Western Recorder.

PUZZLE.

I am composed of twenty letters:

My 13, 19, 11, 18, 9, is the name of a useful animal;

My 18, 8, 6, 10, 20, 19, 10, is the name of a late Governor of Ohio;

My 8, 6, 11, 16, 2, 18, 17, 10, is the name of a county in Ohio;

My 1, 14, 11, 15, 9, 20, is the name of a county in Pennsylvania;

My 7, 6, 5, 10, 9, is the name of one of the States in the Union;

My 17, 11, 19, 10, is the name of an article much used in the United States;

My 1, 17, 4, 3, 2, 14, 7, 18, is the name of a small town in Massachusetts;

My 13, 9, 20, 15, 12, is the name of a county in Georgia;

My 19, 16, 3, 9, 6, 10, 18, is a county in New York;

My 15, 19, 18, 9, is the name of a beautiful and fragrant flower;

My whole is the name of a late General in the United States Army. J. L. L., Jr.

Pittsburgh, Dec. 11, 1840.

DEFERRED ARTICLES.

We perceive that several of the leading Whig papers of the Union are calling upon Congress to repeal the sub-treasury. A substitute is not proposed. Senator Buchanan, if we remember aright, alluded during the last Congress to a sub-treasury and a national bank as the only available currency expedient for this country.—Bicknell.

SUICIDES.—The number of suicides registered in England and Wales in 1838 was 1044, of registered deaths 342,000 out of a population of 16,000,000. In France, the number of suicides is estimated at 1750 out of a population of 30,000,000.

The newspapers of this country have recently been producing long disquisitions on the rapid increase of suicides in these States. Some have endeavored to account for it in one way, and some in another. But whatever may be the cause, the great increase, especially, during the past few months, strikes any reflective mind with a sense of deep melancholy. We have no table at hand to compare the suicides in the United States with those which occur in other countries but an old and observant gentleman at our elbow declares that in number they are fast verging upon those which occur in the Old World.—Spt. Cour.

MAJ. GEN. MACOMB had a severe attack of apoplexy on Monday last, at Washington, which was thought in the first instance, to be fatal; his friends, however, are relieved from any apprehensions of immediate danger. This is the second attack the commander-in-chief has experienced.—New Yorker.

STATE DEBT OF VIRGINIA.—The public debt of the State of Virginia, according to the Beacon, is at the present time $6,500,000, exclusive of its liabilities under act authorizing loan for works of internal improvement, which amount to $3,442,120 more.—ib.

HON. W. C. PRESTON, the Pendleton, (S. C.) Messenger reports, intends to resign his seat in the Senate, in which case Mr. M'Duffie, it is supposed, will succeed him.

HELPING ONE FORWARD IN LIFE.—Rachael Ramsay, convicted in Baltimore of the murder of Ann Durke, has been sentenced to imprisonment in the penitentiary until the 30th of August, 1855.

WELCOME.—The Ann Eliza at New York from Vera Cruz brought $120,000 in specie.

Letters from Georgia say that the Cotton crop of that State will fall at least two-thirds short of a general average.

LAUNCH.—The Steamship Kamschatka, ordered by the Emperor of Russia and built by W. H. Brown, was launched a few days since in a fine style. She is to have an engine of six hundred horse power, which is greater in proportion to her tonnage than the steam power of any other large vessel.

Two kidnappers have been arrested for stealing slaves in Delaware, who have been engaged in the horrid business for years, and have stolen over thirty-five.

DROWNED.—Mr. Hartler Mercer was lost overboard from the Schr. Henry, Norton, near Grand River, yesterday.—The foresheet got twisted around his leg in jibbing, and threw him about 40 feet from the vessel. Every exertion was made to rescue him, but without success. —Cleav. Herald, Nov. 21.

GOOD ADVICE.—The Boston Transcript speaking of "pretty girls," says: 'This bringing up daughters to think of nothing but dress, and finery, and balls, and parties, and beaux, is not discharging the duties of a mother who wishes the welfare of her children. Send them into the kitchen, it won't hurt them; it will do them good, both mentally and physically.'

A paper devoted to American news and interests is about to be established at London, called the Anglo-American.

A further appropriation of $100,000 has been made by the city of New York for the Croton works.

The barque Jones, captain Gibbet, of N. Y. has been seized by H. B. M. brig Dolphin as a slaver.

RUN OVER AND KILLED.—Joseph Neff, a Fireman, was run over by the cars, near Hollidaysburg, Pa., a few days since and killed.

HUNG.—Zachariah Freeman, Jr., was executed at Syracuse, N. Y., on the 19th ult. for killing Sarah Boyd, on the 18th of May last, by stabbing her with a knife.

ANTIDOTE.—Muriate of Narcotine is said to be a perfect substitute for Quinine. It has been used by Dr Stewart, of Calcutta, with good effect in remittant fevers, which are so dangerous and fatal in Bengal.

It is stated in the Cincinnati Gazette, that a square of ground in the western part of that city, has been purchased and conveyed to Bishop Purcell, as a site for a new Catholic Cathedral.

HONESTY OF THE SWISS.—A modern traveller relates that in a town in Switzerland, it is customary for those who have found any thing lost, even money, to affix it to a large crucifix in the churchyard; and that there is not an example on record of an article being taken away except by the rightful owner.

MURDER.—On Monday, Mr. Alfred D. Myres, store-keeper at the English neighborhood, New Jersey, was found lying dead in his store, with several severe bruises on his face, head and body, and a handkerchief tightly tied about his neck.

There are 250,000 persons in Great Britain, who receive dividends of and under £200 per annum, as interest on the public funds. Or, in other words, who have invested in the National debt a principal yielding that interest.

The Ayre (Scotland) Observer, relates the following excellent anecdote: In a village church, a few Sundays back, the clergyman having published the bands of marriage, was aptly followed by the clerk reading the hymn commencing, "Mistaken souls who dream of heaven."

Seth Converse, Esq., of Illinoistown, was thrown from his horse and run over by a carriage which was directly behind. He expired in a few hours.

Mr. Brandt, mate of the schr. Elizabeth, Capt. Remington, of this port, was lost overboard in the Delaware, a few nights since.—Phil. paper.

It is stated that the amount of toll received on the Columbia rail road, for travel from Fairmount to the Bridge, for the last month, was $5, and that the State agent, who has charge of that portion of the road, receives $60 per month for his services. A money making concern—'ever the left!"—ib.

MRS. WORTHINGTON BURNT TO DEATH. Baltimore papers state that Mrs. Worthington, the accomplished lady of John T. H. Worthington, member of Congress from Baltimore county was so severely burnt on Tuesday evening, by her clothes taking fire during the brief absence of the nurse from her room, that she died the next morning.

RESPITED.—The Albany Evening Journal of Friday says that "the convict Jacob Leddings, who was sentenced to be executed this day, we understand has been respited, and the execution of his sentence postponed to the 18th instant, by the Governor, upon the urgent representation of clergymen of the city of his total unfitness for the awful event."

WARNING TO BOYS.—In Philadelphia on Monday evening, a lad who was clinging to the back part of a sleigh, while it was passing in Third street, near Market, received a very severe cut in his eye from the lash of the whip in the hands of the driver. The boy was so much injured that he will be deprived of sight hereafter.

MELANCHOLY.—Mr. Joseph Cunard, an old and respectable resident of Whiteplain township, Montgomery county, Pennsylvania, in a fit of mental derangement, committed suicide on Friday, by hanging himself.

KEEPING WATCH.—The Hawk-Eye, of Burlington, Iowa Territory, says that the ballot-box at Burlington was in the shape of a tin bucket with a paper cover, and was placed in the Land Office over night, before the votes were counted.

SHOT HIS SISTER BY ACCIDENT.—Near Cattaragus, N. Y., a little son of Mrs. Hannah Colt, a widow, playfully pointed a gun at his mother and snapped it, supposing it not to be charged. The gun, however, had a full charge in it, and it exploded, missing the mother, but sending the entire load into the neck of his sister, about nine years of age, killing her instantly.

VESSEL AND CREW LOST.—The Cleveland Herald informs us that the schooner Gleaner of Ohio city, Capt. Chase, with a crew of three men, left that port on the 28th September, with a cargo of corn, for Kingston, U. C., from the office of C. McDonald & Co., since which time nothing has been heard of her. She has undoubtly foundered and all her crew lost.

A regular packet has been established between Philadelphia and Matagora, Texas.

A VIPER.—A boy named Henry Wolff who had been preserved from the House of Refuge by Alderman Johnson, basely robbed his benefactor who was sick in bed, a few days ago, of $10.

COMMUNICATION.

For the Western Recorder.

Please publish the following appointments:

Pittsburgh station,	January	3,	1841.
Ohio circuit,	"	10,	"
Steubenville station,	"	17,	"
Marshall circuit,	"	24,	"
Tyler "	"	31,	"
Woodsfield "	February	7,	"
Georgetown circuit,	"	14,	"
Mt. Pleasant "	"	21,	"

Yours, &c,, Z. RAGAN.

An Apprentice Wanted.

THE subscriber wishes to take a boy of 12 or 15 years of age, to learn the TAILORING BUSINESS. One from the country will be preferred. Applicants must come well recommended.

W. BERKSHIRE.
Main street, Putnam, Ohio.
December 16, 1840 69

Puff! Puff! Puff!!

CHEAP!

CHEAPER THAN EVER! GREAT BARGAINS!

New York at your door!

SELLING OFF AT COST!

WE so heartily despise the "gull-catching" system that we seldom advertise at all. We however give our friends and the public notice that we have just received a fine stock of

FALL AND WINTER

GOODS.

We don't profess to have brought "New York to your doors," nor to undersell every body else, nor to be "selling off at cost," nor to be "closing up," and all that sort of thing,—but we do say, that our goods are cheap enough to satisfy any reasonable person, even in these "hard times."

A. A. GUTHRIE & Co.
Putnam, Ohio, September 30, 1840. 3w58

Dissolution.

THE partnership heretofore existing between the subscribers in the PUTNAM FOUNDRY, under the firm of HARTLEY & ANDERSON, was this day dissolved by mutual consent.

The Putnam Foundry will hereafter be conducted by J. J. Anderson & Co.

LEVI HARTLEY,
JACOB J. ANDERSON.
Putnam, Jan. 1, 1840. (Jan. 29: 23.)

DRUGS, Medicines, Paints, Dyestuffs, Oils, and Spirits Turpentine. Cheap for cash, or good horses, by A. LIPPITT.
Main st., No. 72, Zanesville, Nov. 4. 63tf

New and Cheap Goods.

POTTS & GRAHAM, are now enabled by a fresh arrival of FALL and WINTER GOODS, to offer to the public a very general assortment of all articles in their line. Their stock is almost ENTIRELY NEW, and embraces a complete supply of DRY GOODS, GROCERIES, QUEENSWARE, HARDWARE, &c. All of which they will sell upon such terms, and conduct their business throughout upon such principles, as cannot fail to afford permanent satisfaction to all who may favor them with their custom.

☞Most kinds of country produce, including any quantity of new Butter, will be taken in exchange for goods.

Putnam, Ohio, Nov. 4. 63tf

A Rich New Year's Present.

YOUTH'S CABINET.

For Families and Sunday Schools, weekly, at $1 per year, in advance.

THE fourth volume of this well known and highly approved Juvenile paper commences the first week in January, 1841, edited by N. Southard. It is made up of choice Narratives, original and select, pleasing Moral and Religious, Literary and Scientific Instruction, a variety of Useful Information, Juvenile Poetry, Anecdotes, &c., all designed to promote the best good of the young. It inculcates impartial Benevolence, Temperance, and all other Christian Virtues.

It is neatly printed on half a royal sheet, and each number contains one or more engravings. It has been highly recommended by one hundred editors, and many parents and teachers, in notices and letters like the following:

From a Mother in Springfield, Mass.

"My little girl is delighted with the Cabinet. She can scarcely wait for the week to come round; and when the little welcome messenger arrives, her work or play is laid aside, to have a feast, as she calls it, with the welcome guest. She is willing to make any sacrifice rather than give up her paper."

From a Clergyman in Central New York.

"My little daughter, eight years old, is very much delighted with your paper; and indeed, I read it myself with great interest."

We would refer those who wish for a neat, appropriate paper for their children, to the Youth's Cabinet, which they will find all they could desire in such a publication.—Green Mountain Emp.

We hope all the young who can afford it, will have the opportunity of reading the Youth's Cabinet.—N. H. Baptist Register.

We must say, that it is decidedly the most interesting youth's paper we have seen.—N. York Weekly Messenger.

Mr. Southard, its Editor, has a happy faculty to convey instruction in an interesting manner, so as to leave a strong impression upon the minds of his juvenile readers. Its moral influence is decidedly good. If any family of children should unite and send one dollar, post paid, they will never be sorry that they had paid out their money for so good a paper.—Oberlin Evangelist.

☞Orders should be addressed, post paid, to the editor, at No. 9, Spruce street, New York, or 25, Cornhill, Boston.

December 23, 1840. 70

LITERARY SOUVENIR.

ON the first of January, 1841, will commence the third volume of the Literary Souvenir, enlarged and materially improved. Its form will be changed from that of folio, its present form, to a large quarto of eight pages. It will occasionally be embellished with Engravings, and also Music, arranged for the piano forte, flute, guitar, &c.

We have concluded to make the above arrangement from the fact that, on the account of the large amount of valuable matter contained in the Souvenir, many are anxious to bind their numbers for preservation. The quarto form will render them convenient for that purpose, and though the expense of publishing the paper according to the plan proposed, will at least be double the present expense, the price will not be increased. The music alone, would cost at the music stores more than the price charged for the paper, to say nothing of the engravings.

The character of the Souvenir will be somewhat changed, so as to conform more strictly with the meaning of its title—a literary remembrancer. Its columns will be filled with the choicest reading, embracing the various literary and scientific, and moral and religious subjects of the day, together with such items of news and miscellany as shall be deemed most important and useful to the general reader. While we may sometimes attempt to amuse as well as instruct, the utmost care will be taken to avoid every thing calculated to offend the tastes of the most chaste and refined. The mechanical execution of the paper will be in a superior style, and, in short, no effort shall be wanting to render the Souvenir a fit ornament for the centre table in the parlor of the wealthy, or a desirable and useful companion for those in humbler life.

TERMS:—$2,00 per annum, payable in advance. No subscriptions received for less than half a year.

It is hoped those who wish to commence with the volume will send in their subscriptions previous to the first of January. People in the country, wishing to become subscribers, can apply to their postmaster, who will probably forward their names and money free of expense, but in case he will not, we will pay the postage, provided the cash accompanies the name.

All communications should be addressed, free of expense, to A. B. F. HILDRETH.
Lowell, Mass., Dec. 23, 1840. 70

LITERARY REPOSITORY

THE second volume of the Literary Repository will commence on the first of January next. It will be enlarged so as to contain about one-third more reading matter than at present, and will be embellished with music and engravings. The Repository is designed more particularly for the patronage of the ladies. A number of ladies will contribute to its columns, and it will contain almost every variety of reading calculated to interest the female reader, such as Poetry, Biography, History, Moral and Sentimental Tales, Religious Tales, Religious Miscellany, Science, the Fine Arts, &c. &c.

TERMS:—The Repository will be published as formerly, every other week, in quarto form, at the extremely low price of one dollar a year, payable in advance.

A title page and index will be furnished at the close of the volume.

Those who are already subscribers and wish to continue, are requested to send in the subscriptions previous to the commencement of the new volume, otherwise the paper will be discontinued.

A. B. F. HILDRETH,
Publisher & Proprietor.
Lowell, Mass., Dec., 23, 1840. 70

Partnership Notice.

THE subscribers have formed a co-partnership under the firm of POTTS & GRAHAM, for the transaction of a general mercantile business; and will occupy for that purpose the old stand of Spear & Helmick, where their friends and others wishing to purchase goods, are respectfully solicited to call.

FRANCIS R. POTTS,
NELSON W. GRAHAM.
Putnam, Ohio, Nov. 4. 63tf

Winslow's Compound

BALSAM OF HOARHOUND.

UNRIVALED and unequalled in curing Colds, Coughs, Asthma, Influenza, Whooping Cough, and all diseases of the Breast and Lungs, leading to Consumption, composed of the concentrated virtues of the herbs Hoarhound, Boneset, and several other vegetable substances, warranted pure from any mineral whatever.

Sold by A. LIPPITT and S. GATES.
Zanesville, Nov. 4. 64tf

Notice.

BOOKS, Stationery, and Printer's Ink, for sale by A. LIPPITT.
Zanesville, Nov. 4. 63tf.

GRAHAMS MAGAZINE

AND THE

Ladies' & Gentleman's

WORLD OF LITERATURE

And Fashions.

The Casket and the Gentleman's united.

A NEW VOLUME under the above title, of the well established and fashionable Magazine, the Philadelphia Casket in conjunction with the Gentleman's Magazine, which has been every where pronounced the most readable and popular of the day, will be opened on the first of January, 1841, with an array of Contributors secured by the union, of talent and fame, which no periodical in the country can boast or pretend to rival. The December number will, however, be a specimen of the new volume. The volume will be opened with a new and beautiful type, the finest white paper, and with the first of a series of embellishments unsurpassed by any which have yet appeared in any Magazine. The style of elegance, the beauty and finish of these illustrations, and the extensive improvements which will be made in its typographical appearance, and above all the tone of its literary department, by the brilliant array of Contributors, whose articles have enriched the pages of each number, will give it a character, second to no Magazine in the Union. The character of the articles which shall appear in its pages, will be equally removed from a sickly sentimentality, and from an affectation of morality, but while a true delineation of human nature in every variety of passion is aimed at, nothing shall be found in its pages to cause a blush upon the cheek of the most pure.

THE LITERARY CHARACTER

will be sufficiently guaranteed by the reputation of both Magazines thus united, for years past.—Writers of the first rank have been regular Contributors to their pages, and the tales and sketches published in them have been widely copied and read, and the firm and independent tone of the criticisms, upon the current literature of the day, has been every where approved and commended.

THE LIST OF CONTRIBUTORS

embraces the names of most of the principal writers in America, with a respectable number of English authors. Original articles have appeared, during the last year, from the pens of the following:

Professor Ingraham,	David Hoffman, Esq.
" John Frost,	C. W. Thompson,
" N. C. Brooks,	Judge Tremper, N. Y.
" C. F. Wines,	John Du Solle, Esq.
Captain Marryatt,	Grenville Mellen, N. Y.
Morton McMichael, Esq.	P. B. Elder, Pa.
Hon. R. T. Conrad,	The author of 'Stanley,'
W. Gaylord Clark, Esq.	Edgard A. Poe, Phil'a.
C. J. Patterson, Esq.	T. G. Spear, "
Rev. T. H. Stockton,	Au'r of How. Pinckney,
Samuel W. Stockton,	Mrs. L. H. Sigourney,
E. Armstrong, Esq.	Miss C. H. Waterman,
Gen. G. P. Morris, N. Y.	Mrs. Ann Stephens,
Leigh Hunt, England,	Benson Hill, England,
Mrs. F. Kemble Butler,	Dr. J. K. Mitchell,
Park Benjamin, N. Y.	Jas. Montgomery, Eng.
Douglas Jerrold, Eng.	A. M'Makin, J. E. Dow,
Joseph C. Neal, the American Boz!	E. Holden, Esq.
	J. Beauchamp Jones,
James F. Otis, N. Y.	Mrs. E. F. Ellett,
R. S. Elliott, Pa.	Dr. T. D. English.

In addition to this brilliant array of names known to fame, the distinguished services of a host of anonymous writers of no ordinary abilities, have given worth and character to the pages of the Magazines. The series of well known nautical papers entitled, "Cruizing in the Last War," have had a run, unequalled by any series published in any Magazine, for years. The author promises to open the first of a new series of

TALES OF THE SEA,

and from his known abilities as a depictor of sea scenes and life, much may be relied upon from him in maintaining the popularity of the Magazine. Papers may, be expected during the volume, also from the author of the well know articles entitled, "The Log of Old Ironside." The author of "Syrian Letters," will also lend his powerful and graceful pen, to sustain and increase the reputation of the work. The valuable aid of the author of "Leaves from a Lawyer's Port Folio," has also been secured,—and we may expect something still more thrilling from the capacious stores which a long life in the profession has enabled him to amass. An occasional Chit-Chat, with "Jeremy Short," and "Oliver Oldfellow, is also promised; with a variety of choice articles in prose and verse, from various writers of celebrity, as Contributors to the prominent Magazines of the country. The editors of both Magazines continue their services under the new arrangement. With such an array of talent, a Magazine of unrivalled attractions, may safely be promised the coming volume.

FASHIONS AND ENGRAVINGS.

In compliance with the almost unanimous wish of our lady subscribers, we shall the ensuing volume furnish them with a beautiful and correct plate of FASHIONS MONTHLY, a feature, it is believed, that will neither be unwelcome nor unpopular. These fashion plates shall be drawn from original designs from Paris and London, and may always be depended upon as the prevailing style in Philadelphia and New York for the month in which they are issued. These however, shall in no wise interfere with the regular and choice engravings, and music which accompany each number of the work. The splendid Mezzotint engravings from the burin of Sartain, which have been so justly admired, will be followed during the volume by several from the same hand, while the steel engravings in the best style of art, from interesting scenes shall still enrich the Magazine. The choicest pieces of music for the Piano and Guitar shall accompany each number of the work.

TIME OF PUBLICATION.

The work will be published on the first of the month in every quarter of the Union. The most distant subscriber will consequently receive it on that day, as well as those who reside in Philadelphia. In all the principal cities agents have been established, to whom the Magazine is forwarded, prior to the time of issuing it so that they may be delivered to resident subscribers by the first of the month. This is an important arrangement to distant subscribers, who become tired, importunate, and eventually discontinue many works, in consequence of the great delay by publishers.

TERMS.—THREE DOLLARS per annum. Or two Copies yearly for FIVE DOLLARS, invariably in advance, post paid. No new subscriber received without the money, or the name of a responsible agent. For the accommodation of those who may wish to subscribe for either of the following Philadelphia perodicals, this is made. For Five Dollars current money free of postage, we will forward Graham's Magazine, and Godey's Lady's Book, for one year.

LIBERAL PROPOSAL

Address, post paid GEO. R. GRAHAM,
South-west corner of Chesnut and Third streets, Philadelphia.
December 23, 1840. 70

Notice.

ALL persons indebted to the late firm of Hartley & Anderson, are earnestly requested to call at the Foundry and make settlement, as the change of owners makes this step absolutely necessary. We ask the attention of all persons concerned, to this notice.

J. J. ANDERSON & Co.
Putnam, Jan. 1, 1840. (Jan. 29: 23.)

Dissolution.

THE partnership heretofore existing betw S. B. Johnson and J. M. Kirkpatrick, der the firm of S. B. Johnson & Co. was dis ed by mutual consent, on Thursday 19th ins

S. B. JOHNSON,
J. M. KIRKPATRI
Zanesville, March 31, 1840. 32tf

William Green,

CLOCK AND WATCH REPAIRER, SILVERSM AND JEWELLER,

CAN be found at his shop on Main st Putnam, a few doors north of J. C. G rie's store, where he will do his best to accom date customers. He keeps on hand an ass ment of spectacles, watch trimmings, pencils,

As far as we have tried Mr. GREEN as a wa repairer he has given us good satisfaction.— April 22, 1840. 35tf.

Ohio State Journal,

FOR THE SESSION.

THE proceedings of the next General Asse bly being looked to with much interest, publishers of the Ohio State Journal assures patrons, that his arrangements will insure, heretofore, reports which may be relied upon correctness and fairness.

In addition to the general object of the Jo nal, it will be devoted, during the Session of Legislature, to a careful and impartial detai the proceedings in that body. Arrangeme will also be made to procure an abstract of t proceedings in Congress; and the readers of t Journal may depend upon the latest and m important news from Washington. For the p pose of extending such information, and incre ing its circulation among those who are not regular subscribers, the Journal will be furnish on the following terms, invariably in advance:

Tri-Weekly, for the session,.....$2,0
Semi-Weekly,.....do..... 1,5

CHARLES SCOTT, Publisher.
Columbus, November 13, 1840.

Glass Manufactory.

THE subscriber having dissolved his conne ion with the former company, has taken t GLASS WORKS below town under his ow management.

WINDOW GLASS, double and single, e seizes, and of superior quality will be kept co stantly on hand for sale on reasonable terms. The experience of the proprietor, in the manu facture of the article, will insure all made to b of the best quality. Call and see.

S. B. JOHNSON.
Zanesville, Ohio, May 6, 1840. 37

O. WHITE, BOOK BINDER, No. 10 Main Street, Zanesville, Ohio.
January 15, 1840. 21tf

CABINET AND CHAIR FACTORY.

THE subscribers still continue to manufac ture and keep on hand, at their old stand a few doors south of the market house in th town of Putnam, a large assortment of

CABINET WARE

AND

CHAIRS,

CONSISTING, IN PART, OF

Splendid black walnut and mahogony dressing and plain bureaus,
Peer, card, center, side, dining and breakfast ta bles,
Sofas, side-boards, washing stands, ottomans,
Dressing and writing tables,
French, fancy and high post bedsteads,
Secretaries, clock cases, cradles, cribs and book cases,
Grecian, rush, cane and windsor chairs,
Sociables, settees and children's chairs.

In short every thing in their line necessary to furnish a house, either in high or common style; and at such prices as will satisfy all who will favor them with their custom. All the recommendation they have to offer, is, that they have been able to secure a continuance of their old customers and friends. They hope by the quality of their work and a strict attention to business to share a portion of the public patronage.

They have for sale a lot of first rate black walnut veneering and a lot of bureau knobs of the best kind and quality.

Turning done in the best style and shortest notice. CHERRY & GRAY.
Putnam, Ohio, October 28, 1840. 62tf

Session Ohio Statesman.

WE propose to issue the Statesman, during the ensuing session of the Ohio Legislature, on the following terms, viz:

Tri-Weekly, during the session,		$2	00
Semi-Weekly,	"	"	1 50
Weekly,	"	"	1 00

Persons subscribing will please designate which paper it is that they desire.

No subscription will be received unless payment is made in advance.

We shall have good reporters, and use what industry we are capable of employing on our paper, to give a correct and extensive view of all their doings.

The proceedings of Congress will also be duly given as heretofore.

S. & M. H. MEDERY.
Columbus, Nov, 13, 1840.

THE

WESTERN RECORDER

IS PUBLISHED EVERY WEDNESDAY.

☞The office of the Recorder is five and a half miles west of Zanesville.

TERMS.

1. The WESTERN RECORDER will be published weekly, on an imperial sheet, at $2 00 per annum, in advance: $2 50 at the end of three months; $3 00 at the end of the year.

2. No discontinuances will be allowed, except at the discretion of the publisher, until all arrearages are paid.

3. To all ministers having regular pastoral charges, who do any thing at all for the paper, if they will direct us where, a copy shall be sent gratis; any other who forward to us $10 00 for new subscribers, shall have six copies sent to any address he may give.

4. All letters designed for the paper, must be directed to "C. Springer, Meadow Farm, Muskingum, Ohio."

5. A failure to notify a discontinuance before the expiration of the subscription year, will be considered a new engagement.

CHARACTER.—The pages of the WESTERN RECORDER will be open to discussion on all moral questions;—it will give articles on Literature, Mechanics, Agriculture,—an abstract of Religious and Political intelligence, and whatever may be interesting and instructive to families in general. A portion of its columns will be open to Advertisements and Prices Current, —another portion to sustain the interests of the Methodist Protestant Church in the West.—These two latter objects will not likely occupy more than one page.

The RECORDER will take a firm stand against Clerical Supremacy.

THE WESTERN RECORDER.

SPRINGER, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.
TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM IN ADVANCE.

Vol. 2.--No. 20. ZANESVILLE, OHIO, WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 6, 1841. Whole No. 72.

JOHN W. WHITE, PRINTER.
$2.50, IN THREE MONTHS; $3, END OF YEAR

COMMUNICATIONS.

For the Western Recorder.

'RATHER LATE IN THE DAY."

says the P. C. Advocate, in refer- to objections to "the nature of Meth- Episcopacy." "The principles of iastical tyranny," &c.,&c. I shall estion the correctness of this say- the meaning is, that the power ed will not be relinquished, but with a tenacious grasp. That sound opher, Paley, says, "they who are possession of power, do what they keep it." And Lord Chatham said, nited power, is apt to corrupt the of those who possess it." And Dr. said, that its "tendency is to ulate." This saying might have sed in 1792, when O'Kelley, Coke cKendree opposed, without success, pal prerogatives; when failed, they have said, and the adherents of might have said, "rather late in y." t might have been said in 1824, resolutions, to curtail Episcopal , were advocated by many choice , and favored by two Bishops—but —and suspended, by the influence who opposed that power in 1792, Bishop elect! Emory and Waugh, l as Shinn, Bascom and many oth- o opposed Episcopal power, might aid, "rather late in the day." The anguage might have been repeated 8, when the most weighty petitions emorials were repulsed, and the right of the Bishops and the itin- clergy to teach and govern, assert- e venerable men, such as Snethen, gs, Shinn, &c., &c., who prayed qual rights," might have said, as vocates of power were want to say, r late in the day."

enerable old local minister had a recently, in which he saw an old a state of decay, which he thought emblem of the M. E. Church; its d limbs and trunk seemed to indi- nger to all around,—an attempt it failed—its wood was too hard— r late in the day." Many, very "fawn on success and power, re acquir'd." Its roots have struck sts branches have shot up; numbers, , popularity, power, &c., &c.,have her an imposing form,and rendered the estimation of some, impregna- t, like Jonah's gourd, there may worm at the root: for God putteth one and setteth up another. When united societies," whom Mr. Wes- dressed in 1784, as "disentangled the English hierarchy," as "at perty to follow the scriptures and rimitive church," it was not too in the day" for them to have fol- his advice, "the scriptures and the ive church." In that case there have been no "ecclesiastical ty- " or Episcopal power to complain write against. But, ah! those sands, in these States," were unap- of what was going on—were not ted—as were "the multitude of sciples," and "the whole church" The "suffrages and voices of the e or "assembly of the people" were ught or regarded, as in the primi- hurch, down to the third century. hen the itinerant clergy alone had d "an Episcopal Church" and es- ed a clerical aristocracy, and gull- simple-hearted and unsuspecting e, it was "rather late in the day" y thing but "passive obedience and resistence." When "the people first in authority" and "invested he sovereign power," "chose their rulers and teachers," "rejected or med, by their suffrages, the laws ere proposed by their rulers to the bly," and "exercised all that au y which belongs to such as are in- l with the sovereign power." See eim. Then, it was not "rather late day" to have watched encroach- upon their liberty and rights. But "the Bishops aspired to higher de- of dignity and power," "trampled rights of the inferior clergy," and people were excluded from all part e management of ecclesiastical af- " See Mosheim. When "riches nor were heaped on the clergy," mperors found it to their interest to ise Bishops—then, it was "rather the day" to declare against "ec- stical tyranny," "the Pope and his erants." The splendor of fine hes, the dignity of the title "Bishop," ultiplication of titles, the vast in- e of the monkish order, whose inte- t was to sustain the pretentions of ishops—all this, with wealth and ption, like a torrent, swept over the e, until the cardinals made the Pope he Pope made the cardinals, and versa. It was then, indeed, "ra- ate in the day" to oppose the strides wer; they could say, "our march ward!" It is true, that we live un- republican government, with laws and lenient—so did the primitive ians. It is also true, that the odist preachers have done much in rting men to real christianity—so e primitive preachers; to this, and present efforts to do good, no man bject. But it is yet true, that what has been, may be again—that human nature is ever the same—that there is danger in power, and that it becomes every christian and patriot to be zealous of his liberty and rights, to watch the encroach- ments of power—and if he see the sword, to give the alarm. The elements of destruction have been in motion, the clergy have mingled in the strife, the in- fluence of the clergy and of the church have been caught at by heated partizans; but, I trust in God, that it is not yet "ra- ther late in the day" to guard our liber- ties and lift the veil that hides the "iron hoof" of insidious power. G. L.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

ALLEGHENY, PA., DEC. 20, 1840.

Br. Springer: We are at this time holding a protracted meeting that begins to promise pretty well,—about twenty have been added to the church since con- ference. Some eight or ten have found peace since the commencement of our protracted meeting. May the Lord give us success. Yours, &c.

JOHN BURNS.

TYLER CT., VA., DEC. 9, 1840.

Br. Springer: Our first quarterly meeting for this circuit was held on the 8th of November. We had no particular excitement, but had a state of good feel- ing,—one was added to the church. We, not expecting any help from our own min- isters, called on a Baptist brother from Middleburn, who kindly aided us on the Sabbath day.—We have, in this section, large congregations, and the people gen- erally favor our principles. God grant prosperity to Zion. Yours, &c.

W. G. WILLIAMS.

MANCHESTER, MICH., DEC., 14, 1840.

Dear Br. Springer: I arrived at Adrian mission, November 7th, and have been laboring since then amongst a very intel- ligent and loving people, whose doors are open to receive me, and their hearts to receive the gospel. The fire of divine grace is beginning to burn in the hearts of the people.

We have organized two classes under favorable circumstances,since we arrived, and the community seem to bid us God speed. We have seen the tear rolling down the sinner's cheek,while saints have rejoiced in the love of God.

Yours, &c.

C. C. CHAPMAN.

FOR THE YOUNG.

THE GENEROUS REVENGE.

'Charles,' said Henry Morris to his brother, one fine summer morning, 'Charles, will you lend me your kite this morning, a little while? Do, if you are not going to use it; I will be very care- ful to keep hold of the string, and not lose it.'

'No, I shan't lend you my kite! You may go and make one for yourself! I ain't a going to lend my kite to every body, I know,' answered Charles in a loud and surley tone.

'But I should think you might lend it to me a little while, if you are not going to use it,' still urged Henry.

'I tell you I won't!' again answered Charles in a surlier and louder tone than before. 'You nedn't ask me again for I won't lend it to you. Besides I am going to use it myself!'

'Oh, if I had thought you wished to use it yourself, I would not have asked you to lend it to me I am sure,' mildly replied Henry. 'You will let me see you fly it, won't you?'

'I don't care what you see!' was the gruff reply of Charles, as he left the room to fetch his kite. Henry waited patient- ly for the return of Charles, who soon came back with the toy in his hand, and seating himself by the open window pre- tended to be occupied in fixing the string. All at once he took out his pen-knife, and opening it, began to cut the kite to peices, and in one minute had entirely destroyed it and thrown the fragments out of the window.

'Oh, Charles,' cried Henry, 'how could you do that instead of lending it to me? You said you were going to fly it.'

'No I didn't say I was going to fly it, either; I said I was going to use it, and I have used it all up, hav'nt I?' answered Charles, looking at Henry's sorrowful face, with a malicious laugh. 'Now you may go and look as blue as you please about it, and be revenged too if you like, as I suppose you will, you are such a re- vengeful fellow!'

'May be I shall!' said Henry in a low voice, as he took his hat and went out to walk in the garden. When he was out of sight of the window, he sat down under a large tree and was quite melancholy. 'How can Charles always treat me so?' said he to himself, 'any body would think he hated me, he always takes so much pains to plague me. To destroy his own kite rather than lend it to me? And then to call me revengeful, and talk about my being revenged on him, as if I was such a wicked boy as to want to be reven- ged on my own brother! But I told him that may be I should be, and may be I shall too, but it will not be in a way he thinks it will.' Henry sat a long time musing, when his countenance suddenly lighted up as if some pleasant thought had crossed his mind, and he arose and walked into the house

A few days after this Mr. Morris went to the city and brought home a beautiful set of little garden tools, watering pot, wheelbarrow and all complete. After calling his two sons to him, he said to Charles, 'I overheard your conversation the other day with Henry, when, instead of lending him your kite, you tore it to peices: and as it was in keeping with the numerous other instances of the same kind I have noticed in you,I have thought it my duty to punish you for your bad conduct, and to reward Henry for his uniform mildness and forbearance to- wards you. I have, therefore, bought him these beautiful garden utensils, that you may be both convinced that neither the good nor the bad conduct of my chil- dren pass unregarded by me. Take them Henry they are yours. As for you Charles, you may go and spend the af- ternoon alone, and reflect upon the evil consequences of your wicked disposition; and remember that unless you correct it, and amend your course of conduct, you will be hated and despised by the whole world.' The mortified Charles retreated from the room without a single word, and hiding himself in a little grove be- hind the house shed bitterer tears than he had wept for many a day. 'Is it true,' said he to himself, 'that I am such a wicked dispositioned boy? I must be, or my father would never have looked and spoken so harshly to me. And now I look back upon the past, I remember that whenever I have ill-treated Henry, he has never in any way returned my abuse. My father is right. Henry deserved a reward and I a punishment. Oh, that I could only be as good a boy as he is!'

In this manner, shame, repentence, and a resolution to reform, filling his mind by turns he passed the afternoon. When it began to grow dark he slowly returned to the house, and crept, without observa- tion to his chamber. As he opened the door, how was he surpirsed to see the garden utensils, which his father had given to Henry, standing near the table, and on it a letter directed to himself! He snatched it up, and opening it, read the following lines:

'My dear brother Charles—

'I know you have been long wishing for a set of garden implements, and I beg that you will do me the favor to accept of mine. I should not take half the pleas- ure in using them myself, that I shall in seeing you enjoy them.

'I hope you will not think I have any hard feelings about the kite; I have not I am sure, for I forgive you with all my heart, and when I said that perhaps I might be revenged, believe me I meant nothing but this kind of revenge.

'My dear brother, let us be loving and kind towards each other, as brothers should be, and then we shall always be happy. Your affectionate brother,

HENRY.'

The letter fell from the grasp of Charles and covering his face with his hands, burning tears of shame and regret trinkled fast through his fingers. When he was a little composed, he took the let- ter in his hand and went down stairs to find his father and Henry. They had just finished supper and were sitting to- gether in the porch before the door. 'O, father, oh Henry,' said he forgive me for all my past misconduct, and I will try to be a good boy in future; only forgive me this time!' The gratified father assu- red him of his forgiveness, and Henry heartily shook his hands, and laughed and cried both together. 'But you must take back your present, Henry,' said Charles, 'I cannot except of that.' 'Keep it,' said his father, 'keep it, it will help you to bear in memory your good resolutions, and remind you of your brother's 'gener- ous revenge.'

C. M. S.

WHEN WILL YOU LOVE GOD.—One Sab- bath morning I had been talking to a class at the Sunday school about the love of God in giving up his only Son to die for us. The children were all very atten- tive: at length I said, 'Since God has shown so much love for us, ought we not to love him in return?' I waited for an answer but no one replied. I then turn- ed to one little girl, and said, 'What do you think about it Fanny?'

'I cannot love God now,' the little girl replied.

'Cannot love him, my dear!' I said; 'why cannot you? God gave Jesus to die for you, your friends, your food, clothing and every other blessings which you re- ceive; and if I am not very much mista- ken, you love your mother in return for her kindness to you, and why cannot you love God in return for his kindness?'

'I cannot love him now, teacher,' the little the girl replied.

'And why not now?' I asked. 'If you cannot now, when will you love him?'

'I will love him when I get to heaven, teacher,' said Fanny.

'But nay, dear child, if you do not love him now, do you think God will take you to heaven? O no! you must love him now, and thus, when you get to heaven, you will love him much more.'

'And when, my, dear, will you love God?' said I, turning to another little girl.

'Oh! teacher,' said the little girl, and the tears started into her eyes, 'I do love him a little now, but I want to love him more.'

'And what must you do if you want to love him more.'

'I must pray to God to help me ma'am.'

'Yes,' I replied, 'and he will help you; he delights in the prayers even of a child, and he will hear your prayers, if you pray in sincerity.'

'I then turned to another, and said, 'When will you love God, Emma?'

'I will love him now, teacher; and thus when I die, I shall go to heaven, and I shall see little William; for mother says that he is gone to heaven.'

I had no time to reply, for the signal was now given to close the school; but, as I was collecting the books, Fanny said, 'I will love God now, teacher; I will pray to him to help me.'

'Do pray to him,' I replied, 'and he will help you.'

And now my young readers; I will put the same question to you—When will you love God?' Do not put it off, and think you cannot love him now, for you have great cause to love him. If you had committed a crime for which you were to be severely punished, and a friend came forward and begged to take the punish- ment which was due to you upon himself, would you not love him in return? would you not fear to offend him? How much more, then, ought you to love God, seeing that he has given up his only Son to die to save you from the punishment which was due to you for your sins! O for such love to guilty sinners can you do less than love him in return? Give him your heart—seek to please him, to serve him, and love him now; and, when, you die, you will go to heaven, and love him for ever.—Child's Companion.

LADY'S DEPARTMENT.

ADVICE TO WIVES.

BY J. A. JAMES.

Economy and order in the management of her personal and domestic expenditures are the obvious duties of a wife.

You are to preside in the direction of household affairs, and much of the pros- perity and comfort of the little community will depend upon your skilful and prudent arrangements. A showy, luxurious, and expensive taste, is almost universally cherished, and is displayed in innumera- ble instances, where there are no means to support it. Christian families are in the most imminent peril of worldly confor- mity in the present day; and the line of demarkation between the church and the world is fast wearing out. It is true thhe have no cards; they do not frequent the theatre or the ball-room; and perhaps they have no midnight routs; but this is all—for many are as anxious about their furniture, the fashions of their habits, the expensiveness of their entertainments, as the veriest worldling can be. Now a wife has a great influence in checking or pro- moting all this. It has been thought that this increasing disposition for show and gaity, is to be attributed chiefly to female vanity. It is woman that is generally regarded as the presiding genius of such a scene, she receives the praise and the compliment of the whole, and she, there- fore, is under the strongest temptation to promote it. But let her consider how little all this has to do with the happiness of the family, even in its most prosperous condition; and how the recollection of it agravates the misery of adversity, when a reverse takes place. Then to be found in debt for finery of dress and furniture; then to have it said that her extravagace helped to ruin her husband; then to want for bread which was formerly wasted on luxury; then to hear the whispered re- proach of having injured others by her own thoughtless expenditure! Avoid, my female friends, these miseries; do not go on to prepare wormwood and gall, to em- bitter still more the already bitter cup of adversity. Endeavor to acquire a skillfull- ness in domestic management, a frugality, a prudence, a love of order and neatness, a midway course between meanness and luxury, a suitableness to your station in life, to your christian profession, and economy, which shall leave you more to spare for the cause of God and the mise- ries of man. Rather check than stimu- late the taste of your husband for ex- pense; tell him that it is not necessary for your happiness, nor for the comfort of the family; draw him away from these adventitious circumstances, to the mental improvement, the moral culture, the religious instruction of children. Let knowledge, piety, good sense, well-formed habits, harmony and mutal love, be the source of your domestic pleasure; what is splendor of furniture, or dress, or en- tertainments, to these?

Without reason, as on a tempestuous sea, we are the sport of every wind and wave, and know not, till the event hath determined it, how the next billow will dispose of us; whether it will dash us against a rock, or drive us into a quiet harbor.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ASSAULTS UPON DIVINE REVELATION.—At one period arose Geology, from the earth's depths, and entered into mortal combat with a revelation which pillard on the evidence of history, has withstood the assault. At another time, from the atti- tudes of the upper firmanent was Astrono- my brought down, and arrayed in hostile attitudes against the records of our faith- and that attack has also proved powerless as the former. Then from the mysteries of the human spirit, an attempt has been industriously made to educe some discov- ery of wonderous spell, by which to disen- chant the world of its confidence in the gospel of Jesus Christ. From lecture- rooms of Anatomy, the lessons of materi- alism have been inculcated, and for the purpose of putting a mockery on all reli- gion, and driving it, if possible, from the face of the earth. But the most singular attempt to graft infidelity on any thing purporting to be a science, has been made by those who associate the doctrines of Phrenology with their denial of the Christian Revolation,as if there were any earth- ly connection between the form of the hu- man skull, and the truth or falsehood, of our religion? The science of Theology has been made a sort of play-ground for all manner of inroad in regard to human speculation; but it is not without a pecu- liar evidence of its own unassailable posi- tion, and beyond the reach of external violence. The hammer of the Geologist cannot break that demonstration—the tel- escope of the Astronomer cannot enable us to discry in it any character of false- hood—the knife of the Automist cannot find the way to the alledged rottenness which lies at its core—nor by a dissecting of Metaphysics can the Mental Philoso- pher probe his way to the secret of insuffi- ciency, and make exposure to the world, of the yet unknown flaw, which vitiates the proof of the Christian faith. All those sciences have cast their missiles at the stately fabric of our Christian philosophy and erudition, but they have dropped harmless and impotent at its base.—Chal- mers.

EARLY LOVE OF READING.—It should be an object with every parent to induce a- mong his children an early love of useful reading. The sooner a taste for this is es- tablished, the better. It tends to liberal- ize and exalt the young mind, and to store it with valuable furniture of knowledge, without which the subsequent life will in probability be a chapter of follies and ad- verse fortunes. But great care should be taken to make the most judicious selec- tions. Children should never be left to cater for their own mental appetites. If they are allowed to devour the nonsense and foul stuff that too often emanate from the press, they will be likely to grow up the worse for their reading. Poisonous food is worse than none.

Let parents keep trash out of their chil- drens way. Select for them only useful and instructive booke and periodicals, and create within them a taste for such read- ing in preference to that which is light and vain.

Now that the evenings are long, it would be an excellent arrangement to pro- vide for some course of systematic read- ing at the family fireside. To this end, where parents are not able to purchase a complete family library, let access be had to some social library, or the circulating libraries of the book stores. It will be, too, an agreeable relief from the confine- ment of domestic reading, for youth to become interested in the meetings of Ly- ceums for mental improvement, if such are established in the neighborhood.— But whatever the facilities for instruction may be, we repeat that an early love for reading is a very sure defence against the thousand follies and temptations that are in the way of the young, and should be encouraged as an object of deep solici- tude in every parent's heart. A system- atic course of home reading in evenings will at once be entertaining and instruc- tive, will have an excellent social effect, where brothers and sisters are taught to be helpers of each other in the pleasing duties of mutual instruction, and will save them from the evil influence of grog holes, gaming haunts and ball rooms.—Maine Cultivator.

THE OUTFIT OF A WHALER.—The outfit required for a whaling ship constitutes no inconsiderable item of the expense, amounting in a vessel which is fitted out for a three years' voyage, to be no less a sum than eighteen thousand dollars, while the hull, not unfrequently, cost twenty-two thousand dollars more, while many have sailed whose total cost does not vary far from sixty thousand dollars. The principal kind of provisions required for the crew upon their voyage, consists of beef and pork, bread, molasses, peas, beans, corn, potatoes, dried apples, coffee, tea, choclate, butter, besides from three to four thousand casks, made from white oak, and a quantity of spare duck cordage, and other articles which may be required in the course of the voyage. In a ship which mans four boats, from 30 to 32 men are employed. The contract entered into between the crew and the owners of the ship, and contained in the shipping articles that are required to be signed by each sailor, makes it binding on the owners to provide the ship and all the necessary outlays of the voyage; and upon the crew to perform their duty on board the ship, obeying all proper orders to the end of the voyage. As a compen- sation, they are entitled to such part of the oil, or whatever else may be obtained, as shall be agreed upon for their services, and if in any case of death or accident, any portion of the crew is unable to perform his part of the voyage, they or their legal representatives are empowered to draw in their own right, whatever of compensation would have fallen to their share had the voyage been completed, this compensation being proportioned to the time they shall have served. The "lays," or shares of the captain, officers, and crew, are measured by the amount of their experience and value in the voyage. When wages, however, are high in New York or Boston, seamen are difficult to be procured. These lays are of course depending upon various circumstances; but generally the captain's lay is one seventeenth part of all which is obtained; the first officer's, one forty-fifth; the 3d, one-sixteenth; the boat-steerer draws from an eighteenth to a hundred and twentieth, and the common sailors before the mast from a hundred and twentieth to a hundred and fiftieth, according to his experience, activity and strength.—On the outward passage, the crew are divided into two watches, similar to those which exist in the merchant service.

Our American whaling ships generally pass to the Pacific by the way of Cape Horn; others go by the eastern route, south of New Holland; others pursue their game in the Indian Ocean, the vicinity of Madagascar and the Red Sea, reach the Pacific through the straights of Timor, between New Guinea and the Pelew Islands, and advance onward to the coast of Japan. By these adventur- ous mariners, every part of the Pacific is explored, and many new discoveries are made, which are of a great service to the cause of navigation.—Hunt's Mer- chants' Magazine.

THE MARSEILLAISE.—The "Marseil- laise Hymn," as it is erroneously called, the war song of the army of the Rhine, is the production of Rouget de Lille, a French officer of Engineers, who was quartered at Strasburgh in the year 1791, when Marshall Luckner commanded the army, at that time entirely composed of young conscripts. The Marshal was to march the following morning of a cer- tain day, and late in the eventng previ- ous, he inquired if there were any men of musical or poetical genius in the army who could compose a soul inspiring song to animate his young soldiers.— Some one mentioned Captain Rouget de Lille, who was immediately ordered into the presence of the Marshall, to receive his commands on the subject, which hav- ing been given, and a promise made by De Lille that a song would be ready on the following morning, he went to his quarters, and during the night he not only wrote the song in question, but absolutely set it to music, and the next morning the army marched to its tune, and carried every thing before it, with an enthusiasm only to be equalled by absolute phrenzy. The song got the name of the "Marseille Hymn," from a body of troops being marched from Marseilles and entering the city of Paris, playing that tune, at a time that it was little known in that cap- ital. Capt. De Lille appears to have been a man of great poetical genius. At the French revolution of 1830, he was living in great obscurity in a garret at Parris, and the first act of Louis Phillippe on his accession to the throne, was to direct inquiries to be made for Captain De Lille, upon whom a tolerably hand- some pension was settled during his life. He died at Paris about four years since, and his manuscript poems and songs were sold, or rather were intended to have been sold, by auction. The writer of this was desirous of purchasing the original of the "Mareeillaise," which was beautifully written, and had but few cor- rections in it; but that and the whole of the manuscripts were bought by Louis Phillippe, in whose possession they now are.—Post.

PORK AT THE WEST.—It is supposed that the market price for Pork in Ohio and Indiana will rule at about $4: such were the last indications at Cincinnati and Madison. The market, which opened at about $4,75, has been gradually decli- ning until it has got down to 4,25 a $4 per 100 lbs. Last season the ruling prices were 3,50 to $4. It will be well to ob- serve, that there are large stocks of old barrelled Pork and Bocon in market at this time, both at the South and the East, and holders are pushing them off when- ever they can meet with a purchaser.— New Pork, or dressed Hogs, as brought to the New York, Philadelphia and Balti- more markets at this time, are offered in either at about 5 a $5,50, which is 1,25 to $1,50 below the price of the correspon- ding season of last year.—Lyford.

Resolutions have been introduced into the Senate of Kentucky in favor of a Bank of the United States.

WESTERN RECORDER.

ZANESVILLE:

WEDNESDAY, ... JANUARY 6, 1841.

FOOLERIES OF THE LAW.—The following illustrates the ridiculous nonsense that distinguishes the legal profession in many of its phases.

Language of lawyers.—If a man would, according to law, give to another an orange, instead of saying, "I give you that orange," which one would think would be what is called, in legal phraseology, "an absolute conveyance of all right and title therein," the phrase would run thus: "I give you all and singular my estate and interest, right, title, and claim, and advantage of and in that orange, with all the rind, skin, juice, pulp, and pips, and all right and advantage therein, with full power to bite, cut, suck, or otherwise eat the same or give the same away, as fully and effectually, as I, the said A. B. am now entitled to bite, cut, suck or otherwise eat the same orange, or give the same away, wi h or without its rind, skin, juice, pulp, and pips, any thing heretofore or hereafter, or in any other deed or deeds, instrument or instruments, of what nature or kind soever, to the contrary in any wise, notwithstanding;" with much more of the same effect.

Such is the language of lawyers, and it is very gravely held by the most learned men among them that, by the omission of any of these words, the right to the said orange would not pass to the person for whose use the same was intended.

Governor Lucas, in his Annual Message to the Ohio Legislature, in December, 1835, holds the following language on this subject:

"I urge it upon your consideration, to make such alterations in the rules or practice in our Courts of Justice as to abolish all fiction in actions of ejectment, as well as special pleadings, and all other technical formalities that are calculated in their nature to obscure the laws and retard the ends of justice. I have never been enabled to discover any good reason why the citizen of Ohio, in this enlightened age of the world, should adhere to rules and customs adopted in England in the darker ages, and which are not applicable, at the present time, to the genius of the American people. Our constitution declares 'that all courts shall be open, and every person, for any injury done him in his lands, goods, person, or reputation, shall have remedy by due course of law, and right and justice administered without denial or delay.' How often do we see the law obscured, rights withheld, and justice delayed, by the fictitious pleadings and technical formalities now practiced in our courts of justice!"

True indeed! Our courts of civil jurisdiction are governed by so many forms and technicalities, that justice seems to be buried behind them, like truth, in former years, behind the categories of the school men. By a failure to respect one of these arbitrary forms, which probably has no more to do with the justice of the case, than a ceremony in the manner of approaching an Asiatic Prince, the poor man is defrauded out of his honest dues. No person can have been a strict observer of the transactions of our courts of judicature, in relation to this matter, but what must feel inclined to tune a note to "the glorious uncertainties of the law."

Delolme, on the British Constitution, remarks that these forms, and technicalities, were, in the first establishment of courts, introduced, therein by the professors of the law, and a great deal of sacredness and importance thrown around them, in order to make the services of these professors indispensable in prosecuting the claims of justice, as they alone had time sufficient to study and become acquainted with these numerous formalities. But this enlightened age calls for an abandonment of these technical fooleries.—The manner in which they retard the operations of justice is fast sinking the profession of the law and the whole judicial system into disrepute. The intelligent yeoman repairs to the sanctuary of civil justice to prosecute his honest claims, and has brought with him all the evidence and light that his question admits of, and which is indeed abundantly sufficient to sustain his pretentions, but because he has unintentionally omitted to respect one of these ridiculous formalities, he has the mortification to find himself driven out of Court, chastised with a tremendous bill of cost, for this want of courtesy, and thrown back to the starting place at law.—He can return from this scene with no other than indignant feelings, which excite his contempt for such judicial farces. The daily recurrence of such things has greatly impaired public confidence in the judicial operations of our country; so much so that decisions of law are now considered, by the great mass of the people, to be little better than games of chance—that the only importance they are of at all is, that they put an end to disputations, it being better for a man to have his case decided in error than to be perpetually embroiled. A system of casting lots would accomplish the same object, secure justice, no doubt, equally as well, and as it would be so much cheaper, why not adopt it?

It is said of Charles the II, that he lived at a time when the spirit of the law was contrary to the genius of the people, and attempting to govern by old rules instead of conforming to the spirit of the times, he fell in the universal convulsion. This maxim is applicable to the present question, and the proper authorities would do well to consider it in time, lest our judicial system be overturned for the want of public confidence. It is well if the spirit of lynching, now so common, is not greatly strengthened from this very principle.

FOLLY OF LITIGATION.—The folly of litigation is well exhibited in the following, related to us by a friend who resided for some time in the State of Illinois. It bears, that a gentleman who had accumulated a fortune by the practice of the law, had retired from the profession and settled in this State. He opened an office for the purpose, and offered himself to his neighbors as a Pacificator. Associated with the label over the door, he had the pictures of two men drawn, the one naked, and the other in rags. The former had this sentence issuing from his mouth: "I went to law and lost the suit!"—the latter, "I went to law and gained the suit!" He "gained the suit!"—but another such victory, like that of Pyrrhus over the Romans, would have totally ruined him:—this had already clothed him in rags, but another such conquest would have left him, like his fellow litigant, entirely naked.

[Communicated.]

PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION.

Mr. Springer: I am anxious to see published, in a form capable of preservation, for future reference, the result of each Presidential Election since the adoption of our Federal Constitution. Accordingly, I send you the following, as a correct statement of the number of Electoral votes cast for President and Vice President of the United States, at each of the fourteen elections that have been held since the formation of our Government. It will be observed, that previous to the fifth election in 1804, the highest number of votes elected the President, and the next highest the Vice President. The difficulties growing out of the contest of 1800, (Jefferson and Burr having an equal number of votes in the Electoral Colleges, and also an equal number of States, during thirty-six ballotings,) led to the adoption of the present plan of voting separately for President and Vice President.

I have been at some trouble to collect from various sources, the information contained in the following table of Elections and it is believed to be correct. If you concur in opinion with me, as to the propriety of publishing it, you will give it a place in the Western Recorder.

First Election, 1788.—Number of Electors 69. George Washington received 69, John Adams 34, John Jay 9. Washington was elected President, and John Adams Vice President.

Second Election, 1792.—Number of Electors, 135. George Washington received 132 votes. John Adams 77, and George Clinton 50. Washington and Adams were both re-elected.

Third Election, 1796.—Number of Electors, 138. John Adams received 71 votes, Thomas Jefferson 69 votes, Thomas Pinckney 59, and Aaron Burr 30. Adams was elected President, and Jefferson Vice President.

Fourth Election, 1800.—Number of Electors, 138. Thomas Jefferson and Aaron Burr received, each, 73 votes; John Adams 65, and Charles C. Pinckney 64. As there was no choice of President in the College of Electors, the election devolved on the House of Representatives, and after balloting by States, thirty-six times, Jefferson was elected by a majority of one State. Burr was elected Vive President.

Fifth Election, 1804.—Number of Electors, 176. Thomes Jefferson received 162 votes for President, and Charles C. Pinckney 14. Geo. Clinton received 162 votes for Vice President, and Rufus King 14. Jefferson and Clinton were elected.

Sixth Election, 1808.—Number of Electors, 176. James Madison received 122 votes for President, and Charles C. Pinckney 47. Geo. Clinton received 113 votes for Vice President, and Rufus King 47. Madison and Clinton were elected.

Seventh Election, 1812.—Number of Electors, 217. James Madison received 128 votes for President, and DeWitt Clinton 89. Elbridge Gerry received 131 votes for Vice President, and Jared Ingersoll 86. Madison and Gerry were elected.

Eighth Election, 1816.—Number of Electors, 217. James Monroe received 183 votes for President, and Rufus King 34. Daniel D. Tompkins received 183 votes for Vice President, and John E. Howard 22. Monroe and Tompkins were elected.

Ninth Election, 1820.—Numbers of Electors, 232. James Monroe received 231 votes for President, and Daniel D. Tompkins received 218 for Vice President, and were both re-elected.

Tenth Election, 1824.—Number of Electors, 261. Andrew Jackson received 99 votes for President, John Q. Adams 84, Wm. H. Crawford 41, and Henry Clay 37. As neither candidate had a majority of the whole number of votes, the election devolved upon the House of Representatives, where Adams was elected on the first ballotting. The vote stood for Adams 13, Jackson 7, Crawford 3. John C. Calhoun received 192 votes for Vice President, Nathan Sanford 30, and Nathaniel Macon 24. Calhoun was elected Vice President.

Eleventh Election, 1828.—Number of Electors, 261. Andrew Jackson received 178 votes for President, and John Q. Adams 82. John C. Calhoun received 171 votes for Vice President, and Richard Rush 83. Jackson and Calhoun were elected.

Twelfth Election, 1832.—Number of Electors, 288. Andrew Jackson received 219 votes for President, Henry Clay 49, John Floyd 11, and William Wirt 7. Martin Van Buren received 189 votes for Vice President, John Sargent 49, William Wilkins 30, Henry Lee 11, and Amos Ellmaker 7. Jackson and Van Buren were elected.

Thirteenth Election, 1836.—Numbers of Electors, 294. Martin Van Buren received 170 votes for President, William Henry Harrison 73, Hugh L. White 26, Daniel Webster 14, and Willie P. Mangum 11. Richard M. Johnson received 147 votes for Vice President, Francis Granger 77, John Tyler 47, and Wm. Smith 23. As neither of the candidates for Vice President had a majority of the whole number of votes, the duty devolved on the Senate to elect one of the two highest candidates. In the Senate the vote stood Johnson 33, Granger 16. Van Buren was elected President, and Johnson Vice President.

Fourteenth Election, 1840.—Whole number of votes, 294.—William H. Harrison received 234 votes for President, and Martin Van Buren 60. For Vice President, John Tyler received 234 votes, Richard M. Johnson 48 votes, Littleton W. Tazewell 11, and James R. Polk 1. Wm. H. Harrison was elected President, and John Tyler Vice President.

Of the nine Presidents of the United States, five were natives of Virginia, one of South Carolina, one from New York, and two of Massachusetts.

Harrison was the oldest at the time of his election, and Van Buren the youngest of our Presidents.

Four of the nine Presidents were "military chieftains," and four only of our Presidents survive.

Harrison was elected by the largest majority of Electoral votes since the election of Monroe in 1820. Jackson received the largest majority of the popular vote in 1832 that has been given to any President since 1820. The majorities of the popular vote are as follow, since 1824:

Jackson's majority in	1828,	137,000
" "	1832,	145,000
Van Buren's "	1836,	26,000
Harrison's "	1840,	139,000

S.

BAPTIST ASSOCIATIONS IN OHIO.—As we have received the Minutes of nearly all the Associations in the State, we have made out the following statistical table for the satisfaction of our readers. The statistics of the Miami and Scioto anti-effort Associations, and of the Salem Association are from the minutes of last year. Those of the Muskingum and Walholding Associations, from Minutes of a still older date:—Cross and Journal.

ASSOCIATIONS.	Number of Churches,	Ordained Ministers,	Licentiates,	Baptised,	Total,
Miami, (mission)	13	8		283	1004
Miami, (anti-mission)	22	8		13	682
Scioto, (mission)	10	5		140	475
Scioto, (anti-mission)	18	7		22	545
Muskingum,	26	15			958
Mad River,	35	13	4	345	1542
Strait Creek,	19	9	5	227	788
East Fork Little Miami,	15	7	2	375	1332
Grand River,	19	9	3	20	1026
Columbus,	19	23		357	1371
Huron,	20	14	1	130	1089
Meigs Creek,	22	8		159	1119
Rocky River,	19	13	4	213	990
Portage,	19	8	3	138	799
Walholding,	5	2			132
Mohickan,	14	7		92	489
Salem,	10	7	1	11	239
Ohio,	18	11	7	49	1053
Todd's Fork,	5	2		24	138
Zoar,	13	9		119	567
Owl Creek Harmony,	15	6		116	609
Sandusky River,	12	8	2	44	450
Sandusky,	11	5		24	347
Geauga,	14	11		46	580
Lorain,	16	9	1	296	899
Wooster,	11	11	1	149	453
Wills Creek,	20	11	2	179	952
Trumbull,	9	4		12	244
Totals,	449	249	36	3580	20904

MORE HORRID MURDERS—Tuesday morning's Southern Mail brings the particulars of more murders; exceeding in atrocity, if possible, the recent horrid cases with which the newspapers have been filled.—We subjoin details, from the Portsmouth, Va. Times, of December 16:

We learn that a series of most atrocious murders was perpetrated by a miscreant in Southampton county, on Monday night. An aged Quaker of the name of Scott, residing not far from Jerusalem, his sister, also aged, a little girl, about 9 years old, named Pretlow, a negro woman and her child, were successively butchered to further the design of robbery, entertained by their destroyer. Six persons were on the premises at the time—and but one escaped. This was a young negro girl. She relates, we understand, that a man residing in the neighborhood visited the house a little after sunset and spent the evening by the fireside of Mr. Scott in conversation with the family. As he was about to quit, he asked Mr. S. to walk with him to the gate, as he had a word to say to him in private. To this the unfortunate man consented.

The girl saw no more of him. A violent struggle was next heard in the kitchen. The murderer armed with a short heavy dogwood pestle, had seized the negro woman, and was beating out her brains when the aged sister of Mr. Scott, attracted by the noise, appeared and begged him to desist. Irrevocably bent on his design he instantly despatched the poor negro, and seizing the old lady felled her to the floor with a blow of the pestle. A negro boy about nine years old was then killed in the same manner. He next proceeded in search of the little white girl, and the young negress. The latter made her escape unobserved. The other child was not so fortunate. She was caught in the room and murdered as summarily as the rest.

Not seeing the negro girl, and resolved to leave no clue to his fearful secret, the monster made a careful search in the rooms, turning over the beds and scanning every corner narrowly. Convinced that one of the family had escaped, he seems to have gone off without consummating the robbery. The girl fled immediately to the nearest neighbors, and communicated what had occurred in her sight and hearing. They repaired to the premises forthwith, and found the melancholy confirmation of her story. The murderer had fled, and the house was burning slowly. The fire was extinguished before it had defaced the bodies, or done much injury to the building. In the morning, among the spectators of the night's bloody fruit, was the individual spoken of by the girl as the actor in the scene. He gave an instant contradiction to her story, and referred to the absence of blood from his clothing as proof of his innocence. He denied also, we learn, having been on the premises for a fortnight. Traces of blood, however, it is said, were found among his whiskers, and he was detained till search was made at his house. This resulted, we learn, in the discovery of a suit of his clothing excessively besmeared with blood. He was forthwith apprehended.

Mr. Scott was an old and esteemed resident of the county, and was reputed to be wealthy. The hope of securing his money led to a scheme of murder, as boldly conceived and deliberately executed as any furnished by the annals of crime. The escape of the girl alone prevented the full execution of the plan. If she had fallen, all explanation of the mystery would have been impossible. The house and bodies of the slain would have been consumed together, and the murderer would have possessed in security the poor reward of his atrocities, beyond the fear of detection.

Another case of murder is given in the Virginia Star, of December 16, as occurring in Dinwiddie County, Virginia, on the Sunday previous. Edward Lewis, a young man aged about 18, who resided in the family of Jeremiah Conway, had just stepped out on the porch, to go to church, when Conway came up behind him, and fired a whole charge of buckshot into the back of the head and neck of Lewis, who died instantly. Jealousy is the only assignable cause of the act. Conway made no attempt to escape, and denied all knowledge of the murder. He is awaiting bail in jail.

THE MURDERER OF ELLEN JEWETT.—Robinson, the murderer of Ellen Jewett, whose trial and acquittal left a stain upon the tribunal before which he was arraigned, went to Texas, where he has since lost his right arm—that arm with which he planted a hatchet into the forehead of a frail, but to him an unoffending girl, and with which he then applied an incendiary torch to the bed where she lay weltering in blood, thus attempting to conceal murder by committing arson—that right arm, we say, has been cleft from his shoulder, in a fight with the Mexicans!

Nor is this the only retribution, that has visited the guilty. It will be recollected that Furlong the infatuated grocer, who went into court and committed voluntary perjury by swearing that Robinson was in his store on the evening of the murder, became a maniac and drowned himself.—Alb. Journal.

AWFUL STEAMBOAT EXPLOSION.—The New Orleans papers bring us accounts of the explosion of the boilers of the steamboat Cherokee, at Louisburgh. Her boilers burst just as she was putting off from the shore, several of the cabin passengers and some of the crew were killed by the explosion. Some of the people on the banks of the river were severely wounded by fragments of the boat, and one or two, it is said, were killed. It is reported that sixteen persons were killed or missing by this dreadful calamity.

One hundred and thirty thousand dollars of specie belonging to the Government was recovered. The engineer and several of the deck hands were killed.

Killed—Mr. Osgood, of New Orleans; Mr. Pitman, of Louisburgh; Capt. Wyman, of steamer Lady Morgan; Mr. Smith, of Louisville; Senior Forsyth, of Louisiana; Mr. Miles, of Van Buren; Mr. Cook, of Arkansas; Thomas Fanning, (boy,) of Arkansas; Budd, watchman; S. Gibson, hand; Mr. Hobson, of Steubenville, Ohio; R. L. Hubbard, of Connecticut; Mr. Kensy, and two other, names unknown.

From the Colored American's Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, D. C. Dec. 17, 1840.

MR. EDITOR:—The halls of Congress resound once more with the thunders of oratory, Clay and Calhoun, Webster and Wright, are already in the field; and I need not therefore, tell you we are participating in a rich intellectual banquet, at the present juncture. Nor, will you understand me as meddling in politics, or approving of the anti-abolition views of the political and intellectual giants of Congress, when I speak of their oratorical or mental powers.

As an orator Clay stands first in Congress. He is all nature. I wish some of the starched, affected, school-boy kind of speakers, in New York and elsewhere, could hear him. They would learn a lesson in this way, that would be serviceable to them, and would then know better than to exercise their hypercriticism on a speaker for speaking and acting as he felt—the only true oratory—all the rules of the schools, to place your foot thus, and to move your hand so, and to raise your voice to such a pitch, being just so many trammels to nature, and obstacles to real eloquence. If one would be truly eloquent, let him understand his subject, and feel it, and then "go ahead," paying no regard to intonation, gesticulation, or attitude, but being intent only on his subject, without laboring to express himself in pompous diction, but in terms that most naturally suggest themselves; and if he "has the root of the matter" in him, if he has fire and a ready imagination, (without which no man can be an orator,) he will, in this way, be sure to succeed.

Calhoun is, in my opinion, the most interesting speaker in the Senate with the exception of Clay. There is something portentious and fearful in the man. His tones, his countenance, his manner, his whole appearance, remind one of some ancient oracle uttering its dark sayings, and curdling the blood by its dire forebodings. Calhoun, Mr. Editor, is one of the most extraordinary men of the age.—In saying this however, I am very far from approving of his course.

But though I prefer Clay and Calhoun, as interesting speakers, do not understand me as disparaging Webster. He is a man of prodigious powers of mind—a giant—a Sampson, though as an orator, he is by no means to be compared with Clay. By the way, I have it from a source in which I have confidence, that Webster is to be Secretary of State under Harrison. It is understood that Clay will take no post, it not being in accordance with his wishes or his objects so to do.

BLOWING UP SHIPS.—A correspondent of the London Times, who writes from Egypt, says that some Americans, who have taken up Fulton's torpedo project for blowing up vessels of war by grenades attached under water, are negociating with the Chinese for rendering them assistance against the English men-of-war in this destructive capacity. The thing is not a mere speculation, but is known to be in practical existence, and has been ready to be applied in case of an American war, ever since the burning of Washington.

ACCIDENT IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—At 10 o'clock on Friday morning the large chandelier recently suspended in the hall of the House of Representatives composed principally of cut glass, and with its counterpoise weighing between three and four tons, fell and was broken into countless fragments. Had the House been in session the consequences must have been lamentable as the desks of many members were shattered by the falling mass. It appears that on last evening, the chandelier had been lighted, by way of experiment, and this morning, at the time of the accident, several men were employed in cleaning it. Their escape was almost miraculous.—The Chaplain, in a fervent prayer returned thanks to Almighty God the great disposer of all events, that the lives of so many had been thus mercifully spared. After remaining a short time in session, the House adjourned until Monday next, in order to afford time for cleaning the hall and making the necessary repairs.

Globe.

The cost of the above chandelier, was we believe, about $5000.

New World.

PRINCIPAL CITIES.—The following table shows the increase of the population of some of the principal cities of the United States:

	1840.	1830.	Increase.
New York.	312,234	202,589	109,545
Philadelphia,	258,922	188,797	79,125
Baltimore,	101,378	80,625	21,853
New Orleans,	106,674	42,310	64,454
Boston,	83,452	61,892	33,060
Brooklyn,	36,283	12,403	24,830
Cincinnati,	46,380	24,831	21,551
St. Louis,	24,585	5,852	18,783
Washington,	23,777	18,827	3,950
Pittsburgh,	21,296	12,542	8,724

This table makes our neighboring city of Pittsburgh appear to disadvantage.—By adding Allegheny, Birmingham, Manchester, Sligo, Lawrenceville, Oakland, and other suburbs, all, to the eye of a stranger, forming part of the city of Pittsburgh, the population reaches about 40,000 inhabitants. Were Philadelphia subjected to the same rule that has been applied to Pittsburgh, and confined to its own corporation, it would exhibit on paper a less population than Baltimore or New Orleans.

TO MANAGE A REARING HORSE.—In preference to the dangerous experiment of pulling a rearing horse backward, I recommend the adoption of the following methods. Whenever you perceive the horse's inclination to rear, seperate your reins, and prepare for him; the instant he is about to rise, slacken one hand and bend or twist his head with the other, keeping your hands low. The bending compels him to move a hind leg, and of necessity brings his fore feet down. Instantly twist him completely around two or three times, which will confuse him very much, and completely throw him off his guard. The moment you have finished twisting him around, place his head in the direction you wish him to proceed, apply the spur sharply, as he will not fail to go forward. If the situation be convenient, press him into a gallop, and apply the spur or whip two or three times severely. The horse perhaps will not be quite satisfied with the first defeat, but may be disposed to try again for the mastery. Should this be the case, you have only to twist, &c., as before, and you will find in the second struggle he will be more easily subdued than on the first occasion—in fact, you will perceive him quail under the operation.—It rarely happens that a rearing horse, after having been treated in the way prescribed, will resort to his tricks a third time. But on going into others hands, and having another rider, he will be very likely to have recourse to rearing.—Amer. Farmer.

Mrs. Asalah Harrington, who died recently at New Salem, N. H., aged 86, was the wife of three revolutionary soldiers, successively.

AGRICULTURAL.

From the Farmer and Gardener.

INFORMATION WANTED.—PEACHES.

I find it to be the prevailing opinion amongst many old farmers in Virginia and Kentucky, that where a peach-kernel, the produce of an original or unbudded tree, is planted, the produce is a peach closely resembling the parent fruit. On the other hand, where stocks are raised from the kernels of indifferent peaches, and upon these are budded the finest varieties, the kernels from the fruit of such trees, produce trees that sport very much, the peaches being almost always small and worthless. The inference from this is, that the stock so far overrules the bud, as to cause the produce to partake almost entirely of its own character. One intelligent and experienced fruit-grower of this city, with whom I have recently conversed on the subject, states that the results of his own experience would induce him to believe that such is the case; yet he cannot be satisfied that it is so.—He thinks with me, that if a kernel was planted, that grew on a tree, the stock of which was the growth of the kernel of a cling-stone peach, on which was afterwards budded a free-stone, that the produce would be free-stone peaches, and that the rule would hold good, whether the stock grew from the kernel of an indifferent or of a fine peach, the coin or bud would still overrule it. The truth is, the peach, like every other cultivated fruit, sports, so that no reliance can be placed on a seedling. We consider it an ill-judged waste of time and ground, to cultivate any but trees, on which have been budded choice and well known fruit. Still we are anxious to and well known fruit. Still we are anxious to have information on the subject, from those who have been able to put it to the test of careful and judiciously conducted experiment. Our pages are open to the discussion of this and every other useful subject connected with farming and g ening. T.

We remark upon this article:

1. From considerable experience in the e vation of the peach tree, we are satisfied t the seed will always produce its kind. And quality of the fruit may be improved or de ciated, by your mode of selecting your seed.
you select from the best of the crop, and which ripens the first, you will have ea peaches and an improved quality; if otherw they will depreciate on your hand.

2. That if you engraft apples upon crab-ap and plant the seed of this production, tho' ever so good an apple, they will produce cr
If you enoculate a free-stone peach upon a c and plant the kernel of this production, will have a cling-stone peach. The orig stock enoculated or engrafted upon, rules u these circumstances. About nineteen y since, we ate an apple from a tree in the ya old Mr. Musselman, near Chillicothe, who formed us that the tree was the production pear seed. We insisted there was some mis in the matter. He avered there could be no stated that the pear was brought to this cou and ate in the family before any fruit had growed; that his mother planted the seed ir garden, and when the scions were of suit size, she gave each of her children one, that that tree from which we ate the apple
the one which had fallen to his share.

3. If it is an object with any person to the very best quality of peaches, let him se the very best kind and plant his trees on ground. A light soil, mixed with consider sand, or vegetable mould, is better than h clay. In this section of country, the high oak ridges are the best for peach fruit, and more elevated the more certain to bear; situated, trees rarely fail to produce mo less, while on the lower levels, most of w consists of fine specimens of white oak clay at least equal to any land in the world for and grain, and very good for many other kin fruit, yet, the peach crop proves a total fai except in something like one year out of fiv an average. And when they do bear, the ity of the fruit is not quite so good as that duced from trees situated as above describe you wish to keep up the quality of your p fruit, clear another piece and plant again b your trees get too old, as the products of y trees are always superior in size and flav those of the old.

ANCIENT PEAR TREES.—The Anc
Pear Tree planted in 1628, by Gove Endicott, on his farm in Danvers, is in full life, and has this year produc crop of good pears. It is a Bon C tien.

In Eastham, on Cape Cod, is ano
Pear Tree, planted in 1640, by Prince, in his garden It is a flouris lofty tree, and produces on an averag teen bushels a year.

MAKING PORK—COOKING FOOD FOR MALS.—Making pork is one of the essential interests of the farmer, and be made one of the most profitable.
question, however, whether, as gener conducted, much money is made by ding swine, and the reasons are suffic ly plain. In the first place, but littl tention, if any, is paid to the kind of used for feeding. It is enough, if the mal, caught and caged in the pen, is a the fact that a given quantity of food to some breeds will make nearly or as much again pork as when fed to s other breeds, is overlooked; and an as ishing quantity of roots and grain is annually wasted. In the second place mode of feeding is very defective.
food may be good, but if given to the unprepared, or uncooked, much of its ciency is lost. To keep hogs profita they should from the first, be kept thriving state. Not half fattened at time, and then allowed to fall away they are miserably poor; but kept stantly improving from the time leave the sow until they are ready slaughtering. It takes a much large mount of food to raise an animal of kind allowed to become poor, than to one constantly thriving. Again, the alloted to feeding, is usually too lim good firm heavy pork cannot be mad matter what may be the food used, s of three or four months. Hogs ma puffed out, and made to look pretty but their meat will not be hard and and will be affected with the comp called shrinking in the pot. Hogs fa much faster in moderate weather, in severe cold weather; and hence process of fattening should commenc early as the food to be used can be ha
After the process of feeding begins, that the hogs have enough; to suppo
squealing, ravening hog will fat, mistaken, but unfortunately a com
one.

Farmers in general miss a large of the profits that might be made f feeding pork by not paying attentio the making of manure from swine.
corn, a variety of experiments has victed us there is no manure that ca compared with that of the pig; and farmer who permits any of this to be ted, or does not give the animal an portunity of converting as much m vegetable matter, &c. into manure as be done, is a great loser in the end. S able farmers have estimated that the nure made by a lot of pigs, where proper materials are provided, will pay the expense of feeding; but ther no doubt if they do not this, they will fermenting the most enriching com for crops, and essentially to the ultim profits of the farmer. To make pork, a hog should not be less than teen months old, kept constantly thri not have a yard as large as the farr the highway, and be fed on good food less than three months.—American mer.

HE RECORDER.

ZANESVILLE:

NESDAY, ... JANUARY 6, 1841.

'r Weather.—We had on Saturday and ith last, quite cold weather. There is a ent quantity of snow to afford comfortable ing.

s earnestly demanded of us, where is our r, the President of the Indiana Confer- Some brethren, in his District, are anx- o know his whereabouts. We are told that g last year he was favored with eminent ss in his circuit, but published not a word her of our periodicals. We shall be glad ar from him occasionally, and it would less gratify many others.

e reader will find, on our last page, recom- lations to the Youth's Cabinet. We add at is there said that there is no paper comes r office which so much interests the young t our establishment. It is, to children, the interesting paper we have knowledge of.

e Prospectuses of the Lowell Souvenir and ository, by Mr. Hildreth, will also be found ur last page. These works are very interest- to young ladies and gentlemen who have ex- ed them.

e had forgot to say that the Ohio State rnal and the Ohio Statesman are issued daily ng the session of the Legislature, and both nise, and no doubt will, give correct reports he doings of our General Assembly. These each $3 during the session.

Decatur" in our next.

Wm. Walker, of Upper Sandusky, in a letter he Bucyrus Democrat of the 23d ultimo, re- ts the murder of three Indians, two men and woman of the Wyandot nation, in Putnam nty, on the "night of the 5th inst., while ping in their camp." The murder is sup- ed to have been committed by a set of vaga- nd whites. Every exertion is making to ferret m out.

'Gift for the Hollidays.—The New World, the 1st of January, came to us in advance.— is a splendid sheet, indeed; it is five feet ht inches by four feet four inches. Cost of paper, as stated by the editors, is twenty dlars per ream. It contains 820,000 ems of mposition, and would make three ordinary odecimo volumes.

OHIO LEGISLATURE.

A Petition of 111 citizens of Brown county, as presented to the House by Mr. Dunham, aying the repeal of the law which relates to ugitives from service," passed February, 1839, hich, after some effort to refer it to a special mmittee, was referred to the committee on the diciary.

Mr. Nye, of the House, has reported a bill to mend the school law.

Mr. Henderson, our Senator from Muskingum, resented the memorial of Mr. Samuel Thomp- on, of Zanesville, praying for the reduction of he wages of the members of the Legislature and ther State officers, which was read and laid on he table. On a proposition to refer the Me- morial to Mr. H., he said he did not conceive it o be in accordance with the opinions of his onstituents or he should have no objection to ake charge of it. Now we are one of Mr. Henderson's constituents, and we are of opinion, hat considering the nature of our general em- barrassments, the amount of taxation upon the people, the low price of wages and produce, that a general system of retrenchment should be adopt- ed. We think the State Printer should be re- formed; but then we would like to see those who attempt this good work set an example them- selves.

The House passed a resolution, as we noticed in our last, to prevent the printing in that branch of the Legislature, unimportant bills, in order to save expense to the State. In conform- ity with this resolution, a House bill to vacate a certain road in Hamilton county, was passed and sent to the Senate for concurrence, on the 30th ult., not being printed. Honorable members became somewhat excited,—became very con- scientious about acting upon what they could not see, &c., and finally laid the bill on the table; since other unprinted bills from the House have shared the same fate. It is propable from these movements that all unprinted bills from the House will be piled upon the table of the Senate and permitted to lay there. Though they may print and act on them ultimately. These move- ments will be understood when we tell our read- ers that the Whigs have a majority in the House and their opponents in the Senate. One goes for reforming the State Printer, and the other for his remaining in his sins.

A bill containing an appropriation of $4,000 to the State Printer, was on the 31st ult. order- ed to its third reading, on Monday. This appro- priation, if we understand it, is for printing, &c. under the contract of last year.

If a Bill should be reported for the protection of religious worship, will Mr. Henderson be so good as to forward us a copy thereof immediate- ly?

Illinois Legislature.—We learn from the correspondent of the Alton Telegraph, and from other sources, that the political parties in that body have been, for some time past, in a state of disorder and excitement. A Bill passed both Houses, on Saturday the 5th of December, to adjourn sine die; then on Monday the House was opened again, and commenced what is called a new session. The object of this discreditable movement appears to have been to compel the State Bank to resume specie payments, as its suspension had been legalized until the close of the session of this term by a former act of that body; but the final object to break down the present Bank and establish another which would be more particularly under the influence of the dominant party of the State. The Bank has resumed specie payments, probably in order to meet the case, and prevent any action against her on the ground of having forfeited her char- ter. The way to prevent such disorderly and discreditable doings, is for the sovereign people to bid the leaders of such disgraceful factions to stay at home—no difference to what political party they belong.

A Bill has passed both Houses making provi- sion to pay the interest on the State debt fall- ing due on the first Monday of January, inst.

"A Bill incorporating the city of 'Nauvoo,' the place of residence of the Latter Day Saints, passed the Senate. It is very liberal in its pro- visions, and is the greatest guaranty Illinois can give to this hitherto persecuted and much abused sect, that they will here be protected in their constitutional rights, and in the enjoyment of the same privileges that are enjoyed by our other citizens."

The Rev. Charles Cook, editor of the Pitts- burgh Christian Advocate, makes the following remarks on the notice we took of him some time since:

Rather a Curiosity.—The following appear- ed editorially in No. 15 of the 2d Vol. of the Western Recorder, a paper edited and published at Zanesville, Ohio, by Rev. C. Springer, of the Methodist Protestant Church. We invite a pe- rusal of it by all our readers. We hope no one will fail to read.

[Then follows our article entire.]

Now we should be pleased if you would turn to our paper and read the entire articles alluded to. Having done so we would ask how long do you think it would require the religious press to evan- gelize the world by the exhibition of such a spirit as Mr. Springer manifests? If he has much im- proved by leaving the Methodist Episcopal Church, what must he have been before his reformation! It "shows the vaporings of a small but self-suffi- cient mind" to advise professing Christians not to abuse one another, but to pray one for another! What a sage discovery! And how painfully in- sulted is this Christian minister to be advised not to quarrel but to pray. He says: "the editor seems to think if 'God is for them' they shall be very complaisantly secure." We not only seem to think, so, but have no doubt on the subject.

"In this our strong tower for safety we hide, The Lord is our power—'The Lord will provide."

Look gentle reader at the charges preferred against the Methodist Episcopal Church in one small paragraph of less than fifteen lines:— 1. She has for years past relied for success, not on God, but on wealth and numerical strength. 2. She has taken advantage of honest and confiding people, and cheated them out of their church prop- erty. 3. She has abused confidence. 4. She has acted beneath the character of honorable and highminded men. 5. She is more indebted to "Jesuistry" [Jesuitism?] for success, a thousand fold than to the grace of God!

Who is this accuser of the brethren? A min- ister of the gospel of peace? No; it surely can- not be. We have heard of a certain Rev. C. Springer who publicly said he wished the Metho- dists would strike out the whimsical notion from the Discipline that men are "inwardly moved by the Holy Ghost to take upon them the office of the ministry in the Church of Christ." If this pious editor and he be identical, the article un- der consideration accounts very clearly for his whimsical wish.

As to what is said about our advising men to pray who are a thousand times better than our- self, we will not demur. Is the editor of the Re- corder so immaculate as never to have preached to persons more holy than himself? This seems as much like vanity as any thing we have seen in print lately, but yet it may not be so; at least it does not in us produce any "nausea." Mr. S. has one consolation. If this "kite" of an editor is to be destroyed, and thus to become the victim of his elevation by the Episcopacy without merit, as soon as his string is broken, surely such cutting and slashing as are aimed at him by his highly meritorious and reformed brother will soon set him adrift. Let any one read the 18th paragraph of the section of our Disciples on the "Printing and circulating of books" and learn from it if he can, that the editor of The Christian Advocate "was raised by the Episcopacy to the editorship."

A Jesuit we believe admits the dangerous principle that the end sanctifies the means. Now Mr. S. has great enmity to the episcopacy, and in his zeal to put it down has said it raises men without merit to the editorship of our official pa- pers. But all such editors are appointed not by bishops, but are elected either by the General or an annual conference. Is stating what is not true to accomplish an end, any part of "Jesuistry?" If it be, who is the Jesuit?

We would conclude by advising the brother to "say his prayers," but fear it might be an over dose and as the former advice produced "nausea" this might result in———. Well, we will advise it any how, for if a little bile were thrown off it might conduce very much to spiritual health.

We remark upon this:

1. As, according to the genius of the gospel, and according to the example of our Lord, we should be more sensibly alive to the good quali- ties of our fellow men, than to their misgivings or defects, we, therefore, give our friend Charles credit; first, for giving our article entire to his readers, without mutilating or misrepresenting, under circumstances that his readers would have no chance of correcting him. But, then, we are afraid, what the critic says to the young divines, will also be applicable to many of his readers, when he cautions them not to make a practice of stating the objection of infidels, in order to shew their dexterity in answering them, lest the objection will have more force than the reply. Secondly, he has sent us a paper contain- ing his animadversions. In these particulars he has done us a piece of justice that we rarely meet with from his brethren.

2. Our Pittsburgh friend, in this article, indi- cates that our spirit is not a very good one. To this charge we shall have to plead guilty, in part at least; it is not so good as we could desire. But then it is certainly a matter of consolation to be informed that he has a better spirit.

3. We had said that the episcopacy raised Br. Cook to the editorship. This he tries to twist into a misrepresentation, by referring to his dis- cipline, which provides that the General Con- ference, &c. shall have the appointments of ed- itors, and "not the bishops." Did we say that the "bishops" "raised him?" We said the epis- copacy. What is the meaning of "episcopacy?" Our dictionary says it is the "government of bishops." Our erudite and critical editor does seem yet to have learned to distinguish between the bishops and that which belongs to the bishops. Your government is an episcopal government, and your bishops have things just as they desire them, when they see cause to use the power with which they are clothed. This our friend Cook cannot help but know.

4. He represents us as taking exception to him for advising people to go to prayer, and to refrain from quarrelling. "Thou that sayest another shall not steal, dost thou steal?" thou that sayest another should not misrepresent, dost thou misrepresent? We made no objection to the simple fact of your advising people to go to pray- er, but it was your manner of doing it; your or- dering them with a "swell of importance." Would it be right for a man no way distinguish- ed for religious integrity, and who had but few more brains than a goslin, or any other person, to utter an ironical and imperious command to his fellow christians to say their prayers? certain- ly not. Then just so far as you are culpable on this ground, so far we had a right to reprove you, and no farther. And as for your advising people "not to quarrel," so far from thus understanding you, we considered what you said a kind of pre- siding elder authoritative direction, to all other denominations to let you itinerant preachers alone in the quiet possession of your anti-scrip- tural and ill-gotten prerogatives. But other de- nominations, we trust, have not so learned their duty to Christ as to regard such manifestos as this; but will raise their warning voice to show even the House of Israel their transgression.

5. Our brother makes us bring against his church a list of five very serious charges, not one of which has he attempted to answer. As he seems to lay the greatest stress on cheated and Jesuistry, (O! Jesuitism,) by italisizing these words, we will refresh his memory upon these subjects. We will refer the editor to the records of his own City and State. He, no doubt, had his eye upon the attempt of his brother ministers and their dupes, in Pittsburgh, to cheat and bully the "honest" and "confiding people" of that place out of their church property, is the reason why he is so very mum upon the subject. The man- ner of these Episcopal preachers in spreading the gospel, is so peculiarly "apostolical," that they went into the sanctuaries of civil justice to contend at law for two meeting houses and a burying ground. But the court gave the prop- erty to the defendants, and decided the Metho- dist Episcopal Trust Deed to be contrary to the laws of Pennsylvania. The church forwarded a host of petitions to the next session of the Le- gislature to stay them in the use of their prop- erty, but that body adopted the opinion of the Supreme Court, and refused to act upon the subject. Thus, two of the highest functionaries of your own State have decided that your Dis- ciplinary Deed conveys an unconstitutional or "dishonest" trust. The seceders who were bul- lied out of the church by the ministry, constitu- ted the majority of the society, and held the seals of the corporation. They offered, to avoid litigation, to divide the property equal with the Bishops' party, or to leave the whole matter at issue to disinterested referees. But no, the Bishops' boys would have all the property or none. After the suit went against them, they, however, accepted a proposition to receive half the property from the Protestant Methodists.— While a suit was pending before the Sepreme Court of this State, involving the very same question, the Episcopal Methodists, at their college in Augusta, Ky., conferred the title of L. L. D. upon John C. Wright, a leading and influential member of the bench. Br. Cook, was this Jesuistry? If not, what was it?

6. As soon as Br. Cook stated the list of char- ges which he said we brought against his church, instead of answering them, he immediately ut- ters a slander against us, thus verifying the maxim of Goldsmith, "the mouths that want argument are filled with abuse," or defamation. He says, "we have heard of a Rev. C. Springer, who publicly said, that he wished the Methodists would strike the whimsical notion from their Discipline, that men are 'inwardly moved by the Holy Ghost to take upon them the office of the ministry,'" &c. Now, my dear brother, we do most unequivocally deny uttering such a wish or making any such declaration, either "publicly" or privately. But assert we have always believed, and do still believe in the call of the Holy Spirit to the work of the ministry. We are not excited upon this subject, for such attempts to injure our reputation are so com- mon from that quarter, they have ceased to produce much effect. We could give scores of just such attempts as this to injure us, but the heart would sicken at the recital, and the honor of christianity requires, as far as consistent, a veil should be thrown over such depravity on the part of professors of religion. However, we shall hold you, Br. Editor, to the proof of this matter. You say our heresy was "publicly" ut- tered, of course it is susceptible of proof. When and where was this declaration made? Come, Charley, sustain your slander or take it back.— As a christian or a gentleman, you are bound to do one or the other.

7. As it respects the editor's attempt to be witty, when he states, in a blank, the supposed effect of prayer upon us;—we have to say, that, we are fond of wit, especially, when it runs in a high-vein, and are prepared to do it homage, even though we should be the victim of it; but, such, gentle reader, is not wit; it is something only fit be addressed to low minds and filthy tastes.

Br. Charles, previous to your incumbency in the office of the Advocate, we tried to effect an exchange with that paper, but there was too much dignity around the office for that. Now, will you not send us your paper regularly in exchange for ours? We will try you at all events. Come, let us live neighborly. You say your peculiar institutions are the best in the world; although we are not fond of controversy when it can be avoided, yet, if you desire to discuss the points at issue between us, we will agree to enter the field with you. If you choose a subdued and respectful style, we shall try to meet you more than half way. If you prefer the castigating boreing method, we will do the very best we can to accommodate you on that subject. Any way that will suit you, so it is within the circle pre- scribed to christians. Or if you would prefer trying to live neighborly, without such public collisions, by endeavoring to bear with each others infirmaties without growling too hard, we are agreed to that. Any plan that will accom- modate the matter will suit us, as we are not hard to please. Come, Br. Charley, now show yourself to be a gentleman and a liberal chris- tian.

Br. Cook, of the Pittsburgh Advocate, will see a notice of a late article of his on our first page, relating to the Protestant Methodists, from one of the oldest and most venerable Methodist ministers in the western country. One who was cradled in the forests, and who has been acquaint- ed with Methodism through all its phases in this country.

FOREIGN NEWS.

ARRIVAL OF THE STEAM SHIP "ACADIA," AT BOSTON.

The arrival of the Acadia at Boston on Mon- day, at three P. M., has put us in possession of dates to the 4th December from Liverpool and to the 3d from London. The most important items of news are the capture of St. Jean D'- Acre by the allies; the submission of Mehemet Ali; the avowedly pacific tone of the new French Amnesty, and the birth of a princess to the crown of England.

The most important event in all the intelli- gence received, is unquestionably, the safe de- livery of the Queen, and the health of her off- spring. In the event of the death of both, the crown would have passed to Ernest of Hanover. Of how much importance this escape is consid- ered, may be gathered from the following para- graphs, which we clip from the leading English journals:

"No event, since the general peace, has cau- sed such unbounded joy throughout the metro- polis, as the safe delivery of our beloved Queen High and low, rich and poor, rejoice alike, and though many wished that the offspring had been a Prince, the unanimous voice of the public is expressive of gratitude to Almighty God, that her Majesty has survived and given birth to an Heir Presumptive to the throne. Can there be any mistake about the ardent feeling displayed on this auspicious event, when we reflect for a moment on the awful position in which this country would have been placed had it been the will of Providence to afflict us by a calamity like that which occurred some 23 years ago?

On that occasion the whole nation mourned that an illustrious Princess, heir to a great empire had been suddenly cut off in the prime of life, and buried in the same tomb with her dead born child. Then there were many heirs to the Throne, respected and beloved by the people. We had no dread of the successor to her Royal Father. The national grief was solely caused by the untimely end of the sufferer.

But had such a fate befallen the Queen, we should have mourned not for her only, but also for the nation, because her peaceable reign would in all probability have been followed by commo- tions which might have convulsed the kingdom and endangered the monarchy. Since the reign of Charles II—nay, we may say, in the whole history of the Sovereigns of England, no succes- sor to the reigning Prince were ever looked up- on with such horror and dread as the heir presump- tive, but two days ago, to the throne still occu- pied, through the mercy of God, by our beloved Queen. For such a gracious delivery the nation may well be thankful, and it will display its thankfulness by rejoicing unequalled in this country. They have already commenced.

Throughout, we believe, in every Chapel, Catho- lic and Dissenting, of the metropolis, yesterday, public thanksgivings were offered for the safety of the Queen and her child. The Catholic Church in London adopted a prayer for the Queen before her delivery. The people pray in their hearts and in words also return thanks, for one of the grea- test blessings ever conferred on this country.

It is said that the Princess Royal would re- ceive the names of Adelaide Victoria Louisa, and that the christening, which was to be on a scale of vast magnificence, would take place shortly after the meeting of Parliament. Par- liament, it will be recollected, was on the 11th of November, at a Privy Council, at which Victoria was present, prorogued to Dec. 10.

Daily bulletins of the health at the palace were published, but it is sufficient for us to say that at the latest dates mother and child were as "well as could be expected." On the third Her Ma- jesty was so far recovered as to affix her signature to the official documents sent her from the pub- lic offices.

The principal medical attendants at the birth of the child received £1000 each. The usual presentation of "candle" to the royal servants was made, but the form of giving it to the public was dispensed with.

Great Storms in England.—Extensive da- mage has been done on the coast, by reason of the heavy storms which occurred on the 12th and 13th of November last. The loss amongst shipping was very great, and the loss of lives in proportion. The accounts are truly heart-render- ing, especially from Plymouth, Portsmouth and Sunderland—such a hurricane has seldom occur- red. The men of war at Portsmouth rode it out well. It does not appear that any foreign vessel has suffered; the loss being chiefly amongst the coasters and vessels from France and the ports of that line of coast.

Another and more violent gale was experien- ced in England on the 21st of November. Many vessels were lost, including the steamer City of Bristol, with all on board (30 persons) except two; the brig Grecian, with all on board; the sloop Kemis, Leith, with all on board; the brig Mary, and seven other vessels, near Ispwich. All on board the Mary perished except the Captain, and the entire crew of one of the other vessels.

A large American ship was reported to be on shore at Coquenville, near Barfleus, and the crew lost except four, Nov. 20. On the 18th, part of the deck of an American vessel came on shore at Port Talbot.

At St Agnes on the night of the 21st, an Amer- ican vessel, supposed to be the General Sloke, was totally wrecked, and the crew were drowned.

The masts, yards, sails, &c. of a new schooner, supposed to be an American, were passed by the Senator from Liverpool for New Orleans, lat. 45, long. 7. The Senator was bound into Fayal to repair.

Miscellaneous.—The Acadia brought 95 pas- sengers to Halifax and Boston. She had a very rough passage.

An improvement had taken place in the price of cotton. The rate of interest at the Bank of England was 5 per cent.

The treaty between England and Texas re- cognized the independence of Texas, was signed at the Foreign Office, Nov. 16.

FRANCE, THE EAST, &C.

The answer to the King's Speech had been carried in the Deputies, by a majority of 101.— The new ministry in the debate, avowed their pacific determinations.

The French fleet had returned from the Med- iterranean. The discovery squadron had also reached France.

The Ex-Queen Regent of Spain had reached Paris. Tranquility continued in Spain, though there had been some sharp replying by the Re- gency to Christiana's parting address to the peo- ple.

The French Deputies had appropriated 5,000,- 000f. for the relief of the sufferers by the late in- undations.

It is said that Austria and Prussia have com- plained to France upon the subject of her large military preparations—and that France has given every assurance that no further additions are to be made.

At Marseilles the greatest storm within the memory of man, took place on the 3d December. It was a perfect deluge, and the streets ran like so many rivers. The Refugee Queen of Spain was nearly drowned out of her hotel, and many accidents took place. The river Rhone mounted 70 centimetres. 300 houses were carried away at the Guillotiere, and more than 300 at the Vaise, and all along the banks of the river the damage was in the same proportion.

St. Jean D'Acre had fallen before the allies.— This event is regarded as the most brilliant a- chievement of the British Navy since the peace of 1815, not even excepting the attack upon Algiers. The fall of St. Jean D'Acre has left the Pasha of Egypt without a single stronghold on the we- stern coast of Syria.

PRICES CURRENT.

ZANESVILLE.—Wheat remains at 44cts. per bushel—Flour per barrel $3.— Pork has fallen to $3—rather dull sale at that price.

PHILADELPHIA, December 29th.—Flour is firm with an upwards tendency. The receipts are light, and the demand for Eastern and other markets fair.— Sales Penn. at $4,75; some factors ask $4,87½ per bbl.

Provisions—The demand is small, and prices declining. Mess Pork, $15 a 15½ per bbl. Lard—new, 10 a 11 cents. There is but little call for Bacon, Butter in kegs 9 a 10 cents per lb. Mess Beef $12; prime do $10½ a 11; New York Prime $8 per bbl.

Cattle Market—The supplies have been barely equal to the demand, and the ad- vance noticed last week is fully main- tained. At market, 550 head of Beef Cattle, which sold at $6 a 8¼. Cows and Calves—220 at market—sold at $26 a $35; extra $35; Springers $20 a $27. Dry Cows $16 a $18. Hogs—350; all sold at $5¼ a $6. Dead Hogs, $4,87½ a $5½. Sheep—1509, all sold at $2,25 a $2,75; extra $3,50.—Bicknell.

BUFFALO, Dec. 22d.—Flour 3,88 per bbl.; do. fine 3,25; wheat 75 cts. per bushel; corn 44; barley 37½; oats 22.— Commercial Advertiser.

BALTIMORE, December 26th.—Flour—There is a further small decline in the prime of Flour since our last re- port; the article not in brisk demand—and there still seems a tendency to a further decline. We heard of no sales of Howard street from store at less than $4,62½, un- til Thursday, when 300 bbl. sold at $4,56½, The car and wagon price remains at $4,50. Of City Mills, the price continues $4,75; and there is apparently some movement in it, either by purchasers or on millers account—it has been going on ship-board. Sales of Susquehanna at 4,62½ a $4,75, stock light.—Lyford.

ITEMS.

Sabbath and Bethel Convention.—This Convention, held in Cincinnati in November appears to have been very well attended. The proceedings, we understand, will soon appear in pamphlet form. A general Convention on the subject of the Sabbath and Bethel cause was appointed to meet in Cincinnati next year.— Cross and Journal.

The American Baptist Publication Society have announced that a new Hymn Book, intend- ed for general use, is now in course of publi- cation.—ib.

The Baptist Church at Windsor, Chester co., Pa., has recently enjoyed a revival, during which about 80 were hopefully converted, and 31 added to the church by baptism.—ib.

Marietta College.—A fire recently occurred in the upper part of the college building, which was extinguished without any material loss, ex- cept destroying a portion of the upper part of the building. Some injury was also done to the Library and Philosophical apparatus. The ex- ercises of the institution are continued as usu- al.—ib.

Another Crazy Man.—Z. W. Wilcox, of Highland county, Ohio, advertises in the Cincinnati Gazette that he has, "after sev- eral years of close investigation, succeeded in discovering the principles on which is founded perpetual motion;" which fact he says he is prepared to prove, "both by ac- tual experiment and sound philosophy."

A Bank Convention in the West.— The Louisville Journal says—"The Banks of this State have issued a circular to most or all of the banks in Mississippi valley, proposing a convention, in Louisville, on the 25th of January, to confer in relation to the resumption of specie payments.— Bicknell.

Counterfeit twenty dollar notes of the Pennsylvania Bank of the United States, are in circulation in the West. They are said to be well executed and calculated to deceive.—Bicknell.

In our last Reporter we noticed the al- teration of $5 bills on the West Branch Bank, to $50. To-day we have a letter from the Cashier, in which he states that the issues of the bank has been confined to 5's 10's and 20's.—ib.

Between a good teacher and a bad one, there is as much difference as between bright sun-shine and a total eclipse.— Don't choose a director who cannot see such a difference.

He that never changed any of his opin- ions, never corrected any of his mistakes; and he who was never wise enough to find out any mistakes in himself, will not be charitable enough to excuse what he reckons mistakes in others.

A gentleman in London, it is said, has made a contract for the exclusive naviga- tion of the Amazon, the largest river in the world, by steam, for 45 years, and is now arranging for a line of steamers be- tween Brazil and England.

Acid in Earthern.—The Washington, (Penn.) Observer, mentions the poisoning of a whole family, by using apple butter which had been kept in an earthen vessel. The acid of course decomposed the gla- zing; and the lead produced spasms, and other symptoms of the painters' cholic. All have recovered, and have learned a lesson.

Fatal Accident.—A man named John Foster, employed on the Columbia (Pa.) Railroad, was killed by the locomotive, and train of cars passing over his body a short distance from Fairmount. It ap- pears that two train of cars met at the spot said to be rather an unusual occurrence, and owing to a curve in the road, Foster, not being on the look-out, did not observe them till they were close upon him. In the attempt to get out of the way he fell or was thrown under the engine, and thus in an instant lost his life.—Balt. Patriot.

Seduction and Exemplary Damages. A verdict of $4,000 has been recovered by the father of a young lady at Worces- ter, Mass., against Seth Maynard, a marri- ed man, for the seduction of his daugh- ter—who was a member with him of a church choir.

Resumption.—The Cashier of the State Bank of Illinois officially notifies the public that the Bank resumed specie payments on the fifth of December, 1840.

The Grand Gulf Advertiser states that the Arkansas State bank has resumed specie payment.

Counterfeits.—We learn that on Thursday last the High constables of the Court of General sessions obtained pos- session of $1000 in counterfeit $10 notes on the Bank of the United States, which is supposed to be the entire amount struck from that plate. The agent of the bank also recovered and brought to this city $100,000, in $20's and 50's, of letter D and A, dated June 1, 1837. Very few of the latter it is thought have been put in circulation. They are tolerably well done—the filling up being extremely good.—Bicknell.

It is stated that the Wayne county Bank at Palmyra, has been closed by the Bank Commissioners.—ib.

Earthquake at Zante.—Extract of a letter from Zante, 11th Nov. in the Mediterraneo of Malta:

"On the 30 ult. at half past nine in the morning, a violent earthquake overthrew numerous houses in this city, and eight persons were buried in the ruins. The total number of houses that have fallen is 240, but all the others, without excep- tion have been more or less injured; and in the fortress only two or three have been left standing. The damage caused to the country is immense; some villages may be almost said no longer to exist, as only some portions were left to mark the spots that have been inhabited.

From Texas.—We have Galveston dates to the 13th.—McQueen, the absconding Post Master of New Orleans, was arrested and placed in custody at Hous- ton. The treacherous attempt of Canales to Massacre his Texian auxilleries, is spoken of by the Texians in terms of fitting indignation.

Congress has indefinitely postponed the bill creating the system of bankrupt- cy, and regulating the collection of for- eign debts. The salary of the chief Jus- tice has been fixed at $3,000. A reso- lution has been passed by the House of Representatives, directing the Military committee to inquire into the expediency of authorizing the President to accept of the services of 5000 men, for the invasion of Mexico, allowing them what they take from the enemy, and a league of land out of any they may conquer.

A large quantity of sugar has been made on the Colerado this season.

A correspondent of the Louisville Jour- nal writing from Columbia, Adair county, Ky., details the circumstances of a most heart rending murder and suicide. The facts, briefly stated are these: A Mr. Jacob Burke, a plain and honest farmer, residing about two miles from Columbia, lost his wife about two years ago, for whom he entertained a more than ordin- ary fondness. After her death he became morbidly sensative on the subject of his two little boys, in their lone and mother- less condition. One of these was five years old at the time of his mother's death and the other seven. To add to his misery he took to drink, and by this course his mind was measurably destroy- ed. In this condition, he determined, it is supposed, to take his own life, but un- willing to leave his children behind him, he first, with an axe, while they were a- sleep, nearly severed their heads from their shoulders, and then went to the barn and hung himself.

It is said that Gen. Harrison files ap- plications for office, in the order of their dates, and when he takes them off the hook, will adopt the scripture rule, "the first shall be last, and the last shall be first"

Business Department.

Br. Bassett will please return Mr. C's note to Meadow Farm Post Office, if it comes into his possession.

Br. Bassett is informed that a quarterly meeting is appointed on Union circuit, at Newbury, Clarke county, on the 23d and 24th January, to accommodate his visit; and that the superintendent will have an appointment for him at Middlebury, Lo- gan county, on Thursday evening the 21st, whither he will meet him on his way from Lima, and conduct him to the quarterly meeting.

For the Western Recorder

Mr. Editor: Is "William Henry Har- rison" the word of twenty letters, which constitutes the puzzle of the Junior, all the way from Pittsburgh, in the columns of the Western Recorder of last week? I think it is. O.

January 1, 1841.

MISCELLANEOUS.

From the Baptist Register.

TOBACCO.—"Tobacco is a native of America; and although cultivated in Oronoco from time immemorial, and smoked nearly all over the Continent at the time of the Spanish conquest, the Spaniards first discovered it in Yucatan in 1520.—It was transported to Europe in the beginning of the 16th century by Heamandez de Toledo, who went from Herida to Portugal. From thence the seeds were sent to Catherine de Medicis by Jean Nicot, an agent of Francis II., after whom it received its genuine name of Nicotiana; the specific appellation of Tobacco being taken from tabac, an instrument used by the native Americans in smoking 'the weed.'"—Humbolt.

Tobacco is one of the most virulent vegetable poisons; causing headache, nausea, vomitting, extreme prostration, cold sweats, convulsions, and death. The leaves when distilled yield an essential oil, upon which all its active properties depend; the poisonous effects of which are well illustrated by the use the Hottentots make of it in destroying serpents. Barrow, in his Travels in Africa, informs us that "a Hottentot applied some of it from the short end of his wooden tobacco pipe to the mouth of a snake while in the act of darting out his tounge. The effect was as instantaneous as the electric shock; with a convulsive motion that was momentary, the snake half untwisted and never stirred more; and the muscles were so contracted that the whole animal felt regid, as if dried in the sun."

Tobacco belongs to the Materia Medica, but the extreme prostration and deadly sickness which it produces, renders its effects so frightful that few practising physicians are bold enough to use it, except in the most desperate cases.

Notwithstanding its efficiency as a medicine, it is far less used as a remedial agent than as an article of luxury; and its general use, in its varied forms, may be adduced as an illustration of the perversion of taste, as well as the capacity of the human system to receive with pleasure what was at first disagreeable, and to bear with impunity what is constantly injurous.

The use of tobacco by smoking, was first introduced into England by Sir Walter Raleigh, at one time became the almost universal practiee of both sexes in the higher walks of life; but it is at present more confined to the lower class of the people. 'It is a curious fact that in England an edict was published against its use, the reason of which was, probably, the apprehension thus stated by Camden: "that the English might become savage by indulging in savage customs.' Urban VIII., anathematized those who used it in churches; and in Constantinople, where its use is now so general, the custom in the beginning of the 17th century was thought so ridiculous and hurtful, that "a Turk found smoking was conducted through the streets with a pipe transfixed through his nose."

Votzebue says, in his "Voyage of Discovery," that since the introduction of tobacco into the Sandwich Islands by the Europeans, "it is so generally used that young children smoke before they learn to walk, and grown up people have carried it to such excess, that they have fallen down senseless, and often died in consequence."

The most common forms of using "the weed" in this country, are by chewing, snuffing, and smoking. The practice of plugging is now happily exploded. This "consisted in twisting the leaves of tobacco in the form of a plug and stuffing it up the nostril." We are ready to sicken at the idea, that the ancients should delight in the odor of putrid fish, which was to them what the perfumed preparations are to us. And yet a noxious poison, the most disgusting and filthy in its operations, is seized upon by us with a gusto equalled only by the filthy Turkey Buzzard preying on a carcass already putrid.

It is a singular fact that man is the only creature that delights in tobacco and ardent spirit—he is the only creature that will even taste them; so far is he placed above, or so much does he sink himself below the brute creation. Very few ever learns to use tobacco without at first suffering the most distressing sickness.—The general system never becomes roused to its deleterious qualities as might at first seem; as many who have, perhaps, for the space of forty years rolled "the weed" as a sweet morsel under their tongue; and who always carried the "cud" on the same side of the mouth, will be as sensibly affected by a change to the opposite side, as if they had never tasted it and by discontinuing its use for a length of time are readily made sick on resuming the use of this loathsome "weed."

But so strong do persons become attached to this poisonous article, that even when they become convinced that it is undermining their health, as spirit does that of the besotted rum-drinker, it is with the greatest difficulty that they break off from its use. Persons of the strongest minds, capable of performing the greatest intellectual labor, make themselves the slave of habit—they voluntarily submit to the yoke of bondage.—Although great in other respects, he who cannot break off from the habit of using this foul and hurtful drug, under any circumstances, lacks one important characteristic of greatness—self-command.

If tobacco is so poisonous as to destroy life instantaneously when applied to the tongue, no other argument is necessary to prove its hurtful tendency to health when habitually used. In naturally delicate constitutions, and in those who lead a sedentary life, its ill effects are most conspicuous. Multitudes enjoy excellent health who freely use it, but they are the robust, the strong and the vigorous, who withstand many of the common causes of disease; but strong as they are, tobacco has a direct tendency to impair their boasted health and strength.

The use of this poisonous "weed" in the form of snuff, besides its extreme filthiness, induces pain in the head and eyes by producing a determination of blood to these parts, and also excites in the head numerous indiscribable nervous sensations. It destroys the sense of smell, and obstructs respiration through the nose by thickening the lining membrane, thus obliging the more advanced snuffer to let fall the lower jaw in order to prevent suffocation. It gives a nasal twang to the voice, which discovers at once the disgusting habit, notwithstanding the box containing this precious powder is kept in the most secret place. The taste, also, as in chewing and smoking, is rendered almost useless, leaving them in a condition to find no fault with cook or butcher.

The luxurious practice of smoking is, of all methods of using tobacco, the most benevolet and philanthropic. Says Dr. Ticknor, "Here is manifested none of the contracted disposition to selfishness!—When a man smokes, he does it for the benefit of his friends, and all within the atmosphere of his influence. The inhalation of smoke from a rank cigar, or what is still better, a pipe grown old in service, is peculiarly grateful; and as rum-drinking and smoking often accompany each other, the fumes of tobacco mingled with the steam of rum, renders the enjoyment doubly exquisite. Smoking is an indication of manhood and gentility; this is evinced by the fact that we are regaled in the streets, particularly of an evening, by frequent puffs of tobacco smoke in the face, from those who, in the day-time, conceive themselves to be gentlemen. It is so very civil, and polite, and evinces so much real goodness of heart, to share any good thing with our neighbors, that the practice of smoking, especially in the principle streets, and public places where ladies resort, should be encouraged by all who lay claim to generosity or refinement. Besides, it adds so much to the dignity and personal appearance of a gentleman to transform himself into a walking volcano, that he should be seen as seldom as possible without a cigar in his mouth and a dozen or two in his pocket."

Chewing is, perhaps, the most injurious of the modes of using this nauseous drug, yet all these modes do produce a greater or less derangement in healthy action—and when that comfortable protean disease, vaguely termed Dispepsia, gets a fast hold, the enjoymens of the great luxury, tobacco, is inexpressible.

Why continue its use in any of its forms? The plea commonly made far its use is too flimisy to notice, as thousands of witnesses would testify, were it not that they found it convenient to have an excuse for this filthy practice, that not a tooth has been preserved, or a pain soothed, by the long-continued use of tobacco. L.

"You are quick of apprehension," as the man said to the constable.

COMMUNICATION.

For the Western Recorder.

Please publish the following appointments:

Pittsburgh station,	January	3,	1841.
Ohio circuit,	"	10,	"
Steubenville station,	"	17,	"
Marshall circuit,	"	24,	"
Tyler	" "	31,	"
Woodsfield	" February	7,	"
Georgetown circuit,	"	14,	"
Mt. Pleasant	" "	21,	"

Yours, &c., Z. RAGAN.

Puff! Puff! Puff!!

CHEAP!

CHEAPER THAN EVER! GREAT BARGAINS!

New York at your door!

SELLING OFF AT COST!

WE so heartily despise the "gull-catching" system that we seldom advertise at all. We however give our friends and the public notice that we have just received a fine stock of

FALL AND WINTER

GOODS.

We don't profess to have brought "New York to your doors," nor to undersell every body else, nor to be "selling off at cost," nor to be "closing up," and all that sort of thing,—but we do say, that our goods are cheap enough to satisfy any reasonable person, even in these "hard times."

A. A. GUTHRIE & Co.

Putnam, Ohio, September 30, 1840. 3w58

Dissolution.

THE partnership heretofore existing between the subscribers in the PUTNAM FOUNDRY, under the firm of HARTLEY & ANDERSON, was this day dissolved by mutual consent.

The Putnam Foundry will hereafter be conducted by J. J. Anderson & Co.

LEVI HARTLEY,
JACOB J. ANDERSON.

Putnam, Jan. 1, 1840. (Jan. 29: 23.)

New and Cheap Goods.

POTTS & GRAHAM, are now enabled by a fresh arrival of FALL and WINTER GOODS, to offer to the public a very general assortment of all articles in their line. Their stock is almost ENTIRELY NEW, and embraces a complete supply of DRY GOODS, GROCERIES, QUEENSWARE, HARDWARE, &c. All of which they will sell upon such terms, and conduct their business throughout upon such principles, as cannot fail to afford permanent satisfaction to all who may favor them with their custom.

☞Most kinds of country produce, including any quantity of new Butter, will be taken in exchange for goods.

Putnam, Ohio, Nov. 4. 63tf

THE LARGEST AND CHEAPEST

FAMILY NEWSPAPER

☞IN THE WORLD.☜

ONE DOLLAR PER ANNUM!

When subscribed for in Clubs of ten or more.

COMMENCEMENT OF A NEW YEAR.

ALEXANDER'S

WEEKLY MESSENGER

Will be materially improved in its typographical appearance, at the beginning of the next volume, in January, 1841. The publisher has made such arrangements as to justify him in announcing to the public, that this paper shall continue to take precedence of all its competitors, as it has heretofore done, and all the facilities which his extensive printing establishment can afford, with the aid of his numerous literary correspondents, at home and abroad, shall be united to make the WEEKLY MESSENGER still more satisfactory to its THIRTY-FIVE THOUSAND PATRONS, distributed as it is, thro' every section of the Union. Every exertion will be used to keep equal pace with the advancement which is constantly making in the character of the newspaper press, and the publisher pledges himself that his journal shall, in all departments, afford to its readers a full and comprehensive view of the important events which are continually transpiring in our own Country and the European World! The actual fact is, that the Weekly Messenger is just such a newspaper as persons living out of large cities, require, and will be pleased to receive—and the publisher, after an association of twenty years with the newspaper press, pledges himself that his journal shall not be excelled, either as respects its moral and literary reputation, or the early dissemination of news and other important and useful information. "Go a-head," is his principle, and he has never failed to carry it out to the fullest extent.

The WEEKLY MESSENGER is published every Wednesday, on a beautiful white sheet, of the largest class. Single copies are forwarded to subscribers, every week during the year, for Two Dollars, in advance—or ten persons clubbing together, can have it for the same period, by forwarding the publisher a Ten Dollar Note, free of postage, which is less than any paper of the same size can be furnished by any other office in the United States.

A variety of beautiful engravings will be given in regular succession, which will be accompanied by appropriate sketches of such a description as to render them particularly deserving the attention of the public.

Over Thirty Thousand.

With the immense circulation that has been received for the Weekly Messenger, during the 4 years past, since its commencement, we are bold to say, that no paper has ever been distributed to the same number of patrons with fewer causes of complaint—in fact, we have the most careful and trustworthy Clerks now in our employ, and no inducements are withheld to make them attentive and systematic in the discharge of their various duties; therefore, persons subscribing for the Paper at a distance, may rely on receiving it regularly and punctually by the due course of the mail.

All the contemporary Weekly Press in the Atlantic cities head their subscription papers with the imposing caption of "Largest and Cheapest!" Now, we propose that no person who can not satisfy himself after one year's trial that the Weekly Messenger is emphatically what we have said it is, and therefore is best entitled to patronage, that we will confer on every one making such discovery, a Free Subscription for the space of another year.

At the expiration of the term subscribed and paid for, by Clubs the paper is invariably discontinued, unless the Subscriptions are renewed. All letters must be post paid, or they will not be taken out of the Post Office. Address

CHARLES ALEXANDER,
Athenian Buildings, Franklin Place, Phil.

PREMIUMS

FOR FIFTEEN SUBSCRIBERS.

Any Agent or Postmaster who shall forward to our address Fifteen Dollars, will be entitled to Fifteen Copies of the Messenger for one Year, and either of the following works:

Alexander's Travels, in two volumes.
The Art of Dining, a popular book.
Andrew, the Savoyard, a novel in two volumes.
Charcoal Sketches, by Neal.
Genius and Wisdom of Shakspeare.
Henrietta Temple, a novel in two volumes.
Health and Beauty, a volume much asked for.
Indecision, a favorite novel.
Miss Leslie's Cookery, for married folks.
The Picture of Philadelphia.
Whispers to a Newly Married Pair.
The Prayer Book, 18mo. Neatly bound.
Every Body's Album, with engravings.

FOR THIRTY SUBSCRIBERS.

Any agent or post master who shall forward thirty dollars to our address, will be supplied with thirty copies of the Messenger for one year—and also to be entitled, as a premium, for the same, to one copy of either of the following valuable works:

Gooch on Females and Children.
American Flower Garden Directory.
Gregory's Mathematics.
Pambour on Locomotive Engines and Railways.
Scott's Life of Napoleon.
Pilgrimage to Jerusalem and Mount Sinai, by Baron Geramb, two volumes.
1000 Night's Entertainment, five volumes.

FOR FIFTY SUBSCRIBERS.

A copy of either of the following works will be furnished to any agent procuring a club of fifty subscribers—or, if it should be preferred, two of the first named premiums will be given instead.

Lockhart's Life of Walter Scott.
Treatise on the Management and Disease of Cattle.
Holy Bible, quarto, with beautiful engravings.

TERMS OF THE

Weekly Messenger,

PER ANNUM—Payable in advance:

One Subscription, - - - - - - - -	$2 00
" " six months, - - - - -	1 00
Four Subscriptions (a 1,25) - - - - -	5 00
Ten Subscriptions (a $1) - - - - -	10 00

All who desire to secure the paper from the commencement of the volume, will please forward their names immediately.

☞Postmasters and other gentlemen, who interest themselves to extend our circulation, may rest assured that the most strict and early attention will be given to their orders.

☞To secure agents and others from imposition, we guarantee to forward our paper to all who send us payment in advance, directed to the Philadelphia Post Office, which order, if received there, with the remittance, will be our acknowledgment of the same, and consequently the paper will be regularly sent for the time stipulated. CHARLES ALEXANDER.

December 30, 1840. 6w71

An Apprentice Wanted.

THE subscriber wishes to take a boy of 12 or 15 years of age, to learn the TAILORING BUSINESS. One from the country will be preferred. Applicants must come well recommended.

W. BERKSHIRE.
Main street, Putnam, Ohio.

December 16, 1840 69

DRUGS, Medicines, Paints, Dyestuffs, Oils, and Spirits Turpentine. Cheap for cash, or good horses, by A. LIPPITT.

Main st., No. 72, Zanesville, Nov. 4, 63tf

GRAHAMS MAGAZINE

AND THE

Ladies' & Gentleman's

WORLD OF LITERATURE

And Fashions.

The Casket and the Gentleman's united.

A NEW VOLUME under the above title, of the well established and fashionable Magazine, the Philadelphia Casket in conjunction with the Gentleman's Magazine, which has been every where pronounced the most readable and popular of the day, will be opened on the first of January, 1841, with an array of Contributors secured by the union, of talent and fame, which no periodical in the country can boast or pretend to rival. The December number will, however, be a specimen of the new volume. The volume will be opened with a new and beautiful type, the finest white paper, and with the first of a series of embellishments unsurpassed by any which have yet appeared in any Magazine. The style of elegance, the beauty and finish of these illustrations, and the extensive improvements which will be made in its typographical appearance, and above all the tone of its literary department, by the brilliant array of Contributors, whose articles have enriched the pages of each number, will give it a character, second to no Magazine in the Union. The character of the articles which shall appear in its pages, will be equally removed from a sickly sentimentality, and from an affectation of morality, but while a true delineation of human nature in every variety of passion is aimed at, nothing shall be found in its pages to cause a blush upon the cheek of the most pure.

THE LITERARY CHARACTER

will be sufficiently guaranteed by the reputation of both Magazines thus united, for years past.—Writers of the first rank have been regular Contributors to their pages, and the tales and sketches published in them have been widely copied and read, and the firm and independent tone of the criticisms, upon the current literature of the day, has been every where approved and commended.

THE LIST OF CONTRIBUTORS

embraces the names of most of the principal writers in America, with a respectable number of English authors. Original articles have appeared, during the last year, from the pens of the following:

Professor Ingraham,	David Hoffman, Esq.
" John Frost,	C. W. Thompson,
" N. C. Brooks,	Judge Tremper, N. Y.
" C. F. Wines,	John Du Solle, Esq.
Captain Marryatt,	Grenville Mellen, N. Y.
Morton McMichael, Esq	P. B. Elder, Pa.
Hon. R. T. Conrad,	The author of 'Stanley,'
W. Gaylord Clark, Esq.	Edgard A. Poe, Phil'a.
C. J. Patterson, Esq.	T. G. Spear, "
Rev. T. H. Stockton,	Au'r of How. Pinckney,
Samuel W. Stockton,	Mrs. L. H. Sigourney,
E. Armstrong, Esq.	Miss C. H. Waterman,
Gen. G. P. Morris, N.Y.	Mrs. Ann Stephens,
Leigh Hunt, England,	Benson Hill, England,
Mrs. F. Kemble Butler,	Dr. J. K. Mitchell,
Park Benjamin, N. Y.	Jas. Montgomery, Eng.
Douglas Jerrold, Eng.	A. M'Makin, J.E.Dow,
Joseph C. Neal, the American Boz!	E. Holden, Esq.
James F. Otis, N. Y.	J. Beauchamp Jones,
R. S. Elliott, Pa.	Mrs. E. F. Ellett,
	Dr. T. D. English.

In addition to this brilliant array of names known to fame, the distinguished services of a host of anonymous writers of no ordinary abilities, have given worth and character to the pages of the Magazines. The series of well known nautical papers entitled, "Cruizing in the Last War," have had a run, unequalled by any series published in any Magazine, for years. The author promises to open the first of a new series of

TALES OF THE SEA,

and from his known abilities as a depictor of sea scenes and life, much may be relied upon from him in maintaining the popularity of the Magazine. Papers may be expected during the volume, also from the author of the well know articles entitled, "The Log of Old Ironside." The author of "Syrian Letters," will also lend his powerful and graceful pen, to sustain and increase the reputation of the work. The valuable aid of the author of "Leaves from a Lawyer's Port Folio," has also been secured,—and we may expect something still more thrilling from the capacious stores which a long life in the profession has enabled him to amass. An occasional Chit-Chat, with "Jeremy Short," and "Oliver Oldfellow, is also promised; with a variety of choice articles in prose and verse, from various writers of celebrity, as Contributors to the prominent Magazines of the country. The editors of both Magazines continue their services under the new arrangement. With such an array of talent, a Magazine of unrivalled attractions, may safely be promised the coming volume.

FASHIONS AND ENGRAVINGS.

In compliance with the almost unanimous wish of our lady subscribers, we shall the ensuing volume furnish them with a beautiful and correct plate of FASHIONS MONTHLY, a feature, it is believed, that will neither be unwelcome nor unpopular. These fashion plates shall be drawn from original designs from Paris and London, and may always be depended upon as the prevailing style in Philadelphia and New York for the month in which they are issued. These however, shall in no wise interfere with the regular and choice engravings, and music which accompany each number of the work. The splendid Mezzotint engravings from the burin of Sartain, which have been so justly admired, will be followed during the volume by several from the same hand, while the steel engravings in the best style of art, from interesting scenes shall still enrich the Magazine. The choicest pieces of music for the Piano and Guitar shall accompany each number of the work.

TIME OF PUBLICATION.

The work will be published on the first of the month in every quarter of the Union. The most distant subscriber will consequently receive it on that day, as well as those who reside in Philadelphia. In all the principal cities agents have been established, to whom the Magazine is forwarded, prior to the time of issuing it so that they may be delivered to resident subscribers by the first of the month. This is an important arrangement to distant subscribers, who become tired, importunate, and eventually discontinue many works, in consequence of the great delay by publishers.

TERMS.—THREE DOLLARS per annum. Or two Copies yearly for FIVE DOLLARS, invariably in advance, post paid. No new subscriber received without the money, or the name of a responsible agent. For the accommodation of those who may wish to subscribe for either of the following Philadelphia perodicals, this is made. For Five Dollars current money free of postage, we will forward Graham's Magazine, and Godey's Lady's Book, for one year.

LIBERAL PROPOSAL

Address, post paid GEO. R. GRAHAM,
South-west corner of Chesnut and Third streets, Philadelphia.

December 23, 1840. 70

Notice.

ALL persons indebted to the late firm o Hartley & Anderson, are earnestly requested to call at the Foundry and make settlement, as the change of owners makes this step absolutely necessary. We ask the attention of all persons concerned, to this notice.

J. J. ANDERSON & Co.

Putnam, Jan. 1, 1840. (Jan. 29: 23.)

A Rich New Year's Present.

YOUTH'S CABINET.

For Families and Sunday Schools, weekly, at $1 per year, in advance.

THE fourth volume of this well known and highly approved Juvenile paper commences the first week in January, 1841, edited by N. Southard. It is made up of choice Narratives, original and select, pleasing Moral and Religious, Literary and Scientific Instruction, a variety of Useful Information, Juvenile Poetry, Anecdotes, &c., all designed to promote the best good of the young. It inculcates impartial Benevolence, Temperance, and all other Christian Virtues.

It is neatly printed on half a royal sheet, and each number contains one or more engravings. It has been highly recommended by one hundred editors, and many parents and teachers, in notices and letters like the following:

From a Mother in Springfield, Mass.

"My little girl is delighted with the Cabinet. She can scarcely wait for the week to come round; and when the little welcome messenger arrives, her work or play is laid aside, to have a feast, as she calls it, with the welcome guest. She is willing to make any sacrifice rather than give up her paper."

From a Clergyman in Central New York.

"My little daughter, eight years old, is very much delighted with your paper; and indeed, I read it myself with great interest."

We would refer those who wish for a neat, appropriate paper for their children, to the Youth's Cabinet, which they will find all they could desire in such a publication.—Green Mountain Emp.

We hope all the young who can afford it, will have the opportunity of reading the Youth's Cabinet.—N. H. Baptist Register.

We must say, that it is decidedly the most interesting youth's paper we have seen.—N. York Weekly Messenger.

Mr. Southard, its Editor, has a happy faculty to convey instruction in an interesting manner, so as to leave a strong impression upon the minds of his juvenile readers. Its moral influence is decidedly good. If any family of children should unite and send one dollar, post paid, they will never be sorry that they had paid out their money for so good a paper.—Oberlin Evangelist.

☞Orders should be addressed, post paid, to the editor, at No. 9, Spruce street, New York, or 25, Cornhill, Boston.

December 23, 1840. 70

LITERARY SOUVENIR.

ON the first of January, 1841, will commence the third volume of the Literary Souvenir, enlarged and materially improved. Its form will be changed from that of folio, its present form, to a large quarto of eight pages. It will occasionally be embellished with Engravings, and also Music, arranged for the piano forte, flute, guitar, &c.

We have concluded to make the above arrangement from the fact that, on the account of the large amount of valuable matter contained in the Souvenir, many are anxious to bind their numbers for preservation. The quarto form will render them convenient for that purpose, and though the expense of publishing the paper according to the plan proposed, will at least be double the present expense, the price will not be increased. The music alone, would cost at the music stores more than the price charged for the paper, to say nothing of the engravings.

The character of the Souvenir will be somewhat changed, so as to conform more strictly with the meaning of its title—a literary remembrancer. Its columns will be filled with the choicest reading, embracing the various literary and scientific, and moral and religious subjects of the day, together with such items of news and miscellany as shall be deemed most important and useful to the general reader. While we may sometimes attempt to amuse as well as instruct, the utmost care will be taken to avoid every thing calculated to offend the tastes of the most chaste and refined. The mechanical execution of the paper will be in a superior style, and, in short, no effort shall be wanting to render the Souvenir a fit ornament for the centre table in the parlor of the wealthy, or a desirable and useful companion for those in humbler life.

TERMS:—$2,00 per annum, payable in advance. No subscriptions received for less than half a year.

It is hoped those who wish to commence with the volume will send in their subscriptions previous to the first of January. People in the country, wishing to become subscribers, can apply to their postmaster, who will probably forward their names and money free of expense, but in case he will not, we will pay the postage, provided the cash accompanies the name.

All communications should be addressed, free of expense, to A. B. F. HILDRETH.

Lowell, Mass., Dec. 23, 1840. 70

LITERARY REPOSITORY

THE second volume of the Literary Repository will commence on the first of January next. It will be enlarged so as to contain about one-third more reading matter than at present, and will be embellished with music and engravings. The Repository is designed more particularly for the patronage of the ladies. A number of ladies will contribute to its columns, and it will contain almost every variety of reading calculated to interest the female reader, such as Poetry, Biography, History, Moral and Sentimental Tales, Religious Tales, Religious Miscellany, Science, the Fine Arts, &c. &c.

TERMS:—The Repository will be published as formerly, every other week, in quarto form, at the extremely low price of one dollar a year, payable in advance.

A title page and index will be furnished at the close of the volume.

Those who are already subscribers and wish to continue, are requested to send in the subscriptions previous to the commencement of the new volume, otherwise the paper will be discontinued.

A. B. F. HILDRETH,
Publisher & Proprietor.

Lowell, Mass., Dec., 23, 1849. 70

Partnership Notice.

THE subscribers have formed a co-partnership under the firm of POTTS & GRAHAM, for the transaction of a general mercantile business; and will occupy for that purpose the old stand of Spear & Helmick, where their friends and others wishing to purchase goods, are respectfully solicited to call.

FRANCIS R. POTTS,
NELSON W. GRAHAM.

Putnam, Ohio, Nov. 4. 63tf

Winslow's Compound

BALSAM OF HOARHOUND.

UNRIVALED and unequalled in curing Colds, Coughs, Asthma, Influenza, Whooping Cough, and all diseases of the Breast and Lungs, leading to Consumption, composed of the concentrated virtues of the herbs Hoarhound, Boneset, and several other vegetable substances, warranted pure from any mineral whatever.

Sold by A. LIPPITT and S. GATES.

Zanesville, Nov. 4. 641f

Notice.

BOOKS, Stationery, and Printer's Ink, for sale by A. LIPPITT.

Zanesville, Nov. 4. 631f.

Dissolution.

THE partnership heretofore existing betw S. B. Johnson and J. M. Kirkpatrick, der the firm of S. B. Johnson & Co. was diss ed by mutual consent, on Thursday 19th ins

S. B. JOHNSON,
J. M. KIRKPATRIC

Zanesville, March 31, 1840. 32tf

William Green,

CLOCK AND WATCH REPAIRER, SILVERSM AND JEWELLER,

CAN be found at his shop on Main str Putnam, a few doors north of J. C. Gu rie's store, where he will do his best to accom date customers. He keeps on hand an ass ment of spectacles, watch trimmings, pencils,

As far as we have tried Mr. GREEN as a wa repairer he has given us good satisfaction.—I

April 22, 1840. 35tf.

Ohio State Journal,

FOR THE SESSION.

THE proceedings of the next General Asse bly being looked to with much interest, t publishers of the Ohio State Journal assures patrons, that his arrangements will insure, heretofore, reports which may be relied upon correctness and fairness.

In addition to the general object of the Jou nal, it will be devoted, during the Session of t Legislature, to a careful and impartial detail the proceedings in that body. Arrangemen will also be made to procure an abstract of t proceedings in Congress; and the readers of t Journal may depend upon the latest and mo important news from Washington. For the pu pose of extending such information, and increa ing its circulation among those who are not i regular subscribers, the Journal will be furnish on the following terms, invariably in advance:

Tri-Weekly, for the session,.....$2,00
Semi-Weekly,.....do..... 1,50

CHARLES SCOTT, Publisher.

Columbus, November 13, 1840.

Glass Manufactory.

THE subscriber having dissolved his conne ion with the former company, has taken th GLASS WORKS below town under his ow management.

WINDOW GLASS, double and single, a seizes, and of superior quality will be kept co stantly on hand for sale on reasonable terms.— The experience of the proprietor, in the manu facture of the article, will insure all made to b of the best quality. Call and see.

S. B. JOHNSON.

Zanesville, Ohio, May 6, 1840. 37

CABINET AND CHAIR

FACTORY.

THE subscribers still continue to manufac ture and keep on hand, at their old stand a few doors south of the market house in th town of Putnam, a large assortment of

CABINET WARE

AND

CHAIRS,

CONSISTING, IN PART, OF

Splendid black walnut and mahogony dressing and plain bureaus,
Peer, card, center, side, dining and breakfast ta bles,
Sofas, side-boards, washing stands, ottomans,
Dressing and writing tables,
French, fancy and high post bedsteads,
Secretaries, clock cases, cradles, cribs and book cases,
Grecian, rush, cane and windsor chairs,
Sociables, settees and children's chairs.

In short every thing in their line necessary to furnish a house, either in high or common style; and at such prices as will satisfy all who will favor them with their custom. All the recommendation they have to offer, is, that they have been able to secure a continuance of their old customers and friends. They hope by the quality of their work and a strict attention to business to share a portion of the public patronage.

They have for sale a lot of first rate black walnut veneering and a lot of bureau knobs of the best kind and quality.

Turning done in the best style and shortest notice. CHERRY & GRAY.

Putnam, Ohio, October 28, 1840. 62tf

Session Ohio Statesman.

WE propose to issue the Statesman, during the ensuing session of the Ohio Legislature, on the following terms, viz:

Tri-Weekly, during the session,			$2 00
Semi-Weekly,	"	"	1 50
Weekly,	"	"	1 00

Persons subscribing will please designate which paper it is that they desire.

No subscription will be received unless payment is made in advance.

We shall have good reporters, and use what industry we are capable of employing on our paper, to give a correct and extensive view of all their doings.

The proceedings of Congress will also be duly given as heretofore.

S. & M. H. MEDERY.

Columbus, Nov, 13, 1840.

O. WHITE, BOOK BINDER, No. 104, Main Street, Zanesville, Ohio.

January 15, 1840. 21tf

THE

WESTERN RECORDER

IS PUBLISHED EVERY WEDNESDAY.

☞The office of the Recorder is five and a half miles west of Zanesville.

TERMS.

1. The WESTERN RECORDER will be published weekly, on an imperial sheet, at $2 00 per annum, in advance: $2 50 at the end of three months; $3 00 at the end of the year.

2. No discontinuances will be allowed, except at the discretion of the publisher, until all arrearages are paid.

3. To all ministers having regular pastoral charges, who do any thing at all for the paper, if they will direct us where, a copy shall be sent gratis; any other who forward to us $10 00 for new subscribers, shall have six copies sent to any address he may give.

4. All letters designed for the paper, must be directed to "C. Springer, Meadow Farm, Muskingum, Ohio."

5. A failure to notify a discontinuance before the expiration of the subscription year, will be considered a new engagement.

CHARACTER.—The pages of the WESTERN RECORDER will be open to discussion on all moral questions;—it will give articles on Literature, Mechanics, Agriculture,—an abstract of Religious and Political intelligence, and whatever may be interesting and instructive to families in general. A portion of its columns will be open to Advertisements and Prices Current,—another portion to sustain the interests of the Methodist Protestant Church in the West.—These two latter objects will not likely occupy more than one page.

The RECORDER will take a firm stand against Clerical Supremacy.

THE WESTERN RECORDER.

SPRINGER, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER. | Vol. 2.—No. 21. | ZANESVILLE, OHIO, WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 13, 1841. | Whole No. 73. | JOHN W. WHITE, PRINTER.

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM IN ADVANCE. | $2.50, IN THREE MONTHS; $3, END OF YEAR.

COMMUNICATIONS.

For the Western Recorder.

Editor: A great many curious things hap- these times of enterprize. In proof this po- please read and publish the following ectus, so that the public may have an op- nity of seeing what an enterprizing people dicals are.

oposal for publishing a weekly Religious spaper, devoted to the interest of the Meth- t Protestant Church.

The title of said paper shall be the WEST- ERALD.

The profits of which, after paying all neces- expenses of publication, shall go to the sup- of the ministers and preachers belonging se Annual Conferences who may patronize ork, by whom the proceeds may be divided ding to the number of subscribers within bounds.

The Western Herald shall be printed at nnati, or some other central point, on an ial sheet, at two dollars a year in advance e delivery of the first number.

The editoral management of said paper e entrusted to some competent person, who be a member of the Methodist Protestant h, within the bounds of the Ohio District, hall be remunerated for his services on the linary principles regulating the support of avelling preachers.

The paper shall be commenced as soon as a ient number of subscribers shall be [shall been] obtained to warrant the certain suc- of the enterprize, and a majority of the ers of said conference shall so determine.

SUBSCRIBERS.

ould a paper be published on the foregoing we hereby agree to become subscribers to it. asons for getting up said paper as under- by the copyest of the Prospectus:

. The Protestant is so far off it don't an- the purpose of the west, therefore, discon- this and subscribe for the WESTERN HER-

The Western Recorder don't answer the oses of the church; it is not religious gh, and don't give character to the church; her a disgrace; therefore, drop it and sub- e to the WESTERN HERALD.

Yours, respectfully,

RADICAL.

e above is news to us really. We have re- d a number of communications from the , but none of our correspondents have said rd about this enterprize, nor does the friend e say a word as to who are its projectors and oters; in this respect he still leaves us in lark; he simply says, he believes it to a planting concern," and therefore opposes it. correspondent is a man of great strength of l, and well versed in human nature, and of se capable of given correct judgment in re- n to such matters, yet we hope in this case mistaken.

ow, as we are satisfied that two papers can- be sustained in the west—that an attempt wo will only break down both; and as we are satiated with the pleasures of an editorial we therefore propose to those enterprizing hren, whoever they may be, that we will give to them, provided they will take our print- materials and pay us for them, and provided ner the conferences are agreed to accept their ices. We acknowledge our inability to do ice to our task, but then we rejoice that there men capable of conducting a paper that would e character to the church;" these are the men that should be at the work. As it re- ts remuneration on the "disciplinary princi- " as we are but a half hand we will be satis- with half pay. If the church will appoint a mittee to examine our accounts, and will us half what the discipline allows to a trav- ng preacher, for our past services, after defray- expenses, they may have all the overplus.

ED. REC.

For the Western Recorder

"THE ITINERANT."

Under this head, the travelling minis- of the Methodist Episcopal Church e indiscriminately eulogized in a late itorial of the church organ, as "faith- , humble, self-sacrificing ministers, for- king all for their Master." Such a rtraiture would have applied well to inerant preachers in the early history the christian church, when their Mas- had "not where to lay His head," and structed His itinerants that "all ye are ethren" upon an equality—to "take ither purse nor scrip," &c., &c. They uld say, "we have forsaken all and fol- wed thee." They did not deem it fit at they should leave the word of God serve tables. In the early history of inerant Methodism, such a picture might ve been drawn of itinerant preachers ithout distinction—when they were per- tually changing and travelling from he extreme of this continent, then peo- led, to another—now facing the bleak inds of the North, and then trying the ltry regions of the South—now tra- ersing the low-lands on the sea coast, nd presently climbing the mountains nd exploring the rude forests of the Vest—enduring hardships more easily agined than expressed—laboring day nd night to save as many souls as possi- le—their deadness to the world—and ingle eye to the glory of God, as well s the deep and enduring effect of their ious toil, was known and read of all nen. Their simple, earnest manner in he pulpit and in families, as well as the oly unction that attended their words, ave proof of their high and holy call- ng. Their grave and solemn air, and heir words which ministered grace to he hearers, made an impression like ngravings upon a rock. Their plain ress and cheap travelling equipage made hem known wherever they passed—be- oved by the good, and dreaded and per- ecuted by the evil doers. They were, what would have been esteemed, bad company for the world,—the volatile, the gay, the frivolous and fashionable shunned their presence, or were awed into rev- erence. They did not court a grin when they would woo a soul. They were in- deed and in truth itinerant—not cloistered in colleges—cooped up in a book or edi- torial rooms, or stationary, for a series of years, in a town or city, and yet, by a misnomer, called itinerant.

Their mode of travelling enabled them to pursue bye-paths and find the cottages of the poor, where they received a homely, but hearty welcome, and to whom their pious example, and lessons of instruction were a savour of life. The writer speaks from actual observation,—he left a wid- owed mother in 1794, in the far-west; pas- sed a hazzardous wilderness; traversed the mountains and valleys; passed to the low-lands of Virginia and North Caro- lina, and again sought the lost sheep, in the then new settlements, on the Cuber- land, Green and Ohio rivers. This was itinerancy that was free from drones, town-pets, dandies, and such as are itinerant in name, but local in reality.— But appearances must be kept—newspa- per presses must be put in requisition— boys are soon great men—ministers, pas- tors, that "instead of truth, displaying their own beauty or oratory, starve their flock—superficial in precept and chaffy in example—no wonder if piety is shal- low, and revivals, though loudly puffed, evanescent.

But there are yet laborious and useful itinerants, both in the old and new con- nexion of Methodists, who preach the gospel to the poor, and missionaries, who carry the news of redeeming love to re- mote and distant regions—verily, they shall have their reward. What a host of simple-hearted, zealous itinerants, sowed the good seed which produced abundant fruit in days gone by, when there were no papers to puff their achievements, eu- logize their talents, or chronicle their names,—but their reward was on high. And there is a charm in the word itiner- ant, and something of superstitious rev- erence, growing out of the usefulness and success of the plan which is liable to abuse, and enables the designing to prac- tice deception, and impose on the ignor- ant and credulous,—"there is no institu- tion so pure and excellent, but what it will, in time, by the corruption and folly of man, be altered for the worse. G. L.

For the Western Recorder.

AN ATTEMPT AT MURDER.

Mr. Editor: A man by the name of John P. Miller discharged a rifle at a young man by the name of Isaac Kile, on the 6th instant; the ball entered the thigh just above the knee joint, which split the bone into several pieces for the distance of four or five inches. His leg has since been taken off, but he is not expected to live. They had both been working on the canal for the firm of Pettit, Martin & Co., men who are strictly temperate, and do not allow any of their hands to get drunk and remain on the work—they are immediately discharged when guilty of intemperance. Miller, a few days before he shot Kile, had pro- cured some whiskey from a grocery hard by.

The next morning he, as usual, hitched the horses to the car and drove out, but when he returned into the pit, the super- intendent discovered that he was intoxi- cated, so as not to be able to manage the car, he then directed another man to take charge of the team and ordered Miller off of the works. Miller set to abusing the foreman, and swore that he would imbrue his hands in his heart's blood. These threats were not made in the presence of the foreman, but in the presence of some six or eight of the working hands. He took his gun and followed the foreman to his house, some four hundred yards from the line, but happily, he did not shoot at him. Then, after he was arrested for shooting Kile, he said he would be satis- fied to go to the State's prison for life, or be hung, and let both soul and body plunge into the most augmented torments, and remain there to all eternity, if they would but let him come back to the deep-cut again, that he might get revenge of the superintendent for having discharged him. He was then taken to Lima and there re- leased from prison on a bond of $1,000.

Should he whom he has threatened, have him arrested, through fear of his life, could he not be again released by his friends? So then, by our law, money is thought to be equivalent to the life of the innocent. The laws of our State are insufficient to protect the innocent against the assaults and threats of the lawless. Is not the threatened induced to have recourse to violent means to pro- tect himself, and the threatener encour- aged to dip his hands deeper in crime? And does not the law become the promo- ter of that which it is intened to suppress?

DECATUR.

Hartford, Allen co., O., Dec. 12, 1840.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

COSHOCTON, O., JAN. 4, 1841.

Br. Springer: I take this opportunity to write a few lines for the Recorder, for the purpose of informing our friends of the prospects of Cosho- cton ct. My worthy colleague and myself enter- ed upon our labors the second week after the rising of conference. We found the circuit in a tolerable good condition, and I trust it is no worse at the present time. Our first quarterly meeting we held at Pleasant Hill meeting house, on the second Sabbath of November. We had a reviving and heart cheering time. Br. Linder was at his post full of zeal and reforming spirit. We were favored with the labors of Br. Thomas Hessen, a local preacher, that joined us at the camp-meeting held by Br. Warren. We think the class at Pleasant Hill is looking up. There were nine joined on probation at the meeting.— We have reason to be thankful for the mercies we enjoyed while together.

We have had quite good meetings all around the circuit, but more particularly at Bird run class. We had there a gracious out pouring of the spirit of God. We commenced our protract- ed meeting under rather unfavorable circumstan- ces on Thursday evening, but by the next Sun- day evening our members, with some of our Old side friends, began to get quite warm in the work of the Lord. Br. McConnell came to our assistance, and preached on Sunday evening, and continued with us until the next Saturday, and then Br. Linder continued the meeting until the next Friday evening. It was a time of rejoicing to many new born souls. The meeting contin- ued with interest from the first to the last. As the result of this meeting there were twenty-six added to their number; thank the Lord for His goodness to the children of man.

Our brethren in Coshocton are somewhat en- couraged. I believe the Lord is about to revive His work among them; they have held prayer meetings one mile from the village at a school house, and the Lord has blessed their labors, and ten has joined the Coshocton class.

We had an excellent meeting at Br. Ross' class, about one week since, a livelier meeting I think I never saw among the members; several were re- claimed and two professed to be born again— two cast in their lot among us, and I think there is a prospect of some more additions,—so you perceive the Lord has not forsaken us: may He continue to revive His work so that we may see greater displays of divine goodness, and ul- timately be brought to swell the happy number of the redeemed in glory.

Yours, in the bonds of peace,

WM. L. BALDWIN.

STEUBENVILLE, OHIO, JAN. 1, 1841.

Br. Springer: We are just commencing a protracted meeting in this station. I will com- municate the result in a few weeks. Prospects are now good. We are all in peace and harmo- ny. Yours, truly, J. DALBY, JR.

CLEARFIELD, PA., DEC. 22, 1840.

Br. Springer: We have good times on Clear- field circuit. At our first quarterly meeting sinners were converted and backsliders reclaim- ed. I held a protracted meeting which com- menced on the 13th and closed on the 17th, at which some professed to find peace. Our con- gregations are increasing. We have had some accessions since conference.

Respectfully yours, &c.,

WM. M. MCCULLOUGH.

MORGAN, O., DEC. 30, 1840.

Br. Springer: The prospect on the east part of my circuit promises fair for doing good, and I shall do all I can in getting you good subscribers, for I will not, if I know it, send worthless ones for the purpose of boreing you. The subscribers, I am happy to inform you, on this circuit, are all good,—there are only two delinquents, I believe, and I will speak to them shortly; they are able, but the times have been hard and money scarce. I believe the enconiums of brethren Ragan and Hughes are in accordance with the views of those acquainted with the Recorder in this region.

I am yours, in Christ,

A. K. EARL.

OBITUARY.

For the Western Recorder.

THOMAS DEAN, a promising youth, son of John and Sarah Ann Dean, of Coshocton county, Ohio, was born May the 26th, 1823, and died on Sunday morning, the 8th of November, 1840.

In April last, he was afflicted with a fellon on his finger, which was excessively painful. He exposed himself by sitting and lying on the damp ground, from which he took cold. On the 27th day of April, he was taken down with a pain in his side, which shifted about through various parts of the system so as to baffle the skill of the physicians, until about a week before his death the disease settled on the lungs.

A few days after he was first taken down, his parents conversed with him on the subject of his spiritual condition, but he admitted his unpre- pared state for death. Meantime, the brethren of both the Methodsst Churches, with the min- isters visited him; all of whom encouraged him to pray and put his trust in God.

On the 14th of May, after his parents had both talked with him about the affairs of his soul, he requested his father to read from the Western Recorder the biographical notices of Mrs. Bassett and Mrs. Flowers. After which his father made some appropriate remarks to him, and took up the bible and commenced read- ing. During these exercises, his soul was emar- cipated from the thraldom of sin, and he cried aloud, shouting glory to God; testifying to all around that he never knew what peace was be- fore. Then it was he expressed a willingness to die.

He continued steadfast in hope until he left the world. A short time before his death he repeated that he would not give his prospects of heaven for worlds. He died without a strug- gle, and his spirit returned to God who gave it. B.

YOUTH'S DEPARTMENT.

THE DESERTED CHILDREN.—"I will re- cord in this place," says Mr. Flint, in his travels to America, "a narrative that im- presses me deeply. It was a fair exam- ple of the cases of extreme misery and desolation that are often witnessed on the Mississippi river.

"In the Sabbath school at New Madrid, we received three children who were in- troduced to that place under the follow- ing circumstances. A man was descen- ding the river with three children in his perogue. He and his children had lan- ded on a desert island on a bitter snowy evening in December. There were but two houses near, and these at a little prairie opposite the Island. He wanted more whiskey, although he had been drinking too freely. Against the pur- suasions of the children, he left them, to cross over to these houses and renew his supply. The wind blew high, and the river was rough. Nothing could dis- suade him from his dangerous attempt. He told them he should return that night. He left them in tears, and exposed to the pitiless peltings of the storm, and started for his carouse. The children saw the boat sink before he had half crossed the passage—the man was drowned.

"These forlorn beings were left with- out any other covering than their own scanty, ragged dresses, for he had taken his blankets with him. They neither had fire nor shelter and no other food than uncooked pork and corn. It snowed fast and the night closed over them in this situation. The oldest was a girl of six years, but remarkably shrewd and acute of her age. The next was a girl of four and the youngest a boy of two.

"It was affecting to hear the oldest girl describe her desolation of heart, as she set herself about to examine her re- sources. She made her brother and sis- ter creep together and draw their feet un- der their clothes. She covered them with leaves, and branches, and thus they passed the first night. In the morning the younger child wept bitterly with cold and hunger, the pork she cut in small peices. She then pursuaded them to run about, setting them an example. Then she made them return to chewing corn and pork. It would seem as if Prov- idence had a special eye to these children for in the course of the day some Indians landed on the island and found them, and as they were coming up to New Madrid, took them with them."—Youth's Cabinet.

MISCELLANEOUS.

From the London Cor. of the New York Herald.

LONDON, OCTOBER 19, 1840.

Sketch of Robert Newton and the Metho- dists of England.

The Rev. Robert Newton, of Leeds, has recently paid a visit to London, and preached twice in one day, and then re- turned to Leeds. He dined and supped at a house where I am boarding, and I was introduced to him and found him a clever man, both in the American and English sense of the term.

The Methodists, next to the Quakers, are the most wealthy dissenting sect in England. The Quakers are the richest, but the Methodists are the most numer- ous. The Quakers occupy some splendid residences in the neighborhood of Lon don; but the Methodists beat them in number and elegance of their churches. They are both good sects in their way. John Wesley was a great man, and much good has resulted from his labors. The Methodists have always had a strong hold upon my feelings and good will. My mother and father were early disciples of John Wesley in America. My mother died when I was only four years of age. She enjoyed a high reputation among all her friends for her consistent and sincere piety. My earliest recollections of her was my kneeling beside her in her pray- ers. My last recollection of her was seeing her on her bed of death, and see- ing her die shouting with happiness, which have left impressions on my mind, no change or circumstances of future life has ever been able to efface.

The Methodists have opened a most magnificent chapel in Queen street, in London. It is one of the most elegantly finished churches of modern times in the city, inside. Robert Newton preached in it last Thursday night to over 3,000 people. I attended service in it to-day, and heard an excellent sermon in it from the Rev. Mr. McDonald. The house was well filled with a very orderly and attent- ive congregation. The Methodists also have a very neat and pretty chapel in the new City Road, the plan of which was supplied by Mr. Wesley himself. In the church yard of this chapel, John Wesley lies buried, and also Dr. Adam Clarke and Mr. Watson, and other eminent Methodists divines. In an old church yard, opposite to this Methodist chapel, lies buried the celebrated John Bunyan, and the famous Dr. Watts, who lived and died at Newington, a village within two or three miles of London.

The Methodists, with a portion of mo- ney collected during their centennial an- niversary, purchased the City of London Tavern, in Bishopsgate street, for £15,- 000 sterling. They have enlarged it, and given it a most beautiful and splen- did front, which has cost them an addi- tional sum of £10.000 sterling. They expect to use it as a kind of book and missionary house. There were two large Taverns in Bishopsgate street—one called the City of London tavern, and the other the London tavern. They were principally used for public meetings and public dinners, as they both contain- ed large rooms, built after Exeter Hall was built in the Strand, as a place ex- pressly designed for public meetings.— There appears to be no use for two Lon- don taverns, especially in one short street, so that one was sold out to the Methodists as above stated, who have succeeded in making a very imposing and beautiful building of it. It is inten- ded to be somewhat of a monument of their Centenial Anniversary, and hence is more highly ornamental than would otherwise probably comport with the feelings on the subject.

The Rev. Dr. Olin of the Methodist Church, and an American gentleman of distinguished learning and abilities, and well known in the United States has just arrived in London from his travels in the east. He has been three years in Europe, and during the time visited ev- ery part, including Italy; when in Naples he had the misfortune to lose his amiable wife. Since when, he had visited Egypt and abided in Alexandria, Cairo and Thebes—and crossing an arm of the Red Sea proceeded to explore Arabia, Patria, and Syria. He went to Nazareth, Beth- lehem and Jerusalem, returned to Beyrout then to Smyrna, and thence to Constanti- nople, and thence to the mouth of the Danube, and up that river to Vienna, where he was taken down sick and lay a month with an intolerably severe attack of intermittant fever. As soon as he could travel, he bent his way on to Paris and from thence to Havre, and from there to London; and took lodging at the same house I am boarding at. But, poor fellow, he came back in wretched health —in crossing the Channel, during a rough and stormy passage, he had a vio- lent return of the intermittant fever, and has been confined to his bed a week—and having known him and esteemed him much, as a friend in America, I put all my skill to work to devise means to cure him; and fortunately, with good nursing, his intermittant fever, contracted on the marshy shores of the Danube, has been subdued, and he is convalescent.

He was some time back elected Presi- dent of Middleton college, at Middleton, Connecticut to supply the vacancy occa- sioned by the death of the late Dr. Fisk, and his great anxiety at present is, to proceed to America to fill the station as- signed him. Dr. Olin, early in life, grad- uated at Middlebury College, in Vermont, and for many years resided at the South, and at one time was professor of BELLES LETTERS, in the University of Georgia— and subsequently President of Randolph Macon College, Va. But, his labors, stud- ies and duties in various and important stations of life, combined with the hot cli- mate, to undermine and sink his health, and for three years past he has been trav- elling with the hopes of restoring his health. He is a man of uncommon mind, indeed of the highest order, and no tou- rist has ever travelled abroad, who, by intellectual endowments was so well qualified to describe all he saw in his long journeyings as himself. He has collect- ed a large mass of the most valuable ma- terials—and should he ever publish a book of his travels, it will possess an in- terest beyond any thing of the kind in the present age. It is his purpose, he tells me, should his health permit, when he returns to the United States, to arrange his materials for publication, which, I trust, may be the case.

I went the other day to the agent's of- fice, and secured for him a berth in the Acadia, to sail from Liverpool to Boston, on the 1st of October—so that if nothing happens, he will return to his native coun- try, which he longs to see again, by the ship.

I have enjoyed much interesting and instructive conversation with him since his return from the East. Whenever his disorder would give way sufficient to en- able him to converse, he never failed to gratify me with the most agreeable de- scriptions of his journeys through Egypt, Arabia and Syria;—countries that have lately beome of great interest to the civi- lized world. And what appeared remark- able to me was, he stated that the largest number of travellers he met in his route, were Americans, although France and England were so much nearer to these countries than America, and so much more populous.

At Jerusalem he met with a Miss Liver- more, from America, who evidently is the subject of a monomonia. She says she is one of the four witnesses spoken of in Revelations. She says within two years she is to die, and is to rise again from the dead, and has accordingly taken up her residence in the Jews' quarter of the city, with the intention of awaiting her de- cease. He gives a favorable account of the security enjoyed in Turkey, by for- eigners who reside or travel in that quar- ter of the world. Of all the cities he has been in since his arrival in Europe, he prefers Paris and Vienna. His health is improving every day.

OURANG OUTANG OF MALLACCE.—The ourang outang, which simply means a wild man, has been classed as a species of the simia, or ape genus, though it is gen- erally admitted by zoologists to have much more resemblance to human beings.— Many attempts have been made to procure adult individuals, and it is now one of the greatest disiderata among naturalists particularly in America, to compare the habits and capacities of this singular burlesque upon humanity, if such it is.— In the wild state, ourang outangs are universally gregarious, and as they can use missiles, generally fight erect, with clubs, they are invincible except to the musketry of man; and often attack tigers with success. Young specimens, howev- er have been taken and trained in Africa, Java, Borneo, and Sumatra, and although they have survived but a few months the restraints of civil life, enough has been noted to encourage the belief that the ourang outang and chimpanzee, if not a species or race of humanity, must be the connecting link between it and the brutes. Buffon strongly advocated the former, and relates his own observations of an ourang outang which he saw; he was mild, affectionate, and good natured; and signs and words were sufficient to move him. 'I have seen, says he, this animal presents his hand to conduct the people who came to visit him and walk as grave- ly along with them, as if he had been one of the company. I have seen him sit down at the table, unfold his napkin, wipe his lips, and use a spoon, knife and fork, to convey his victuals to his mouth, and besides pour his liquor into a glass and make it touch that of the person who drank with him," Francis Byrad in his voyages says: 'In Serra Leone there is a strong species that labor as servants; carry water on their heads, and rinse glasses, and carry them round to the com- pany.' Grant, too, says he saw in Java, 'an extraordinary ape, a female, very modest—who walked erect, with no hair on her face, except for eyebrows. She made her bed neatly every day, laid on her side, and covered herself with bed- clothes. When her head ached she bound it with a kerchief.' Malte Brun speaks of others that mixed with the Af- ricans; and M. de Grandpre saw a fe- male Chimpanqee or simia troglodytes, that could heat an oven with care, and on a voyage was as expert at the capstan or in the rigging as an old tar. In Suma- tria, I was myself told by many that in one of their villages a family is known which sprang from an ourang outang that was married by a Malay. She soon followed the customs of other women in her mode of living and working, and al- though her offspring for more than three generations were nearly dumb, they now speak the same as the natives. Indeed many of the old men on the coast more resemble ourang outangs than they do men. One in particular, a man of rank too, who came off from Pulo Kio to the ship, was very like this kind of beast.— He had the flat nose, deficient chin, short pursey front, ears very large, eyes too near, and a profusion of hair covering his whole person, but excepting the long arms, extra distance of upper lip from the nose, and thirteen ribs. He had also, that same ludicrous gravity and melan- choly quizzicalness of expression which the ourang outang always has. Of course I cannot vouch for the truth of the ourang outang story, but, as Heroditus says, they so informed me who had the best chance to know.

AWFUL INSTANCE OF DIVNE POWER.— Last week an awful instance of the pow- er of the Almighty was manifest in the town of Staines; in which there had been for years resident a laboring man, about fifty years of age, named Joseph Nixon, who was generally known as a man of very reprobate and questionable habits. Having been employed by Mr. James Clark, a wharfinger in the town, in men- ding the sail of a barge, on meeting in the Blue Anchor public house, Mr. Clark ac- cused Nixon of purloining part of the twine he had given him to mend the sail with, which Nixon denied, and, with dreadful imprecations, declared he had used the whole of it in doing the repairs, and then called upon God to strike him dead if it was not the truth. A few min- utes afterwards, before he had again spo- ken, he was struck with a paralysis, and rendered completely speechless, in which state he was carried to his own residence, when he expired in the course of a few hours. An inquest has subsequently been held upon the body, and a verdict of "Died by the visitation of God," was re- corded.—Scottish Guar.

☞HOW TO SHAKE OFF TROUBLE.—Set about doing good to somebody. Put on your hat, and go and visit the sick and the poor; inquire into their wants, and minister to them; seek out the desolate and oppressed and tell them of the conso- lations of religion. I have often tried this method, and have always found it the best medicine for a heavy heart.

To be kind and obliging in our dispo- sition, is essential to our happiness and usefulness in life. Kindness is a trait of character, which is not only prized by man but secures to its possessor the love and esteem of those with whom he is ac- quainted. Who will not strive to be al- ways kind?

WESTERN RECORDER.

ZANESVILLE:

WEDNESDAY, ... JANUARY 13, 1841.

The following article is from the "Protestant" of the 2d instant:

PITTSBURGH CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.—Our brother of the Methodist Espiscopal Church, notices the establishment of the Windsor Theological and Literary Institute, and speaks favorably of Rev. Dr. Waters, the Principal. For this we acknowledge our thanks. We are moreover pleased to hear such language as the following: "We certainly feel no opposition to this denomination, nor to any increase of its influence by Theological Seminaries."

There is through the greater portion of his article a seeming kindness of feelings, which we sincerely reciprocate. Nor do we at all feel disposed to censure him for resisting, so far as consistent with his opinions of propriety, attacks made upon the government of the M. E. Church.

We think however, that he has mistaken the spirit of our correspondent whom he quotes.—Were all our M. E. friends like himself, we acknowledge the observation of our correspondent might be thought indicative of a bitter and persecuting spirit. But it is notorious, that very many of them evidence towards our society the most determined persecution; and the article to which he has alluded exhibited, we are confident, a true picture of a real occurrence.

The propriety of such articles as he has cited from the pages of a contemporary, we have long doubted. Editors are too prone to exhibit unkind feelings toward each other in their discussions upon principles and measures. Indeed, the excellent editor of the Advocate is himself somewhat guilty here. While admonishing his brother of the Recorder, he has, perhaps unwittingly, slipt into the same error. After deploring that "the religious press" should thus neutralize its efforts "to evangelize the world," he thus discourses—

"Who is the accuser of the brethren? A ministers of the gospel of peace? No; it surely cannot be. We have heard of a certain Rev. C. Springer who publickly said he wished the Methodists would strike out the whimsical notion from the Discipline that men are "inwardly moved by the Holy Ghost to take upon them the office of the ministry in the Church of Christ.' If this pious editor and he be identical, the article under consideration accounts very clearly for his whimsical wish."

Now this is hardly characteristic of that apirit which doeth good for evil. It may, perhaps, after a sober second thought, teach our brothers as it does us, that great charity should be exercised toward offending brethren; and that we should never lose sight of the old adage, "Humanum est errare." Still we dicidedly disapprove any thing that is course or rude in our contemporaries of the same denomination; and if we, editorially, or through our correspondents, have ever thus sinned, we are ready to ask God's forgiveness, as well as the forgiveness of our offended brethren.

The aged and venerable editor of the Protestant has had the goodness, here, to indicate the "impropriety" of our manner, and that our style is "course" and "rude." We thank him very kindly for the suggestion, and shall try and improve from his experienced admonitions.

However, we will suggest one thing for his consideration, that he may not have thought of, as even the greatest minds cannot know every thing;—we, out here in the forests, to use a "course" expression, have been raised on "hog and hominy." So that our food is "course,"—our digestive organs are "course," and our stomachs relish strong "meat." And all this is owing to our bringing up. Why, bless us, my dear friend, we would starve to death here, on your Baltimore sweet-meats.

The old Methodist Correspondent and the Western Recorder breathe the very life and spirit of our enterprize. That there have been exceptions,—that there are still exceptions made to their manner, from various motives, and sometimes with much justness, is not denied, but that the great body of the people are suited, we are satisfied. Look at the success which has attended our enterprize, under the influence of these periodicals;—greater, by far, than any section of the United States. By their fruits ye shall know them.

Our western periodical was suspended for several years. During all that time, we enjoyed the full and unrivaled benefit of the Baltimore paper. At the close of that period, we, in this region, scarcely knew whether we were destined, as a church, to live or die. Our brethren, generally, feeling the imperious want of a medium of communication and defence, in relation to our enterprice, located in this region, perseveringly urged us to undertake the publication of the Western Recorder, which we did after long pursuasion, contrary to our own inclinations, being under the influence of our friends in this matter. And the effect that this paper has had upon the interests of our cause, in this region, is kown and felt by most of the church.

As it respects our "cotemporary," the Protestant, we say it is as good a family paper as we know in the country, and can recommend it as worthy the patronage of any family in the United States, so far as general reading is concerned. Its selections are good,—its correspondence is very respectable, but its editorials are tame,—and tame from the very best of reasons,—and so far as our particular enterprize is concerned, calculated to do little good, and sometimes to do harm. We will give the article before us as a specimen.

The editor of a "Christian Advocate" utters a vile slander against his neighbor, and hangs it up, in his columns, under this attractive heading. The Protestant officiously quotes the heresy into its columns, before it has time to know whether it is denied or not, without uttering a syllable of disbelief as to the truth of the charge, and after indicating that its "cotemporary" was guilty of "impropriety," and was "course and rude" in his manner, proceeds to become the apologist for this Episcopal defamer of his brethren; after passing various encomiums upon him, styling him the "excellent editor," &c., it quotes the slander,—then adds: "Now, this is hardly characteristic of that spirit which doeth good for evil." "Hardly characteristic!" yet it may pass. Do you suppose if Luther had met such slanders from the pope or his emissaries, that he would have thus rolled them under his tongue as a sweet morsel? No! indeed; he would have denounced them with suitable severity and indignation, even at the risk of being called "rude" by a modern "Protestant."

Indeed, it is a charge which writers have bro't against Luther, that he was "course" and rough in his manners; and they have sought an apology for this in the "rudeness" of his times. But, mark ye! without that bold, daring, "Nathan" like bluntness which distinguished him, the reformation would never have succeeded. If he had acted up to what our finical city-boys think decorum, we might have been groaning under the lash of papal tyranny to this day. What would a thousand such milk and water articles, as the one before us, do towards saving us from the influence of popery in this, or any other age? Taking all the circumstances into view, it goes more to favor it than otherwise.

What a "course," "rude" person our Lord must have been, to tell the Pharisees, the most wealthy, learned, numerous and respectable sect of religionists in His day, that they were "hypocrits" and could "not escape the damnation of hell." How rough and uncouth it was for St. Paul to tell Peter to his "face" that he was guilty of "dissimulation," for St. John to charge Diotrephes with "prating malicious words," and for the old prophets to call the priests "dumb dogs" and to charge them with being more attached to their tythes than their duties. Pity these ancient worthies had not been schooled in the city of Baltimore, the church would not then have been disgraced with their "rudeness."

As it regards the "exhibition of unkind feelings" toward Br. Cook; whatever we may have "exhibited," and whatever may have been our manner of reproving him, we can assure the brother, that we feel nothing unkind at heart towards him, and have not yet lost confidence in him as a christian. If he could, at this hour, pay us a visit we would receive him with cheerfulness, and extend to him the hospitalities of our humble domicil with great pleasure. For we yet believe that the charge of heresy which he has published against us, was not done through studied malevolence, but from the want of experience and proper reflection. It, to us, bears these marks. For instance; he has said our heresy was "publicly" uttered. Now, if he had deliberately intended to injure us he would have omitted the word "publicly." For he cannot sustain his charge, without perjuring some of his brethren, and this he cannot well do under the circumstances he has named. But in order to secure a continuance of our confidence, in his christian integrity, he has one thing to do. As hundreds of his readers implicitly believe what they see stated in the Advocate, we will of course be deemed as a heretic in their estimation. Now, he has got to remove that impression. The fuller and fairer he will do it, the better we shall esteem him.

What we consider the most exceptionable in our "Cotemporary" in this matter, is, inserting in its columns the charge of heresy against us without expressing its disbelief of its truth. We are aware that to charge a man with a want of soundness in the faith, injures him more, with a large portion of professors, than to report against him delinquency of moral conduct. It would almost seem as though the Protestant was co-operating with its "excellent" brother of the Advocate to give circulation to a charge of heresy, under circumstances calculated to excite suspicion against us.

We are certain we have our editorial foibles. But if we have been guilty of greater editorial indiscretion than the Advocate with its slander, or the Protestant with this officious interference in our matters, we know it not.

If our 'cotemporary' shall feel disposed to make any remarks upon this article, we shall claim the right to have it inserted entire in its columns, and then, of course, it will be at liberty to make what strictures it may think proper.

FROM WASHINGTON.—In the Senate, on the 18th Dec., Mr. Buchanan presented a memorial from citizens of Pennsylvania, in reference to spoliations committed prior to 1800, which was referred.

In the House, Mr. Rives, chairman of the committee on elections, moved that the report of the committee on elections, in reference to the payment of expenses in the case of Messrs. Ingersoll and Naylor, be made the special order of the day for the first Tuesday in January. After some words, it was agreed to.

In the Senate, one Tuesday among the bills reported, was one from the committee on commerce, more effectually to provide for the safety of passengers conveyed by steam.

In the House, the bill from the Senate, supplementary to an act to abolish imprisonment for debt, was referred to the committee on the judiciary.

A long debate on the public land question sprung up on the presentation of a petition from Illinois, praying reduction in the price. It was cut off the adjournment. Both Houses adjourned to Monday.

In the Senate, Mr. Benton gave notice that he should move the bank taxing bill, presented by him to the Senate on Thuesday, as an amendment to the first revenue bill which came from the House.

Among the petitions presentend to the Senate, was one by Mr. Sturgeon of Pa., from the heirs of Robert Fulton, praying Congress to recognizs and to pay their claims upon the Government. It appears as if the delay in this case was cruel.

In the House, Mr. Thomas, of Maryland, chairman of the commitiee on Naval Affairs, moved that the House go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, for the purpose of considering the bill making appropriations for the Naval Pension Service for the year 1841. The bill passed after discussion.

A large number of petitions and memorials have been presented from different parts of the country, in favor of a general bankrupt law. They have been referred.

The bill to abolish imprisonment for debt was finally passed by the Senate and sent to the House.

January 4, 1841.

IN SENATE.—Mr. Norvell presented a petition from citizens of Michigan, praying for the passage of a general bankrupt law.

Mr. Allen of Ohio presented a memorial from Ohio in favor of the same object. The memorials were laid upon the table, a bill having been reported for that object.

Mr. Norvell also presented a memorial from citizens of Michigan, praying for a tax upon the fish brought from Canada,—Referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. Porter presented a petition from citizens of Michigan, praying for the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia, and in the territories over which the United States have jurisdiction. The memorial came from a quarterly meeting of the Society of Friends. On motion of Mr. Clay of Al., the motion to receive was laid on the table.

Mr. Clay presents a number of memorials from America citizens, praying that the spirit rations given to mariners and sailors be dispensed with, and that tea and coffee be employed as a substitute.—Mr. Clay said the petitioners gave many reasons why their prayers should be favorably considered. Without reading, he moved its reference.

Mr. Clayton of Delaware presented a similar memorial from citizens of Michigan, which with the memorial presented by Mr. Clay, was sent to the committee on Naval Affairs.

The morning business having been disposed of, Mr. Clay of Al. called for the special orders of the day, which were one of the bills in reference to the public domain.

The first bill called for by Mr. Clay was the bill introduced by himself, and reported from the Committee of Finance in favor in the graduation system.

Mr. Clay of Ky., after the introduction of the bill, said it would be recollected that at the moment the bill named by the Senator was introduced, he accompained it with a resolution calling for information from the Treasury Department. It was obvious to every Senator that such information was necessary to a just action upon the bill before the Senate. He hoped there would be no action until the information sought for was received.

The appeal of Mr. Clay had the desired effect, and the bill passed from the consideration of the Senate for the present.

House of Representatives—Petitions.—Many of the petitions were presented this morning and followed by reports from the Standing Committees of the House.

Of the Reports presented, but few were of public importance.

Mr. Anderson, of Me., from the committee on Naval Affairs, reported a new Pension Bill, designed to modify the Act of 1837.

Mr. Adams, of Mass., made reports as Chairman of the Select Committee in regard to the L'Amistad negroes. The error complained of was the error of the proof reader, and not of the translator.—The word in controversy was in regard to "some negroes." (Cadimos.)

Steamer Caroline.—Additional correspondence between the Secretary of State and the British Minister, explanatory of what has heretofore been said was read by the Clerk, and 6000 extra copies ordered to be printed. A spirited debate followed between Messrs. Fillmore, of New York, Granger, of New York, Davis, of Ind., and Pickens, of S. C. The South Carolina member was opposed to printing, and disposed to get rid of the subject as quietly as possible.

Mr. Fillmore and Mr. Granger spoke impressively of the importance of the subject. Mr. Davis. of Ind., had his voice turuned for war.

Mr. Walker moved the Previous Question, and after a second the House adjourned.

The Vicksburgh Sentinel thus details an outrage:

"Three gentlemen of the highway, being, no doubt, short of the needful, concluded to levy black mail upon a flat boat owned by two industrious mechanics from the upper country. They effected an entrance without noise, and, in the most genteel manner, demanded, 'Your money, that's all we want.' The boatman, not understanding their claim, showed a four inch barrel in part pay, but unfortunately the cap exploded. His companion, in the mean time, being apprised of what was going on, slipped his Bowie knife into the back of the assailant. The three gentry, finding it getting rather warm, sounded a retreat, and, in trytng to escape by the stern of the boat, received the fire of another pistol, the ball striking the lower part of the back and passing out in the region of the groin. He plunged into the water and swam ashore, where he was found in the morning, writhing in pain and agony. He is a rough looking man, with long sharp features. He gave his name as Godfrey, of Cincinnati, and also gave the names of his companions. It is thought he will recover."

LOVE OF CHILDREN.—Tell me not of trim, precisely arranged homes where there are no children; "where," as the good man has it, "fly-flaps always hang strait on the wall;"—tell me not of the never disturbed nights and days; of tranquil unanxious hearts, where chilren are not! I care not for these things. God sends children for another purpose than merely to keep up the race—to enlarge our hearts, to make us unselfish, and full of kind sympathies and affections; to give our souls higher aims, and to call out our faculties, to extend enterprise and exertion; to bring round our fireside bright faces and happy smiles, and loving, tender hearts. My soul blesses the Great Father every day, that he has gladdened the earth with little children!—Mary Hewitt.

THE MYSTERIOUS MURDER AT BROOKLYN.—We have an account in the Atlas that through the indefatigable exertions of the Mayor and Police of Brooklyn, a discovery of the cause and the perpetrators of the dreadful murder of Mr. Phelp's son, which occurred about four months since, has been effected. It appears that a gang of some half dozen young men had associated themselves and had effected several most daring burglaries. The robbery of Mr. Phelps' house was resolved upon, and the deceased was appealed to, to aid in the nefarious project. This he refused to do, and threatened to disclose the whole plot if it was persisted in. The gang of burglaries became alarmed, and to prevent disclosure, the horrid act of murder was committed.

The leader of the gang is a lad of not more than 18 years of age, and is the son of a highly respectable member of the New York Bar, resident at Brooklyn. He has confessed the whole facts, and efforts are now making to procure his admission as State's evidence against his accomplices, of whom three out of five have been arrested and are now in prison. How should we weep over such a development.

AN UNPLEASANT SITUATION.—On Thursday afternoon last about 4 o'clock one of the Gloucester steamboats left the Point House, for the opposite side of the river with passengers, carriages and eleven horses, and became so jammed in the ice that it was carried a considerable distance down the river and back by the tide, and did not reach the wharf at Gloucesters until near noon the next day—having been upon the river all night.—Phil. paper.

AGRICULTURAL.

From the Farmer's Cabinet.

BOOK FARMING.

Sir:—On a visit to a young and neighboring farmer, one who has left "the busy town for the peaceful country," as he says, and who reads the agricultural works of the day in his own defence, I saw many things about his house and premises which even I an old farmer, with perhaps a pretty strong spice of prejudice, especially against book farming, at once could perceive were improvements upon the old plans adopted by my grandfather. I had called upon him to offer my services by way of advice, but I vow that before I had entered the house, I was sensible that I had come to the wrong place for that business: so I made what is called a virtue of necessity, and held my tongue. Why, Mr. Editor, before I left him, I found that he was the oldest in point of knowledge, and only wanted a little practice to render him by far a better manager than myself; I guess he talked like a book, and had a chapter and a verse at his fingers' end for ever thing he did, and something better than that too, for he had the modesty to listen, while I described some of our old fashioned modes of management, which, however, he would demolish, although very quietly, in about half a minute, by turning to his books, where I declare he seemd to have the power to find just what he looked after; and the truth of his notions was, I am compelled to say, as plain as A, B, C.—There is one thing, however, in which I think he is wrong; he says we do not, according to his calculation, plough deep enough. Now, I think, if any thing, we plough too deep, and so I told him, but he only answered, he was young, and was desirious of getting information by laying it, and was making experiments which would convince him of the truth or falsity of the theory; and then he asked me if ever I had given the thing a fair trial? which I was bound to say I had not; and there, Mr. Editor, these youngsters have the advantage over us, for nothing will satisfy them but rooting to the bottom of things; and it was in vain for me to say, as I did repeatedly, "he may be sure that I was right in my notions on that subject, and he would find it so."

His dairy cows, which he had bought but the last year, were all of the proper age and in full milk, for he told me, as often as he was convinced he had a bad milker, he sold her right away and bought another; for, added he, "my books tell me there is more than a hundred per cent. difference between a good and a bad milker, for while a good milker gives a profit, a bad milker gives a loss." This was physic to me, for I knew that one half my dairy cows were too old or too young, and the other half far from good—I said nothing.

But there was one thing in which he shamed me, and that was the way in which he had changed the situation of his cattle yard, so as to prevent the drainage of the dung from passing over the high road and down the ditch, as had been the case for the last age or two, and this he had done so easily too, for by digging up the bottom of the old yard two or three feet in depth in the centre, he had cast it hollow, and obtained by these means many hundred loads of the richest mould, exactly in the place where it was required, and all without the cost and labor of carting, to act as a sponge to soak up the draining during the winter; and now I found him turning it up with his long manure, a heap, I had almost said, as large as a barn! This was killing two birds with one stone, you see, and I wondered how the idea could have entered his head—for I am sure it had never entered mine—but he took down a book where there was a picture of a cattle yard as natural as life, and pointed out the advantages of the alteration, and made a calculation of the saving it would be to him in the course of the year, in the article of manure, that quite astonished me; and then he went to work with his figuring to show me the quantity of capital mould he has obtained, merely by digging, multiplying together, as he called it, the length and breadth by the height, and turning the whole into loads, without ever loading a bit of it; I declare it made me feel all-over-like to see him go from Dan to Beersheba it about a whistle.

But there was a machine in the shed at the end of the house, that was a caution to me; it was a large grindstone set upon rollers, so true, that with a single finger it might be set off as though it would go a month; now that was a tool which I had promised to get for the last ten years, but never found time to do it, although it had cost me hundreds of hours, and something more than time, to go to the tavern a mile off, every time we want to grind a scythe, or hook, or axe, and operate on an old worn out rickety thing, about as smooth as the back of my hand, a quality which it never before struck me was chosen by the owner and tenant of the tavern for the purpose of keeping the noses of his customers so long at the grindstone; as to bring on a desire for drink; and now I think of it, it is placed in the nine-pin alley! I would have passed without noticing it, but my young friend remarked, "here is the cheapest article I ever bought. It is large and cuts so readily that it is no labor to use it; I guess it has saved me about the amount of rent already; all our tools, from the knives of the table to hoes, spades, shovels, and pick-axes, are kept sharp, and it is pleasure to work with them; at hay-time and harvest we generally give our scythes a touch every morning, which saves hours in the day, and many a weary back, besides cutting the crops closer and cleaner; I cannot calculate the value of such a convenience, because I had never been without one;" but I thought I could, and from that moment determined to get one right away.—He had many other strange things about him, the knowledge of which he told me he had obtained from books; but as I must have tired you by this time, I shall reserve a farther description of them for another opportunity.

One of the Old School.

P. S. He had, also, what he termed a course of croups, different from ours which I must notice in my next.

From the Cincinnati Chronicle.

COMMON SCHOOLS OF CINCINNATI.—The following is a synopsis of the course of instruction pursued in our Common schools, and alluded to in our yesterday's report of the Board of School Trustees and Visitors.

GRADE I.—The Alphabet, thorough—spelling easy words of one, two, three and four letters progressively—spelling easy words of two syllables—spelling and reading easy sentences—spelling a reading more difficult lessons. The teacher giving the necessary oral instruction, and teaching the pupils to use the eyes as well as their ears.

GRADE II.—Spelling, correct pronunciation, reading accurately, modulation of the voice, accent, emphasis, stops and marks in reading, spelling sentences, simple tables in arithmatic, learning to count &c., writing after copies on slates and blackboards. The teacher giving the necessary oral instruction, and guarding against error.

GRADE III.—Spelling—higher reading—analysis of words and learning the meaning—analysis of sentences—spelling sentences—writing after copies on slates, black-boards and books—copying words and sentences from books and manuscript, oral, mental, and written arithmetic—tables in arithmetic. The teacher giving the necessary oral instruction and insisting upon correctness.

GRADE IV.—Spelling—reading with definitions—stops and marks—analysis of words and sentences, the nature and power of letters, modification and influence of words upon one another—writing after copies on slates, black-boards and books—copying from books or manuscripts—higher arithmetic—geography and history of the United States with maps—the definition of grammatical terms—simple parsing—classification of words and their constructive influence on one another—modern geography and history with maps and globes—chronology.—The teacher giving the necessary oral instruction.

GRADE V.—Analysis and definition of words more extended—rhetorical reading—penmanship as applied to forms of business, such as copying from books or manuscripts—letter writing, notes, bills, receipts, &c..—higher arithmetic with all its kindred branches, as applied to business—English Grammar, parsing, correction of false syntax, writing with grammatical accuracy—rhetoric and composition—modern and ancient geography, and history with maps and globes—algebra, geometry, trigenometry, mensuration, surveying, chemistry, botany, natural history, geology, natural philosophy and rural economy—to these may be added, as circumstances may suggest; the study of the constitution of the United States and all the higher branches of mathematics. The teacher giving the necessaay oral instruction.

The three last grades should also read at certain intervals in the bible, of which the authorized version, without comments is used. All of which is respectfully submitted.

COUNTING HOUSE ALMANAC,

FOR THE YEAR 1841.

	Sunday,	Monday,	Tuesday,	Wednesday,	Thursday,	Friday,	Saturday,	SUN RIS'S H. M	SUN SETS H. M	MOON'S PHASES. D. H. M.
Jan.						1	2	7 17	4 43
	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	7 14	4 46	Full Moon, 7 9 16M
	10	11	12	13	14	15	16	7 9	4 51	Last Quarter, 14 6 49M
	17	18	19	20	21	22	23	7 4	4 56	New Moon, 22 11 24M
	24	25	26	27	28	29	30	6 57	5 3	First Quarter, 30 5 18M
	31
Feb.		1	2	3	4	5	6	6 50	5 10
	7	8	9	10	11	12	13	6 43	5 17	Full Moon, 5 8 23E
	14	15	16	17	18	19	20	6 34	5 26	Last Quarter, 13 0 56M
	21	22	23	24	25	26	27	6 26	5 34	New Moon, 21 5 48M
	28									First Quarter, 28 2 21E
March		1	2	3	4	5	6	6 17	5 43
	7	8	9	10	11	12	13	6 9	5 51	Full Moon, 7 7 54M
	14	15	16	17	18	19	20	6 00	6 00	Last Quarter, 14 8 37E
	21	22	23	24	25	26	27	5 52	6 8	New Moon, 22 8 54E
	28	29	30	31						First Quarter, 29 9 16E
April					1	2	3	5 43	6 17
	4	5	6	7	8	9	10	5 35	6 25	Full Moon, 5 7 49E
	11	12	13	14	15	16	17	5 27	6 33	Last Quarter, 13 4 22E
	18	19	20	21	22	23	24	5 19	6 41	New Moon, 21 8 49M
	25	26	27	28	29	30				First Quarter, 28 3 15M
May							1	5 11	6 49
	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	5 4	6 55	Full Moon, 5 8 23M
	9	10	11	12	13	14	15	4 58	7 2	Last Quarter, 13 10 39M
	16	17	18	19	20	21	22	4 52	7 8	New Moon, 20 6 1E
	23	24	25	26	27	28	29	4 48	7 12	First Quarter, 27 9 27M
	30	31
June			1	2	3	4	5	4 43	7 17
	6	7	8	9	10	11	12	4 41	7 19	Full Moon, 1 10 00E
	13	14	15	16	17	18	19	4 41	7 19	Last Quarter, 12 2 16M
	20	21	22	23	24	25	26	4 41	7 19	New Moon, 19 1 36E
	27	28	29	30						First Quarter, 24 4 54E
July					1	2	3	4 43	7 17
	4	5	6	7	8	9	10	4 45	7 15	Full Moon, 3 0 56E
	11	12	13	14	15	16	17	4 49	7 11	Last Quarter, 11 2 48E
	18	19	20	21	22	23	24	4 54	7 6	New Moon, 18 8 30M
	25	26	27	28	29	30	31	5 00	7 00	First Quarter, 25 2 38M
Aug.	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	5 1	6 59
	8	9	10	11	12	13	14	5 7	6 53	Full Moon, 2 4 39M
	15	16	17	18	19	20	21	5 21	6 46	Last Quarter, 10 0 36M
	22	23	24	25	26	27	28	5 29	6 31	New Moon, 16 3 50E
	29	30	31							First Quarter, 23 3 27E
										Full Moon, 31 7 51E
Sept.				1	2	3	4	5 37	6 23
	5	6	7	8	9	10	11	5 46	6 14	Last Quarter, 8 8 30M
	12	13	14	15	16	17	18	5 54	6 6	New Moon, 15 0 20M
	19	20	21	22	23	24	25	6 3	5 57	First Quarter, 22 7 40M
	26	27	28	29	30					Full Moon, 30 10 26M
Oct.						1	2	6 11	5 49
	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	6 20	5 40	Last Quarter, 7 3 29E
	10	11	12	13	14	15	16	6 28	5 32	New Moon, 14 10 34M
	17	18	19	20	21	22	23	6 36	5 24	First Quarter, 22 3 19M
	24	25	26	27	28	29	30	6 44	5 16	Full Moon, 30 0 15M
	31
Nov.		1	2	3	4	5	6	6 52	5 8
	7	8	9	10	11	12	13	6 59	5 1	Last Quarter, 5 10 31E
	14	15	16	17	18	19	20	7 5	4 55	New Moon, 12 11 47E
	21	22	23	24	25	26	27	7 10	4 50	First Quarter, 21 0 28E
	28	29	30							Full Moon, 28 0 55E
Dec.				1	2	3	4	7 15	4 45
	5	6	7	8	9	10	11	7 18	4 42	Last Quarter, 5 6 34M
	12	13	14	15	16	17	18	7 19	4 41	New Moon, 12 3 52E
	19	20	21	22	23	24	25	7 19	4 41	First Quarter, 20 9 6E
	26	27	28	29	30	31				Full Moon, 28 0 52M

HE RECORDER.

ZANESVILLE.

NESDAY, ... JANUARY 13, 1841.

IE WEATHER.—The cold weather closed one week since, and the snow went off a rain; since when it has been warm, and drizzly.

SON.—The barn of Wm. Hull, Esq., near t, in the edge of Licking, with its contents, cently consumed by fire. His neighbor, Ritner, has been recognized to Court, on pposition of his either communicating the the barn or having it done. The diffias we have understood it, between the s, is as follows;—Mr. R. is the son-in-law Smith, dec'd., who on his demise, instead ring his property to his daughter, left it to ildren. One of the heirs having been d, sold her share of the land, on which her was residing, without his knowledge and t, to Mr. Hull. Mr. Ritner became very displeased with his neighbor Hull, for tasas he supposed, the advantage of him, he g to have bought the property himself, in lat of his excitement utterred some threats effect that he would do Mr. Hull this f injury. On these threats, we presume, ot on any positive testimony of the fact of pposed arson, the recognizence is predi-commend the following to the notice of egislators. But add again, that there is ctual way to stop this imposition upon ligious community, without forfeiting the ty on sale. Worthless villains can always esponsible tools to sell for them.

amp Meeting.—The Legislature of Vermont d a law at its last session, enacting that if erson shall sell or offer for sale, any vituals, or merchandize within two miles of the of holding any camp meeting, within that during the continuance of such meeting, ll be punished by a fine not exceeding forty s, to the use of the town in which such ng is held."—Albany Daily Advertiser.

Ohio State Journal says the movements Whigs indicate a determination to form mense escort to conduct Gen. Harrison to ington city; but has its doubts whether eneral has yet concluded, in his own mind, render himself into the hands of the people s matter.

E DISCOVERED PAPERS.—Under this head Olive Branch is giving a development of aracter of the Episcopal Methodist Book rn. The papers which it is publishing on ubject, purport to have been written as ck as 1830, by some one intimately acted with the establishment. The views are taken by this writer, are pretty strong, ey give little which is new to us, and so far, a good deal unsaid on the subf that shaving establishment which has seen the light. We are afraid that if end Norris does not hold his hand a little, ll be considered by the old folks and their gists, as rather "rude."

. A. McCaine has recently visited Balti- He states that the cause of Protestant odism is taking deep root in some parts of uth; that in Charleston, (S. C.) the white ers of the church out-number those of the lowship.

editor of the New York Luminary, Br. . Wallace, states in his last paper, he was on to dedicate a new Methodist Protestant h, on the 3d instant, at Wallabout, L. I.

trial of Dr. Eldridge, on a second indict- is still progressing, in Philadelphia, be- ne Court of General Sessions.

GHTON ACADEMY.—This is situated in the iful village of Brighton, some four miles Cleveland, Ohio. Our brethren purchased of the stock in this Institution, about one since; this, together with what was given has put them in possession of three-fourths establishment. These brethren were in- to make this investment by promises (unrized) that the church would aid the conby sending scholars from a distance to sushe school. A school was commenced last but no scholars were obtained, but those of ighborhood, and there being a similar school half a mile, it failed for want of support. our brethren have made the investment of capital, and as they have procured an act orporation from the Legislature, by the aid ich they can transact their business in a ate capacity, and as they are aware the erity of their society will depend upon the ss of this enterprize, they are extremely re- t to abandon the concern.

, could not the Pittsburgh District; ought e Pittsburgh District, under these circumes, to sustain this school? We are aware it y to one side from the great mass of our ership. But it has some special advantages; situated in a very delightful, healthy coun- The inhabitants are mostly New England e,—intelligent, moral, industrious. Just situation as any intelligent parent would e for his child.

ery branch common to such an Institution e taught. Mr. Fuller, the Principal, is, we e, a member of the church. A letter of efore us, evinces ripe scholarship. Boarding ot exceed $1.25 per week; of the price of n, we regret, that we are not informed.— proposed to commence the school in May if twenty scholars can be raised. Will the hers, on the circuits, immediately commence g inquiry, to know if there are any within respective charges, who might want to go to chool, whose promise to do so could be relied nd let us know by the last of March, so that n give the brethren information?

believe the last Annual Conference passed lution, recommending this Academy to the nage of the church. The brethren do not r your money, but for your scholars.

LIBERALITY OF SENTIMENT.—We have had an occasion to mention that the Charleston (S. C.) Mercury is a paper conducted with as much liberality of sentiment, as any party political paper which comes to our office. It goes strong for the present administration, but at the same time exercises a generosity, which is not common among political partizans. Take the following from the paper of the 23d ultimo, as a sample:

"Proscription.—We have seen with regret several of the changes made by our Legislature. We know not the circumstances, but hope that difference of political opinion was not the cause of the change in the office of State Reporter—also for the removal of our fellow citizen Mr. McNeile from the Bank direction, while another gentleman more conspicuous in the late whig doings here was retained. If there is proof or strong suspicion of an officer under the State abusing his official influence for party purposes—let the dominant party against whom he uses the power they give, take it from him—but where this is not the case—it is impolitic, because it is wrong to proscribe one whose office is not a political one—but merely one of profit and trust. Generosity apart—the party strength gained by the new appointment, seldom counterbalances the 'heating of enemies and cooling of friends' which result from a removal for opinion sake."

We see from several notices that a Theological Seminary has been recently established by the Protestant Methodists about Baltimore, called the Windsor Theological and Literary Institute. Whether this Institution is merely nominal, or whether it is established on a permanent basis, we have not learned; probably the paper containing this information did not reach us. Dr. Waters, of Baltimore, is appointed principal. He is a matured scholar, and as much of a gentleman and christian as the country affords.

Br. H. T. Lawson, of Braxton, Va., in a letter, dated the 21st ultimo, informs us that the previous Saturday, he preached the funeral sermon of a "mother in Israel, whose age, at her decease, was rising 102 years.

The citizens of Clarkesburgh, Va., are about petitioning the Legislature for a road from Wheeling, via Clarkesburgh, Weston, Bulltown, Sutton and Summerville, to intersect the Guyandott turnpike near the Gauly river. A good road is much wanted on that rout. The road has been surveyed, but the means to erect is what is called for.

W. K. Shinn is a candidate, at the approaching election, for Senator, for Harrison county, Virginia.

OHIO LEGISLATURE.

House.—On the 1st instant, twenty-six petitions were presented from sundry citizens of Ohio, for an act for the further protection of religious worship.

Senate.—"Mr. Faran introduced a bill to preserve the purity of elections, which was read the first time. After much discussion, the Senate have decided to act upon unprinted bills from the House. In the House, a bill to amend an an act entitled, "An act to provide for the revaluation of real property in this State," was passed by a vote of 47 to 18. Much discussion has been had on Mr. Bell's bill to provide for the sale of the Canal lands of Ohio."

On the 2d instant, the House was thrown into a state of considerable excitement on the presentation of the petition of Mr. Walker, of Logan, praying for the disfranchisement of slaveholders in office in this State. After a great many spirited efforts to give it the go-by, or turn it out of doors, it was referred to the committee on the Judiciary by a vote of something like 41 to 19.

On the 6th instant, on motion of Mr. Harlan, of the House, it was Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed by the Speaker to inquire what offices, clerkships, and agencies, if any, can be abolished; and what salaries and pay of officers, clerks, superintendents, engineers, and other public servants in the employ of the State, can be reduced or abolished without injury to the public interest; with leave to report by bill or otherwise.

That appears to be coming to the point.

A series of resolutions from the Senate, calling on the Board of Public Works for information in reference to water privileges on the Muskingum river, below Zanesville, was agreed to in the House.

Mr. Perkins, from the Judiciary committee, on leave, reported a bill to amend the act for the prevention of certain immoral practices; which was read the first time.

MCLEOD AFFAIR.—It is known to most of our readers that an armed party of men from the Canada shore, some time since entered the American territory, on the Niagara frontier, and burned the steamboat "Caroline," and murdered one or more of her crew. Application was made, some time since, by our Minister at London to the British government, for compensation to the owners of the "Coroline," but no answer has yet been received. Mean time, McLeod, a British subject, and one of the party, as it is alleged, who destroyed the "Caroline," voluntarily entered into the State of New York, and has been arrested by the civil authorities of that State, on a charge of arson and murder, and in default of giving bail, is now lying in jail at Lockport, to await his trial.

Mr. Fox, the British Minister, resident in Washington city, has recently, in a communication to Mr. Forsythe, demanded the surrender of Mr McLeod, and placed his demand upon the ground, that the party who destroyed the "Caroline" were acting in her Majesty's service, obeying the officers who had the right to command them, and therefore the act according to the usages of nations can only be the subject of discussion between the two Governments, &c.—The President, through Mr. Forsythe, takes a different view of the subject and refuses to surrender Mr. McLeod. This correspondence is published.

This case has produced much excitement on the Canada shores, and is likely to become a very serious matter between the two Governments. Though it cannot be otherwise than that, it will be amicably adjusted.

Harris' Intelligencer of the 2d inst. states, the Mayor of Pittsburgh is authorized to give $400 reward for the recovery of the money recently stolen from Mr. Isaac Goodin, the wagoner, which amounts to 6000, or proportionally for a part;—also 100 dollars for the apprehension of the person or persons concerned in the larceny.

The Olive Branch complains that the M. P. Banner, for two months past, has not reached its office. We have the same to say. What is the matter?

PRICES CURRENT.

ZANESVILLE.—Wheat 44 cents; flour 3 dollars.

PHILADELPHIA, January 5.—Flour is steady at 4,75 for superfine Pennsylvania, and 5,12½ for Brandywine.—Bicknell.

NEW YORK, January 2.—Flour, western canal, 4,94 a 5,00; Ohio via canal, 4,94 a 5,12½; Philadelphia 5,25; Baltimore, Howard street, 5,25. Wheat 1,00 a 1,07.—Br. Jonathan.

BALTIMORE, January 2.—The market for Flour continues dull; and although there have been sales of about 2000 bbls. of Howard street, both buyers and sellers negociate reluctantly, the former unwilling to pay over 4,50, and the latter demanding 4,56¼ a 4,62½; a compromise, however, was the consequence, and about 700 bbls. were sold in lots at 4,53, and other parcels at 4,56¼ per bbl. for good common brands. A lot of 300 bbls. sold on Wednesday at 4,50 per bbl. Some choice brands have been sold at 4,62½ a 4,75. The car and wagon price remains at 4,50. We continue to quote City Mills 4,75, on short time without interest; but 900 bbls. in lots, sold a few days since, at 4,62½, full. The market is bare of Susquehanna. The stock of Howard street does not exceed 15,000 bbls.; and of City Mills from 5 to 6000—total stocks in first hands, 20,000 bbls.—Lyford.

PITTSBURGH, Januaxy 2.—We close the business of the year and our paper both on Thursday evening, the following being a holyday. Business is extremely dull, and few or no sales to report.

Flour—Small sales from wagons at 3,00; for choice brands 3,12½ per bbl.

Grain—Wheat 55; Rye 35; Corn 35 a 37½; Barley 37½; Oats 20 cts. per bushel.

Sugar—New Orleans, by the hhd. 7½ a 8 cts.; by the bbl. 8 a 9 cents per lb.—Harris.

ITEMS.

THINGS IN PHILADELPHIA.

☞We have had something of a novelty here. Gen. Gaines and his lady have been lecturing before very large audiences, under the auspices of the William Wirt Institute. The husband speaks on "National Defences," and the wife follows immediately on "The Horrors of War."

There appears to be the greatest difficulty to get a jury to serve on the proposed assessment of damages in the Pennsylvania Hall case. There is such a diversity of opinion as to the right of damages, among the public, that it is no doubt an undesirable office.

The Rev. Thomas H. Stockton took possession of his new church, and held meeting, at least in the session room, on Christmas Eve.

A young man named Sleeper, of 121 N. 2d st. was knocked down and robbed in the street a few evenings since of twenty-five dollars.

An unknown young man, calling himself John Jefferson, on the 24th ultimo, presented at the counter of the Girard Bank, a forged check in the name of John W. Downing, merchant, No. 21, Chesnut street, for the sum of $115,25.—The forgery was immediately detected, and Mr. Jefferson taken before the Mayor, who committed him.

It is stated that the expenses of the Schuylkill Incline Plane, during the past year, under the superintendence of Mr. Charles Nauman, have been 1000 dollars less than for any previous year. What the travelling has been, we are not told.

Marian Wilson, the woman convicted of murdering the old lady, Tamar S. Filbert, was sentenced on Saturday last to ten years' imprisonment in Cherry Hill. She continues to protest her innocence.

A girl by the name of Tamar Anderson was burned to death last week, by her clothes accidentally taking fire.

A young man named McNeely, a resident of Kensington, while returning home on Saturday night, was waylaid and his murder attempted.—He miraculously escaped with little injury.

Edward Peak, the husband of the ill-fated and unfortunate Sarah Ann Wood, died last week at the Blockley Alms House, of which he had been sometime a resident.

The case of Thomas H. Shuster, charged with the murder of his own wife, has been laid over to the next session of the Court of Oyer and Terminer.

On the 22d ultimo, a man by the name of Madley, aged 67 years, a tailor, at the corner of Spafford street and Prospure's alley, died from inhaling gas from burning charcoal used in his room for cooking his breakfast.

Jane Callahan, tried for infanticide, has been found guilty, not of the felony of murder, but of the misdemeanor of concealing its death.—She was remanded to prison to await her sentence.

In this city and New York, the last foreign news, so far as it produced eny effect, was decidedly favorable on the money market; but this is the season when no extensive business operations are expected. The banks here are still arranging to resume.—Philadelphia paper.

ENGLAND AND TEXAS.—It is stated that a treaty between these powers has been agreed to. The treaty recognizes the independence of Texas, and provides for the mediation of England for an immediate pacification of the former and Mexico.

SPEEDY FORTUNE.—Mr. Perkins, of Boston, is said to have realized 1,000,000 dollars on his teas, over and above what he would have realized previous to the China difficulties.

Joseph Gurney, the celebrated Quaker, during his late visit to this country, made donations to charitable associations to an amount exceeding 80,000 dollars!

The manufacture of ardent spirits in Ireland is three millions of gallons less this year than it was the last.

Gen. Milroy has made a treaty with the Indians, to purchase 500,000 acres of the Miami lands, at one dollar and ten cents per acre, which are said to be worth ten dollars.

A. W. Crane, of Newark, N. J., has taken out a patent for an improved clock. It runs 378 days with one winding, and is said to be a most ingenius piece of mechanism.

The steamboat Cherokee exploded just as she was about to leave the landing of Louisburg, in Arkansas, by which 15 persons were instantly killed. The boat was literally torn to pieces.

As a proof of the richness of the soil in Ohio and the ease with which its inhabitants can gain a livihood, the rapid growth of her population may be named. In 1802 the population was 60,000; now she counts a million and a half.—Phil. paper.

Mr. McLaughlin has passed through Woodstock, N. B., and was believed to be the bearer of despatches to the Governor General of Canada, in relation to recent events on the disputed territory.

The Chartists of England are not to be so easily quelled, probably, as some seem to suppose. It is now said that they have declared for repeal if the Union between England and Scotlan.

A man named Willian Stephens became accidentally entangled with a diangonal driving shaft, in the paper mill of J. Elliott & Co., by which his neck was broken instantly ending his life.

The Chronicle is out in favor of early rising, laconically advising sluggards "to give a spring out of bed at once. Peleg says 'tis nothing, and that you will soon get used to it."

It is now stated that the pistol shot which caused the death of Professor Davis, was accidental.

British barque Westminister, with 4600 chests of tea, has been lost on the rocks near Margate. Crew saved.

150,000 hogs were packed at Cincinnatti up to the 10th ult.

The London papers now consider the Eastern question as settled in favor of peace.

The coroner of Liverpool reports three deaths in the streets from actual starvation!

The taxable property of Arkansas is $23,283,690 02.

The penitentiary of Ohio netted an income of $25,000 above all expenses last year.

The population of South Carolina is 531,339.

Indiana contains 683,314 souls.

The District of Columbia has a population of 43,712.

The Oldest person in New Hampshire is a lady of 110 years, resident in Brookfield.

If the Queen of England should die, the infant princess would succeed to the throne.

WELL PAID.—The members of the Georgia Legislature have voted themselves five dollars per day.

LOVE.—Earthly happiness springs mainly from love—to brothers and sisters, parents and friends. Then let us treat all as brothers, and make all mankind friends to each other and to God, and we remove the causes of human wo.

A ROBBERY.—The Pittsburg Mercury says—"A wagoner just arrived in this city, had in his possession about $6000, belonging to various merchants here.—Soon after, he went to his supper, and left his bed in which his money was, in his wagon. Presently he bethought himself of his neglect, when he went to look for the bed, and found that his money was missing. Nothing has yet been heard of it."

KENTUCKY SENATOR.—Hon. J. J. Crittenden was re-elected to the Senate of the U. S. from Kentucky, last week, for six years from the 3d day of March next. The vote stood for Mr. Crittenden 100; for Mr. Gutherie 29.

ATTEMPT AT SUICIDE.—A person attempted to commit suicide at the Merchants Hotel, in Boston, on Friday last by cutting his throat with a razor, but it is thought the wound will not prove mortal.

FIRE AND LOSS OF LIFE.—The extensive property of Wm. Phillips, Esq. at Point Levi, Quebec, was destroyed by fire on the night of the 22d ult., and one woman, a Canadian girl, perished in the flames.

DEATH OF HON. FELIX GRUNDY.—We regret to learn that this Seantor of the United States died at Nashville, on the evening of the 19th inst, after a short illness.

The Madisonian states that Senator Grundy was born in Berkeley county, Virginia, on the 11th of September, 1777.—His age was therefore a little upwards of 63 years. His father, an Englishman by birth, removed to Kentukcy about the 1780, at a period when, to use his own language, "death was in almost every bush, and every thicket concealed an ambuscade;" three of his brothers having been soon after murdered, and his mother robbed, by the Indians.

OHIO PENITENTIARY.—In a letter published in the Springfield Republic, Mr. Gallagher, Clerk of the House, gives the following abstract of the Report of the Directors and Warden of the Ohio Penitentiary.—Zanesville Gazette.

The number of convicts in the Penitentiary, November 30, 1839, was	489
The number of convicts in the Penitentiary, November 30, 1840, was	488
Convicted during the past year,	137
Discharged by experiation of sentence,	78
" " Executive pardon,	47
" " President United States,	2
Escaped—while at work at brick-yard,	6
Died 4—writ of error 1,	5
White males,	434
" females,	3
Colored males,	47
" females,	4

During the past year Hamilton county sent 24; Cuyahoga 16; Clark 4. When compared with 1839, the convictions for past year have decreased 35—a favorable sign. Of the prisoners confined 30 are for horse stealing, 25 grand larceny, 14 burglary, 13 passing counterfeit money, remainder miscellaneous. 26 are natives of Ohio, 25 of Pennsylvania, 24 of New York, 12 of Virginia, remainder miscellaneous.

There are 5 insane persons in the institution.

200 hands will soon be employed on hardware manufacturing, which will not at all conflict with the mechanical industry of the State.

The Religious Teacher was dismissed at the commencement of the present year. It may well be questioned whether society has the right to shut up five hundred fellow beings, and deny them the advantages of moral and religious instruction. The humanity and christianity of such a course are still less obvious. This is a subject that demands the prompt attention of the State Legislature.

The earnings exceed the expenses the past year $26,235.

TRIAL OF MRS. KINNEY—Her Acquittal.—The trial of Hannah Kinney, charged with poisoning her husband, George T. Kinney, came on before the Supreme Judicial Court in Boston, on Monday. She was placed at the bar dressed entirely in black. Her appearance was very proper, and she appeared firm until the reading of the indictment, when she covered her face with her veil and wept. She was quite pale, and exhibited the marks of her recent imprisonment. Her forehead is very high—her eyes large and hard, and the general expressions of her countenance, highly interesting.

The prisoner was married 26th Nov. 1838, by Rev. Mr. Blagden, and was five years older than her husband. He was her third husband. Mr. Kinney, during his sickness, was exceedingly thirsty, and was advised by an attendant friend to take some herb tea. This tea was prepared by the prisoner, who was requested not to sweeten it. His friend, Mr. Goodwin, who administered the tea, tasted of it before he administered it to the sick man—and the small portion taken by Mr. Goodwin, caused him to fall sick.

There was a post mortem examination and the contents of the stomach were analyzed by Dr. Martin Gay, and proved to contain arsenic, some of which was resolved into a metallic state. The post mor tem examination was made by Drs. J. B. S. Jackson, Storer and Bigelow.

It was testified that, when Mrs. Kinney was told that the analyzation had proved that her husband had taken arsenic, she exclaimed "Indeed!" and wondered at it.

Doctors Storer and Bigelow, previous to the analyzation, pronounced the death of Mr. K. to have been of Asiatic cholera. A few days afterwards, Mrs, K. called on Dr. Storer and requested him to give her a certificate that her husband died ot cholera, assigning as a reason, the reports in circulation of her having poisened him.—She spoke very incoherently, and hinted that her husband had taken the poison himself. The Doctor refused the certificate then, and also when requested by Miss Collins on the Thursday afterwards by Mrs. K's desire.

The testimony of William F. Goodwin was, "that Mrs. Kinney called on him to attend her husband on the Saturday night when he died; and that in giving some herb tea to the deceased, which Mrs. K. had prepared, he observed a whitish sediment at the bottom of the bowl, which rolled over as the bowl was turned, and seemed to adhere to it. He tasted the tea himself and was exceedingly sick and thirsty the next day."

The servant, Hanney Varney, produced in Court a small piece of paper marked "poison," which she found a few days after Mr. Kinney's death in the sink in the kitchen.

The defence set up was that Mr. Kinney had committed suicide. In support of this, it was proved that he was dissipated, eccentric, and liable to great depressions of feeling; that he was a gambler, and had made himself completely insolvent by his habits; and that he had expressed a determination to destroy himself rather than expose his ruin to his friends. A large number of witnesses were examined, who abundantly sustained this position of the defence by testifying to frequently declarations of the deceased that he was "weary of life." Franklin Dexter,, Esq, senior counsel for Mrs. Kinney, made a powerful speech in her behalf.

When Mr. Dexter had concluded his argument, Mr. Austin, the Attorney General, addressed the jury for four hours.—Chief Justice Shaw then charged the jury, which was evidently favorable to the prisoner. The case then went to the jury, on Friday night just after 10 o'clock, and in three minutes afterwards they returned into Court with a verdict of Not Guilty.

A smile at first spread over the countenance of Mrs. Kinney, but the expression immediately changed, and she burst into tears.

The Court then ordered here to be discharged, and the Clerk said, "Hannah Kinney! the Court find you Not Guilty of the murder of George T. Kinney, and order that you be discharged and go without delay!"

Her friends crowded arouud her to offer their congratulations, and she was immediately conducted from the Court room to a carriage. Sheriff Eveleth kindly provided a force of officers to protect her from the rush of spectators.

ILINOIS SENATOR.—Samuel McRoberts (Van Buren) was on the 16th inst, elected, by the Legislature of Illinois, to be a Senator of the United States from that State for six years from the 3d of March next, when the term of Mr. Senator Robinson will expire. The State of the vote was as follows: For Mr. McRoberts 77; for Cyrus Edwards (Whig) 50 votes.

HYMENEAL.

MARRIED—On the 31st ult., by the Rev. Wm. Munhall, Mr. JESSE CULP to Miss EVELINE NESMITH, both of Fairfield county, Ohio.

On the 24th ult., by George Taylor, Esq., Mr. JAMES E. COOK to Miss SUSANNAH HOWELL, both of this county.

On the 24th ult., by the Rev. James Gurley, Mr. GEORGE BUTLER to Miss — CUMRINE, both of this county.

In Winchester, Fairfield county, on Tuesday, 29th ult., by the Rev. G. I. Miles, Mr. JEFFERSON CHAMBERS, of Zanesville, to Miss ADELINE LANGWORTHY, daughter of Dr. J. Langworthy, late of Zanesville.

In Dresden, on Sunday morning, the 3d inst., by Benjamin Adams, Esq., Mr. HEMAN C. ABBEE to Miss MARY LAWSON.

In Madison township, on Thursday evening, 31st ult., by the same, Mr. HENRY WOLFORD to Miss ALMIRA BOYD, both of this county.

OBITUARY.

DIED—At Cannonsburgh, Pa., December 15, 1840, the Rev. JOHN H. KENNEDY, Professor of Natural and Experimental Philosophy in Jefferson College.

Business Department.

RECEIVED PAY FOR RECORDER.

From C. C. Chapman for John Sailor,	$2 00
" " for Geo. J. Barber,	2 00
" Israel Thrap for J. Summerville,	2 00
" J. Burns for W. Davis,	2 00
" " for W. Miller,	2 00
" O. White for Samuel Wilson,	3 00
" " for A. Herron,	2 00
" N. Cash,	1 00
" M. Jared, for himself,	2 00
" " for J. J. Jared,	2 00
" W. L. Baldwin for G. Henderson,	2 00
" W. W. Paul, (on account,)	3 00
" D. Sarchit for M. Sarchit,	2 00
" " for P. B. Sarchit,	2 00
" " for Western Farmer,	1 00
" W. L. Baldwin for E. Duling,	2 00
" " for S. B. Barton,	1 00
" A. K. Earl for W. Wheeler,	2 00
" J. Robinson for G. P. Rogers.	2 00
" " for E. Huston,	2 00
" H. T. Lawson for W. Morrison,	2 00
" S. Fairbank,	2 00
" M. Winans for 2d vol.	2 00
" J. Simpson for H. Collings,	2 00

LETTERS RECEIVED.

J. Whitney, C. Seevers, J. K. Moorehead, M. Winans, J. G. Pigman, 1 sub.; L. Garrett, W. G. Williams, Jno. Burns, I. Thrap, C. C. Chapman, 2 subs.; M. N. Warren, H. Rudisill for L. Hicklin, 6 subs.; S. Bell, N. Cash, 'Decatur,' S. M. Jared, 1 sub.; L. Marshall, J. P. Brookins, W. L. Baldwin, 1 sub.; W. R. Hall, A. H. Bassett, J. K. Moorehead, J. Williams, W. M. McCullough, W. W. Paul, D. Sarchit, J. L. Diselm, J. Dalbey, Jr., W. L. Baldwin, H. T. Clawson, 1 sub.; A. Shinn, J. Robinson, R. Rose, J Tross, M Winans, 2: J Simpson, S S Meckle.

We have received several notes recently upon the "Mechanics' and Farmers' Bank of Cincinnati" and other shinplaster establishments about there, which do not pass with us. Will our friends send us good money?

Br. Foster has his next quarterly meeting at Pleasant Valley meeting house, the 20th and 21st of February. Brs. Fairchild and Kinney are invited. We are also invited, but it is doubtful if we can attend; were it later in the season we would try.

Could not our agents make inquiry at the various post offices, as it regards any who might not take their papers out, as post masters, in many instances, are so very negligent in giving information of delinquences. This practice, if adopted, would save us much expence.

We ask our agents to collect and forward money, soon as possible, as we have a considerable amount to make up shortly.

CHARLESTOWN, IA., DEC. 28, 1840.

To the President of the Indiana Conference:

Mr. President, not knowing where to reach you by letter, I hereby inform you that I have closed my labors on this circuit by mutual consent—the quarterly conference furnishing me with the following certificate:

"This is to certify that, at the first quarterly conference of Charlestown circuit, held at the Guernsey meeting house, on the 26th of December, 1840, Br. Wm. W. Paul was exonerated from further official duty on this circuit the present year.

"Signed by order and in behalf of the quarterly conference. GEO. WHEATLEY, Ch'n.

"THOS. P. ARMSTRONG, Secretary."

At the same time of my release, the qr. con. engaged with Br. Wheatly to serve them for the ballance of the year. To both of these acts your official sanction is respectfully solicited.

Yours, &c., W. W. PAUL.

Br. McCullough, you say send W. Gifford's paper to "Cherry Tree" instead of "Diamond," but you do not tell the county, and of course, we will not alter till we get right directions.

Br. Stockton is informed that the post office address of Wm. M. McCullough, a travelling preacher is, "Chess, Clearfield, Pa."

We inform Br. Earl, that we have forwarded the paper to Weston Wheeler "Penn Line, Crawford, Ohio," from the 70th No.

Br. "Reuben Rose" requests Br. Stockton to send his paper to him, "Greenfield, Highland, Ohio,"—says he will forward the money to us in the spring.

Br. Marshall, the post master at Cambridge, Ohio, gives the names of Peter Corbit and Wm. Raney, who he says, do not take their papers from the office, and one of them he knows nothing about. Will you be so good as to call and see to this matter for us.

[By Request.]

ERUPTIVE FEVERS—Scarlet Fever—Measles.—On page 101 of this number, we have inserted an article from the Western Recorder, published at Zanesville, in which an M. D. (who is ashamed to fix his name to his principles) labors hard to prove that the steam practice in scarlet fever, which he dares not openly assail, is the cause of "great mortality in Muskingum County." He insinuates that the people confine their children in hot, close rooms, and in beds burthened with clothing, and pour down them hot, stimulating drinks till they produce a powerful eruption,and greatly increase the amount and danger of the disease. Now, every one who knows any thing of the steam practice, knows that it is as much opposed to keeping a patient uncomfortably warm and in a state of suffocation in bad air, as it is to covering him with ice, and sending him out in a snow storm or a hurricane. Our patients are kept comfortable in temperature, and well supplied with fresh air.

He says, that the eruption should be prevented. If he will look at Eberle's Practice, as good "authority" as any other, he will find a host of evil consequences attending the "repercussion of cutaneous eruptions," as consumption, bronchitis, hepatitis, enteritis,etc. And if he will look at the mineral practice in any hands, he will find that, when they cannot bring the disorder out, their patients generally die. He does not seem to think that there is any specific cause for these forms of disease! and that their violence and mortality are altogether owing to the heating and stimulating practice of "ignorant parents," or "knowing nurses."—He gives a sort of half-way regular and half-way let alone treatment—he does not dare say any thing about calomel, the lancet, opium, &c.,(because,perhaps,those to whom he is speaking have not, as Rennel Coates says, "obtained the moral right to employ the most potent but most dangerous weapons, by the acquisition of extensive learning, aided by long-continued observation and experience.")—R. Coates's Pop. Med., Preface, page 6.

He therefore very benevolently advises them to send for a "true physician" immediately, and not to regard the petty sum he may charge them for the use of their "most potent and dangerous weapons." Very kind—thank ye, Doctor.

Now for the treatment of "the true physician." Whenever there appear symptoms of scarlet fever, measles or any other kind of eruptive fever, give an emetic of lobelia and several enemas containing it, with bayberry and other canker tea and slippery elm. Then put the patient into the vapor bath, and keep him there till the perspiration is free, giving him a plenty of catnep, sage, balm or pennyroyal tea, and, if hot, washing the whole surface with pleasantly warm water, till the perspiration has been free for some time. Now rub dry, (do not dash with cold water, that will check the eruption, as Dr. A. W. K. says; and you know, if you do not wish to kill your patient as he does, you must do the reverse of what he recommends.) Then put your patient in bed or let him put on his clothes and sit up in a room that is kept comfortably warm but well ventilated. Let him have enough of the teas to keep the surface pleasantly moist, and a moderate quantity of light, nourishing and unirritating diet,such as panada,rice, gruel,and drinks, &c. There must be fresh air in the room, but he must not sit in the draught. If the patient be an infant, you may sometimes put it into a warm bath instead of a steam bath, not because it is better, but more convenient. If the fever continues very high, notwithstanding the use of sudorific teas, repeat the emetics and enemas, till it yields. But little stimulus is generally required; unless in cases where an M. D. has been exercising his "moral right of employing the most dangerous weapons" to "check the eruption" by "diminishing the vitality of the system." It then sometimes requires a pretty severe dose of cayenne to raise that action again. We have treated in the above described manner a great many cases of scarlet fever and measles; and we have yet to lose the first case which we treated from the commencement throughout, and but two or three have died that we ever had any thing to do with.

Let the mothers of Muskingum apply the above practice, and they will have no need to call that a-w-k*ward* M. D. to use his "most dangerous weapons" nor to carry off their "trifling sums," and, what is more, they will have no use for the cabinet maker or the sexton, nor scarcely or very seldom, for even a "knowing nurse," alias steam doctor.

Will friend Springer copy this article for the benefit of his readers? Give them both sides, brother Editor. We'll take the responsibility.—Botanico-Medical Recorder.

A SUICIDE.—A letter in the Bangor Whig, dated Woodstock, N. B. Dec. 12, says:—"A man calling himself John Jones, and one of a firm of money brokers in New York, has lately committed suicide near the mouth of the Restook. There where no papers tending to a discovery of friends or connexions found upon him or his baggage. It is supposed he had destroyed them."

The Acadia brought over 20,000 letters to Boston, beside packages, newspapers, &c. It was found impossible to send off more than half by the steamboat mail on Monday. The rest followed in the land mail.

AWFUL EXPLOSION—AN ENTIRE BUILDING DEMOLISHED.—On Monday morning between 6 and 7 o'clock, a most terrific explosion took place by the bursting of the steam boiler in the paper manufactory of Mr. Gabriel Moore, situated in the upper part of the district of Kensington, between Edward and Lydia streets on School and William streets, which demolished and laid in one mass of ruins the entire building, which was partly brick and frame, two or three stories high. The accident is attributed to the filling up of the feeding pipe with a hard deposite which prevented the water from flowing into the boiler. At the time of the explosion, the engineer, Enoch Garside, and John Grant, machine engineer, were in the building preparing for the day's work by attempting to get up the steam, both of whom were dreadfully scalded and otherwise injured by the falling of the building upon and around them. Mr. Grant had one or both of his legs broken,—his situation is considered dangerous. Mr. Moore himself was hurt by a large piece of the building falling upon his head while standing in the yard—supposed to have fractured his skull. The boiler, which was situated in the basement of the building, was forced upward, and changing its direction, was forced through the back wall of an adjoining two story brick house, a distance of about 40 or 50 feet from its position in the factory. The boiler forced its way some ten feet into the bed room of this house, knocking away a staircase, and scattering large fragments of boards and brick upon a bed, from which three children, had just arisen, who very fortunately escaped serious injury and perhaps death. Fortunately at the time there were but two of the hands in the building, the number usually employed is somewhere about twenty. One of the workmen was within a few yards of the building at the moment it fell in ruins before him. The concussion was tremendous, shattering all the houses in the immediate vicinity, and felt for a great distance around the neighborhood. Mr. Moore was an industrious man and will feel the loss severely, which cannot be less than ten thousand dollars. He is confined to his bed from the injuries received. The other two men were soon dug from among the ruins, and may possibly recover, although the nature and extent of their injuries make it extremely doubtful.—Bicknell, 29th ult.

MCLEOD.—The Upper Canada papers appears to take great interest in the case of this individual who is imprisoned in Lockport, on a charge of murder, connected with the destruction of the steamer Caroline. His trial will take place next month. "Out of this arrest and trial," says the Albany Advertiser, "there is likely to grow one of the most serious questions that has yet sprung up between this country and Great Britain. It is well known that the midnight attack made by a party of British troops upon the defenceless steamer Caroline, lying along side the wharf at Schlosser, in American waters, was and is regarded by all parties in this country as an outrage without justification. The British Government, on the other hand, so far from taking this view of the matter actually conferred the honor of knighthood on Col. McNab, who commanded the militia, lavished a deal of praise upon Captain Drew and his band for their success in their piratical expedition; and thus far persist in refusing the reparation demanded by our Government for this very grievous wrong. In 1838 the Grand Jury of Niagara county found true bills for murder and arson against the persons who composed the expedition in question. McLeod is, we believe, the first person arrested under this indictment. His imprisonment and approaching trial have excited a good deal of feeling in Canada, and Sir George Arthur has, as we learn from the British Colonist, "taken the proper steps for redress." If, as McLeod states, he was several miles distant from Schlosser at the time of the destruction of the Caroline and can establish this alibi, he will have nothing to apprehend. But, on the contrary, if the fact of his presence and participation at the burning of the Caroline, and murder of some individuals of her crew should be established, it is difficult to imagine what 'redress' Sir George Arthur expects, though not difficult to predict what he is likely to obtain."

Marcus Cicero Stanly, said to be a brother of the member of Congress from North Carolina, has been accused of committing several robberies in London, and was tried on a charge made by Mr. Catlin, of stealing from him, and was found guilty and sentenced to six months hard labor in the House of Correction, six weeks of the time in solitary confinement. He was shortly to have been married to a rich heiress. At the solicitation of Mr Stevenson, the American Minister, he was ably defended by the celebrated Charles Phillips.

SPURIOUS MONEY.—The Cincinnati Republican of a late date says: "A man by the name of John Adams, was committed by the Mayor, on Saturday, for attempting to pass a counterfeit $100 note, on the Merchant's and Planters' Bank of Illinois. It seems this Adams went into the Eagle Hotel, on Friday evening, called for a glass of liquor, and threw down the bill in question, for the landlord to change.—Mr. Rombach, the landlord, having some doubts about the bill, had the man bro't up before the Mayor. On examination, there were three bills of the same denomination found upon him. The notes are all letters "D," and numbered 365, 686 and 104, made payable to S. C. Morris, and dated Chicago, Dec. 31, 1838, M. N. Hamilton, Cashier, J. B. Robinson, President. We should be more particular in describing them, but as there is no such bank in the State, it is unnecessary."

THE CROUP.—A correspondent of the Rochester Democrat describes a new remedy for the croup. He states that a little daughter had a most alarming attack of the disease, and that her case appeared so critically that he believed it dangerous to leave her even to go in search of a physician. He adds—

We had no medicine in the house which we had ever known to have been administered in like cases. We could think of nothing at hand which would be likely to operate as a vomit—not even a bottle of mustard. Our fire was nearly out, and heating water was no quick process. In this dilemma we remembered that we had read in the Graham Journal, the case of a child who had been relieved from similar distress and danger by the application of cold water. But though I had at the time been strongly impressed with the soundness of the philosophy which indicated the treatment, yet when the life of my own dear child depended upon the result of an application which universal prejudice had considered most fatal, I shrunk from the experiment. But we were shut up to the one thing, and had no time to lose. I accordingly broke the ice in a pail of water, and my wife with a sponge applied it suddenly and freely to her neck and chest. Instantly she was so far relieved as to take a single swallow, and in a moment she got breath enough to take another and then another, and in less than a minute she drank nearly or quite half a tumbler full of cold water.

In the mean time, her mother had wiped her dry and wrapped her up warm, and in less than three minutes from the first application of the water, she breathed with perfect freeness. She slept sweetly through the remainder of the night. The next day she was very pale and had considerable cold; but in a day or two was quite well again. Some months after she had another but much less severe attack of the same disease, which we treated successfully in the same manner.

This is all very well in similar cases, and when it is difficult or impossible to obtain the services of a medical practitioner; but the best course in all cases where a physician may be obtained, is to send for one with as little delay as possible.—Bicknell.

NEWS FROM THE "PATRIOT" CONVICTS. Benjamin Mott, one of the persons sent out to New Holland by the British authorities for being concerned in the late "patriot" movements in Canada, has written a letter to his friends in Vermont, in which he states that he is at a place called Longbottom, about eight miles from Sydney, at work, cutting timber and sawing blocks for paving roads for government, under charge of a government officer; that he is used well and not compelled to work hard; that he is locked up at night in a room with a dozen more convicts, and called again at break of day to resume his labor; that they have every Saturday afternoon to themselves to do their washing and prepare for the Sabbath, and that he goes about a mile with the keeper and inhabitants to church. He writes that the inhabitants are well pleased with their good conduct; that he expects within a few months to get the liberty of the Island, and indulges the hope that he will again get his liberty, as they are not sentenced for any particular term of time. He was five months on his voyage.

PERILS OF THE SEA.—A record has been kept by the Seaman's Friend Society, of disasters at sea, reported during the year 1840. Those only have been noted which have resulted in the total loss of the vessel. The whole number is 521. Of these, 67 were ships and barges, 130 brigs, 233 schooners, 14 sloops, 6 steamboats, and of the rest the class is unknown. 212 of these vessels were lost during the close of the year 1839, but were reported in 1840. Most of the vessels lost were American, and were lost on the coast of the United States.

Thirty more vessels, in addition to the above, have been reported as missing.—Six hundred and eighty-four lives are ascertained to have been lost, without including the crews of the missing vessels, or the crews of foundered or wrecked ships, whose death is not positively known.

THE NORTH-EASTERN BOUNDARY.—We learn that Major Graham and his party have just passed through this city on their return from running the meredian line North of the Monument, at the head of the St. Croix river. We understand, the line has been run as far North as the Aroostook river, at which place, the new line is about half a mile east of the old line. The line has been run with great care and accuracy, and solely by astronomical observations. One portion of the party has been engaged in taking a line from the tide water at Calais, to the Monument, and thence following Major Graham. This party has not yet reached the Aroostook. The line as now run does not touch any part of Mars Hill, but passes considerably to the east of it. The survey, we understand, will be resumed in March and carried through in the season to the St. Lawrence river.

Bangor Whig.

Major Graham and party arrived in this city on Wednesday evening.

Boston Atlas.

THE LONDON PRESS AND THE UNITED STATES BANK STATEMENT.—The following comments on the statement of the Bank of the United States, published by Mr. Jaudon, in London, are the only ones we find in our files. They are from a morning and evening paper:

Mr. Jaudon,who is returned from America in the President steamer, has published an account of the assets and liabilities of the United States Bank of Philadelphia, made up to the 1st of October last, showing a surplus of three millions of dollars. But we are sorry to perceive that this document is fallacious, and calculated to mislead rather than to enlighten the shareholders and the public on the real condition of the Bank. In the account published, the bills discounted and the stock accounts are all estimated as assets for their full amount, without any allowance for depreciation in price of stocks, or for bad or doubtful debts on the bills discounted. The last item must be very considerable, if we take it in the same ratio with the claims of the late Anglo-American firms upon debtors in America; we should say 30 per cent. on the total sum of $24,000,000 was a moderate allowance for contingencies on these bills, many of which are known to be renewals. The deception on canal and railway shares and other securities constituting the stock account, for thirty millions of dollars, must also be large. We regret to see this document presented to the public in so imperfect a form, after the length of time employed in preparing it, and after we were promised a fair and honest statement of the actual condition of that institution. It will convey an impression to many persons that the real situation of the bank is too bad to publish to the world.—London Globe, Nov. 30.

A "balance sheet' of the affairs of the "United States" Bank has been published, but it is so little better than those of the same kind which have preceded it, as not to be worth printing. Of what are termed "assets" the greater part are of very doubtful value, and to include under that head the value of the unexpired term of the charter is an absurdity. A very different account must be prepared before the deputation from Philadelphia can hope to succeed in negotiating the loan which is said to have brought them to England.—London Times, Dec. 1.

These "balance sheets" are great humbugs. They are all Greek to the great multitude.—Bicknell.

GEN. GAINES—OUR NATIONAL DEFENCE.—A crowded audience assembled on Saturday evening to hear General Gaines' view in reference to a system of defences for our whole frontier, by means of rail roads and floating steam batteries, which, to use the words of the enlightened projector, "would render our beloved country invulnerable in war, and enrich it in times of peace," The subject was invested with the deepest interest by its able expounder, and freed entirely from that heaviness which one might at first think inseparable from its discussion. The General was frequently applauded during his speech, which lasted about an hour, when Mrs. Gaines was requested to continue the subject. The fair lecturer followed in an able address upon the Horrors of War, and never was more applause bestowed upon a lady's efforts to contribute to the successful advancement of her husband's views, than following the closing of Mrs. Gaines' remarks,

We hope that the veteran will be induced by some of the scientific bodies of our city to repeat his lecture.—ib.

Dissolution.

THE partnership heretofore existing between the subscribers in the PUTNAM FOUNDRY, under the firm of HARTLEY & ANDERSON, was this day dissolved by mutual consent.

The Putnam Foundry will hereafter be conducted by J. J. Anderson & Co.

LEVI HARTLEY,
JACOB J. ANDERSON.

Putnam, Jan. 1, 1840. (Jan. 29: 23.)

New and Cheap Goods.

POTTS & GRAHAM, are now enabled by a fresh arrival of FALL and WINTER GOODS, to offer to the public a very general assortment of all articles in their line. Their stock is almost ENTIRELY NEW, and embraces a complete supply of DRY GOODS, GROCERIES, QUEENSWARE, HARDWARE, &c. All of which they will sell upon such terms, and conduct their business throughout upon such principles, as cannot fail to afford permanent satisfaction to all who may favor them with their custom.

☞Most kinds of country produce, including any quantity of new Butter, will be taken in exchange for goods.

Putnam, Ohio, Nov. 4. 63tf

Notice.

BOOKS, Stationery, and Printer's Ink, for sale by A. LIPPITT.

Zanesville, Nov. 4. 63tf.

O. WHITE, BOOK BINDER, No. 104, Main Street, Zanesville, Ohio.

January 15, 1840. 21tf

S. C. Haver,

IN the flourishing town of Putnam has on hand 40 or 50 SADDLES ready for sale, of different qualities, comprising nearly all the varieties in fashion in our Buckeye State.

A good assortment of Bridles and Martingales: Riding and driving Whips: between 180 and 200 Carriage and heavy draft Collars, which will compare and wear with any others made here or elsewhere.

Also, fine York, Dearborn, heavy team and common Farming Harness. A lot of first rate Carriage and Buggy Harness, (brass and silver plated.)

Trunks, vallises, saddle-bags, and double covered wagon whips, varying in quality and price to suit purchasers.

The only recommendation he now offers for his work, is the testimony and long experience of his old customers and friends. He is still anxious to please and accommodate those who may call on him, and hopes to share so much of the public patronage as his attention to his business shall merit.

Putnam, April 29, 1840. 28tf

THE LARGEST AND CHEAPEST

FAMILY NEWSPAPER

☞IN THE WORLD.☜

ONE DOLLAR PER ANNUM!

When subscribed for in Clubs of ten or more.

COMMENCEMENT OF A NEW YEAR.

ALEXANDER'S

WEEKLY MESSENGER

Will be materially improved in its typographical appearance, at the beginning of the next volume, in January, 1841. The publisher has made such arrangements as to justify him in announcing to the public, that this paper shall continue to take precedence of all its competitors, as it has heretofore done, and all the facilities which his extensive printing establishment can afford, with the aid of his numerous literary correspondents, at home and abroad, shall be united to make the WEEKLY MESSENGER still more satisfactory to its THIRTY-FIVE THOUSAND PATRONS, distributed as it is, thro' every section of the Union. Every exertion will be used to keep equal pace with the advancement which is constantly making in the character of the newspaper press, and the publisher pledges himself that his journal shall, in all departments, afford to its readers a full and comprehensive view of the important events which are continually transpiring in our own Country and the European World! The actual fact is, that the Weekly Messenger is just such a newspaper as persons living out of large cities, require, and will be pleased to receive—and the publisher, after an association of twenty years with the newspaper press, pledges himself that his journal shall not be excelled, either as respects its moral and literary reputation, or the early dissemination of news and other important and useful information. "Go a-head," is his principle, and he has never failed to carry it out to the fullest extent.

The WEEKLY MESSENGER is published every Wednesday, on a beautiful white sheet, of the largest class. Single copies are forwarded to subscribers, every week during the year, for Two Dollars, in advance—or ten persons clubbing together, can have it for the same period, by forwarding the publisher a Ten Dollar Note, free of postage, which is less than any paper of the same size can be furnished by any other office in the United States.

A variety of beautiful engravings will be given in regular succession, which will be accompanied by appropriate sketches of such a description as to render them particularly deserving the attention of the public.

Over Thirty Thousand.

With the immense circulation that has been received for the Weekly Messenger, during the 4 years past, since its commencement, we are bold to say, that no paper has ever been distributed to the same number of patrons with fewer causes of complaint—in fact, we have the most careful and trustworthy Clerks now in our employ, and no inducements are withheld to make them attentive and systematic in the discharge of their various duties; therefore, persons subscribing for the Paper at a distance, may rely on receiving it regularly and punctually by the due course of the mail.

All the contemporary Weekly Press in the Atlantic cities head their subscription papers with the imposing caption of "Largest and Cheapest!" Now, we propose that no person who cannot satisfy himself after one year's trial that the Weekly Messenger is emphatically what we have said it is, and therefore is best entitled to patronage, that we will confer on every one making such discovery, a Free Subscription for the space of another year.

At the expiration of the term subscribed and paid for, by Clubs the paper is invariably discontinued, unless the Subscriptions are renewed. All letters must be post paid, or they will not be taken out of the Post Office. Address

CHARLES ALEXANDER,
Athenian Buildings, Franklin Place, Phil.

PREMIUMS

FOR FIFTEEN SUBSCRIBERS.

Any Agent or Postmaster who shall forward to our address Fifteen Dollars, will be entitled to Fifteen Copies of the Messenger for one Year, and either of the following works:

Alexander's Travels, in two volumes.
The Art of Dining, a popular book.
Andrew, the Savoyard, a novel in two volumes.
Charcoal Sketches, by Neal.
Genius and Wisdom of Shakspeare.
Henrietta Temple, a novel in two volumes.
Health and Beauty, a volume much asked for.
Indecision, a favorite novel.
Miss Leslie's Cookery, for married folks.
The Picture of Philadelphia.
Whispers to a Newly Married Pair.
The Prayer Book, 18mo. Neatly bound.
Every Body's Album, with engravings.

FOR THIRTY SUBSCRIBERS.

Any agent or post master who shall forward thirty dollars to our address, will be supplied with thirty copies of the Messenger for one year—and also to be entitled, as a premium, for the same, to one copy of either of the following valuable works:

Gooch on Females and Children.
American Flower Garden Directory.
Gregory's Mathematics.
Pambour on Locomotive Engines and Railways.
Scott's Life of Napoleon.
Pilgrimage to Jerusalem and Mount Sinai, by Baron Geramb, two volumes.
1000 Night's Entertainment, five volumes.

FOR FIFTY SUBSCRIBERS.

A copy of either of the following works will be furnished to any agent procuring a club of fifty subscribers—or, if it should be preferred, two of the first named premiums will be given instead.

Lockhart's Life of Walter Scott.
Treatise on the Management and Disease of Cattle.
Holy Bible, quarto, with beautiful engravings.

TERMS OF THE

Weekly Messenger,

PER ANNUM—Payable in advance:

One Subscription, - - - - - - - - $2 00
" " six months, - - - - - 1 00
Four Subscriptions (a 1,25) - - - - - 5 00
Ten Subscriptions (a $1) - - - - - - 10 00

All who desire to secure the paper from the commencement of the volume, will please forward their names immediately.

☞Postmasters and other gentlemen, who interest themselves to extend our circulation, may rest assured that the most strict and early attention will be given to their orders.

☞To secure agents and others from imposition, we guarantee to forward our paper to all who send us payment in advance, directed to the Philadelphia Post Office, which order, if received there, with the remittance, will be our acknowledgment of the same, and consequently the paper will be regularly sent for the time stipulated. CHARLES ALEXANDER.

December 30, 1840. 6w71

An Apprentice Wanted.

THE subscriber wishes to take a boy of 12 or 15 years of age, to learn the TAILORING BUSINESS. One from the country will be preferred. Applicants must come well recommended.

W. BERKSHIRE.
Main street, Putnam, Ohio.
December 16, 1840 69

DRUGS, Medicines, Paints, Dyestuffs, Oils and Spirits Turpentine. Cheap for cash or good horses, by A. LIPPITT.

Main st., No. 72, Zanesville, Nov. 4. 63tf

Dissolution.

THE partnership heretofore existing between S. B. Johnson and J. M. Kirkpatrick, under the firm of S. B. Johnson & Co. was dissolved by mutual consent, on Thursday 19th inst.

S. B. JOHNSON,
J. M. KIRKPATRICK.

Zanesville, March 31, 1840. 32tf

illiam Green,

CLOCK AND WATCH REPAIRER, SILVERSMI AND JEWELLER,

CAN be found at his shop on Main st Putnam, a few doors north of J. C. Gu rie's store, where he will do his best to accom date customers. He keeps on hand an ass ment of spectacles,watch trimmings, pencils,

As far as we have tried Mr. GREEN as a wa repairer he has given us good satisfaction.— April 22, 1840. 35tf.

Glass Manufactory.

THE subscriber having dissolved his conn ion with the former company, has taken GLASS WORKS below town under his management.

WINDOW GLASS, double and single, seizes, and of superior quality will be kept c stantly on hand for sale on reasonable terms The experience of the proprietor, in the ma facture of the article, will insure all made to of the best quality. Call and see.

S. B. JOHNSON
Zanesville, Ohio, May 6, 1840. 37

CABINET AND CHAI FACTORY.

THE subscribers still continue to manu ture and keep on hand, at their old sta a few doors south of the market house in town of Putnam, a large assortment of

CABINET WARE AND CHAIRS,

CONSISTING, IN PART, OF

Splendid black walnut and mahogony dres and plain bureaus,
Peer, card, center, side, dining and breakfast bles,
Sofas, side-boards, washing stands, ottomans,
Dressing and writing tables,
French, fancy and high post bedsteads,
Secretaries, clock cases, cradles, cribs and cases,
Grecian, rush, cane and windsor chairs,
Sociables, settees and children's chairs.

In short every thing in their line necessar furnish a house, either in high or common st and at such prices as will satisfy all who will f them with their custom. All the recommer tion they have to offer, is, that they have b able to secure a continuance of their old cu mers and friends. They hope by the qua of their work and a strict attention to busi to share a portion of the public patronage.

They have for sale a lot of first rate black nut veneering and a lot of bureau knobs of best kind and quality.

Turning done in the best style and shor notice. CHERRY & GRA

Putnam, Ohio, October 28, 1840. 62

Partnership Notice.

THE subscribers have formed a co-partnership under the firm of POTTS & GRA for the transaction of a general mercantile siness; and will occupy for that purpose the stand of Spear & Helmick, where their fri and others wishing to purchase goods, are spectfully solicited to call.

FRANCIS R. POTTS,
NELSON W. GRAHA
Putnam, Ohio, Nov. 4. 63tf

Winslow's Compound

BALSAM OF HOARHOUN

UNRIVALED and unequalled in cu Colds, Coughs, Asthma, Influenza, Wh ing Cough, and all diseases of the Breast Lungs, leading to Consumption, composed o concentrated virtues of the herbs Hoarho Boneset, and several other vegetable substa warranted pure from any mineral whatever.

Sold by A. LIPPITT a S. GATES.

Zanesville, Nov. 4. 64tf

Puff! Puff! Puff!!

CHEAP!

CHEAPER THAN EVER! GREAT B GAINS!

New York at your door!

SELLING OFF AT COS

WE so heartily despise the "gull-catch system that we seldom advertise a We however give our friends and the public tice that we have just received a fine stock

FALL AND WINTE* GOODS.

We don't profess to have brought "New Yo your doors," nor to undersell every body else to be "selling off at cost," nor to be "closing and all that sort of thing,—but we do say, our goods are cheap enough to satisfy any rea able person, even in these "hard times."

A. A. GUTHRIE & C

Putnam, Ohio, September 30, 1840. 3w5

THE

WESTERN RECORDE

IS PUBLISHED EVERY WEDNESDAY.

☞The office of the Recorder is five a half miles west of Zanesville.

TERMS.

1. The WESTERN RECORDER will be pub ed weekly, on an imperial sheet, at $2 0 annum, in advance: $2 50 at the end of t months; $3 00 at the end of the year.

2. No discontinuances will be allowed, cept at the discretion of the publisher, unt arrearages are paid.

3. To all ministers having regular pas charges, who do any thing at all for the p if they will direct us where, a copy shall be gratis; any other who forward to us $1 for new subscribers, shall have six copies se any address he may give.

4. All letters designed for the paper, mu directed to "C. Springer, Meadow Farm, M ingum, Ohio."

5. A failure to notify a discontinuance fore the expiration of the subscription year, be considered a new engagement.

CHARACTER.—The pages of the WES RECORDER will be open to discussion on all ral questions;—it will give articles on Li ture, Mechanics, Agriculture,—an abstra Religious and Political intelligence, and w ever may be interesting and instructive to ilies in general. A portion of its columns be open to Advertisements and Prices Cur —another portion to sustain the interests o Methodist Protestant Church in the We These two latter objects will not likely oc more than one page.

The RECORDER will take a firm stand ag Clerical Supremacy.

THE WESTERN RECORDER.

NGER, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER. | Vol. 2.--No. 22. | ZANESVILLE, OHIO, WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 20, 1841. | Whole No. 74. | JOHN W. WHITE, PRINTER.

OLLARS PER ANNUM IN ADVANCE. | $2.50, IN THREE MONTHS; $3, END OF YEAR.

nistad Africans.

AY'S LETTER ON THE AMISTAD CASE.

BEDFORD, OCT. 20TH, 1840.

R SIR,—As one of the committee with the legal defence of the Amistad, please to accept nt of the enclosed check. In ma contribution to your fund, I am l, not merely by sympathy for ch injured men, but also by a laid in thwarting the unrighteous the administration, to sacrifice party purposes. In reviewing ct of the President and his cabne subject, it is difficult to avoid of language apparently incon- ith decorum and Christian char- FACTS speak for themselves. of the Amistad has been greatly by ignorant and by wicked com- s. It is, in truth, simple and free iculty.

laws of Spain the African slave holly prohibited, and the crown has explicitly declared, that ans who may be clandestinely d into any of her dominions, held to be free men and not e, 1839, a slaver under Portulors, and named Tecora, landed f Africans by night at a small vilr Havana. About ten days after r of them were purchased by two iz and Montes, who put their d property on board the Amistad, y it from Havana to Principe, a of about 100 leagues. On the the Africans rose, killed the capcook, but spared the lives of their owners, and brought the vessel g Island Sound. It was there the 26th August, by Lieuteant of the U. S. brig Washington, and oes were committed to prison in icut on a warrant charging them rder, issued by the U. S. Judge District.

and Montes, who had attempted to their plantations as slaves, om they well knew were en- their liberty, had the consumpudence to publish at New Lonrd, expressing their gratitude for scue "from a ruthless gang of *Af*iccaneers."

Amistad and her cargo were imly libelled by Lieutenant Gedney age.

he 6th September, the Spanish r in a letter to Mr. Forsyth, the ry of State, demanded the delivery essel and cargo under the treaty , and also that "the negroes be d to Havana, or be placed at the d of the proper authorities in that Her Majesty's dominions, in order being tried by the Spanish laws hey have violated." After dwelling e danger to the *internal tranquili*ba, which would result from its to the knowledge of the slaves in and, that the Amistad Negroes had l punishment, his Excellency pro: "If, on the other hand, they be condemned by the incompetent l, (the court in Connecticut,) that en upon itself to try them as pind assassins, the infliction of capiishment in this case, would not be d by the salutary effects had in y the law, when it resorts to this and terrible alternative, namely, ent the commission of similar of" That is, in order to prevent the slaves from imitating the example Amistad negroes, it is important ose negroes should be put to death a and not in Connecticut.

treaty stipulation with Spain, unhich the minister claimed the de- of the vessel and cargo, provides restoration of vessels of either parced into the ports of the other, thro' rsuits of enemies or "other urgent ity," and it also declares that all handise" which shall be rescued out hands of pirates or robbers on the seas, shall be restored "to the true tor as soon as due and sufficient shall be made concerning the properreof."

Holabird, the U. S. Attorney for the ct of Connecticut, on the 9th of Sepr, wrote to the Secretary of State, e was satisfied the Africans could tried by our laws for murder, and, uired "whether there are no treaty ations with the government of Spain would authorise our government, to r them up to the Spanish authorities, f so, whether it could be done before urt sits."

e Secretary was unable to gratify niable solicitude of the Connecticut ney. The treaty makes no provi- or the surrender to the Spanish Au- ties of alleged criminals; and the titution confers no power on the dent to supersede the criminal war- of 'our court.' But it might be pos- to manufacture out of these foreign- little political capital for the south- market; and the Attorney was instruca the 11th Sept'r, "to take care that roceedings of your circuit court, or other judicial tribunal, places the ls, cargo, or slaves beyound the conof the Federal Executive."

The southern journals were generally clamorous for the surrender of the Africans, and the extraordinary course pursued by Mr. Van Buren justifies the belief, that he was not unmindful of the influence which a surrender of insurgent slaves, might have at the South, on the approaching presidential election.

In the mean time, the able counsel employed by some friends of humanity and freedom, to defend the Africans, addressed a letter to the President, protesting against any extra judicial interference on his part, against their unhappy clients. The letter, by order of the President, was on the 24th Sept., submitted to Mr. Grundy, the Attorney General of the United States, for his advice. The opinion given by this distinguished functionary, accorded more with his personal character and feelings than with the laws and constitution of his country. His devotion to Slavery and his bitterness towards its opponents had, not a great while before, betrayed him into the extraordinary indecency of expressing in his place, as a Senator of the United States, his approbation of Lynch law, as applied to Abolitionists. It is not, therefore, surprising that he was not very scrupulous in applying legal principles to insurgent slaves. Mr. Grundy, as might be expected, was in favor of surrendering the Africans, and he thus demonstrates that they are not freemen: "This vessel cleared from one Spanish port to another Spanish port with papers regularly authenticated by the proper officers at Havana, evidence that the negroes were slaves, and that the designation of the vessel was to another Spanish port. I cannot see any legal principle upon which the Government of the U. S. would be authorised to go into an investigation for the purpose of ascertaining whether the facts in those papers are true or not."

Here was a question not merely of freedom, or bondage, but of life and death, affecting forty human beings; and resting on a custom-house certificate, and yet the Attorney General of the United States cannot see any legal principle on which the truth or falsehood of that certificate can be inquired into, although, as will presently appear, its falsity was not merely palpable and obvious to all, but denied by none.

But neither Mr. Grundy himself, nor the political party with whom he acts, had any difficulty, shortly after, in discovering legal principles in abundance, to justify the House of Representatives in refusing to regard the certificate of the Governor of New Jersey, authenticated by the great seal of the State, as even prima facie evidence that certain individuals had been elected members of Congress ! !

The Attorney General is for surrendering the Africans under the treaty; but moreover, "these negroes are charged with an infraction of the Spanish laws, and, therefore, it is proper that they should be surrendered to the public functionaries of that Government; that if the laws of Spain have been violated they may not escape punishment."

For this dictum, the Attorney, of course, cites no authority, and it is certainly very extraordinary, that occupying the responsible station of legal adviser to the President, it should have escaped his recollection, that it had been expressly decided that the Federal Executive had no authority to surrender fugitives from justice to a foreign government, unless provided in the treaty; and in consequence of this decision, the demands of the Canadian and Irish authorities for the surrender of murderers have been rejected by the present administration. Perhaps Mr. Grundy thinks that Africans, like abolitionists, are entitled to Lynch Law.

The opinon of the Attorney General on the power of the President is no less remarkable, than on the sanctity of Havana permits, and the right of surrendering criminals. "My opinion," says he, "is that the proper mode of executing this article of the treaty in the present case, would be for the President of the United States to ISSUE HIS ORDER directing the Marshal in whose custody the vessel and cargo are, to deliver the same to such persons as may be designated by the Spanish Minister to receive them." In confirmation of this opinion, he quotes verbatim the 9th Art. of the treaty providing that ships and merchandise rescued from the hands of pirates, &c., shall be "restored to the true proprietor, as soon as due and sufficient proof shall be made concerning the property thereof." Ruiz and Montes claim to be the true proprietors of the negroes—their claim is contested:—before whom is the due and sufficient proof required by the treaty to be offered? Mr. G. insists that the President is to be both court and jury, and short work he is to make of it; for a Havana passport describing the Africans as slaves, is like proof from Holy Writ, not to be questioned. Now this sacred document declares that Ruiz and Montes are the "true proprietors" of the negroes—the claimants are on the spot with their "due and sufficient proof"—and our magnificent Attorney General recommends, that in defiance of the express words of the treaty, the negroes be withheld from their true proprietors, and be delivered to such persons as may be designated by the Spanish Minister! And the reason—"These negroes deny that they are slaves; if they should be delivered to the claimants, no opportunity may be afforded for the assertion of their right to freedom!!" Verily, Mr. Grundy is a perfect fanatic in behalf of the poor slandered Africans. His heart yearns over them, and despite the treaty, he is for committing them to the Spanish Minister, that they may have the privilege of proving before Havana courts, they are MEN, and not CHATTELS! Assuredly, if once surrendered to his Excellency, they would soon be, where the wicked cease from troubling, and the weary are at rest. Mr. Grundy's ideas seem to have been thrown into some little confusion, for shortly before he had assigned a very different reason for surrendering the Africans, viz, "that if the laws of Spain have been violated, they may not escape punishment!"

On the 17th September, the Circuit Court assembled at Hartford. The Africans were in custody solely on the charge of murder, a charge which it was foreseen could not be tried in any of our courts. Unless, therefore, some other pretext was found to detain them, they would, contrary to the orders from Washington, be placed "beyond the control of the Federal Executive." Hence the day after the Circuit Court met, an attachment was issued from the District Court against the Amistad and her cargo, in behalf of Gedney's libel; and libels were also filed in the same court, in the names of Montes and Ruiz, claiming the negroes as their property; and the District Attorney filed a libel in behalf of the government, claiming possession of the negroes, in order, that if slaves, they might be delivered to the Spanish Minister; and if freemen, be sent to Africa under the act of 1819, authorizing the President to send back re-captured Africans. Thus were the Africans enclosed in various legal nets in the hope, that should they break thro' some of them, others would be found strong enough to hold them.

The court decided that no indictment would lie against the Africans for an alleged murder committed at sea, on board a Spanish vessel. Mr. Holabird, however, opposed their discharge. "I stand here," said he, "to contend that these blacks are FREEMEN—that they have been bro't within the jurisdiction of the United States, and may be holden to abide the decision of the proper authority, and if found to be, as I suppose, native Africans, they may be sent to their own native land." Most extraordinary philanthropists, these United States Attornies! Mr. Grundy is for giving up the Africans, first, to be punished, and, secondly, that they may prove their freedom. Mr. Holabird knows they are freemen, and as such begs they may be imprisoned in order that Mr. Van Buren may send them home. Only eleven days before this gentleman anxiously inquired of Mr. Forsyth if they could not be delivered to the Spanish authorities "before our court sits."

The Circuit Court refused to discharge them on the ground that in consequence of the libels and attachment against them in the District Court, they must be considered as in custody of that court.

In the mean time the Spanish legation to this country had been changed, and on the 26th November, the new Minister addressed the Secretary of State, denying the right of our courts to take cognizance of the case, and complaining that in consequence of the delays they had interfered, "PUBLIC VENGEANCE has not been satisfied, for be it recollected, that the legation of Spain does not demand the delivery of slaves but of ASSASSINS." Thus was the cabinet at Washington a second time officially informed that in surrendering these negroes, they would be consigning them to a Spanish gibbet; and moreover, that they were not demanded as merchandise, under the treaty, but as fugitive felons.

The District Court was to meet on the 7th January, 1840. On the 30th of the preceding December, the Spanish Minister wrote to the Secretary of State, "In the conversation which I had with you on the morning of the day before yesterday, you mentioned the possibility that the court of Connecticut might, at its meeting on the 7th of January, declare itself incompetent, or order the restitution of the schooner Amistad, with her cargo, and the negroes found on board of her, and you showed me it would be necessary for the legation of her Catholic Majesty to take charge of them as soon as the court should have pronounced its sentence or resolution. I venture to request you to prevail upon the President to allow the Government of her Catholic Majesty the assistance which it asks under the present circumstances, from that of the United States, by placing the negroes found on board the said schooner, and claimed by this legation, at the disposition of the Captain General of Cuba, transporting them thither in a ship belonging to the United States."

We here find the Secretary of State not merely anticipating the action of the District Court, but warning the Spanish Minister to be in readiness to seize his prey "as soon as the court shall have pronounced its decision." The Minister, not well knowing what to do with the negroes, asks the favor of the President to send the "assassins" in a government vessel to Cuba, suggesting that the best means of testing their claim to freedom would be to bring them before the courts of Havana. As they were destined to the gallows, it would seem to be no great matter to them whether they were hung as freemen, or as slaves. Mr. Van Buren eagerly catching at this miserable and ridiculous pretence for surrendering the Africans, replied, through Mr. Forsyth, on the 6th January, that the President would cause the necessary orders to be given for a vessel of the United States to be held in readiness to receive the negroes, and convey them to Cuba, with instructions to the commander to deliver them to the Captain General of the Island, adding, "the President has the more readily been inclined to accede to your request in this particular, on account of one of the leading motives (!) which prompted you to make it; that the negroes, having asserted before the court of Connecticut, that they are not slaves, may have an opportunity of proving the truth of their allegation before the proper tribunals of the Island of Cuba, by whose laws alone, taken in connection with circumstances occurring before the arrival of the negroes in the United States, the question of their condition can be legally decided."

Never, perhaps, in the annals of diplomacy, was an assigned motive more palpably and foolishly false than this. The Spanish minister expressly tells the President to recollect that the negroes are demanded "not as slaves, but as assassins;" he complains that the Connecticut court, by its interference, has delayed "public vengeance;" he shows why "capital punishment," inflicted on these negroes in Connecticut, will not have the same effect in preventing similar offences, as if executed in Cuba. But Mr. Van Buren, anxious that these men should have an opportunity of relieving themselves from the reproach of slavery, although at the cost of their lives, determines to be at the expense of sending them to Cuba in a national vessel. The zeal of the cabinet in behalf of the reputation of the negroes outstripped their professions. The orders promised on the 6th January, had, in fact, been given on the 2d. On that day the Secretary of the Navy had been directed to cause "the vessel destined to convey the negroes of the Amistad to Cuba" to be anchord off the port of New Haven as early as the 10th of January.

And here we may surely ask what authority the President possesses forcibly to transport men from this to foreign countries, to give them an opportunity to prove their freedom? By our own laws no alleged fugitive slave can be sent to another State for such a purpose; but his claimant must PROVE his property where he finds it.

But the tender mercies of Mr. Van Buren did not stop here. Before the letter of the 6th of January, to the Spanish minister, consenting to send the Africans to Cuba, that they might establish their claim to freedom, was written, Lieutenants Gedney and Mead were ordered to hold themselves in readiness to proceed with the negroes, "for the purpose of affording their testimony in any proceedings that may be ordered by the authorities of Cuba in the matter." This is one of the most detestable measures connected with the whole of this wicked transaction.—These two officers had captured the Amistad on her coming on our coast, and the President of his own free will, now orders them to proceed to Cuba, in a national vessel, at public expense—for what? to aid the negroes in proving their freedom? to hasten their execution as PIRATES, by testifying that the vessel was found in their possession.

On the 7th January, the very day the court met, the President signed a warrant directing the marshal of Connecticut "to deliver over to Lieutenant John S. Paine, of the United States Navy, and aid in conveying on board the schooner Grampus, under his command, all the negroes late of the Spanish schooner Amistad in his custody." This warrant was delivered to the commandant of the Grampus who was directed on his arrival at New Haven to communicate with Holabird, that he might "receive the earliest information of the decision of the court." Lieutenant Paine, on receiving this early intelligence was to serve the President's warrant on the marshal, and receive the negroes from him.

It is very evident that the cabinet had full confidence that the decree of the court would be such as they desired: a confidence probably founded on the political partialities of Judge Judson, and the zeal he had sometime before exhibited against the Abolitionists. Hence the costly preparations made for carrying his anticipated decree into execution; hence an armed schooner was stationed off New Haven; hence two naval officers were detached from the service to repair to Cuba to give their evidence against the Africans. But it did not occur to the government that an appeal lay from the district to a higher court? and did they not know that the counsel for the Africans in case of an adverse decision, would avail themselves of this privilege? Certainly, and hence the abominable contrivance to kidnap the negroes before an appeal could be entered. On Sunday, the 12th January, Mr. Forsyth wrote to Mr. Holabird a letter marked "confidential," instructing him, "if the decision of the court is such as it is anticipated the order of the President is to to be carried into execution, unless an appeal shall actually have been interposed. You are not to take it for granted that it will be interposed. And if, on the contrary, the decision of the court is different, you are to take out an appeal, and allow things to remain as they are till the appeal shall have been decided." Observe, sir, the ingenuity of the plot. The whole arrangement about the Grampus was kept a profound secret. The court is sitting at New Haven, and the vessel anchors in the harbor, nobody knows why. Her commander has in his pocket the President's warrant for the negroes, and the District attorney is to give him "the earliest information" when to serve it. Mr. Holabird is, moreover, "confidentially" instructed that in case of a decision virtually condemning the negroes to death, he is not to take it for granted that their counsel will, like honest men and faithful lawyers, interpose an appeal. Dull indeed of comprehension, would the District attorney have been, had he not understood his instructions as requiring him to allow, if possible, no time for an appeal. The night following the expected decision, (had it been made,) would have been occupied by Lieut. Paine and the Marshal in conducting the Africans under cover of darkness, on board the Grampus, and the next morning, when their counsel met to prepare the appeal, the ocean billows would have been bearing their unhappy clients to a bloody grave in Cuba. But while in a case of life and death these unfortunate men were to be thus cruelly robbed of their right of appeal, the Government, as we have seen, took care to secure it for themselves.

On the 7th January the District Court was opened at New Haven. The wretched Africans seemed a tempting carcass over which a flock of greedy vultures were hovering. Two lawyers appeared in behalf of Gedney's libel, another for a Mr. Green, of Long Island, who also claimed salvage, because he had first descried the vessel, and held some intercourse with her crew; a fourth condescended to appear in behalf of Montes and Ruiz, not to deny their villany, but to secure the fruits of it; and lastly, to the disgrace of the American Government, Mr. Holabird came into court, to defend the libel he had filed, and in which it was falsely asserted that the Spanish minister claimed certain slaves found on board the Amistad, as "the property of Spanish subjects," and that they be restored to the true proprietors and owners thereof, as required by treaty; and this notwithstanding the official letters of the minister himself, demanding their surrender, not as slaves, but "assassins," not to their owners, but to be placed "at the disposition of the Captain General of the Island of Cuba." See letters of November 26, and December 30.

It will be recollected that in September Mr. Holabird opposed the discharge of the Africans by the Circuit Court, because he was pursuaded they were freemen—native Africans, and he wished them detained in prison that the President might send them back to their own country. But the President had since kindly resolved that they should first have an opportunity of vindicating themselves in the Havana courts from the aspersion that they were slaves; and the obsequious attorney on the 8th January, insisting before the court for their surrender, thus expresses himself: "The Spanish minister claims that it is the duty of the government of the United States to surrender these men. This property—property because so considered by the laws of Spain, should be surrendered. We cannot go beyond the Spanish papers of the Amistad, and must respect them. We cannot show they are contrary to the laws of Spain. The papers are prima facie evidence that they were in possession of the Spaniards.—Slavery is sanctioned by the law of nations, and if so, is right, where no law exists to the contrary, and it is to be presumed that no Spanish law forbids the slave trade."

The court decided that the Spanish papers, which Messrs. Grundy and Holabird deemed unquestionable, were false and fraudulent; that the men were Bozals or native Africans, illegally imported, and were not slaves; and that they should be sent back to Africa by the President, under the act of 1819.

Thus was the Connecticut Attorney caught in his own trap. His assertion that the negroes were freemen was confirmed by the Court—his application that they should be sent to Africa was granted—and then, in obedience to his Sabbath day instructions he appealed from the very decision for which he had asked.

Having now contemplated with me, the cruelty, hypocrisy and chicanery of the Federal Government with regard to these men, let me next ask your attention to a bold, palpable and wicked FRAUD.

The documents from which I have quoted, were laid before Congress by the President in March last. On such occasions, it is usual to give foreign documents in their own language, verbatim, with English translations. These last, it is understood, are made in the Department of State. Among the documents submitted are the Amistad papers, in Spanish, with translations. They include two permits, granted at Havana, for the transportation of the slaves belonging to Montes and Ruiz. We have seen what a sacred impregnable character Messrs Grundy and Holabird found it expedient to attach to these permits. There are two of them. The one for Ruiz's forty-nine slaves, merely states that the negroes, naming them, "all belonging to Don Jose Ruiz" are permitted to go by sea to Principe. The other, for Montes' three slaves is similar. The expression "all belonging to," words inserted of course in every permit asked for by a master, words forming part of a printed form, constituted, in the opinion of our government lawyers, such irrefragible evidence of title, as in case of life and death, to be beyond all investigation.

The permit signed for Ruiz's slaves, for example, as given in the Congressional documents, begins thus: "Concedo licencia a cuerenta y nueva negros ladinos." I grant permission to forty-nine "ladinos negroes." What is the meaning of "ladinos?" Dr. Madden, who was the British Superintendent at Havana of liberated negroes, and who has been a judge of the mixed Commission Court in Cuba, testified in the District court, that ladinos "was a term given to negroes long settled in Cuba, and acclimated there, and introduced before 1820," Africans recently introduced, cannot legally be held as slaves; and are called Bozals. Now the Amistad Africans had been introduced only a short period before the date of the permit. How came they then to be designated as Ladinos in that document? The explanation is given by Dr. Madden. "The object of giving the name Ladinos to Bozals, in the permit or traspasso, is to prevent capture by British cruisers on the coast of Cuba.". That is, as recently imported Africans cannot legally be held as slaves in Cuba, and as British cruizers are authorized by treaty to capture all Spanish vessels transporting such Africans, it was deemed most prudent, in order to protect the Amistad from capture, that the Havana officer should certify to a LIE. Accordingly, he furnished her with papers declaring her negroes to be Ladinos, or Africans imported prior to the prohibition of the slave trade. "DEMOCRACY SCORNS THE BROAD SEAL OF NEW JERSEY," but her officials do homage to the lying Havana permit, when it can be converted into the death warrant of insurgent slaves!

From the Havana fraud, let us turn to an extraordinary falsification of papers, perpetrated, probably in the Department of State. I have no proof that either the President or Mr. Forsyth was privy to it. It has been stated by the Rev. Mr. Leavitt, that the original permit to Ruiz. is on file in the United States Clerk's office in New Haven, and that it begins thus—"Concedo licencia a cuerante y nueva ladinos." This is rendered in the official translation submitted to Congress, "I grant permission to forty-nine sound negroes." Thus a passport for Africans imported prior to 1820, is, by State necromancy, converted into a bill of health for forty-nine negroes "belonging to Don Jose Ruiz." Now is this translation a blunder or a fraud? Observe that ladinos is used in the permit as a substantive; as the specific name of a class of men—the translator has made it an adjective, although there is no substantive which it qualifies. This is awkward; but the awkardness vanishes the moment we examine the professed copy of the original permit in the Congressional documents. The copy reads "concedo licencia a cuerenta y nueva negros ladinos." This interpolation of negros, if accidental, is certainly no less convenient than extraordinary, since it renders the translation at least grammatical, by furnishing a substantive to which the adjective "sound," may apply. But how came the translator to suppose, that ladinos was the Spanish for sound or healthy? Did the dictionaries mislead him? In the great dictionary of the Spanish academy is the following:

'LADINO—El que sabe otra lengua a lenguas : demas de la surja. Alterius a patria linguæ peritus." One who is acquainted with a language foreign from his own country.

The dictionary of Nunes y Taboda, gives the definition in French.

"LADINO—Habile daus une langue.

ESCLAVO LADINO—Esclave qui est dans un paye depuis un an."

We thus find that the original meaning of the term, is one who speaks a foreign language, and hence we understand why, when applied to an imported African, it means one who has been long enough in the country to speak Spanish, and as the legal presumption is, that no Africans have been brought into Cuba since the slave trade was prohibited, the conventional meaning in that island is, an African slave imported before the prohibition of the trade.

Now as these permits were the only evidence that the Africans of the Amistad were slaves; and as they alone could justify the government in surrendering them the importance of concealing in the translation, the fraud of the Havana officer is obvious. If claimed as Ladinos, there was abundant evidence, besides the admission of Ruiz himself, that they were Bozals. But is claimed merely as sound negroes, there was no proof that they were diseased at the date of the permits.

I remarked in the beginning of this letter, that the case of the Amistad was simple and free from difficulty; and do not the facts I have stated warrant the assertion? If ever there were a justifiable homicide for the recovery of personal liberty, surely that committed by these negroes was one. But admitting they are murderers, they did not violate our laws and cannot be punished under them. Nor can they as murderers be surrendered to the Spanish authorities. Mr. Van Buren has himself decided that he possesses no authority to surrender Irish or Canadian murderers; and what article of the constitution, we may ask, empowers him to surrender African murderers?

Now admit, for the argument, that these negroes are slaves; and admit also, that the word "merchandise," in our treaty with Spain, embraces slaves, ought they to be surrendered under the treaty? Recollect that the treaty provides that the merchandise shall be delivered to its true proprietor. The Spanish minister never pretended to own these men; nor did he pretend to be the agent of their masters; therefore, under the treaty, he had no claim to them. But were Montes and Ruiz entitled to them under the treaty? Not until they made "due and sufficient proof" of their ownership of the merchandise; they bring their title deeds into court, and they are found tainted with palpable uncontradicted FRAUD—the property does not answer the description given, and the two "Spanish Gentlemen" are proved beyond all question, to be receivers of stolen goods. Whether the Africans were slaves or not, the assertion that they now legally belong to the two scoundrels who claim them, is an impudent and palpable falsehood.

We know—all know, President, Secretary, Judge, every body, that these men are entitled by both divine and human laws to their liberty. Why then have they been immured for fifteen months in prison? Why is the Habeas corpus suspended? Why is the Federal Government plotting against the lives of these men? Why does not the base and cruel conduct of the government arouse the public indignation? Alas! a presidential election renders both parties competitors for southern votes.

The Supreme Court of the United States is now to decide on the life or death of these unhappy foreigners, and we shall learn from the result, whether the national temple of justice is elevated above the foul miasma that has enshrouded and poisoned the Federal Executive.

But, whatever may be the fate of the Africans of the Amistad, you, my dear Sir, will have the consoling reflection, of having done your duty toward them.—May your labors in their behalf be continued, and may God crown them with ultimate success.

Yours truly,
WILLIAM JAY.

WESTERN RECORDER.

ZANESVILLE:

WEDNESDAY, ... JANUARY 20, 1841.

A friend has forwarded us the following bill, reported by Mr. Perkins, of the House of Representatives, of this State, and which is designed to meet the object of the petitioners who call for an act to protect religious worship:

A Bill to amend the act entitled "an act for the prevention of certain immoral practices," passed February 17, 1831.

SEC. 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Ohio, That no person shall keep any shop, booth, tent, wagon or other carriage, vessel or boat, for the sale of spirituous or other liquors, or any provisions or other articles of traffic whatever, or sell or expose to sale give, barter, or otherwise dispose of, in or near such shop, booth, tent, wagon or carriage, vessel or boat, or in any other way or place, any spirituous or other liquors, or any provisions or other articles of traffic whatever, at or within the distance of two miles from the place where any religious society or people are collected or collecting together for religious worship in any field or woodland. Provided, that nothing in this act shall effect tavern keepers exercising their calling, at the places named in their licences, nor distillers or manufacturers or others, in the prosecution of their ordinary calling or business, from vending or exposing to sale the articles above forbidden at their usual place of vending the same, or at their residences, nor any person who shall have a written permit from the person or persons having the oversight, charge or management of such religious society, to sell bread or other provisions for the supply of persons attending such religious worship, their horses or cattle, such person conforming to the legal regulations of said religious assembly and to the laws of the State.

SEC. 2. That any person who shall be guilty of a breach of this act, shall forfeit and pay for every such offence a fine of not less than five nor more than fifty dollrs, to the township where such offence shall be committed, for the use of common schools; and any judge of the court of common pleas, sheriff, coroner or justice of the peace of the proper county, or any constable of the proper township shall, and any two freeholders of said county may, upon a view and without warrant apprehend any person so offending, and seize such booth, tent, wagon or other carriage, vessel or boat, spirituous or other liquors and other articles of traffic, and convey the same to a place of safe keeping, and the said person so offending to take before the next justice of the peace, together with an inventory of the things seized, and the said justice of the peace, upon complaint on oath or affirmation of the officer or one of the freeholders apprehending such offender, shall issue his warrant, which the said officer or one of the freeholders shall have authority to serve, and cause the said offender to be arrested, and proceed forthwith to inquire into the accusation, and if found true, shall enforce the penalty of this act.

SEC. 3. If the accused shall fail to pay such fine as said justice of the peace shall inflict, together with all costs of the proceedings, including the necessary expense of such seizure, the said justice of the peace shall forthwith issue a venditioni exponas commanding any constable of the township in which such inquiry shall be had, to make the said fine, and costs, necessary expense and costs of execution by sale of so much of the things so seized, as shall be necessary therefor, and make return thereof in ten days thereafter.

SEC. 4. That in the execution of said venditioni, said constable of court, two days before the sale, shall advertise the things so to be sold, at two of the most public places in the township, where the same is to be sold, at one of which places to be designated in the notice, between the hours of ten o'clock, A. M., and four o'clock, P. M., said sale shall be held; and the overplus of the things so seized, as aforesaid, after the satisfaction of said venditioni exponas, shall be delivered to the defendant on demand; but if he shall fail to demand the same for ten days after such sale, the same shall become forfeited to said township, and if the said things so seized shall be found insufficient to satisfy said venditioni exponas and costs of execution, said justice of the peace shall at any time thereafter, on request of the treasurer of said township, issue a fierie facias to collect the balance thereof.

SEC. 5. That in any action against any person for doing, or causing to be done, any thing in pursuance of this act, the defendant may plead the general issue, and give the special matter in evidence thereunder, and if in said action, judgment shall be given for the defendant, or the plaintiff shall become nonsuit or discontinue his action, the defendant shall recover double costs of suit.

In relation to this bill, we would say, that, we have the utmost confidence in the good intention of its framer, and believe that its general features are such as to suit the object contemplated, but unless some particulars in it are modified, we are certain it cannot answer the purpose of its enactment.

1. The first and most essential objection, is, that provision in the bill which authorizes the arrest and detention of the offender, "without warrant," &c.; this is directly contrary to the 5th section of the 8th article of the constitution, which declares; "That the people shall be secure in their persons, houses, papers and possessions, from unwarrantable searches and seizures; and that general warrants whereby an officer may be commanded to search suspected places, without probable evidence of the fact committed, or to seize any person or persons not named, whose offences are not particularly described, and without oath or affirmation, are dangerous to liberty, and shall not be granted."

The provision of the bill referred to is clearly in direct contravention to the article of the constitution here quoted. What intelligent "freeholder" would attempt the arrest of a transgressor under such circumstances, when he would be liable to be put on the defensive, himself, with little doubt of being immersed in cost and damages. The property exhibited for sale at places of worship should be confiscated, and "freeholders" should be permitted, "on view," to seize it for the public benefit. Such provisions would, as we conceive, be constitutional. The offender then might go untouched; the penalty would be sufficient without his arrest. But any bill which does not provide for the forfeiture of the property, and its seizure by "freeholders" will not meet the object contemplated. For regular officers can seldom be had when needed for this purpose; and unless the property is forfeited the owner can always shield himself by procuring some irresponsible person to sell for him. From the property seized a sufficient fine can be levied and the balance returned to the owner.

2. Unle the words "or others," (which we have put in italics,) in the proviso of the first section of the bill, be stricken out, it will open a host of cabins and shanties throughout the country, to those contemptible cake and mellon men which can give any amount of annoyance to the worship of God.

3. The distance should be three miles instead of two, in order to afford ample protection. The Pennsylvania law has three miles. The Maryland law, from which, we understand, the Pennsylvania law was mainly taken, we have been told keeps trespassers still farther. We published a petition, at this office, asking for trespassers to be kept two miles distant. Our conference in Steubenville, in September last, adopted this petition with the exception of the distance, which they unanimously resolved should be three miles, and ordered the petitions then printed, to be altered in accordance, but which we are afraid was not done.

In conclusion, we do not ask the Legislature to grant any unconstitutional or unnecessary power for the protection of religious worship.—We Methodists, who would be the most interested in this act, are, too many of us, quite fond of a little brief authority, and when power is put into our hands, there are too many of us willing to use it all. But in the name of our common christianity, do give us a law to protect the "Worship of Almighty God" from the cupidity and ruffianism of the country. On the subject of what would answer this purpose, we profess, from long experience, to have some knowledge, and we repeat it the law of Pennsylvania, given for this object, we believe, is as perfect as human wisdom can devise.

MR. ASBURY'S BIOGRAPHY.—Mr. Robert Emory, son of the late Bishop Emory, is preparing a biographical notice of Bishop Asbury, and is calling on all who may hav any interesting facts, in relation to Mr. Asbury, to furnish him therewith. We think, with Mr. Emory, that, it is rather a strange matter, the church has let twenty years pass since Mr. Asbury's death without giving his biography, while their book shelves are loaded with a host of such notices of his less important "sons in the gospel." At last, it seems, it has to be undertaken by a comparatively young and inexperienced man, who could have had very little personal acquaintance with the deceased, or else not done at all. We think these facts evince one thing,—whatever veneration and dread may have been held towards Mr. Asbury, among those best acquainted with him, they could have had but very little esteem for h m.

TEMPERANCE.—The Massillon Gazette, of the 7th instant, says that Mr. Chipman, of Rochester, N. Y., is lecturing with them on the subject of Temperance, and reports him to be a most able advocate of the cause; it speaks of him as visiting this State, and as calculated to give the enterprize a new impulse. Send him this way, for we are becoming rather lukewarm in the matter, in this quarter.

We commend the following article, from the Nashville "Christian Advocate," as worthy the notice of our own readers. What is here said about the modus operandi of the south will suit a more northern latitude also. What we particular favor, in this communication, and recommend to our readers, is the spirit of zeal and enterprize which it evinces.

Bro. M'Ferrin: I have nearly completed my second round on my circuit. I have been a preacher for fifteen years, but have always sustained a local relation, until our last Conference. On my first round I came to the conclusion, unless a change can be produced, and all circuits were like mine, we might as well discontinue our itinerant operations in the week, at least during the winter. I looked diligently for the causes, and I think I can assign many that have conspired to bring about this state of things. Our church and the world have gotten much in the habit of looking alone to camp and protracted meetings for revivals. Many of our travelling preachers go round their circuits like they were riding express—filling two appointments in one day so as to make more rest days—consequently having no time for class-meetings or pastoral visits; not becoming acquainted with one half of the members that wait on their ministry, and staying but at one place in each neighborhood. That these difficulties do exist, none who are acquainted with the church, will deny. To remedy these evils every minister should engage—our people need cultivation and training in their class meetings especially—stimulated to cultivate "a close walk with God"—and urge upon them that God has wisely made our measure of happiness to depend on our diligence in the use of the means of grace.

The people of the South, you know, act almost entirely from feeling—fill their eyes with tears, and there is nothing too hard. If we can get them to attend their circuit preaching, class and prayer meetings, we may expect them to feel these sacred impulses, and Zion will then "look forth as the morning—fair as the moon, as clear as the sun, and as terrible to all opposition as an army with banners." Twenty years ago this was the case, conversions were common at all our meetings, and our converts at camp-meetings we numbered by hundreds—and shall we retrogade? Our doctrine is, go on to perfection—in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, I go in for such times again and expect to see them.

I told a brother who has long been in the itinerant field my views and the course I was pursuing—(perhaps he had "mellowed down,") he said, "You are green, you'll have to move your backband back, your coulter's too digging." But I have raised the standard high, and onward is engraven on my banner, and you know difficulties vanish when we approach them with a determination to overcome. During the last war in one of the battles to the North, the commander said to Col. Miller, "can you carry that point," pointing to what was considered a "forlorn hope." Said he, "I'll try, sir." He made the effort and succeeded, and victory perched on the American standard. Our general is at the head of our noble army; and he requires us to carry no "forlorn hopes;" his commands are all reasonable, and he strengthens our hearts, nerves our arms with strength for every blow. On my second round I had good reason to believe "there's a better day a coming."

In most neighborhoods, I have preached day and night, and invariably held class-meetings. I visit from 4 to 8 families at each appointment and generally pray with them and always talk closely and affectionably on the subject of religion—the wicked as well as religious families.—The comfort it brings to my soul and the thanks I receive from those on whom I call, the sincerity of which is often evinced by tears, impels me on.
M. CLARKE.

THE CONCESSION.—We say to our Br. Winans that his concessions in his communication on our last page, are more than satisfactory. We consider them characteristic of a generou mind.

The communication of Br. Clarke, in this No. is cheering to the members of our particular fellowship, as well as to all who rejoice at the prosperity of Zion, irrespective of whose instrumentality. It shews that in one village sixty-seven have been added to the flock of Christ, within a few weeks, and 500 dollars raised to build a house for the service of the Lord.

The last Protestant contains some information in relation to the Baltimore "Theological and Literary Institute," which we will give in our next paper, this having been pre-occupied with other matter before it was received.

Dr. Baily, of the Philanthropist, in his paper of the 6th instant, speaking of the editor of the Christian World, says: "Thomas H. Stockton brings to his task talents every way better proportioned to its magnitude, than is imagined by two or three hypocritical religious editors, who have passed premature sentence upon him."—The Dr., being well acquainted with the resources of Mr. Stockton, is well prepared to give a correct opinion. But what he says is no compliment on Br. Leavitt.

From the Washington (Pa.) Reporter.

ROBBERY OF THE WESTERN MAIL.

It was stated in the Baltimore Patriot, of the 1st inst., that about the 14th of November "the pouch" containing the letters for New York, and all places East of that city, was stolen from the coach on its passage from Wheeling to Frederick. Since then the New York letter pouch has been stolen seven times. The agents of the department, from investigation, suppose the robberies were committed near Uniontown, Pennsylvania.

In these pouches were the letters for New York and offices East of that city, from Wheeling, Cincinnati, Louisville, Nashville, Natchez, St. Louis, and all the other Western and South Western post-offices. The letters are known to have contained large remittances, as well of bank notes as drafts, &c.

The letters for Baltimore and Philadelphia, and all the intermediate places between Baltimore and Wheeling, were in another pouch, which is enclosed in a large bag, and all have duly come to hand.

Active measures have been employed from the time these facts reached the Department, to ferret out the robbers. No doubt existed that the mails were abstracted between Wheeling and Baltimore, and the agents of the Department, Dr. Kennedy, Mr. Plitt, and others, spent several days in unremitting efforts to obtain a clue to the matter. Suspicions having been excited against several persons in Uniontown, a warrant was procured by Dr. Kennedy, from Judge Ewing, on the night of Wednesday, with which he proceeded to this place in the Mail stage, arriving here on Thursday morning. The warrant was here put into the hands of Constable Hays, who arrested Wm. Corman, the driver of the mail between this and Uniontown. Corman was asleep on a bench in the barroom of Mrs. Sweitzer's hotel when arrested, and betrayed great alarm. On being taken before Justice Blain, he voluntarily gave a statement of facts which go to implicate with himself Dr. Braddee, an arrant scoundrel of long standing, together with two men named William Strayer and Prunnel, a Clerk in Dr. Braddee's office, all of Uniontown.

We learn the following facts, as to the manner in which these repeated robberies have been effected, from the confession of Corman. On reaching the Post Office in Uniontown, where the coaches are usually changed, all the mails were discharged except the Eastern Mail above referred to: this was retained in the coach, per arrangement, until driven into the yard, where the accomplices of the driver received it, and conveyed it to the Office of Dr. Braddee, when, on being rifled of its contents, the bags were thrown into a privy appurtenant to the premises. This was done on the nights of the 15th, 19th, 23d, and 29th of November, and on the 5th, 12th, and 18th of Dec. Corman voluntarily divulged the foregoing facts, and alleged that he had been the victim of Braddee and his confederates; that he had resisted their importunities to embark in the robbery for a period of eighteen months, during which time he had been, alternately, plyed with promises and threats, until his better genius yielded and he fell a victim to the tempters.

Dr. Kennedy left on Thursday afternoon, with the prisoner in charge, for Uniontown, where he will undergo a more thorough examination previous to his commitment.

Suspicion rested upon Corman before he lef Uniontown on Wednesday night, but it was thought best by the Agent to make the arrest here, lest some of his accomplices might take the alarm and make off. Consequently, Dr. K. with the warrant of Judge Ewing in his pocket, rode all the way from Uniontown to this place on the box with Corman, the latter not suspecting in the least the object of his journey.

Braddee, the master spirit in this extensive robbery, as we infer from the developments of Corman, is a fellow of notoriously infamous character, having been arraigned before the Bar of Fayette county under indictments for Arson and Forgery, at two several terms. He was acquitted by the Jury, in both cases, from the insufficiency of the evidence, though in the public opinion he has ever been held guilty of both offences. His life is dissolute and depraved, and no doubt has existed, for a long time, in the minds of the public, that his career is one of secret crime and perfidy. Should the statement of Corman be confirmed by subsequent developments, the probability is strong that society will be rid of the artful and accomplished rogue—and truly it will be a happy riddance.

P. S. We understand by this morning's mail that Dr. Braddee, Prunell and Strayer, were arrested in Uniontown, on Thursday evening.

The Genius of Liberty says, that "in making an authorized search of the premises of Doctor Braddee, upwards of ten thousand dollars of the stolen money, as is believed, were found in a hay mow. Mail bags, cut open, were also found on his premises. A variety of circumstances, connected with the robbery and with the arrest of the above individuals, have been detailed to us, which, in the present posture of affairs, it is deemed advisable not to publish.

Braddee is held to bail on $100,000: 50,000 on his own part and 25,000 each on two securities.

TERRIBLE CALAMITY.—One of the most heart-rendering calamities we ever heard of, occurred in Berkshire, on Monday night, 21st ult. The house of Mr. Jesse Smith, a respectable inhabitant of that town, took fire and was burned to the ground, together with all the inmates, consisting of Mr. Smith, his wife and three children, the youngest of which was eight years old.

It is remarkable that the fire was not discovered by the neighbors, until they arose in the morning, when the building was nearly burned down. Not a single individual saw the fire; and the house and family were consumed by the devouring elements, without the knowledge of any, save Him who seeth all things. How the fire originated is left to conjecture, none being left to tell the sad story. One child, a girl of 16 years, was absent from home, and she alone is left of this hapless family.

Since the above was put in type, we learn that the remains of the five bodies have been discovered, and will be interred to-morrow. The surviving daughter, we understand, says that her father was in the habit of making a large fire in the stove, just before retiring to bed, and of putting wood on the top of the stove, which he intended for kindling in the morning. This, then unravels the mystery. The wood on the stove took fire and brands fell on the floor, which being heated by the fire in the stove, easily kindled. Thus have this family fallen victims to a most heedless, but we beleive a very common practice. Let the awful consequences admonish all, that too much care cannot be taken to guard against the ravages of fire.

The family were undoubtedly smothered in their beds by the smoke. At the head of the bed occupied by Mr. Smith, was a window, which he might easily have opened had he been conscious of the danger he was in. Probably none of the family awoke from their sleep, but went from time to eternity unconscious of the transition. There is, indeed, but a step between the living and the dead.—Oswego Advertiser.

DEATH OF PRENTISS MELLEN.—The Eastern Argus, of Thursday, mentions the death of Prentiss Mellen, of Portland, aged seventy-six years. The Argus says, "Mr. Mellen was the oldest member of the bar in this country. He had practised here, we believe, since 1789. He was made Chief Justice of Maine, at the time of the separation from Massachusetts, and continued in that distinguished station until about six years ago, when he went out on the constitutional limitation. After that period, he engaged in the practice of law again, with almost youthful zeal, and continued in it until the sickness of which he died."

Hon. Felix Grundy died on the 19th ult. at Nashville. His place in the U. S. Senate will be supplied by Executive appointment until the next meeting of the Legislature, which does not take place till about a year from this time. Governor Polk will of course appoint a Democrat. The Legislature is decidedly Whig.

The name of the wretch, who committed the series of murders a few days ago in Southampton county, Va., is Drake, and he is now in jail awaiting his trial.

There arrived at Cincinnati on the Miami Canal, during the year ending 1st December, 165,762 barrels flour, being a large increase upon former years.

LYNCH LAW AT OBERLIN.—A most extraordinary and painful transaction occurred at Oberlin on the night of the 26th of July last, the affair was reported in the papers at the time, but, for want of positive proof, we forbore to repeat it to the public. The leading facts have now been brought to light by the action of the Presbytery of Huron, in the case of Mr. H. C. Taylor, for licentiate of that body, and an editor of the Oberlin Evangelist, who acted a prominent part in the affair.

It seems that a Mr. Norton, a member of the Oberlin Institute, was suspected of being the author of certain anonymous letters of a bad character, addressed to young ladies in the institution. The indignation of the virtuous was very naturally aroused by this outrage, and twelve young men, of whom Mr. Taylor was one, resolved to ferret out the scoundrel, and teach him better manners; for this purpose they opened an anonymous correspondence with Norton, and one of the letters, written with the privity of Mr. Taylor, purported to be from a young lady. They also employed a female to go upon the ground at a time and place designated, as a decoy, by which means Norton was entrapped and seized. Having secured his person, gagged and blindfolded him, the party consulted together for some time, and sorry are we to say, prayerfully, on the punishment they should inflict on him. They adjudged him to be guilty of writing the letters alluded to, and of attempting to mislead several young women in the place, and that he should be punished by receiving on his naked back 25 stripes with a raw-hide.—This sentence was inflicted by one of their number, not Mr. Taylor The Presbytery further say:

'The whole transaction was not completed until after the Sabbath had commenced. The young man was about seventeen years of age, and was directed before his release to leave the town forthwith without even going to his room. Mr. Taylor freely admitted that, as editor of the Oberlin Evangelist, he had fully discountenanced a resort to Lynch law. His apology for engaging in this transaction of lawless violence, is that the moral purity of the community at Oberlin, required that such measures should be adopted as the only effectual remedy in a case that the civil law did not reach—that there were many things in the Providence of God indicating it as a course of duty, and that their general plan of operations was submitted to one of the Professors in the theological department of the institution, and was assented to by him. While Mr. Taylor regards the inflicting of stripes as wrong, and asks the forgiveness of the Presbytery and of God, he still thinks as his mature, deliberate, and prayerful opinion, that, under the circumstances, all the other proceedings in the case were right and proper.'

We hardly need add, that in view of these facts in the case, the Presbytery have recalled the license of H. C. Taylor.—Connecticut Observer.

Among the callers on Mr. Clay on Tuesday at the Astor House were Aldermen Purdy and Nash, the first as acting Mayor of the city (in consequence of the prolonged illness of Mr. Varian) inviting Mr. Clay to make use of the Governor's Room in the City Hall for the reception of company during his stay in the city.—Mr. Clay seemed highly pleased with this compliment from his political opponents, and expressed his thanks cheerfully, but added, that as he was to leave town on the next day, he must decline the courteous proffer.—N. Y. paper.

THE MALEK ADHEL.—The Boston Patriot gives the following as an extract of a letter received by Messrs. Chapman & Willis, Liverpool, dated, Rio Janeiro, Sept. 13:—"Aug. 12, lat. 5, lon. 2d, I was boarded by a vessel which fired five times at us: four of the shots passed through the flying jib, and one through the topsail; a statement of which I gave to the Consul, and one to the Commodore here, and it seems the vessel is in Bahia. A brig of war has gone after her."

Mr. James Iliff, one of the Harrison Electors of New Jersey, died suddenly at his residence in the township of Newton, (Sussex co.) on Thursday last. He was writing at his desk, when the mortal pang assailed him, and, calling for assistance, he was conveyed to a bed, where in about 30 minutes he expired, without uttering a word. Mr. Iliff was an humble and unassuming Christian of the Methodist persuasion—an estimable citizen and a kind neighbor, with "a hand open as day to melting charity."

FOREIGN NEWS.

LATER FROM EUROPE.

The packet ship England, Capt. Waite, arrived Wednesday evening from Liverpool, whence she sailed on the 9th ult. She brings London dates to the evening of the 8th—five days later than our previous advices. The intelligence is favorable and interesting.

From the London Correspondent of the New York "New World."

LONDON, Saturday, Dec. 5, 1840.

On Thursday last, the greatest surprise was excited throughout the metropolis on learning that a boy had been found under a sofa in her Majesty's dressing room.—He was immediately given into custody.—He stated on being questioned, that he had, on Monday night, at nine o'clock, scaled the wall at Constitution Hill, and having reached the palace, effected an entrance at one of the windows. H not, however, been long inside bef considered it unsafe to stay, as he the steps of several persons moving and he therefore left by the same r he entered.

The next day (Tuesday,) abo o'clock in the evening, he again a an entrance over the wall on Const hill, and by a window, in the same ner as on the previous night; and h on to state that he remained in the the whole of Tuesday night, the day on Wednesday, and up till one on Thursday morning, when he w covered under a sofa in her Ma dressing-room, as above described.

The prisoner's name is Jones. H is about 17. He is the same yout effected an entrance into Bucki Palace, under similar circumstanc years ago He has worked with ther for some time as a tailor, b latterly acted as boy in the sho chemist in Westminster. His thinks he is of unsound mind. A repulsive looking young man is seen. At his examination at the office he assumed very consequentia desiring the police and others to a him in a respectful manner. As no we were found on him, he was senten three months imprisonment in the of Correction as a rogue and a vag

The remains of Napoleon have ed at Cherbourg, in France. They ed that place on the 30th ult. voyage was performed with great pedition than was expected. The fi ceremony is fixed for Thursday ne 10th inst. It will be a memorable sion in the estimation of all Frenc and in the history of France.

Louis Philippe, King of the Fren it is understood, a sufferer to a c erable extent by the failure of M Wright & Co., bankers, Hunretta

We have just seen a gentlema has been with the father of the man who entered Buckingham P and he says he has received the m gid injunction from the Home office the preservation of secresy resp his examination there. He men however, that he believes the ca the conduct of his son is a wish to himself into notice, as Oxford did by at the Queen.

LONDON, Tuesday Evening, Dec. 8

The overland mail from India has received this morning by extraord express. The news is of the utmos portance.

EGYPT.

By this conveyance dates are rec from Alexandria to the 26th. The l ade which was to have commenced 21st had been recalled, and on the 2 communication was conveyed from modore Napier to the Pacha, informi the Sultan's willingness to restore hi hereditary Pachalic of Egypt if the was immediately restored and the t withdrawn from Syria. This has bee ficially acceded to, and the war in th vant has now terminated. The arr ments were not finally concluded unt 26th, the main difference being as t manner of evacuating Syria. The P wished to march his army homewar land, but Commodoer Napier insiste their being transported by sea unde own immediate inspection.

CHINA.

From Bombay this mail brings dat the 31st October and Macao to the 4t August. The island of Chusan wa ken by the English on the 5th of the Chinese having fled on the disch of two broadsides. The squadron anc ed in the harbor the day previous, o site the chief town. A conference was with the leading Mandarians, who, o ing told they must surrender, prom an answer next morning, at the s time stating that they dare not for t own safety give up the place without s contest. As no communication was ceived on the following day, a shot fired over the town. This the Chi answered by discharging their batte and war junks. A couple of broads from the fleet produced a general sc per, and the British flag was soon ho on the fortifications. The loss of the nese was but trifling, not exceeding killed, among whom was the Governo the island. The English sustained damage of any description excepting Mellville frigate, which struck on a s ken rock.

INDIA.

The India news also possesses strong terest, by intelligence of the defeat of D Mahomed, near Berneau, on the 1 Sept. The Dost, supported by the Wa of Khohun, has collected from 7,000 10,000 men, to make one more desper attempt to recovery his throne, and fast advancing on Cabul. The Brit troops, numbering only 700, and th swarthy natives made an attack, wh they executed with such precision as throw the enemy into immediate con sion. They soon rallied, however, charged in the most ferocious manner The British stood the shock with gr coolness, and after an action of seve hours, forced the enemies' troops to flig leaving 500 men dead on the field, all their camp equipage, and all the hea pieces of ordinance in their possession They carried their wounded with the which are reckoned at 1500, among wh the Dost himself, and who has since f into Kohristan, with only a few followe The loss on the British side is said to 18 killed and wounded. This signal feat is most important in a political po of view, and will certainly prevent a further attempts from the same quarte

THE RECORDER.

ZANESVILLE:

EDNESDAY, ... JANUARY 20, 1841.

ORRECTION.—In our last number, in the ar- e which relates to the Protestant, the word rse' frequently occurs but is spelled 'course.' umber of copies were stricken off before the r was discovered. It was correct in the nuscript, but put up so through mistake.

THE WEATHER.—It continued warm until bath noon,—the wind veered to the west, n it cleared up cold, and is freezing pretty l. So, as Pete Gumbo said to Sam Jonsing, New Orleans, we now have "sudern weder wid deren principles."

Our Eastern papers come very irregularly, for e weeks past. The Philadelphia Saturday rier of the 26th ultimo, reached us on the h instant. We received three Daily Chron- s at one time. Some of our New York pa- s of two or three weeks back, have not reached yet.

THE ORPHANS.—We received, some time since, oem of twenty-two verses, so styled, from a th, which has considerable merit, but, is yet her defective for the press; and the writer not authorized us to mend. Indeed there oo much of it for that if he had.

The 4th number of the Christian World is eived. We will give an extract from its er in our next.

PRICES CURRENT.

ZANESVILLE.—Wheat has risen to 50 cts. is as we predicted, the millers would have to e to that at last, to get wheat. Now the ds are so bad they will get but little at 50.— ir mills have been idle; they are now all out shorts, so they cannot supply their customers h rough feed,—this they will have next sum- r laying on their hands spoiling. They had ter by far continued at 50 cents.

AT THE EAST.—Flour remains about at for- quotations. In Baltimore, at our last dates, price was said to be rather unsteady and the rket dull.

FIRE.—The saw mill of Isaac Dillon, connect- with the dam at the mouth of Licking, was sumed by fire on Saturday evening last.— se of fire we have not earned.

colored man by the name of Swede, living hort distance below town, in a dispute with family, was struck with an axe by his son, a of about 19 years of age, some four or five ws on Saturday evening, and mangled in a cking manner. He was alive the last we rd from him.

MUSKINGUM OBSTRUCTIONS.—Th McConnels- e Standard of the 15th instant, says, that Mr. its, of that town, has received instructions n the proper authorities, to make arrange- nts for the completion of the Lock at Devol's n.

What has become of the Lady's Book? We e not yet seen the number for January.

The Latter Day Saints, or Mormons, we learn n the Philadelphia Daily Chronicle, have com- nced, in that city, the publication of a semi- nthly sheet, to be called the "Gospel Re- tor."

A woman by the name of Flint, in Philadel- a, on the 10th instant, attempted to destroy husband, his sister and mother, by throwing vitrol upon them. The two former were siderably injured, but the last so badly that is thought she will not recover.

It is said in the Philadelphia papers that the tement of the United States Bank on the instant, shows the affairs of the institution a better condition than was supposed, and had the effect to restore confidence in her lity to resume payments.

TRYING IT AGAIN.—The publishers of the New rk New World have had such a call for the endid sheet we noticed in our paper of the h instant, that they could not near supply the nand. They propose issuing another "Leviathan" number so soon as they can make arrange- nts, for that purpose, of which due notice ll be given. It will be an extra and sold to oscribers at $8 per 100 copies; 10 copies, $1; single.

MURDERED WYANDOTTS.—Two men, in Hen- county, Ohio, have been arrested as the mur- rers of the Wyandott Indians, to whom we al- ded a short time since; their names are An- rson and Lyons; the former having no perma- nt home, the latter residing at present with widowed mother, where most of the goods ken from the Indians were found. They have en committed to jail in Napoleon, the seat of stice for Henry. Pursuit is made for a third rson suspected for being engaged in the mur- r also.

The Philadelphia Daily Chronicle charges Mr. ddle with interfering at the late election of e United States Bank for a Board of Directors, d defeating the stockholders. It states the ue of their paper to be over 11,000,000 dollars, ile the specie in her own vaults and those of her agencies, is but 2,171,722 dollars. The itor adds:

We bear no enmity whatever to the Bank of e United States, but on the contrary, believe to be, while in judicious hands and well man- ed, the most useful Banking Institution in e country, the great regulator of our exchan- s, and a healthful stimulant to trade and com- erce. There unquestionably was a time when e old institution was well managed, and exer- d an immense influence in favor of business over the country; the new one has experien- d many difficulties of late, and we fear that her struggles to do too much, an injury has en inflicted upon her monetary concerns which lls for a watchful and prudent course hereafter, prevent their resulting in the most serious nsequences.

LARCENY.—A company of boys have been ar- rested in Putnam for larceny. A correspondent says: "The party consisted of five and commen- ced operations at Mr. Wiles' store, A. B. & Co. next, and so through the town, calling at each store with the pretence of buying needles or some trifling article, while another of their company secreted sundry articles under his cloak, such as caps, shoes, small pieces of sattinets, &c. &c. Saturday evening, the 9th inst. they got to quar- relling among themselves, and the watch closed upon them and secured one of the boys, who has turned state evidence. They were all boys and young men, having, as has been proven, accom- plices in Zanesville."

The remains of Napoleon have arriven, and immense preparations are made to receive them. What is the reason the world will pay more at- tention to scoundrels than to honest men?

OHIO LEGISLATURE.

On the 8th instant, Mr. Worthington, of the House, presented the petition of 70 colored citizens of Chillicothe, for a repeal of all laws making a distinction on account of color. Mr. Jenkins moved to reject it, which motion was ultimately lost by a majority of 42 to 24. The petition was then referred to the committee on the Judiciary.

By a joint ballot of both Houses, on the 9th instant, Joseph Whitehill (Whig) was elected Treasurer of State; O. T. Fishback (Whig) President Judge of the 10th Judicial Circuit; Jacob Parker (Whig) of the 11th; J. R. Swan (V. B.) of the 12th.

On certain abolition petitions the Whigs go for their reception and reference, and the Van Buren members for their rejection. These move- ments are of some importance as they involve the right of petition. The petition of Mr. Walker, from Logan, to which we have alluded, which caused such excitement in the House, was referred to the committee on the Judiciary, who reported a resolution on the 9th instant, asking to be discharged from the further consid- eration thereof, which was agreed to.

The bill for the protection of religious worship was discussed on the 14th inst.; a call for the the previous question was not sustained, and the House adjourned. We have no further proceed- ings on the subject. Members seem to get very warm on this questio.

Mr. Nye, of the House, chairman of the com- mittee on Banks and the Currency, has reported a bill of 111 sections, the object of which is to create a State Bank of Ohio, with branches.— We have received the bill but have not had time to examine it.

GREAT FRESHET.—The Philadelphia Daily Chronicle describes a severe freshet in the Schuylkill, on the 8th instant, which entered the cellars and basements of the houses on its banks injuring much property, as well as carrying off a large amount of coal, wood and lumber of various kinds on its banks. A Mr. Thompson had sixty cords of wood carried off, for which he refused, the day before, eight dollars per cord, his asking price being ten. The offer was made by a benevolent institution who wanted it for the relief of the poor. So nobody pities him. The Delaware river was over the wharves some two feet. The Chronicle of the 11th instant, adds:

The heavy freshet experienced in this city for the past few days appears to have been felt with great loss in New York State, and farther east. The extensive Croton Water Works, which have cost the State of New York millions upon mil- lions of dollars, were in many places seriously injured by the freshet. The dam erected at Croton, and the new bridge over the dam, have been washed away. The bridges of the New York and Albany post road, and several mills, as well as dwelling houses, both above and below have also been swept away, and three persons, inmates of the dwellings, lost their lives. The flood came in the middle of the night, and with such rapidity that the people had scarce time to escape from their beds and seek refuge to the tops of trees.

More of the Freshet.—A gentleman from Bea- ver Meadows, reports that most of the dams on the Lehigh works, together with nearly all the fixtures at Mauch Chunk, have been carried away by the freshet.

The Freshet at Easton.—By a letter in the Pennsylvanian, the late freshet appears to have made considerable havoc in the vicinity of Eas- ton. The splendid bridge on the Delaware, about eight miles from Easton, together with several others, was swept away. The letter which is dated on the 8th says:

Last night Elam Lowrey, who keeps the grand lock at Coleman's dam, three miles above this place, together with his son were on the abut- ment of the dam at that place, when it gave way, and they were precipitated into the river. The son is believed to be drowned. Mr. Low- rey got hold of a log and floated down to this place, where he was taken off by Mr. John Beam, an intrepid citizen of our borough, in a batteau, at the risk of his life. He deserves to be immortalized for the heroic act. No one except an eye-witness can realize the irresistible force and destructive character of the flood.

Governor Porter, of Pa., delivered his annual Message to the General Assembly of that State on the 6th inst. We learn from it the following particulars:

It states, that the Banks of the Commonwealth, according to the best information he has derived, are prepared to resume specie payments at the time appointed by law.

The condition of the public improvements during the past year, has been attended to by the officers entrusted with their management, with untiring assiduity. They are in a much better state of repair than they ever have been since their construction, and but little delay or interruption in business has occurred.

The public debt is $36,720,775 69, and the State owns in bank, canal, rail-road, and other stocks, $36,498,370 06. The resources for pay- ing off the debt, though abundant, are not imme- diately available.

It recommends the enactment of a law author- izing the Canal Commissioners to treat with the authorities of the State of New York, for such a connection of our internal improvements with theirs, as will best promote the interest of the two Commonwealths.

The Geologist and his assistants have been actively employed in developing the mineralogi- cal features of the State. Much statistical in- formation has been derived from their labors, and a farther appropriation is recommended, in order to enable them to prosecute their searches.

The coal field of the Commonwealth embraces more than one fifth of its area, and more than three times as much as belongs to entire Europe, and large beds of iron are almost in immediate contact with it.

The citizens of Philadelphia have appointed a committee to consider the best measures ne- cessary to be adopted to prevent the western trade from taking the direction of Baltimore. They have issued a "circular" to the public, the following extract from which will give some idea of the difficulty:

"The character of the trade, by the Tide Water Canal, as evidenced this year, renders it certain, that unless measures are forthwith taken to furnish Cheap Transportation for the boats from Havre-de-Grace to Philadelphia, and back, the greater portion of middle and western Penn- sylvania business, as connected with the sale of produce, and purchase of merchandize generally, will inevitably attach itself to Baltimore; and, as a necessary consequence, a speedy, large, ef- ficient, and cheap communication between Bal- timore and Pittsburgh, and through Pittsburgh to the whole western country will follow; the effects of which, as respects the varied and gen- eral interests of Philadelphia, as now existing in the possession of the Trade of the Great West and Pennsylvania, need only to be stated to be properly appreciated by our Trading com- munity of all pursuits."

It appears from the statements of the commit- tee, that the trading interest of Philadelphia will have to provide for the towage of boats from and back to Havre-de-Grace, at a sacrifice upon the expence, in order to compete with Baltimore, as transportation is now less from that point, thither, than to Philadelphia. These two great cities will no doubt be industrious competitors for the trade of the west. The geographical sit- uation of Baltimore, in many respects, gives her the advantage of her rival.

Lyford, of Baltimore, in his paper of the 9th inst. remarks:

"There is considerable apprehension manifest- ed by some of the citizens of a neighboring city at the idea of a canal being constructed to con- nect the Tide Water Canal at Havre-de-Grace with Baltimore, and probably not without cause. For it is this finishing link only which Baltimore requires to place her in a position to compete with her contemporaries to the eastward, and it is what the enterprizing and enlightened farmer, miner, and trader in the great valley of the Susquehanna also requires, to give them a choice of markets—because, by such an improvement, the mineral and agricultural products of those prolific regions can reach the Baltimore market, at all seasons of business without detention, without risque, and at a less expence than pro- bably any other; if not, there is another market on the other side."

SMALL NOTES.—Bicknell, we believe, is about as good authority in money matters as any other in the country. His paper is neutral in politics, and he maintains this position so well that we have not been able to detect, from his columns, which way his political predilections lead him. Though some say they think he favors the lead- ing measures of the present administration.— Well, be it so. He gives it as his opinion that if the Legislature of Pennsylvania would repeal the act which prohibits the circulation of small notes, it would greatly facilitate the resumption of specie payments. We give the following ex- tract from an article of his on this subject, as matter of speculation:

"Our Legislature passed a bill prohibiting small notes, under the impression that thereby they would prevent the circulation of this description of paper altogether, would also introduce specie, and would thus benefit the currency in a perma nent sense, without the slightest disadvantage to business. Our citizens experienced the great- est difficulty for a time, for the want of small change, and they were compelled, in absolute ne- cessity, to resort to the small notes of other States, in order to transact the ordinary purposes of bu- siness. This description of paper is now circula- ting among us to an immense amount, and at a loss in interest, we are assured, of $100,000 per annum to Pennsylvania. The law therefore is violated by the community, while the citizens experience serious injury in a pecuniary point of view. On the resumption of specie payments by the banks, these small notes of other States will be employed as a matter of convenience, counterfeits will continue to appear, and much difficulty will be experienced, that might be measurably avoided at last, by the issue of notes by our own banks. It is a fact that cannot be too earnestly impressed upon the Legislature at this time, that in the States of the Union where small notes are permitted, the currency is better and the rates of exchange are lower than where such notes are prohibited. Another important fact is, that in States where specie payments have been continued throughout the period of suspensions in the South and West—in New York, Massachusetts and Connecticut, for exam- ple, small notes constitute a very large portion of the currency. It is not contended this kind of paper is better than specie, or as good, or that it should not be prohibited at the proper time."

We cannot think the following, which is an extract from an article in the "Petersburg (Va.) Intelligencer," can be any thing more than a burlesque. It certainly cannot be that grave and dignified Virginians would exhibit such con- summate folly on the arrival of a strolling dan- cing girl, whose whole exhibitions have little oth- er effect than to create laciviousness, and pro- duce dissipation of mind. If such consummate- ly ridiculous transactions ever took place, as is here stated, we have no other motive in record- ing them, but to put our readers on their guard against the deceptions and depravity of the hu- man heart, which is capable of such degrading folly.

THE DIVINE FANNY ELLSLER.—That "charm- ing danseuse"—that "accomplished artiste"— that "most graceful pirouetter"—that "admirable figurante," Mademoiselle Fanny Ellsler, has ap- peared on the boards of the "Marshall Theatre, George Jones, Lessee," and run all Richmond Opera-mad.

Her arrival in the Metropolis on Wednesday was announced by the ringing of bells and firing of cannon.

On her stepping from the cars at the Depot, she was met by the Mayor of the City, who, in a neat and appropriate speech, welcomed her to Rich- mond—after which a procession was formed, in the following order:

1. Mayor, Aldermen, and Common Councilmen.
2. Governor and Councillors of State.
3. Judges of the Court of Appeals.
4. A litter containing the Divine Fanny, borne on the shoulders of six members of the Senate of Virginia.
5. Members of the Senate of Virginia, headed by their Speaker.
6. Members of the House of Delegates, headed by their Speaker.
7. Members of the Sweat House Association.
8. The Officers of the Army and Navy.
9. Editorial Corps of the City of Richmond.
10. Citizens generally.

The procession moved from the Depot at pre- cisely 11 o'clock A. M., preceded by a brass band, and marched to the Capitol, when the Divine Fanny was escorted into the House of Delegates, and placed on the right of the Speaker, who call- ed the House to order. Several speeches welcom- ing the distinguished stranger to Virginia were made, and the House adjourned to meet at the Theatre at 7 o'clock P. M.

The procession was again formed and moved to the Marshall House where the Divine Fanny was comfortably enstalled in a magnificent suite of rooms.

During the remainder of the day, the house was crowded with visitors "of all ages, sexes and condition," who thronged in crowds to catch a glimpse of the illustrious stranger. Some peti- tioned for a lock of Fanny's hair—others for a piece of her shoe string—while many declared they would be content with a bit of her GARTER by way of a souvenir. Fanny was most agreeable and fascinating, and complied with all their requests with a kindness and amiability which was truly admirable. The day passed off agreea- bly and rapidly, and soon

"Night came,
And with her cloudy wings brought things,
Such as with his poetic tongue Young sung."

At 7 o'clock P. M. "precisely," the "Marshal Theatre, George Jones, lessee," was crowded from top to bottom: pit, galleries, and boxes, were crammed to suffocation, with ladies and gentlemen, men, women and boys.

The eastern exchanges received just as our pa- per was going to press, give moving descriptions of the effects of the late freshet in that region. A correspondent of Bicknell names five bridges on the Lehigh and one on the Delaware which were swept away, besides an immense amount of property. The Delaware, he states, was 35 feet above low water mark. Great damage has been done to bridges, dams, and public works, as well as to the grain, hay, and lumber along the water courses.

Just as our paper was going to press, we recei- ved a letter from Br. Miller, of New Castle, Pa., with eight new subscribers, making eleven, in all, recently forwarded by him. See what a lay brother can do in one village. He is entitled to the volumes of the Correspondent. How will you have them sent?

If our friends generally would but follow this example, there is no doubt but they could greatly cheer us at our toil.

Mr. Henderson, of the Senate, will please accept our thanks for several documents which he has had the goodness to forward to us.

ITEMS.

GEORGIA AND MAINE.—The Quaran- tine bill passed by the legislature of Georgia will not, it is believed, receive the sanction of the Governor.

MEXICO.—The latest intelligence from Mexico, states that all the bakers had suspended operations, owing to the scar- city of flour, which article was worth $35 a barrel.

FLORIDA.—The latest southern papers are filled with rejoicings at the capture of forty Indians, and the hanging of ten— there were illuminations and processions in consequence.

MORE OF THE FRESHET.—An immense deal of damage has been done by the freshet to the meadows along the Dela- ware, below the Point House. League Island has also been overflowed. Sever- al cattle on the Island, belonging to W. P. Hughes, Esq., of Southwark, have been drowned.

BRIDGES ASHORE.—Two of the bridges that came down the Delaware from above are ashore, one at the Pea Patch Island, and the other at the mouth of Raccoon creek. They are both covered bridges, and very long.

ELECTED.—An election was held on Monday last in the 10th Congressional District of Massachusetts, for the choice of a Representative. Nathaniel B. Bor- den, (Whig,) received 4320 votes, and Henry Williams, (V. B.) the present in- cumbent 3730.

MILITARY CONVENTION.—The members of this Convention will assemble at Har- risburgh on the 18th of this month, to de- liberate upon a proper plan for the amend- ment and reform of the militia system.

GONE AT LAST.—Died in Brookfield, N. H., 27th December, Jenny Kennison, aged 110 years. This is the lady repor- ted in the late census as the oldest person in New Hampshire.

THE BARRY CASE.—The Court for the Correction of Errors, by a vote of 19 to 3, have reversed the decision of the Su- preme Court in this case, and affirmed that of Judge Inglis—thus giving to the mother the custody of the infant.

MELANCHOLY.—An avalanche of earth fell on the premises of Judge Jabez Wright near Huron, Ohio, on the 15th ult. while he was standing on the brink of the lake, and buried him beneath the falling mass. the body was washed off by the waves and found the following day at Huron.

BURNED TO DEATH.—A colored woman named Susan Fricks, was burned to death in the destruction of a small house by fire, in Wilmington, Delaware, on Mon- day last.

RETURN OF MR. STEPHENSON.—The Richmond Enquirer says,—We under- stand that Andrew Stephenson, Esq. our accomplished Minister at the Court of St. James, has requested to be recalled. He may leave London, perhaps, about the 1st of March.

KENTUCKY.—A bill was reported on the 14th ultimo, in the Legislature of Ken- tucky, to remove the obstacles which now exist by law, to the purchasing of negroes brought from the states. A Frankfort correspondent of the Louisville Journal expresses a belief that it will not pass.

A DREADFUL SHIPWRECK.—A letter, says the New York Courier, has been re- ceived dated Accomack, 14th December, which states that a schooner was wreck- ed on the north end of Hogs Island, about the 20th of November, and all hands lost.

Three American fishing schooners have been condemned at Halifax, for encroach- ing upon the fisheries of that province, under the treaty of 1818.

ERASING AN ENDORSEMENT IS FORGERY. The Supreme Court of Ohio decided re cently, that an endorsement on a note purporting that a partial payment has been made, and which endorsement was written by the maker in the presence, with the concurrence, and by the direc- tion of the payee, is a receipt, the alter- ation or erasure of which, by the payee, will be forgery.

NEW WORK.—Mr. N. P. Willis is a- bout to publish a work called the Dollar Magazine.

RECOMMENDED.—The Legislature of North Carolina have adopted resolutions recommending their Senators and Repre- sentatives in Congress to vote for the bill to pay the spoliations by the French pre- vious to 1800.

BAIL GIVEN.—The Baltimore Patriot of Saturday states that Moyer Miller, ar- rested some time since in this state, on the charge of being a party to the late wagon robbers, was brought into court on Friday on a writ of habeas corpus, for further examination, which resulted in his being released from imprisonment on his own recognizance in the sum of $500 to appear at the February term.

HEIGHT OF FOLLY.—Telling an editor to "keep cool," who has to burn exchange papers to keep warm.

INDIANA.—In the House of Represen- tatives on the 23d ult., the committee on the Federal Relations, reported a joint resolution instructing their Senators and Representatives in Congress to vote for a repeal of the Sub-Treasury law; and on the 24th the committee on Ways and Means, reported a bill authorizing the State Bank to issue $1,000,000 in notes of the denomination of $1's, 2's, and 3's which are to be kept in circulation for 3 years from the 1st of January, 1841.

Hon. Francis Mallery (Whig) has been elected to Congress for the member of the present term from the Norfolk District, Va. in place of Hon. Joel Holleman, (V. B.) resigned. Mr. Mallery was a member of the last Congress, but beaten in 1839 by Mr. Holleman on political grounds Mr. H. now resigned because his district gives a large majority for Harrison.

Messrs. George C. Dromgoole and Fran- cis E. Rives, (both V. B.) members of Con- gress from Virginia, announce that they will not be candidates for re-election next April.

The Franklin Bank, of Baltimore, has stopped payment. It was pressed for the payment of a balance of $6,000 of the Merchants' Bank, but would give nothing but its own notes. The latter than refus- ed to receive its paper, when it struck its flag. It is said to be in a bad way, but there is little apprehension of loss except to the stockholders. Its President is James Howard, brother to Benj. C. Howard, M. C. from Baltimore.

GEORGIA.—The Legislature adjourned on the 22d ult. The day before the ad- journment the bill quarantining vessels from the ports of Maine was passed with an amendment proposed by the Senate.— The amendment provides that whenever the Governor of the State of Maine shall comply with his constitutional obligations to the State of Georgia, the Governor of Georgia shall suspend the operation of the law.

SHIPWRECKS.—The brig John Gilpin, Capt. Eyere, which left this port on the 1st, for Valparaiso, struck upon a bank near the mouth of the harbor. No assis- tance was rendered and the vessel will no doubt be a total wreck. She was own- ed by Mr. John Griswold & Co. The car- go was valued at $60,000, above half of which is insured.

By a letter received at Accomack, Va., it appears that a schooner was wrecked on Hog's Island about the 20th of November, and all hands lost.

Hon. John Leeds Kerr, of Easton, Cecil Co., has been elected by the Legislature of Maryland a Senator of the United States in place of Hon. John S. Spence, deceased. The vote in joint ballot was for Kerr, (Whig) 70: blanks 19; scattering 3.

NEW HAMPSHIRE LEGISLATURE.—The Legislature of New Hampshire adjourned on Thursday last, after a session of five weeks.

KENTUCKY AND A NATIONAL BANK.—Mr. Bullock's resolutions in favor of Mr. Clay's Land Bill, and also a National Bank, have passed the House of Repre- sentatives of that State by a vote of 73 to 18.

FATAL ACCIDENT.—Major Witsell, late of Charlston, S. C. was instantly killed on Tuesday the 22d ult. by the accidental discharge of a gun in the hand of a com- panion while they were riding out to hunt.

THE ELDRIDGE CASE.—The expense to the county, of the first trial of Dr. El- dridge, was between $1000 and $1100. The cost of the second trial now pending, will probably amount to at least three times that amount.

AN INCREASE.—At the accession of George III, to the throne, the debt of England was £120,000,000. At his death, it was $820,000,000.

AN OLD SUBSCRIBER.—The Newport, R. I., Mercury, in noticing the death of Mr. George Sisson of that town, states that he was a subscriber to the Mercury from 1780 to the time of his decease, a period of over sixty years.

DECISION.—In the Superior Court of New York, it has been decided, that land- lords cannot proceed for rent after remo- ving the tenant.

Business Department.

Our second quarterly meeting for Zanesville circuit will commence on the 13th of Feb. next, at Ebenezer meeting house, in the town of New Salem. We earnestly invite Brs. Ostrom, Scott, Myers, Maynard and Fairchild, with others who can make it convenient to attend.

WM. MUNHALL.

The second quarterly meeting for Eagle cir- cuit, will be held at Hamersville, Brown county, Ohio, to commence on Saturday, the 6th of Feb. at 11 o'clock. Br. Evans, the superintendent, requests Brs. Dobbins, W. Hughey, R. Rose and Br. Boyd, of Cincinnati circuit, to render their assistance at this meeting.

The next quarterly meeting for Cambridge cir- cuit will be held at the Lutheran meeting house, commencing the first Saturday in February.— Br. Marshall solicits help.

Rufus Richardson has sent us one dollar for the "Christian World." Br. Stockton will please direct his paper to "Divid M. Millner, Mount Pleasant, Jefferson, Ohio," and we will forward the above dollar when we get four more.

Br. Richardson gives the President notice that there will be an appointment for him in Mount Pleasant on Thursday night previous to his reg- ular appointment on that circuit, the Monday night following at Smithfield, and Tuesday night at Wesley chapel. His Sabbath appointment will be at Rehoboth.

VAN BUREN, HANCOCK, O., JAN. 6, 1841.

From Ruddle's Mills, I purpose crossing the river to Eagle creek circuit, there to spend the first Sabbath in March, if the Lord will. Thence, the 2d Sabbath in Highland circuit.

A. H. BASSETT.

Notice.

THERE will be a meeting of the household- ers of School District, No. 10, Springfield township, at the school house, at 3 o'clock, on Saturday next, to settle up the affairs of the Dis- trict and to determine about the ways and means of discharging the debts in building said house.

By order of the Directors.

January 23, 1840. 74

SCHOOL BOOKS.

Pierpoint's Series of Read- ing Books.

1. The American First Class Book.
2. The National Reader.
3. Introduction to the National Reader.
4. The Young Reader.

THESE four works, compiled by the Rev. John Pierpont, compose a series which is undoubtedly more suitable for the purposes for which they were designed, than any previous publications.

The series is used in the Boston Schools, and generally in the schools of New England, and other parts of the United States, and have been republished in England.

The estimation in which these books are held, may be judged of, in some degree, by such notic- es as the following:

"We deem this selection decidedly superior, in all the requisites called for in such a work, to any one we know. That reader must be fastidi- ous, and deficient in the extreme, who will not find in these extracts wherewith to regale himself. We can easily imagine how this fine writing will cause the bosoms of talented children to swell, and their eyes to glisten. We wish to see them relieved from the nackneyed and worn-out mat- ter of former selections; and we think we hazard little in saying, that it is a selection of exercises of a higher order, and more generally adapted to its design, than any other in the language."— Flint's Western Review.

"We are satisfied that no gentleman of good taste can look over this book without great de- light as well as instruction. The pieces are so rich in matter, so neat, and often so eloquent in expression, that they may be read again and again without weariness, and even with renew- ed pleasure. It may not be amiss to observe, that this book and the preceding have been highly thought of, as to be republished in Eng- land, a country from which, till within a few years, we have been accustomed to borrow all our books of this description."—Charleston (S. C.) Republican.

☞For sale by the quantity or single copy by

A. LIPPITT,
Main-st.

☞Teachers can be supplied with copies for examination on application as above.

Zanesville, O., Jan. 20, 1841. 74tf

Dr. Jayne's Family Medi- cines.

THESE medicines are recommended and ex- tensively used by the most intelligent persons in the United States, by numerous Pro- fessors and Presidents of Colleges, Physicians of the Army and Navy, and of Hospitals and Alms- houses, and by more than three hundred Clergy- men of various denominations.

They are expressly prepared for family use, and have acquired an unprecedented popularity throughout the United States; and as they are so admirably calculated to preserve HEALTH and cure DISEASE, no family should ever be without them. The proprietor of these valuable preparations received his education at one of the best Medical Colleges in the United States, and has had fifteen years' experience in an ex- tensive and diversified practice, by which he has had ample opportunities of acquiring a practical knowledge of diseases, and of the remedies best calculated to remove them.

These preparations consist of ☞JAYNE'S EXPECTORANT, a valuable remedy for coughs, colds, consumption, asthma, spitting of blood, croup, whooping coughs, bron- chitis, pleurisy, and inflammation of the lungs or throat, difficulty of breathing, and all diseases of the pulmonary organs. Price $1.

☞JAYNE'S TONIC VERMIFUGE. A pleasant, safe, and certain preparation for the removal of worms, dyspepsia, sour stomach, fever and ague, want of appetite, and all diseases of debility, especially of the stomach and bowels, and organs of digestion. Price 50 cents.

☞JAYNE'S CARMINATIVE BALSAM, a certain cure for bowel and summer complaints, diarrhœa, dysentery, cholic, cramps, sick head- ache, sour stomach, cholera morbus, and all de- rangements of the stomach and bowels, nervous affections, &c. Price 50 cents.

☞JAYNE'S SANATIVE PILLS, for fe- male diseases, liver complaints, costiveness, fe- vers, inflammations, obstructions, diseases of the skin, &c., and in all cases where an appointed alternative or purgative medicine is required.— Price 25 cents.

☞Also, JAYNE'S HAIR TONIC, for the preservation, growth and beauty of the hair, and which will positively bring new hair on bald heads and prevent its falling off or turning grey.

☞For sale at the store of

POTTS & GRAHAM.

Putnam, Ohio, Jan. 20, 1841. 74tf

COMMUNICATIONS.

For the Western Recorder.

Obligation of mankind to advance in the knowledge of truth.

Mr. Editor: Having observed in your number for December 23d, an invitation to correspondents to write "an occasional treatise on doctrinal points," I concluded to attempt a brief illustration of a doctrinal point, which, if it can be sustained as a true doctrine, will at once show the propriety of your invitation, and the obligation of your correspondents to comply with it. The point of doctrine is the following: God created mankind, and placed them on this earth, in order that, as social creatures, they should make constant advancement in the knowledge of truth.

The proposition applies to all mankind: when individuals make efforts to acquire knowledge, it should be to communicate it to others; and all should duly employ their thinking faculties, to treasure it up and improve them, that society at large may make constant progress in the knowledge of truth.

The evidence on which this doctrine rests, is the following:

First. The mental faculties, in their own nature, are susceptible of improvement, and cannot remain stationary without essential injury; just as a plant, if kept from that growth which is natural to it, will remain in a withering and sickly condition.

Secondly. The desire of knowledge is deeply planted in the mind, with a conscious delight arising from every new discovery of truth; which shows the intention of its Creator, for the human mind to advance in knowledge; and this inherent desire to know the truth, and this delight in the discovery of it, would produce a regular advancement in all men, if they were not obstructed by various conflicting causes.

Thirdly. The means of knowledge are within us and all around us, and naturally invite the mind to contemplation: which facts abundantly evince our Maker's intention, that all these paths of improvement should be pursued by the intellect of man. If we lift up our eyes to the heavens, or look upon the earth beneath; if we attend to the structure of our bodies, or to the constitution of our souls, we are impressed with interesting indications, that there is something in all these matters well worthy our research, that we may acquire a more adequate and satisfactory knowledge both of ourselves and of our Creator.

Fourthly. The constitution of society, as established in nature, shows the design of the Author of nature, for mankind to advance in knowledge. We are born ignorant of ourselves and of every thing about us, and are dependent on parents and tutors for the amount of knowledge that is necessary to keep us from running into destruction. These parents and tutors have to keep their own attention alive to the various means of knowledge, and to the evidences of truth, in order to be qualified to instruct the rising generation; and the best school-master is he who studies most to improve his own mind, that he may keep in advance of all his pupils, and thereby continue qualified to be their teacher. This shows the intention of Him who constructed human society, that no part of it should remain stationary.

Fifthly. Social happiness depends very greatly upon advancement in general knowledge: for the causes which interrupt social happiness, are for the most part, the offspring of ignorance, and of those passions and prejudices which ignorance promotes and strengthens. The more knowledge individuals have, the better they understand how to promote the happiness of society, and the more clearly do they perceive that their own individual welfare depends upon maintaining that of the community. The same thing that is thus true of one individual, is true of all; and hence it is the duty of all to make the necessary advancement in knowledge, in order to promote the common welfare. Now, if it be admitted, that God intended mankind should enjoy social happiness, and that general knowledge is necessary to this end, it follows that it is the will of God for entire society to make improvement, and thus regularly to advance in the knowledge of truth.

Sixthly. The same divine intention is indicated by the wonderful variety of mental talent and qualification. Some are peculiarly fitted, both by capacity and mental taste, to make improvements in mechanical knowledge; others in agriculture; others in geography and history; others in grammar and languages; others in government and political economy, and others in ethics and theology. Now, all these branches of knowledge are necessary to the common welfare of society, and for the world to march forward to that high destiny which its wise and benevolent Creator intended. But in order to this, it is not more necessary for a few men to study and to communicate what they acquire, than it is for all men to examine their instructions and to treasure them up in their minds: therefore, it is the duty of all men, and not of some only, to labor for a regular advancement in the knowledge of truth.

Seventhly. All truth leads to a true knowledge of God. The more we know of God, the more cause do we find to repose confidence in Him, and the more clearly do we see, and the more powerfully feel our obligation to honor and glorify Him; but He intended that mankind should confide in Him and honor Him; therefore, He intended that they should make regular advancement in the knowledge of truth, which so clearly shows forth His glory.

Lastly. The Apostle Paul says to the Corinthians, "awake to righteousness and sin not; for some have not the knowledge of God; I speak this to your shame." 1 Cor. xv, 34. This implies, that a knowledge of God tends to prevent sin, and that it is a shame for men to be destitute of this knowledge, because the means of it are within their reach. To the Hebrews the same Apostle says, "ye are dull of hearing. For when for the time ye ought to be teachers, ye have need that one teach you again, which be the first principles of the oracles of God." Heb. v, 11, 12. This was addressed to the whole body of the people; therefore, it proves that it is the duty of the whole body to aim at improvement, so that they may become qualified to be "teachers," instead of passively remaining "such as have need of milk and not of strong meat."—To which may be added the words of the Apostle Peter, that christians are not only to "grow in grace," but also, "in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ;" and likewise the words of our Saviour himself, "this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent." John xvii, 3.

The conclusion has long been rested in by many, that such scripture passages refer exclusively to experimental knowledge; to which we may justly reply,—first, that although there may be mental knowledge without experimental, just as there may be morality without religion, yet mental knowledge is as essentially associated with experimental, as morality is essentially associated with religion. Secondly, the practice of making experimental knowledge an excuse for mental ignorance, is a practice for which no authority can be found in the oracles of God.

From the whole subject, I draw these two inferences:

First, that ignorance is NOT the mother of devotion.

Secondly, that the favorite dogma, that in divinity or theology, the world ought to remain stationary to the end of time, for fear of running into heresy, and for fear of detracting from the honor and authority of the fathers, is a groundless prejudice gotten up and promoted by ecclesiastical policy; and that there is no more reason in it, than in the proposition that natural philosophy ought to remain stationary, in deference to the honor and authority of Sir Isaac Newton; or that intellectual philosophy ought to remain stationary, for fear of calling into question the infallibility of Dr. Reid, and of Dugald Stewart.

Presuming, Mr. Editor, that you do not desire to have long articles, I shall reserve the further illustration of this subject for a subsequent communication. Yours, truly, A. Shinn.

For the Western Recorder.

"RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE."

This is a favorite department in many religious periodicals. And it is pleasing, profitable and encouraging, to read of the success of the gospel, and missionary enterprise—but like all other good things, this is liable to abuse—and the lovers of far-famed revivals, are often fed on chaff, or unreal and exaggerated accounts of revivals—furnished by sincere enthusiasts, or those who love to see their names emblazoned on the chronicles of fame. The time was, within my recollection, that revivals were like the Saviour advised the giving of alms—although, perhaps, more deep and genuine, than some now puffed in newspapers. Some accounts of revivals, remind me of straw-fires—which soon disappear—and perhaps some, about which they give glowing accounts, are fires of their own kindling—in which the spirit of God has little to do—some of these have come within my own observation, which have been of short duration, and when the effects or fruits were inquired for, were not to be found.

To count the number at the mourner's bench, or that profess religion, or join the church, is now a desideratum—altho' many such are short-lived—and but little change in their demeanor is visible—as volatile as ever—no one would suppose that they had professed religion! The revival in Kentucky, in 1790, was thorough—the floors and the ground was often covered with the slain—no persuading to come to the altar—such things were unknown—the word preached, in demonstration of the spirit and with power, produced the effect. Few to labor with mourners, and no counting, and exaggerating the number of converts—the work was deep, and the effect permanent. The Lord was in Zion—when she came up out of the wilderness leaning on her beloved—and little in her own sight. G. L.

For the Western Recorder.

Friend Springer: An apology is due from me to you readers for not marking the communication, published in your paper of the 30th ultimo, private, I did not intend it for publication. And, I am not only bound to apologize to you for overlooking the publication of my little squib vs. baptism coming in the room of circumcision, but I feel bound to ask pardon—and do, hereby, ask your forgiveness.

As it regards my strictures on a former apology of yours, I may have been too sensitive, and no doubt was; inferring that I was one of those scribblers not worth answering—forgive this weakness also; the reasons assigned by you are satisfactory—and you stand higher in my estimation than before this little chiding and explanation took place.

As it respects my arguments against baptism coming in the room of circumcision, all I have to say at this time is, that you demolish them if you can, by fair and scriptural arguments, taking care that you do not make Paul a hypocrite, by trying to make the Jews believe that he did not teach the Jews among the Gentiles not to circumcise their children—he was accused of doing so, but took a vow and entered into the Temple to prove that the accusation was false. If neither Paul nor any other Apostle ever taught the Jews not to circumcise their children, the fair inference is, that they did continue to circumcise, and if so, that baptism did not come in the room of it. But I shall wait till you demolish this argument before I strengthen it by others equally strong in my estimation. But I agree with you, that pre-possession has, in determining the strength of arguments, great influence; that which appears strong in my estimation, may be weak in yours; and, vice versa I am aware, that among your readers, my arguments must be strong indeed, if yours do not seem to out-weight them. Not but what I consider your readers as intelligent and honest as any other man's readers, the proof of this is manifest in sustaining your paper, but their pre-possessions are on your side, and where that is the case, bare assertion is sometimes mistaken for proof.

Thus far, you have measurably avoided that prominent inconsistency every where met with among pædo-baptists, namely, that of condemning immersion, and at the same time admitting it to be valid and practising it themselves, opposing those that preach it and then acknowledge it to be a divine institution.

This course, not only shows inconsistency, but it shows a true sectarian spirit—let them join our party and immersion is not objectionable, it is then as good, if not better, than either sprinkling or pouring. I say better, because no body disputes its being baptism.

Respectfully, yours,
M. Winans.

Jamestown, Ohio, January 7, 1841.

For the Western Recorder.

THOUGHTS ON MEDICINE.

See, the critic takes his measure and his balance; he measures you by his height, weighs you by his weight, and estimates you by his value; he has no other rule for his judgment. If, in writing, you show energy and fire, he says it is mere emphasis and declamation—if you display elegance, he calls it tinsel and affectation—if you are simple and natural, he asserts you have fallen A-W-K-wardly in common places—if you show learning, according to him, it is pedantry—if you are sparing of quotations, you are a-w-k-wardly ignorant of what has been done before your appearance upon the stage of action. The magnifying glass of his malevolent criticism alters and distorts every thing. What is to be done? Wait. This great man, so difficult to be satisfied, takes up his pen, and, wonderful to say! his subject is hacknied, his principles false, his logic pitiful. Add to this, his style is incorrect, heavy, flat and wearisome, and no one is so ignorant as not to be aware of the fact, that the style is a true characteristic of the man.

As there are nearly ten thousand organs in the human body, and each of them has a multitude of parts, which are themselves divisable, until we arrive at atoms, subject to molecular affinities, then setting out from this point, descending from harmonies to harmonies, from one organic sphere to another, we arrive at the ensemble, the whole, the sensive and moral unity, the "I." This is man. But of what does this vital and plastic force consist? What is the hidden bond, the primordial element, which generates this surprising variety of action? The unknown quantity in this problem has not been discovered. All the parts of the body have life, and yet they converge towards this unity with an admirable concord; every faculty terminates and loses itself in the abstract and hyper-organic faculty of personality. By what means does nature effect this great phenomenon? The triple scale of ignorance still covers our feeble eyes. What problems to resolve, what veils to lift, what depths to sound! You may now understand the splendor of Stenon's words: (Pulchra sunt quae videntur, pulchriora quae sciuntur sed longe pulcherrina quae ignorantur;) if you are irritated against a criticism; it annoys, it wounds you.—Weigh it well, however; if it is by a fool, forget it; if it is by an envious man, forgive it; if it is by a severe friend, make use of it. In any case, remember that it requires as much talent to profit by a good critique as to be able to do without it.

In conclusion; there is nothing new in the doctrine of the Thompsonians. It is that which emperics and imposters in all parts of the world have constantly pursued. It is the crude dogmas of bold and impudent pretension which these ignorant and barbarians, Charlatans, substitute for the matured results of severe study, and extensive and profound knowledge and experience in those numerous branches of science, an intimate acquaintance with which is absolutely indispensable to him who ventures upon the perilous and responsible office of exploring the terra incognita which lays between life and death. The Thompsonians, therefore, stand in an inverse ratio to civilization and common sense, and are always found hovering on the confines of new countries and new settlements, and in the narrow lanes and about the wharves of densely populated cities, where, like carron crows or turkey-buzzards, they prey and feed upon the offscourings and offalls of the population, who, as grossly ignorant and superstitious as themselves, become the ready victims and dupes to the vile tricks and a-w-k-ward nostrums imposed upon them. But looking at Thompsonianism, or the a-w-kward and fatal administration of their famous new emetic panacea, lobelia, an old and well known remedy, by the by, in the most favorable light, these panders to human folly and credulity, who so unmercifully fleece the miserable victims of their cupidity, forget in their outcry against mercury and arsenic, and other mineral medicines, to which I in a great measure respond, that the most dangerous medicines known, and those most immediately destructive to life, are, alas! from the vegetable kingdom. Take morphia for example, or strychine, or emertine, or the croten oil, or elaterwm, or henbane, or bellebore, or belladonna, and a thousand other vegetable poisons, and which annually destroy, by being improperly administered or eaten by mistake or design, so many lives. Now, we are fully persuaded it is bad enough to be murdered, secisndum artem, by licensed practitioners, as a certain portion of us must be content to be, by the swarms of inexperienced tyrois with which our country is annually inundated from medical colleges, and who, for want of bedside knowledge and close application to dissections, and pathological and surgical anatomy, must necessarily kill their way into practice, like Baron Wenzel, who destroyed, he confessed, a hat full of eyes before he could operate successfully. This is bad enough, and we must put up with it; but to have your regular murderers to butcher us, sans ceremonie, with their steam and lobelia, we raise our humble voice against it, and cry aloud, down with quackery, down with imposters. A. W. Knight, M. D.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

For the Western Recorder.

PITTSBURGH CIRCUIT.

Mr. Editor: This circuit continues in a prosperous condition. We have peace in all our borders, and general mutual confidence and affection among the members. The social meetings are generally well sustained—lively and profitable. Our last quarterly meeting, (held at Bakerstown,) was a season of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. The members in attendance were generally much revived and strengthened in their religious purposes and attachments. Seven were united to the church at that place. We were very profitably assisted in the labors of the meeting by Br. Burns, of Allegheny station.

Br. Porter and I have since held a two-days' meeting at Braddock's Fields, which was well attended by the members and citizens of that neighborhood, nothwithstanding the exceeding inclemency of the weather, a snow of ten inches depth having fallen during the meeting. All things considered, it was an interesting and profitable meeting.—This church is gradually rising.

On Christmas forenoon Br. Porter delivered a very interesting address to the parents, teachers and scholars of the Sabbath School in Sharpsburgh, at the conclusion of which a good "Sabbath School Society" was formed, and funds sufficient pledged to furnish and keep up a good library. This institution is now an important auxiliary to the church in that place. On the evening of the same day I lectured to a large congregation on Temperance; thirty-five names were added to the pledge. Total abstinence is the order of the day with them. So you see our people here go in pretty liberally for the moral and benevolent enterprises of the day.

On New Year's eve we held a watch-meeting in the same place, at which the Lord manifested Himself most graciously to His people. We have since been holding meetings every night, and the Lord has sanctioned our endeavors, and revived His work: glory to His name. Our congregations have been regularly good, and solemnly attentive to the word of life. And we have had some special seasons of Divine influence among the people. The church has been greatly revived—some souls have been converted—many are anxiously seeking the Saviour—from seven to ten have distinguished themselves at the altar, as penitent inquirers, each of the three past evening.—May the Lord carry on His work among us.

Shortly previous to the last named meetings I returned from Br. Inskeep's protracted meeting at New Castle, and have been requested to furnish some account of its progress and results subsequent to Br. Inskeep's communication respecting it. In company with two worthy lay brethren from Pittsburgh, I arrived at the meeting on the evening appointed for its close. The appointments were renewed, and for seven successive evenings were favored with large congregations, and occasionally with a burst of rich devotional feeling in their midst. After preaching an invitation was regularly given to awakened inquirers to meet us at a private room, where we were as regularly meet by from seven to fifteen penitent souls, and each evening as regularly witnessed the happy conversion of from five to eight precious souls. I believe the average number "born again" each night, was seven. The meetings continued to increase in interest until the last, and on the evening previous to our leaving awakenings were more numerous and powerful than on any that preceded. The number converted to God during the meeting, up to the time of my leaving, as nearly as could be ascertained, was seventy, fifty-six of whom had united with our church. This number embraces a large proportion of young men of great promise to the church, and includes also, parts out of some of the most influential families in the community. Thus the well-directed, persevering and laborious efforts of Br. Inskeep, have been crowned with glorious success; and the place he has obtained in the affections and confidence of an intelligent and liberal people, is a great reward; but how infinitely surpassing will be the reward when all the faithful fellow laborers shall return from the harvest, bringing their sheaves with them, and enter where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are forever at rest.

But this interesting church has no house of worship. We were kindly favored with the M. E. house during the meeting, but the school house to which they have now to retire, will not contain over half the congregation; neither are they able to build such a house as they need without foreign help. Will not brethren at a distance, as a thank offering to God, for what He has done for us, as a people in New Castle, send them some aid? They have set about building, and any thing sent in aid to Br. W. B. Miller, New Castle, Mercer county, Pennsylvania, will be thankfully received and judiciously applied to this object. Jno. Clarke, Jr.

Allegheny, Pa., January 6, 1841.

P. S.—I learn from a letter just now received from Br. Miller, that though they have had no preaching since I left, they have kept up prayer meetings regularly, and the Lord has been working with them; says my informant, "we have the best state of feeling I ever witnessed," "at nearly all our meetings some have professed religion." "We now number seventy-six,—sixty-seven of whom have united during our meeting." He also states that $500 are subscribed towards building. J. C.

Braxton Co., Va., Dec. 21, 1840.

Mr. Editor: Sutton circuit is located principally in Braxton and Nicholas counties, Va. It was formed by Br. Wm. G. Williams. Owing to its remoteness from the main body of our conference, it has had to endure some difficulties and discouragements in relation to a supply of ministerial service. But during the last year it has improved, and is still getting stronger. We now have twenty-three appointments, adopted by the quarterly conference, six regular organized classes, and one hundred and twenty members.

In Sutton, county seat of Braxton, we have a good class; thence seven miles south we have another small class; twenty miles west from that at the mouth of Big Birch we have another; thence we go up Big Birch south-east forty miles into the Glades on the Gauly river, and preach three times; from the Glades we go thirty miles north to the Union mills, where, on Saturday last I preached the funeral of a mother in Israel, whose age was 102 years and 5 months. She retained the spirit and power of religion until her departure from the world. At the Union mills we have a class; thence we go to the Flatwoods where we also have a class; thence we pass by the way of Bulltown to the West Fork of the Monongalia, sixteen miles above Weston: thence by the way of Oil creek and Bryon's Fork to Sutton, the place of beginning.

Our last quarterly meeting was a good one. The power of the Lord was felt, particularly in love feast and on Sabbath night. Believers were encouraged to go on their way to holiness,—mourners were converted, and some were added to the church. Yours, &c.,
Henry T. Lawson, Sup.

Connelsville, Pa., Jan. 5, 1841.

Br. Springer: Having to write on business, I will say that God has not forgotten to be gracious to His people on Union circuit, but according to the multitude of His tender mercies, has blessed us with a season of refreshing from His presence. Our first quarterly meeting was held at the Franklin meeting house, on the land of our much esteemed friend, Col. James Paul. Here, of a truth God has recorded His name, and here He has an excellent people, not merely Methodist Protestants, but of other denominations, and especially Presbyterians.

We looked forward to our meeting with considerable anxiety and enlarged expectations, hoping, praying and believing that God would then and there revive His work; and blessed be His name, we were not disappointed. We rejoiced, and no doubt but angels did too, to see sinners renounce their sins, crowd to the anxious seats, seek and obtain redemption in the blood of Jesus.

During our meeting a number of interesting conversions took place, some of which I would like to notice particularly but have not room.—Fifteen united with the church, which makes twenty-one since conference. We were favored with a visit from Br. Hopwood, who labored zealously and successfully during the meeting. My worthy colleague, Br. Davis, shows himself a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth.

Yours, &c. James Robison.

Adams Co., Ia., Jan. 4, 1841.

Br. Springer: As you once observed of Br. Joel Wood, I have taken another "dodge." You will therefore please to change the direction of my paper from Rochester, Warren county, Ohio, to Willshire, Van Wert county, O. Although I am settled in the wilderness twelve miles* from a post office, I cannot reconcile it to my mind to do without your valuable paper, which is always read with much interest, especially as it is the only P. M. preacher in this section of country. But we hope for better times. There are five members from the Waynesburg class of the Monongahela circuit, in this neighborhood, and we do trust that we will yet be favored with a preacher, at least occasionally.

Yours, affectionately,
S. S. Mickle.

*Several of our subscribers have discontinued because of their inconvenience to a post office. We ask their attention to the above.—Ed.

Puff! Puff! Puff!!

CHEAP!

CHEAPER THAN EVER! GREAT BARGAINS!

New York at your door!

SELLING OFF AT COST!

We so heartily despise the "gull-catching" system that we seldom advertise at all. We however give our friends and the public notice that we have just received a fine stock of

FALL AND WINTER

GOODS.

We don't profess to have brought "New York to your doors," nor to undersell every body else, nor to be "selling off at cost," nor to be "closing up," and all that sort of thing,—but we do say, that our goods are cheap enough to satisfy any reasonable person, even in these "hard times."

A. A. Guthrie & Co.

Putnam, Ohio, September 30, 1840. 3w58

New and Cheap Goods.

Potts & Graham, are now enabled by a fresh arrival of FALL and WINTER GOODS, to offer to the public a very general assortment of all articles in their line. Their stock is almost ENTIRELY NEW, and embraces a complete supply of DRY GOODS, GROCERIES, QUEENSWARE, HARDWARE, &c. All of which they will sell upon such terms, and conduct their business throughout upon such principles, as cannot fail to afford permanent satisfaction to all who may favor them with their custom.

☞Most kinds of country produce, including any quantity of new Butter, will be taken in exchange for goods.

Putnam, Ohio, Nov. 4. 63tf

Winslow's Compound

BALSAM OF HOARHOUND.

Unrivalled and unequalled in curing Colds, Coughs, Asthma, Influenza, Whooping Cough, and all diseases of the Breast and Lungs, leading to Consumption, composed of the concentrated virtues of the herbs Hoarhound, Boneset, and several other vegetable substances, warranted pure from any mineral whatever.

Sold by A. Lippitt and S. Gates.

Zanesville, Nov. 4. 64tf

William Green,

CLOCK AND WATCH REPAIRER, SILVERSMITH AND JEWELLER,

Can be found at his shop on Main street Putnam, a few doors north of J. C. Guthrie's store, where he will do his best to accommodate customers. He keeps on hand an assortment of spectacles, watch trimmings, pencils, &c.

As far as we have tried Mr. Green as a watch repairer he has given us good satisfaction.—Ed.

April 22, 1840. 25tf.

THE LARGEST AND CHEAPEST

FAMILY NEWSPAPER

☞IN THE WORLD.☜

ONE DOLLAR PER ANNUM!

When subscribed for in Clubs of ten or more

COMMENCEMENT OF A NEW YEAR.

ALEXANDER'S

WEEKLY MESSENGER

Will be materially improved in its typographical appearance, at the beginning of the next volume in January, 1841. The publisher has made such arrangements as to justify him in announcing to the public, that this paper shall continue to take precedence of all its competitors, as it has heretofore done, and all the facilities which his extensive printing establishment can afford, with the aid of his numerous literary correspondents at home and abroad, shall be united to make the WEEKLY MESSENGER still more satisfactory to its THIRTY-FIVE THOUSAND PATRONS, distributed as it is, thro' every section of the Union. Every exertion will be used to keep equal pace with the advancement which is constantly making in the character of the newspaper press, and the publisher pledges himself that his journal shall, in all departments, afford to its readers a full and comprehensive view of the important events which are continually transpiring in our own Country and the European World! The actual fact is, that the Weekly Messenger is just such a newspaper as persons living out of large cities, require, and will be pleased to receive—and the publisher, after an association of twenty years with the newspaper press, pledges himself that his journal shall not be excelled either as respects its moral and literary reputation, or the early dissemination of news and other important and useful information. "Go a-head," is his principle, and he has never failed to carry it out to the fullest extent.

The WEEKLY MESSENGER is published every Wednesday, on a beautiful white sheet of the largest class. Single copies are forwarded to subscribers, every week during the year, for Two Dollars, in advance—or ten persons clubbing together, can have it for the same period by forwarding the publisher a Ten Dollar Note free of postage, which is less than any paper of the same size can be furnished by any other office in the United States.

A variety of beautiful engravings will be given in regular succession, which will be accompanied by appropriate sketches of such a description as to render them particularly deserving the attention of the public.

Over Thirty Thousand.

With the immense circulation that has been received for the Weekly Messenger, during the years past, since its commencement, we are bold to say, that no paper has ever been distributed to the same number of patrons with fewer causes of complaint—in fact, we have the most careful and trustworthy Clerks now in our employ, and no inducements are withheld to make them attentive and systematic in the discharge of their various duties; therefore, persons subscribing for the Paper at a distance, may rely on receiving it regularly and punctually by the due course of the mail.

All the contemporary Weekly Press in the Atlantic cities head their subscription papers with the imposing caption of "Largest and Cheapest!" Now, we propose that no person who can not satisfy himself after one year's trial that the Weekly Messenger is emphatically what we have said it is, and therefore is best entitled to patronage, that we will confer on every one making such discovery a Free Subscription for the space of another year.

At the expiration of the term subscribed and paid for, by Clubs the paper is invariably discontinued, unless the Subscriptions are renewed. All letters must be post paid, or they will not be taken out of the Post Office. Address

CHARLES ALEXANDER,
Athenian Buildings, Franklin Place, Phil.

PREMIUMS

FOR FIFTEEN SUBSCRIBERS.

Any Agent or Postmaster who shall forward to our address Fifteen Dollars, will be entitled to Fifteen Copies of the Messenger for one Year, and either of the following works:

Alexander's Travels, in two volumes.
The Art of Dining, a popular book.
Andrew, the Savoyard, a novel in two volumes.
Charcoal Sketches, by Neal.
Genius and Wisdom of Shakspeare.
Henrietta Temple, a novel in two volumes.
Health and Beauty, a volume much asked for.
Indecision, a favorite novel.
Miss Leslie's Cookery, for married folks.
The Picture of Philadelphia.
Whispers to a Newly Married Pair.
The Prayer Book, 18mo. Neatly bound.
Every Body's Album, with engravings.

FOR THIRTY SUBSCRIBERS.

Any agent or post master who shall forward thirty dollars to our address, will be supplied with thirty copies of the Messenger for one year—and also to be entitled, as a premium, for the same to one copy of either of the following valuable works:

Gooch on Females and Children.
American Flower Garden Directory.
Gregory's Mathematics.
Pambour on Locomotive Engines and Railways.
Scott's Life of Napoleon.
Pilgrimage to Jerusalem and Mount Sinai, by Baron Geramb, two volumes.
1000 Night's Entertainment, five volumes.

FOR FIFTY SUBSCRIBERS.

A copy of either of the following works will be furnished to any agent procuring a club of fifty subscribers—or, if it should be preferred, two of the first named premiums will be given instead.

Lockhart's Life of Walter Scott.
Treatise on the Management and Disease of Cattle.
Holy Bible, quarto, with beautiful engravings.

TERMS OF THE

Weekly Messenger,

PER ANNUM—Payable in advance:

One Subscription, - - - - - - - - $2 00
" " six months, - - - - - 1 00
Four Subscriptions (a 1,25) - - - - - 5 00
Ten Subscriptions (a $1) - - - - - 10 00

All who desire to secure the paper from the commencement of the volume, will please forward their names immediately.

☞Postmasters and other gentlemen, who interest themselves to extend our circulation, may rest assured that the most strict and early attention will be given to their orders.

☞To secure agents and others from imposition, we guarantee to forward our paper to all who send us payment in advance, directed to the Philadelphia Post Office, which order, if received there, with the remittance, will be our acknowledgment of the same, and consequently the paper will be regularly sent for the time stipulated. Charles Alexander.

December 30, 1840. 6w71

An Apprentice Wanted.

The subscriber wishes to take a boy of 12 or 15 years of age, to learn the Tailoring Business. One from the country will be preferred. Applicants must come well recommended.

W. Berkshire.

Main street, Putnam, Ohio.

December 16, 1840 69

Drugs, Medicines, Paints, Dyestuffs, Oils and Spirits Turpentine. Cheap for cash or good horses, by A. Lippitt.

Main st., No. 72, Zanesville, Nov. 4. 63tf

THE WESTERN RECORDER.

PRINGER, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER. | Vol. 2.--No. 23. | ZANESVILLE, OHIO, WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 27, 1841. | Whole No. 75. | JOHN W. WHITE, PRINTER.

O DOLLARS PER ANNUM IN ADVANCE. | $2.50, IN THREE MONTHS; $3, END OF YEAR.

OMMUNICATIONS.

For the Western Recorder.

E STUDY OF HUMAN ANATOMY.

us truly said by the great Aberne- t "Anatomical knowledge is the undation on which the structure cal science can be built." And it evident to reason and manifested ical history, that this knowledge y be attained and improved in one here is no royal road to the attain- f medical knowledge, the path ve have to pursue is long and diffi- our progress we must frequently our abode with death and corrup- Nay, we must even risk and injure n health in order to be able to e or restore that of others. Whilst g thus, for the public good, is it asonable to expect co-operation ouragement on the part of the

But instead of encouragement met by an array of popular preju- itter invective and legalized atro- For be it known that the enact- f the statute book have legalized osurd prejudices.

the absurdity of human legisla- en made to conflict with the best of those whom it should defend. gh time that the laws of society o longer present the monstrous tency of making a physician pun- for the mal-treatment of a patient, punishable for resorting to the eans by which he can get informa- surgical cases. A sweeping leg- on dead bodies does appear to us because, it makes of consequence f matter, which must speedily re- he elements which compose it. all due deference to the existing es of society, permit me to inquire the most horrible and revolting, iliating process of decomposition, uarks the end of the lower orders imal creation, or the useful sep- of the constituents of the body by tomist. The fiat is irrevocable, ou art and unto dust thou shalt

It is manifest that funeral ser- ils not the dead. The very sub- ual of that service places before ls the valueless nature of the dead the most emphatic language.— "doth teach us to render the mercy" and benevolence to those d them, which deeds, can never rly administered to the afflicted a knowledge of the structure of an body. This truth might be il- l by the recorded presumption of s. Instance a few cases:

g the brilliant campaign of our 1814, on the Niagara frontier, ases of severe wounds required operations. A man occupying a ished station, through his com- but certainly not through any pro- d qualifications, was a chief oper- his person in attempting the am- of a thigh, failed to cut through t sciatic nerve; after the bone was rough, the limb still hung on by e. Ignorant of its nature "the n made a plunge at it with his saw; ams of the poor tortured soldier the concentrated agony of a l operations, until the ignorant was implored by an assistant to d use a knife. Again, a captive ad received a wound in the fore ich caused a profuse hemorrhage, operator spent two days in fruit- npts to stop the bleeding by a et; the tume-faction caused by the of this instrument proved mor- the poor fellow fell a victim to t of scientific skill. See the North n Journal of the medical sciences e above facts are recorded.

are the lamentable and shocking ences of entrusting the lives of le to those uneducated in anato- me good people propose to our of medicine, to go elsewhere for atomy; to New York, Philadel- is or London. No matter where eave Ohio. This is certainly very d unreasonable. If dissections oper, you would impose this evil er places for your own benefit. position also assumes what is to fact, that every student of is in circumstances sufficiently enable him to encounter the ex- a foreign education.

rong is suffered by the dissection n bodies, this wrong is inflicted n the feelings of the living, who ly allied to the dead. But cases ly occur, in which from want of and friends, it is impossible for lings to exist. Our meaning is, sanctity of the tomb should be ll by sufficient laws, but, that in prosecution for violating it, it e made to appear that there is an d party, and a more substantial than the prejudices of society; that strictions shall not apply in the those who have no friends to de- ir loss or bestow upon them the sepulchre, or who have been kept blic expense.

proposition, though sound, is deli- draws an obnoxious line between and the rich, and is therefore li- opular objections; and much as I the promotion of medical knowl- disdain the idea of the bodies of the poor being considered public property. Far better that medical science should cease, and our bodily sufferings continue, than that the natural rights and best feelings of humanity, should not be equally respected in all classes of society; or merely, that, because persons are poor they should be prevented from paying the last tribute of respect to their departed relatives by attending their remains to the grave.

It appears to me that the best way to avoid this dilemma would be, to declare by legislative enactment (what is admitted by reason and revelation,) that no dead body is intrinsically of any value, and that in cases of individuals not connected with the living by any cherished associations, their bodies are to be estimated only by the rule of positive value, and that, if a grievance can be proved to have been suffered by any one, through their dissection, the party so aggrieved may obtain equivalent damages by law or otherwise. It is an egregious mistake, to suppose, that in a case of dissection, the interests of society are on one side, and those of the physician on the other. For, as dissections are practised for the public good, the proper array of parties is to put upon one side the relatives of the deceased, and on the other, the community with its medical corps. Here then we would say fiat justicia ruat celum. The issue of a fair trial would then show the amount of damage sustained and a suitable verdict would be rendered. It is high time that an art so important as anatomy, to the interest of society, should have fair play in courts of justice.

Mr. Editor, I have taxed your columns too heavily already with this delicate, though important subject; and as I haste, permit me to remark, that I have but little doubt the that progress of the human mind and the application of the benevolent principles of christianity, will ultimately put dissections upon a proper footing, and we should rejoice to see Ohio, the focus of political independence, become the cradle of mental regeneration, in this matter.

When will society awake to its true interest and appreciate its true advantages? When will it learn to estimate aright useful services? The man who has driven the "plough shear of destruction" through the earth, or falls by the foeman's hand on the field of carnage in a quarrel of sordid interest, passes from the world shrouded with its glories.—Mausoleums are erected to perpetuate his fame! eulogy pours forth its pompous harangues! poetry lavishes its gorgeous decorations to blazon his memory, and a nation's coffers are opened to protect his widow from want and his orphan from desolation.

But the man who dies a sacrifice to the best interest of mankind; who devotes his life to the promotion of science, and the melioration of suffering humanity, passes from the stage unnoticed. The world looks coldly on the tears of the philanthropist which bedew his grave, whilst the philosopher, in his retirement, turns from his meditations to sorrow for his loss, but the widow and the orphan must look for consolation to the sad remembrance of his virtues.

E. H. McCOY, M. D.

Smithfield, Ohio, January 1, 1841.

For the Western Recorder.

NOTES LOST—DAVID CRALL.

Mr. Editor.—An advertisement with the above caption and signature has been published in the 13th and 15th numbers, current volume of the Recorder, containing insinuations so manifestly designed to operate against character, as to make some notice of it, a matter of duty both to the church and myself. The character of both is concerned. D. Crall says, in relation to the notes said to be lost, "all I can learn of them is, Mr. Ludlow and Mr. Tait say they gave their notes to John Clarke, when he was Agent. I cannot learn where they are! or who, (if any person!!) has received them from the said John Clarke!" "All persons are warned not to purchase said notes—as it would not be just that they should be paid."

In the above it is plainly insinuated:

1. That David Crall had made every proper exertion to "learn" all about the notes--who had them--and where they were, previous to advertising, and that "John Clarke" had either refused or neglected to give information concerning them.

2. That "John Clarke" has either embezzled the notes, or in some unwarrantable manner detained them in possession.

3. That there is reason to apprehend that he will attempt to make a use of them "that would not be just."

4. That David Crall is "Agent," and advertises as a matter of official duty.

In relation to the matter, I remark, 1. The only word of information I ever received on the subject, is contained in the above advertisement. 2. When I gave up the agency, I also gave up all the "notes" and other matters pertaining thereto to my successor, who gave a receipt as follows:

"Settled this day with John Clarke, former Agent of Dearborn College, and have received from him all moneys, books, papers and property of every description, belonging to said institution or to its trustees, also a donation of five hundred dollars for the benefit of said institution.

(Signed) "A. H. BASSETT, Agt."

3. David Crall was once employed for a season, as a manager on the farm, but I do not know that he ever was an "Agent" or that he has sustained any official relation to the concern, for more than sixteen months past. Here the reader may draw his own conclusions, it is no part of my object to recriminate. But that such an advertisement has been twice published in the organ of the church, the writer, publisher and myself, all being ministers of the same holy gospel, in the same fellowship, is to my feelings very humiliating. I am very little concerned, for my own sake, about the attacks, which have been repeatedly, publicly and privately, made from this quarter upon my reputation, and this one never would have received from me this public attention, but that it is made in the assumed* character of an "Agent" of the conference, thereby acquiring an importance which otherwise it would not have, and beside, the concurrent opinion and advice of several intelligent brethren have urged it upon me, as due to the church. It is well known to most of the brethren in the Ohio and Indiana Conferences, that similar attacks by David Crall has heretofore required on their part the appointment of an intelligent committee of investigation, who after "a patient examination," of all that he had to say or show in vindication thereof, in their report to the conference repudiated the whole as being "without any grounds in any instance whatever," and the conference by a unanimous vote, not only adopted the report, but did also, tender a vote of thanks to "John Clarke" for "his faithful, and disinterested attention to the interests of the institution." It is in view of these circumstances, and the conciousness of having sacrificed three years of unremitting toil, and all of pecunary means I had at command, to the erection of that institution, that I now feel so little concerned on my own account, for these late attacks. The only explanation of causes I can furnish is, that some men of apparent intelligence, under an inexplicable infatuation, do lend themselves the willing tools of a violent Anti-Abolition prejudice, supposing that therein they do God's service.

JOHN CLARKE, JR.

Allegheny, January 7, 1841.

P. S. The remarks of the Editor, in the eighteenth number of the Western Recorder, in relation to the above matter, being predicated entirely on a private communication, and chiefly designed to justify himself in publishing the advertisement, does not in my view supercede the above article. A communication lately received from a worthy brother says "I have looked every week for some explanation of the matter from your own hand. The Editor's remarks are not sufficient. The impression I have received is, that the institution is in your debt, and you have retained the notes as collateral security. Is this the case." As it regards the testimonials to which the Editor alludes and others of similar character in my possession, I do not conceive that the case demands them or they should be furnished entire for publication.

J. C.

*Mr. Crall may possibly have an agency by private appointment. The minutes of the Ohio Annual Conference report Br. G. G. Moore as successor to A. H. Bassett, and do not report any connection between Mr. Crall and the Institution.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

For the Western Recorder.

THE CONFERENCE MISSIONARY FOR HIMSELF.

As the Conference Missionary is, to a considerable extent, a circumstancial creature, inquiries respecting him—where he is and what he is doing—appear both natural and proper. With pleasure, therefore, we furnish an account of our travel and labor, hoping that it may be measurably profitable, as well as satisfactory, to those who are interested in the matter.

The duties and privileges of the Conference Missionary are not as clear and well defined in the Discipline, as could be desired. He is to act, in some sense, under the direction and supervision of the President of the District. The Annual Conference, however, by resolutions, prepared the way for the free visitation to circuits and stations, and pointed out the plan for our support. But to avoid any innovation upon the spirit as well as letter of the law, we obtained the verbal sanction of the President to take a tour through those portions of the work where labor might be bestowed, and attention paid to some secular affairs, with the understanding, however, that as early as convenient, we should spend some time among the disappointed and neglected friends on the Sandusky circuit. It is, therefore, due to the President and to ourself to state the reasons why we have lingered so long on the way to the Plains, to the apparent neglect of so deserving a people.

In the first place then, five weeks were delightfully spent among our old friends in the vicinity of Zanesville, where, in much weakness, our first itinerant attempts were made. As mention has been made of most of those refreshing seasons, they need not be repeated by another pen. At Clay Lick, however, may be noticed an interesting meeting of three days' continuance, we attended after those already published. Thence we set out for Sandusky, but were detained on the way, in one place, one week longer, at least, than the heavenly messenger was detained on the way to the prophet Daniel.—Yes, full four weeks were we in Mount Vernon. The propriety of such a protracted stay may not appear to all. Then, permit an explanation.

In the first place, we were, last Annual Conference, according to the first reading of the report of the Stationing Committee, appointed to that circuit; but from some peculiar reasons, then assigned, a change was effected, and our present relation obtained. Assurances were given to the delegate, that the decline grew not out of disrespect either to the people or place. Hence, secondly, a cheerful promise was made to visit them and hold a protracted meeting. It was not expected, however, till after the contemplated visit to Sandusky; but on our arrival in Mt. Vernon, learning that an effort of that kind was to commence the following week, we consented to tarry and commence operations forthwith. A more inauspicious beginning is not often witnessed, and a pamphlet might be written of its history and exercises. Some events, we believe, will remain in the memory of some of us, while life shall last. As Br. Roberts will, probably, give some of its details, suffice it for us to say, that it ended well! It may be observed, however, that we had to hew into the flinty rock for accessions to the building of God; and for a long while, only now and then, with great toil, an individual petros was taken from nature's quarry. But before the close of the meeting, more were brought from darkness to light, and from the power of satan unto the living God. Oh! that these converts may "stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath so happily set them free."

At such a meeting, of course, much ministerial labor was bestowed. Without boasting, be it said, (and in the use of the singular pronoun for once) that I preached thirty-one sermons in twenty-nine days, besides other services. One fear, on entering upon the duties of Conference Missionary, happily has not yet been realized, viz: of spending much precious time in idle visiting and unprofitable conversation. O, for wisdom and grace to do the work of evangelists!

A remarkable circumstance which took place in Mount Vernon, during our protracted meeting, doubtless contributed to the interest of religion, and the relation of which may be profitable, as a warning to others. It was the sudden sickness and death of a young man who had attended the meeting, but who, like many more, hardened his heart against the solemn truth of God. He was observed in the company of other young men who smiled in apparent derision, while an awful death-bed scene of one who had similarly rejected the offers of mercy, was related by an eye witness of the tragical event.—How little did he expect, that before the close of the meeting, he would be brought to drink "the bitterness of death." It is said, that on Saturday forenoon, Dec. 26th, he solicited a relation to play cards with him, and on receiving the reply, "after dinner," he swore they might all be in hell before that time. Presently, he found others to play with him and while in the act, this same young man was smitten with a pain in the stomach, (cramp cholic,) and arose from the table with profanation upon his lips, that he could play no longer, and the next day, about the same time, he expired! Ah! how true as well as awful the declaration of Solomon, "He that being often reproved, hardeneth his neck, shall suddenly be destroyed, and that without remedy. We were sent for on Sabbath morning, from the congregation, to visit and pray for that afflicted and distressed young man; but he was too low to effect any thing by conversation. A minister of another denomination was also sent for—he came and also engaged in prayer for the unhappy sufferer. We returned to our respective congregations, and immediately after the dismission, the writer of this article hastened to the house of mourning, met a messenger at the door in quest of some person to pray again for the young man. On entering the room, he inquired who was come, and on being told it was "the preacher," he exclaimed, "Lord have mercy on my soul!" The throne of grace was again addressed on his behalf; and when done, he was already in a dying state. Before he gasped his last, a sister of his, who had been convicted at our meeting, now almost frantic, retired to an adjoining room and cried aloud for mercy; and before the brother breathed his last, she obtained the blessing sought, and shouted aloud for joy! How solemn the scene! Some screaming with almost frantic distress and anguish, while another, with loud exultation, exclaimed, "glory to God," and the poor young man gasping in death!! On the afternon, these words came to mind: "It is better to go to the house of mourning than to the house of feasting," and so said my soul.

Another delay was on the Bucyrus circuit.—We tarried to attend a qarterly meeting, as well as on account of the inclemency of the weather, through the urgent solicitation of some friends. We had a comfortable time.

At Sandusky at last. So, beloved friends, you see that the Conference Missionary has been both detained and engaged, circumstantially, and we trust, providentially. It is hoped, therefore, that the brethren, in different parts of the District, who have kindly invited us to visit them, will receive this explanation as a sufficient reason for delaying to attend to their calls. Br. Shinn will please accept our grateful acknowledgments for his kind proposals to us. At present we cannot tell when a visit from us may be looked for. The friends in the Monongahela country are not forgotten, it would afford us great pleasure to spend some months in that region. It would seem to require several years to go round the District, as we have been travelling. Surely, then, by Conference Missionary, we are not to understand an agent to travel round the conference in a few months. Brother Warren will please observe the reasons why we are not with him.

WM. REEVES.

Tiffin, Ohio, January 13, 1841.

VAN BUREN, HANCOCK, O., JAN. 6, 1841.

Mr. Editor: I visited Washington circuit the fourth Sabbath in November last. Preached at Jamestown. Br. Clemmons, the superintendent, is at his post. May success attend his labors.

November 28 and 29, attended a two days' meeting in Rehobeth circuit, at the Rehobeth meeting house, which has of late been comfortably fitted up. The Lord favored us with a season of refreshing. Eight persons were added to the society. Old Br. Dobbins, the superintendent, was present. It is interesting to see this veteran, now nearly 72 years of age, with almost undiminished vigor, pursuing the even tenor of his itinerant way. Peaceful be his last days.—It will be gratifying to some to learn that Br. James Betson has been brought again from the border of the grave. And though yet very feeble, it is hoped that he may yet recover strength to labor some in behalf of Zion's cause. He has returned from Indiana to this circuit. Xenia and Rehobeth circuits are by act of Annual Conference, united for the time being. Brethren Dobbins and Stephens travel in co-operation through the entire route, but each circuit holds separately its regular quarterly meetings. On Tuesday, December 1st, preached twice at Urton's school house, in Warren county, for Br. Dobbins.

December 5 and 7, attended a three days' meeting at Withamsville, in Cincinnati circuit. Here a good society has been established, and a spirited effort is now under way to get up a house of worship the coming season. Br. R. T. Boyd, the superintendent, seems an indefatigable laborer, performing the entire route in two weeks.

Spent the second Sabbath of December at Cincinnati station. From indications at some precious social meetings, I was led to conclude that our brethren here are about being somewhat revived, on the termination of the recent political war. Our aged Br. Snethen, you will be gratified to learn, continues in tolerable health, so that he is enabled generally to preach once every Lord's day. About the time of my visit, Br. Barnes, the superintendent, was called to sustain the loss of an only child, by measles.—It was an interesting daughter, nearly six years of age.

Mr. Editor, I am now performing my northern tour, taking advantage of the mid-winter, whilst the ground is frozen solid, and I shall, perhaps, hereafter trouble you with some account of my visitations to the remaining circuits.

As ever, yours,

A. H. BASSETT.

NEW CASTLE, PA., JAN. 11, 1841.

Dear Br.: Having to write to you on business, I embrace the opportunity of informing you, and the church generally, what the Lord is doing for us in this place.

Br. Inskeep stated, in his last, he was expecting Br. Clarke to his assistance; he accordingly came on the Thursday following, and remained with us for eight days, and labored successfully; to the entire satisfaction of this community.—After he left, we were two weeks without ministerial aid. But the Lord was with us, and the members kept up prayer meeting four nights in the week, at which five or six professed religion.

At the return of Br. Inskeep, on Sabbath the 3d inst., the work took a fresh start and it has continued ever since with increased interest.—We have now received in our society, in all, seventy-six members. On last evening there were eighteen or twenty forward soliciting the prayers of the church, and four professed to find peace. Our house is constantly crowded, and there is, in the community, a very excited attention to the interesting theme of religion. Last Monday evening the excitement was beyond description. Before Br. Inskeep had closed the first proposition of his discourse it seemed as though every one in the house was moved; the outcries of sinners for mercy, and the rejoicings of professors were so loud that he had to desist from preaching. Praise the Lord, O! my soul, for what He has done for us here!

Our superintendent is respected by all classes of the community throughout his charge, and the Lord is blessing his labors on the circuit, at every appointment. In Youngstown there has been thirty converted to God, and the interest is still kept up,—and so at Vienna.

There is a considerable number of the subjects of the work here who have not united with us or any other church. About twenty or twenty-five have attached themselves to the Episcopal Methodists.—We thought prejudice, some time since, was entirely destroyed. But, to our astonishment, it has been rising, so that at present there are but three or four members of the M. E. Church who join in our congregations. But praise the Lord a greater than they meets with us!

We are about erecting a house of worship in this place, and have a sufficient subscription to build one 35 by 45. We are going at it immediately.

Yours, &c.

WM. B. MILLER.

BROWNSVILLE, OHIO, JAN. 18, 1841.

Br. Springer: I wish to inform the friends, through your periodical, that the Zanesville circuit is, at present, in a healthy and prosperous condition. Our first quarterly meeting commenced on the 7th of November, and continued several days, during which time, we were favored with the labors of Brs. Reeves and Fairchild.—It was a meeting of considerable interest. The hearts of believers were animated with the riches of divine grace. The lukewarm were stirred up, and sinners were brought to reflect on their lost condition.

We have also held several protracted meetings at different points on the circuit, all of which were of a similar character. We have had an accession of twelve to the church. My worthy colleague, Br. Kinney, is studiously engaged in trying to promote the happiness of the people on the circuit.

WM. MUNHALL.

MT. PLEASANT, OHIO, JAN. 12, 1841.

Br. Springer: I would inform you, that the cause of God is beginning to revive on this circuit. We have held some very profitable meetings, and the brethren seem to be aroused to go on "to perfect holiness in the fear of the Lord." We have received some into the church, and are big with the expectation of many more. We have peace in all our borders. Your paper is well received, and I could get a good number more subscribers for it, if it were not for the scarcity of money.

R. RICHARDSON.

AN APT RETORT.—Fischer, who was a member of the private concerts of his Majesty, George III., was a great favorite, as he was also of her Majesty, Queen Charlotte. These royal personages, who delighted to listen to the solos on the hautboy, declared that the tones which he produced might be fairly compared with the most perfect human voice; indeed, he had acquired the reputation of being the finest performer on that instrument that ever was known. Fischer was a humorist, and no respecter of persons. He very frequently attended the King; and one morning being at Windsor Castle, and having just made his retiring bow to his majesty, at the moment was familiarly accosted by the Earl of Harcourt. "Oh, how do you do, Fischer?" said his lordship. "Have you received a card for Lady Harcourt's party to-night?" "No mine lord?" said he. "I know it was intended to invite you." Fischer bowed. "Ah—Fischer—but as we have met—a—a—perhaps you will put your hautboy in your pocket." "Thank you lordship," said the German, "pote mine hautvoy never eads no sappers." This short dialogue passed in the hearing of the king, who immediately went and related it to the queen and her amiable daughters, to the delight of all the illustrious party, who mightily enjoyed this instance of the brusquerie of the musician, the more so, for they had not the highest opinion of the earl's liberality. Fraser's Magazine.

MURDER.—The following paragraph is from the Nashville Banner of the 21st ult:

"A foul murder was committed on Monday, 14th inst., near Hendersonville, Summer county, on the body of Mr. Linsey, a respectable clergyman of the Methodist Church, of near 30 years standing, and 55 years old. He was shot to obtain the money he had about him, $300 it is supposed, by a man by the name of Carroll, and thrown into the Cumberland river; where the body was found on Sunday evening last by drawing with a net. Carroll is a citizen of Missouri, but for the last six months has been in this State, and wherever he is known, is rather celebrated for his expertness with his rifle. He has not been seen since, and a handsome reward will be paid for his apprehension. A man by the name of Johnson, a supposed accomplice, has been taken up."

AMERICAN SEAMEN.—From many ports in this country, particularly the small ports of New England, vessels sail with men in the forecastle who can navigate the vessel as well as the captain, and often better. The advantage of this is frequently experienced. A recent instance is the case of the brig Crosar, which sailed from Wiscasset, Me., with a captain, mate and four men, for Trinidad de Cuba. At this port, the captain, Norman T. Parsons, died. The mate, Decatur Greenleaf, took command, and put Freeman Task, from before the mast in the berth of mate. The brig then proceeded to Cienfuegos, and on the first day out, on her return passage hence, Captain Greenlief was taken sick, and in a few days died. The new captain, Freeman Task, has brought his vessel safe to New York, with his crew of three men and cook.

WIVES ADVERTISING.—The following unique advertisement appeared in the Manchester & Salfors Advertiser, an English paper:—"Matrimony—A wise and prudent farmer, aged thirty-six, is desirous to meet with a lady that possesses wit, £120, one that can churn, clean shippons, milk and go with butter to market. Size age no meterial. None need to apply that got red hair. Any lady that got the money may meet with a good husband by applying to Landsend Hunts Farm near Middleton, Lancashire."

GERMANY.—Mr. Walsh writes,—"It is ascertained that the German Governments are fully agreed on a combination of their forces to resist France on the Rhine, and that their subjects heartily concur."

The Contribution and Subscription taken up at the annual meeting of the City Tract Society at the Broadway Tabernacle last Wednesday evening, amounted to over $3,000.—N. Y. paper.

SLAVES.—In Louisiana there are three slaves to two freemen.

WESTERN RECORDER.

ZANESVILLE:

WEDNESDAY, ... JANUARY 27, 1841.

An Indiana correspondent forwarded to us, some time since, the copy of a prospectus for a new paper, which we published; since, three or four of these prospectuses have been forwarded to us, and having before given a copy of them, we here give, without note or comment, the Circular connected therewith:

CIRCULAR.

Dear Brother—We commend to your attention the following plan for the establishment of a weekly Religious Newspaper, and sincerely hope it may meet with your co-operation and efficient agency. Among the many importa t reasons for the existence of such a periodical within our bounds, may be presented the following:

First. We have no paper in the West exclusively devoted to our interests as a church.

Secondly. We have lost, in a great measure, the confidence of a religious community for the want of such a periodical. The members of our church and congregations have no direct means of becoming acquainted with the official acts of their legislative bodies, of the numbers in society, of our annual increase, of the state and prosperity of our Sabbath Schools, &c., and of our operations generally; all of which is of vital interest to our existence as a religious denomination.

Thirdly. It will be a valuable auxiliary in spreading "Scriptural holiness through these lands."

Should you be successful in procuring subscribers, please forward their names by letter, to either of us at Cincinnati, as early as you conveniently can.

N. SNETHEN,
A. C. BARNES,
G. G. MOORE,
R. T. BOYD.

Cincinnati, January 1, 1841.

The Congregationalists of the Western Reserve having called a convention on the 20th instant, to be held at Hudson, with a view to effect an organization of such churches as adopted the principles of Congregationalism, have postponed their intended meeting because it falls on the same day of the meeting of the Anti-Slavery Convention to be held in Columbus.

THE WASHINGTON CHURCH.—The sisters of the Washington city church, D. C., propose holding a fair, "during the last week in February next," the proceeds of which are to be appropriated to the liquidation of the church debt in that place. The General Conference, held in the District in 1834, passed a resolution recommending the connexion, at large, to aid the brethren in the erection of a suitable house of worship at the seat of the National Government, as they were few in number, and the situation of importance to the whole church. Those enterprising brethren have erected the house, but they say, the assistance on which they relied, has, but in part, been realized. If any of our friends feel it their duty or privilege to aid in this matter, now is the time. Whatever you may wish to contribute can be forwarded to the Rev. A. Webster, Washington, D. C. Their call for aid is pressing.

As we have already committed all our cash means to the service of the church, we regret that it is not in our power to render any assistance of this kind. But we propose to the brethren, if they will raise us from five to ten subscribers, either in the District or elsewhere, we will forward our paper to them for one year, and they may retain the money for the benefit of the church. As we have no subscribers in the District, we will be thankful to the Protestant to copy this article, and we will reciprocate the favor when desired.

The reader will recognize in the following, which we extract from an article in the New York Luminary, the sentiments of a clear and discriminating mind, well acquainted with the interest of the Methodist Protestant enterprize. We commend it to the particular notice of the membership of that church. The reasons assigned for the want of more success in New York, are applicable, to a considerable extent, to this region also. We have suffered ourselves to be greatly imposed on by the reception, into the itinerancy, and the promotion of strangers; and it seems, we are hardly willing to learn by the things we suffer, on that subject. The want of the wholesome exercise of discipline, especially on the part of itinerants, greatly injures public confidence in our cause. A preacher may take an appointment, and through sheer indolence omit to meet the classes, neglect his appointments, come to others hours too late, so that the work falters and dies on his hand, and no notice taken of it at conference. Or, after he has asked for, and received an appointment, if it does not just suit him, he never goes nigh, and still he passes without censure. Or, if he should go to his charge and not find every thing exactly to suit him, or should he meet with some little real or imaginary difficulty, from his people, he walks off as big as Cæsar, yet the sympathies of brethren are so morbid they let him off without objection. Or, after he has labored faithfully awhile, if some body else offers him a little more money, he betrays the cause for "thirty pieces of silver," and leaves a confiding people destitute for the sake of getting a little more money; yet, dear creature, our sympathies are so excessively refined, we must still let him pass without blame. Should some one, now, from pure regard to the interests of the church, offer a resolution to place the Judas in the relation he ought to bear, the sensibilities of brethren become wonderfully excited, in favor of the dear delinquent;—God bless him! It is well if the "rude" mover is not mounted with speeches and action, of brethren, in a style which shall severely chastise him for his "coarseness."

Some of our readers, probably, know that we do not speak in parables. Now, as long as such delinquency is tolerated from a laxity of discipline, portions of the work, every year, will be distressed, like Sandusky at the present. If we would provide against such abuses of public confidence, we must cease to be children and become men in our sympathies.

The reason for our want of success, which have occurred to him, will be given in this communication, without fear, or a desire for favor. Let every one examine for himself and decide whether these things be so.

1. We have spent too much time in talking about church polity. This is indeed an important subject, but its discussion will not get sinners converted, neither will it induce our enemies to come over to our side. We may, it is true, gain here and there, a friend, by this course, but we shall find that our Methodist Episcopal friends generally, like Ephraim, are joined to their idols; and we think it proper to cry out to the friends of mutual rights, "let them alone."

2. While we have spent too much time in talking about church government, we have spent too little time in preaching up, and striving for "holiness of heart." This doctrine, which was ever so prominent with Methodists, has been almost forgotten by us, and we have come short of our privileges in Jesus Christ. Brethren, this is the greatest reason why we do not increase in numbers and in piety. God calls upon us to depart from all iniquity, and to be holy in our lives. Our preachers must hold up this doctrine, and declare unto all that they know God has power to cleanse the heart from all sin. Our members must be sanctified, and then we shall prosper.

3. We have been more anxious for an increase of numbers, than for an increase of piety. A hard saying, but, alas! too true.

4. Men have been admitted to the itinerancy, who ought to have been rejected. We have received all who have made application with but few exceptions. The result, is, we are continually changing, and where we find one man standing firm—one who proves really useful, we find a half a dozen who do us much injury, while they remain and then forsake us for some other employment, or some more popular church. Let us take warning by what is past. Let us guard well the entrance to the ministry, and and let no man come in, until we know him.

5. Another reason why we have not prospered more, is, that our discipline has not been properly administered, or in other words, our rules and regulations have not been enforced. An attendance upon the means of grace, is a condition of membership with us, and yet how often are our class and prayer meetings forsaken. How frequently do our people neglect the preaching of the word. The rules should be enforced, and individuals should be taught that their names cannot continue on our church books unless they attend to their duty.

6. I present another obstacle, which is the last I shall offer at present, viz:—an inefficient ministry. I do not mean that the men who sustain a ministerial relation, are not fit for the office, for I believe the contrary to be the fact; but our ministry is rendered inefficient by attending circumstances. Many of them have their energies paralized by poverty. The support given to them, is so small, that they are continually cast down, and know not how to support their families or pay their debts. Now, I say, a man in this situation is not prepared for the service of the church. If he is a prudent man, he must do all he can for the future—if he is a moral man, he will feel very uncomfortable while in debt—and if he is a feeling man, he cannot bear to see his family suffer. Now, I do not expect, nor do I desire to see preachers living in luxury, but I do want to see them placed above want. I want them to have a few dollars each year to spend for books, &c.—The church has the power of doing this, and if she desires a successful ministry she must make them comfortable. Then our men will not be compelled to locate, or enter other churches. Now, I ask any member of the church to place himself in the situation occupied by some of our ministers, and then he will know how to feel for them. He will find that it is a hard business for a man to preach the gospel while his family are suffering.—A man may be willing to suffer all things if necessary; but when he sees that this necessity does not exist, that his sufferings are the result of carelessness and meanness upon the part of the membership, he will not feel so well.

To the ministers and members of the church, I would say, I have no personal complaints to make. I write for the good of the church, and though some of my remarks will be read with prejudice, yet I hope they will meet with as candid a consideration as possible, and if I have pointed out real errors, let all resolve that they shall be removed. We try to find a "reason for failure" in our system, but I imagine that the system will be found good enough if it is properly carried out. Leave the system alone—touch it not, until all other means have failed.

A. R. SPEER.

Albany Jan. 1, 1841.

We were under the impression that the Rev. T. H. Stockton, from his mild and forbearing disposition would be illy quallified to make his way through the rank and file of a certain corps of pugnacious editors that are pretty numerous in the land. But the manner he used up the editor of the Emancipator, and has handled some others, induces us to alter our opinion on this subject. We now think him able to take care of himself. We here give two short extracts from the cover of his last paper, to illustrate his manner of meeting these mighty combatants.

Several editors take him to task about classing the Universalists with Christian denominations, &c. After noticing one of them, he further rewarks:

Next comes the "Boston Recorder," which we respect highly. Out speaks the veteran editor: "By what right are they classed among Christian denominations? And why should the notorious falsehoods of their newspapers, and their vainglorious boastings, be entered," &c. Perhaps if the editor had written a longer article, his style would have become easier. We have often noticed that the locomotive makes most noise when starting. The faster it moves, the more quiet it becomes; unless, indeed, an intruder appear on the track—then, no matter what, a! e!! i!!! o!!!! u!!!!!—how it shrieks! But is Christianity a Rail-Road? And has one Company a chartered and exclusive right to run cars on it? Rather, have we thought it a sort of Mac-Adam-ized turnpike; a highway for all the sons of Adam—with nothing to do but pay a fair toll, and ☞keep to the right—as the laws directs.

Again; after alluding to the Abolitionists of New York, he adds:

The editor of the "Emancipator" is said to be absent. We have not heard from him.

The "Watchman and Observer" says, one of our friends told him we desired a notice of our agent's visit, [not so, if memory serve us] and that he "designed and supposed" he was doing us an "act of kindness." He thinks our charge, therefore, "RATHER SINGULAR." We thank him for his design, and submit a short parable to illustrate our thoughts and feelings in regard to the manner of showing it.

Abel Brown visited New York. Benjamin Clark, his friend, soon after met David Earl. "David," said he, "Mr. Brown, my friend, is in the city. I wish you to show him some attention—introduce him to your acquaintance," &c. "Certainly," said David, "with pleasure." The next Thursday, a procession of the party passed along Division street. Abel Brown happened to meet it. Francis Green, the leader, suddenly and strangely knocked him down with a club. Abel arose. David inquired of Francis who it was that he had thus abused; and, on learning, cried out to the company. "Gentlemen, I make you acquainted with Mr. Brown," and then, just as Abel was bowing to the sympathizing throng, seized the same club that Francis had wielded before, and knocked the stranger down again. Abel, again, sprang to his feet, and uttered his contempt for such an assailant. "Rather Singular!" said David, with hands and eyes uplifted—"Rather Singular! Benjamin Clark requested me to introduce Mr. Brown to my friends, and I have done so. Now, he charges me with conduct that is contemptible. Verily, I designed and supposed I was doing him an act of kindness!" Hearing which, Abel looked down at him a moment, curled his lip silently, and then walked away, feeling as if his feet were on Chimborazo, and his head among the stars.

Those who are acquainted with the circumstances, here alluded to, will see great point in this parable. What particularly strikes our fancy is, that after the Watchman had seized the club (republished the article) of the Emancipator, and knocked "Abel" down a second time; he, "looked down at him a moment, curled his lip silently, then walked away, feeling as if his feet were on Chimborazo, and his head among the stars." This is very poetic, but it is just such a conception as none but the right sort of mind is capable of.

We are informed that it is represented about Cincinnati that we "did not advocate the college measure last conference." If such representations have been made they are not correct. For we did advocate the measures of the Ohio Conference at Steubenville and have done so since by giving their plan, &c. repeated publicity in our columns. And we were in favor of the agent of the lower conference occupying the whole ground, as we were satisfied that one man could do all that was to be done. There is nothing connected with our enterprize that gives us so much painful sensibility as this college affair, not so much on account of the institution itself, though we much desire its prosperity, as on account of some valuable and benevolent men who have become involved on account thereof; and if it were in our power we would soon rid both them and the institution of difficulties.

The only question which produced any difficulty at the Pittsburgh Conference, was about how the moneys collected in this District were to be applied. The agent from below wanted what might now be collected to meet some immediate emergency, but the conference generally wished them applied to our former agent who had borrowed some ten or twelve hundred dollars, more or less, and forwarded to the Trustees, for which his property is pledged. This controversy involved a principle of delicacy which made us silent. But as for not advocating the general measure, it is an entire mistake.

☞Our friend of Clinton county, Ohio, will please excuse us for not publishing his strictures on the prospectus which we lately published.—His views are perfectly correct, and we feel grateful for his good intentions, but still the subject involves a matter of delicacy which induces us to decline giving publicity to his communication.

The following is from the Labanon Star of the 22d inst. It is cheering to the hearts of all honest christians to know that good is doing, no difference by whom.

PROTRACTED MEETINGS.—The Protracted Meeting of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in this place, still continues. It commenced on New-Year's Eve and from that time to this scarcely a day has passed in which souls have not been happily converted to God. The meetings are regularly and largely attended, and almost our entire population seem to be thoughtful and concerned upon the subject of religion. Up to the 20th inst. 59 had attached thmselves to the Church—53 of whom professed to "receive the remission of sins," "in the name of Jesus Christ."

The revival commenced in the Baptist Church early in December, under the ministry of the Rev. Messrs. French and Parr. Twenty four "tasted of the good word of God" and "were justified freely by his grace thro' the redemption which is in Jesus Christ," and were baptised.

It will be seen by a notice in to-day's paper that a protracted meeting will commence in the Cumberland Presbyterian Church on the 3d of February next. God speed the work of salvation in all the Churches! We trust, that "the Gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world," and "that all kindreds and nations shall worship before him;" "that from the rising of the sun, even to the going down of the same," the name of Christ "shall be great among the Gentiles, and in every place incense shall be offered to his name, and a pure offering."

LATEST FROM TEXAS.—Galveston papers have been received at New Orleans to the 3d inst.. Houston to the 31st, and Austin to the 23d ult. Texas is about to be invaded under Arista. The President pro tem. has sent a message to Congress, in which he says: "The intelligence received last evening from the West, is of an exciting nature, and I doubt not that the Congress of Texas will be animated and cheered with the prospects of a speedy termination, by the sword, of our protracted controversy with Mexico. Mexico is again marshalling her forces for the invasion of Texas. The crisis is propitious, and Texas should avail herself of its advantages. Texas Proper is bounded by the Rio Grande. Texas, as defined by the sword may comprehend Sierra del Madre. Let the sword do its poper work."

It was reported in Galveston on the 29th ult., that the Vice President (Burnett) had challenged Ex-President Houston to fight a duel.

MORE TROUBLES.—The correspondent of the Boston Mail, writing from Derby, Vt., a town on the Boundary line, states that quite a serious row had occurred between a party of Vermonters and a party of Canadians, who were fishing in Lake Memphremagog. The Vermonters beat the Canadians off, and it was said that the Canadians were preparing to come over and burn the house of one of the Vermonters.

FROM WASHINGTON.

Mr. Clay stated in the Senate, that in consequence of the vacancies in the Senate not being filled, he should not now ask for action on his motion to repeal the Sub-Treasury Bill.

Mr. Anderson, of Tenn., presented the credentials of his new colleague, A. O. P. Nicholson. The new Senator appeared and was sworn in.

In the House of Representatives, Mr. Monroe, from the committee on Military affairs, reported a bill to found a Military asylum for the relief and support of invalid soldiers of the army of the United States, committed to the committee of the Whole on the State of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

A bill making compensation to the State of Maine for the service of her militia, in the North-Eastern Boundary, has passed.

Numerous petitions have been presented, asking the passage of a law abolishising the use of ardent spirits in the Army and Navy.

The most important bill, perhaps, which has been before Congress this session is what may be called "The permanent prospective pre-emption system." It has been warmly discussed. Mr. Crittenden proposes the following amendments:

1st, To distribute the proceeds of the sales of the public lands among the several states of the Union, in just and equitable proportions. 2nd, To grant the actual bona fide settlers on the public lands the right of pre-emption, to any quantity thereof, not exceeding one-half section, or 320 acres, including the place of settlement, at the minimum price of $1,25 per acre.

Mr. Underwood, from the select committee appointed to the subject of steam boiler explosions, reported a bill authorizing the purchase of the patent of Ruab's double acting safety valves for the use of the Government. It was read twice in the House, and referred, and made the special order of the day for Monday two weeks.

Mr. Jones reported a bill authorizing the issue of five millions of Treasury notes, which was referred to the committee of the whole, and ordered to be printed.

An extensive freshet and very destructive in its progress, prevailed along our coast towards the close of last week, from Cape Henry to the Eastward of New York, and far into the interior of the country, causing loss of life and much property. The mails in this section of country were interrupted by the swollen streams; and between this and Philadelphia by the sweeping down the river of the ferry steam boat Susquehanna at Havre-de-Grace, on Saturday morning last, with the Southern and Western mails and passengers on board. Their situation was a perilous one—driving down the river, surrounded with ice and drift-wood, with a small portion of fuel only, and no provisions. Capt. Virdin, however, succeeded in bringing the boat to anchor some 10 or 12 miles below, where she remained until the next day when she was visited by the steamers Relief and Carroll, which had been dispatched from this port as soon as the express from Havre-de-Grace arrived here with the painful intelligence, and succeeded in taking off the passengers (all in good condition, and who have in a card, returned Capt. Virdin their thanks for the intrepidity & collectiveness manifested during their stay with him,) and the mails, and they were forwarded toward Philadelphia on Sunday. The Susquehanna, having had her rudder knocked off, the only injury sustained, has been towed round to this port to replace it.—Balt. Com. Jour.

WEBSTER'S DICTIONARY.—A new edition of this great work is about to be published in large 8vo. It will contain from 8,000 to 10,000 words not included in the quarto heretofore published. The whole number of words will be at least 80,000; being 20,000 more than are contained in Todd's Johnson, and 35,000 more than are to be found in Richardson's Dictionary.

THE CATHOLIC QUESTION IN N. YORK.—The New York Board of Aldermen have decided against the claim of the Catholics for a separate portion of the public Common School money for the purpose of sustaining sectarian schools. The vote was—Yeas 1, Nays 15.

TO BALL VISITORS.—A man recently recovered damages in Baltimore from the person who had charge of the "coat and umbrella" department for the loss of an overcoat. The fact of his having paid for its keep entitled him to the damages.

UNITED STATES SENATORS.—We learn that the Delaware Legislature have elected the Hon. Thomas Clayton, and the Hon. Richard H. Bayard, both friends to Gen. Harrison, to represent that State in the Senate of the Union.

MELANCHOLY DEATH.—The Washington, Pa. Reporter, says that the body of Mr. Samuel Donahey was found by his family in a yard near his dwelling house, where, it was supposed, he had fallen in an apoplectic fit.

REFORMATION.—On New Year's day, five renowned city rowdies went before one of the Aldermen, and made solemn oath that they would abstain from intoxicating drinks during the present year.—Phil. paper.

CHOLERA IN INDIA.—REMEDY.—This destructive scourge was prevailing to a considerable extent in India by the last accounts; but we rejoice to find that a medical officer in Bombay has discovered a plan of treatment which has proved successful in fourteen cases out of fifteen! The cure is effected thus: After administering an emetic and copious potations of hot water, the following pills are given, one every quarter of an hour, or twenty minutes, or half an hour, according to the urgency of the case: Aloes, grs. 250; colocynth, scammony, gamboge, of each, grs. 75; opium, grs. 12 3-8; calomel, grs. 125; these are to be powdered fine, and thoroughly mixed, and beat up with 12½ grains hard soap, adding mucilage sufficient to form a hard mass; add equal quantities of oil of cloves, and cajuput sufficient to soften the mass, which divided into fifty pills, is to be kept for use in close phials. These pills, it must be remembered, are intended for adults; for younger persons they are divided, and for children smaller quantities are given, ground down in honey or syrup.—Bombay Times, Sept. 30.

We have late advices from Europe—to the 19th of Dec. from Liverpool, and 21st from Havre, the most imposing features of which are the particulars of the arrival of the remains of Bonaparte from the island of St. Helena, and their reinterment in the church of the invalides at Paris, on the 15th of December. The pageant was very splendid; severely cold as was the weather, such an one was never seen before "even in Paris." It is stated that 50,000 persons visited the church on the 15th Dec. [We doubt much if these ashes will repose as quietly as at Longwood.]

Ten steam ships are being built in France, to ply as packets between Havre and New York. They are in great forwardness.—Balt. Com. Jour.

TAX UPON KNOWLEDGE.—The proposition of the Postmaster General to increase the postage upon newspapers one hundred per cent., meets with little favor—not less, however, than it deserves. In England the acquisition of knowledge is encouraged, and its dissemination favored, by removing the tax upon its circulation; while in our free, enlightened, and republican government, it is proposed to increase the restraint upon its free circulation one hundred per centum! We look for a more liberal policy to be adopted, rather than one less liberal. The People and the cause of intellectual light and political knowledge, require it.—Ohio State Journal.

STRANGE AND FEARFUL DISEASE.—The Huntingdon Advertiser, West Tennessee, dated Dec. 9th. states that a most fatal disease had made its appearance, within a few day past, in this sister county, Henry, about 10 miles west of Paris. It is said to be contagious, but unlike in its symptoms to any other disease known to the humane family; and in its fatality; far more dreadful than the cholera. Several deaths have occurred in a few families. On Saturday night four deaths occurred in one family. Its victims live from one to four hours after being attacked. The citizens of Paris are greatly alarmed. Many talk of leaving the town.

CONDITION OF GREECE.—Late London papers contain letters from Greece of the most discouraging character, as to the condition of that country. It is said that Greek citizens are imprisoned on the most frivolous charges—that terrible cruelties are practised—and the Slave Trade is carried on with the tacit consent of King Otho, who appears to take very little interest in the general prosperity of the people.

THE FRESHET.—We have heard that not a single bridge is left standing between Easton and Trenton; those at Reiglesville, Centre Bridge, New Hope, Taylorsville and Yardleyville, having all yielded to the resistless power of the flood. The cost of each of the two latter was about twenty thousand dollars, the New Hope sixty-nine thousand dollars, the Centre Bridge probably thirty or forty thousand, and the Reiglesville perhaps about the same.

☞LATE FRESHET.— Some idea of the height of the water at Westchester, N. Y., during the late freshet in the Croton, may be gathered from a fact stated in the Westchester Democrat. A barn was carried over the tops of some apple trees, and a portion of the hay it contained left in their branches.

HORRID DEATH.—A man named Henry Cramer, while engaged in oiling the machinery near the large cog wheel in the mill of John H. Cathkamier at Poughkeepsie on Monday last, was caught by the coat in the cogs of a small wheel drawn in, and instantly killed.

GOING IT STRONG.—Three persons, charged with selling lottery tickets, were arrested in Boston on Tuesday, and committed for trial; two in default of bail in twenty thousand dollars each, and one in default of four thousand.

HAVANA.—A letter from Havana, dated 27th Dec., says that great excitement and indignation prevails throughout the island, on account of the arrival there of D. Turnbull, Esq., an active and zealous abolitionist, as British Consul.

The present debt of Maryland is over 15 millions of dollars.

From the Norfolk Beacon

SOMETHING REMARKABLE.

A Ship found abandoned at the th hold of the port of her destination.—Saturday evening the fine ship Gr Brown, of and bound to Baltimore fr Liverpool, with a valuable cargo on bo was brought into this port in charg the crews of the Baltimore Pilot bo Baltimore, Pocahontas, and Liberty.

We learn from Capt. Thomas, on the pilots, that the ship was discove on Friday afternoon, the 8th inst., al 15 to 18 miles to the north of Cape H ry; on approaching her found she ashore. and on boarding her discove she was abandoned, the crew he suppo having left her in the long boat, as ta els were rigged to the fore and mainya Capt. Thomas with his associates f the boat Pochahontas, being unable get the ship off, sent for the pilot which was cruizing a short distance f them; and on her arival, with the as tance of her crew, they succeeded about 2 o'clock on Saturday morning getting her off, and worked the shi and up as far as Craney Island, whe she was towed up to town by the steam Star.

When Capt. Bean, of the boat B more boarded the Grace Brown, he fo that she had upward of nine feet wa in her hold—during Saturday, while der way, they reduced the leak tw inches. One of the ship's anchors a chain were gone, the other anchor broken.

Capt. Duff, a skilful and enterpri ship master of Baltimore, was in c mand of the ship when she left Ham Roads the 9th September last for Li pool.

FURTHER PARTICULARS.

After the above was in type, we re ved from Captain Duff the follo statement. It will be seen that Capt and his crew arrived here on Satur night a few hours after the ship had brought in by the pilots:—

The ship left Liverpool on the 12t November, for Baltimore—laden salt, iron, coal, dry goods and hardw &c.; on the first of January, within t ty-five miles of the land, South of Henry, was blown off by a heavy W W. gale across the gulf to the longi of 72½. On nearing the coast on nesday night the ship struck on S. E. point of the middle Ground stripping the ships mizzen mast and sing her to leak badly, and immedi running into four fathoms water. sea being very high and weather t the ship continuing to leak, and then ing two feet water in the hold, Capt determined to anchor his ship, and p out a full score of chain, to take his and crew and make for the land and cure assistance to return to the should the weather become modera Capt. D. and his crew, supplying the with provisions, clothing, &c., lef ship at half past four o'clock and encountering tremendous weather hardships landed on the Eastern s next morning, in safety, being 18 h in the boat.

He immediately proceeded to pr such assistance as he deemed neces and succeeded in engaging several sels and their crews. About 8 o' on Saturday morning, however the w er clearing, to his surprise, he sa ship under way, when he with his took passage in one of the vessels ged, from the Eastern shore, and ar here at 11 o'clock the same night; re ed on board the Grace Brown and de ded possession of his ship, which w fused him by those in charge.

ARREST OF THE MURDERERS AT C CHRISTI.—The schr. Byron, at New from Matamoras, brings us the i gence that the villian Gonzales, tog with Rodriguez and Panando, two principal men, have been arreste imprisoned at Matamoras. It may collected they were concerned in t the American sloop at Corpus Chris the murder of her men. Maj. Smit American Cousul, is doing every th his power to bring proof sufficient t vict them. The Byron brought no news.

THE PATRIOT SON OF A LARGE F The Electorial Messenger from In is Col. M. G. C. Clark. Col. C. was Harrison at the Maumee and Tippec and has been a resident of Indiana, the period when there were but s habitants within its territorial boun But what is most remarkable he is twenty-nine sons and two daughters same father and mother! This, we on, will be hard to beat.—Detroit Advertiser.

HANGING.—The Bennington (Vt. zette says that the children of Mr. D of that town, in playing "hanging," the absence of their mother, on F last, slipped a cord around the nec little sister about two years old, they hung, the children discoverin child strangling became affrighte ran to a neighbor for help but on t rival of the neighbors the little s was dead.

FREIGHTS.—The New York E says:

"We are glad to perceive there i cided change for the better in fr from England. Our packets are ving with full cargoes and good lists. From this to Europe there a few goods offering, and at the lowe sible rates."

IE RECORDER.

ZANESVILLE.

ESDAY, ... JANUARY 27, 1841.

Conrad's charge to the jury on the second of Eldridge occupied nearly three Wonder if the jury did not get lost in MPTION.—The Governor of Georgia has is proclamation, to the Banks of that o resume specie payments on the 1st of y next.

fog was so great on the 8th and 9th inst., e steamers could not navigate the channel e Fear, so as to pass with the Eastern om Wilmington to Charleston, S. C.

THER.—The weather continued severe for days about the time of our last issue; t has turned milder. We have a little n the ground, which from present appear- will soon leave us.

SON, THE MAIL ROBBER.—He was an ac- ece of Porter in robbing the mail in 1830. was hung and Wilson sentenced to ten imprisonment. His time expired on the f Oct., but he was detained in prison for f suit, and to wait the sentence of other ments to which he had plead guilty. He ed the President's pardon on the 13th in- which freed him from these costs and ments, and was set at liberty.

e Columbus State Journal of the 20th it, says:

e learn by a letter, received by a gentle- n this city, from an authentic source, that ral Harrison has formed his arrangements aving Cincinnati, for the East, on Tues- e 26th inst. His intentions, at the date e letter alluded to, were to proceed to eling, by the way of the river. The present eather, however, should it continue, may the navigation, or render it dangerous.— tat case, he will take the land rout, and be expected in this city on the 27th or instant."

he correspondent of the Zanesville Gazette

n. Harrison is not expected in this city e the 1st of February. Great preparations making in Boston, New York, Philadelphia, for attending, in companies, families and es, the inauguration in this city on the f March. W. H. H. Taylor, Esq., General ison's son-in-law, will be his private Secre- . In the absence of Mrs. Harrison, (who been seriously ill for some time) Mrs. Taylor, irginia, the mother of Gen. Harrison's son- w, will open the White House, and have ge of the domestic affairs, until Mrs. Har- n can leave North Bend.

ONGRESS.—This body has done but little, so of importance to the nation. A bill has introduced into the House making an ap- riation for the continuation of the Cum- and Road through Ohio, Indiana and Illi- , which, it is thought will not pass. A bill abolish imprisonment for debt, in certain es, has passed the House:

The most important questions before Congress those in reference to the disposal of the blic lands. There are, at present, four distinct position before that body, each of which has eady elicited much animated discussion. The t is the Graduation Bill; the object of which o graduate the price of the lands according quality; $1,25 to be the maximum and 25 nts the minimum price. The second is the ll introduced by Mr. Benton, which grants to ery head of a family, who shall settle on the blic lands, a pre-emption right to 160 acres, condition that he shall erect thereon a log- in and make a permanent improvement.— he third, is the bill of Mr. Calhoun, which poses to cede to the new States the lands thin their limits, reserving a small per cent- e for the general treasury. The fourth, is the position of Mr. Clay, which provides that e proceeds of the public domain be divided hong the States in an equitable ratio, to be ed by the States for internal improvements, ducation, or any other purpose, that may be emed wise by the several States receiving said stribution.

DOLLAR MAGAZINE.—The enterprizing pub- shers of the "Brother Jonathan," of New York, ave got up a monthly magazine, each number onsisting of 32 large pages, at the very low rice of one dollar per annum, in advance. It s edited by N. P. Willis and H. H. Weld, and ill give an abstract of current American and oreign literature, plates of fashion, music, &c. &c. Address "Wilson and Company," post paid, 62 Nassau street, N. Y.

BICKNELL'S REPORTER, &c.—We have been a egular peruser of the Reporter for something like ne year, and there is not a paper which comes o our office of which we make more use. It is a mammoth sheet; its first page is filled with judi- cious selections from the current literature; the last page is confined principally to the exchan- ges, and the inner form gives the prices current, the state of the money market, and an abstract of the news of the day, domestic and foreign What we particularly appreciate in this journal, is, the tact of its editor in abstracting from the great mass of passing events those which are of interest and importance to the reader. The foreign news has usually come to us in the Re- porter in advance of all its weekly cotempora- ries. Indeed such a paper could not be issued weekly without immense labor and attention.— We are told by those who were acquainted with this paper under its former management, that it is conducted with more ability, if possible, by Mr. Miller, its present proprietor, than it was by Mr. Bicknell himself.

The Reporter is three dollars per annum, in advance: five dollars will pay for one subscriber two years, and each subscriber to the Reporter will get the Counterfeit Detecter for July and January. Every business man in the west should have this work.

The Counterfeit Detecter and Bank Note List is published by the same person, monthly, at $1,50: two copies two years $5.

Address Matthew T. Miller, post paid, No. 76 south third street, Philadelphia.

PRICES CURRENT.

ZANESVILLE.—Wheat 50 cents. Flour 3 dollars.

PHILADELPHIA, January 19.—FLOUR.—The receipts continue light, with a moderate export demand. Sales 3500 bbls. Pennsylvania Flour at 4,75.—Bicknell.

BALTIMORE, January 16.—FLOUR—The market for Flour in Howard street is firmer, without sales having been made over 4,50 for good brands. The late intelligence from England mainly contributed to the stability of the article, added to the light receipts; and the fact, also, that the orders to which we referred in our last having been filled, mostly at 4,44, thereby materially reducing the previous stocks, as well as the competition among holders. Some shipments are making to Liverpool, by the Alexander, which is to sail from this port via Charleston.

PROVISIONS.—Except for the purpose of filling a special order, which includes the larger items under-named, the market for all descriptions remains excessively inactive. We note the sale of 130 bbls. Mess Pork at 16,00, and a small lot of Prime at 14,00 per bbl. Beef is held generally at quoted rates, 13, 11 and 9 dollars per bbl., for Mess, No. 1, and Prime, except a few bbls. No. 1, which sold at 10,50. A sale of 43,000 lbs. Baltimore cured Sides, has been made at 8¾c., which is a reduction of ¼ cent per lb. on the last previous operation of moment. A parcel of 6 a 7000 lbs. Hams at 10 cents; and another of 3 a 4000 lbs. assorted have sold at 9 cts. Sales of Western assorted at 7¾ a 8 cts. Hams, Sides and Shoulders are held nominally at 10½, 9 and 8 cents per lb. for the various parts of Baltimore cured; and for Western, a reduction of ½ a cent per lb., in making a bill of magnitude, would probably be submitted to. Lard has further declined, sales of 2 a 300 kegs prime No. 1 having been made at 8½ cents cash and 4 months. The stock is very large both in kegs and bbls., and prices still tend downward.

WESTERN TRANSPORTATION.—Wagon freights remain as last week: to Pittsburgh, 1,25; to Wheeling, 1,50 per 100 lbs.

THE HOME MARKET.—There was a tolerable fair supply of Beef Cattle in market this week, numbering about 300 head, over half of which were sold; the inferior at 5,00 dollars, and other qualities from that price to 7,50, the latter for prime. These rates establish an advance on the prices paid the previous week, of about 50 cents per 100 lbs. Live Hogs are only in moderate request at former rates; except in some instances for choice parcels of desirable sizes, an advance of 25 cts. has been paid: a drove of 130 Western of this description has sold at 6 dolls.; we quote 5,75 a 6,00 per 100 lbs.—Lyford.

PITTSBURGH, January 15.—Since the opening of the navigation, business with our manufacturers and wholesale houses has revived, and a good deal has been done in the shipping and forwarding of goods. About 350 tons of Iron and Nails have been shipped to the various ports and markets along the rivers. We have never seen at this season of the year, better nor larger stocks of Groceries, Iron, Nails, &c. &c., on hand, nor the prices lower—giving great facilities for a cheap and ample supply in our market, and merchants, who visit us with cash, or punctual, sound men can buy on excellent terms.—Great facilities will be afforded in taking Western currency on the best terms.

FLOUR.—Flour is plenty and dull. Sales of 200 bbls. at 3,00 dollars, currency, from stores, and 120 bbls. at the river at 2,87½ per bbl. at which price a lot was refused. We may quote 2,87½ to 3,00 for good and choice brands.

BUTTER.—Sales of 18 bbls. fresh roll, 8 c. and 20 kegs, 6½ c. currency, cash.

LARD.—Sales of 20 kegs good, 7c. currency, cash.

CHEESE.—Dull. Sales 10 casks, choice, 6½ cts. cash, currency.

CLOVER-SEED.—Sales of 10 and 19 bbls. at 4,50 from stores, and other sales from wagons, 4,25 currency; retail 4,50 to 4,75 per bushel.

SUGAR.—A fair stock on hand, and sales of two parcels, amounting to 10 hhds good new N. Orleans at 7 cts. currency.

LEAD.—Sales for curren y of 10,000 lbs. at 5¼ cts. and 16,000 lbs. at 5½ cts. 4 mos.—Harris.

OHIO LEGISLATURE.

The bill, which we published in our last paper, for the protection of religious worship, was passed, on the 15th instant, by the following vote:

Those who voted in the affirmative were

Messrs. Allen, Bell, Bliss Brown, Carothers, Carpenter, Clarke, Cochran, Cook, Dunham, Florence, Giddings, Hawkins, Israel, Johnson, of Cuyahoga, Kaylor, Koontz, Lamine, Lawrence, Marsh, Moore, M'Anelly, McGugin, Perkins, Pollock, Reece, Robins, Reeves, Scott, of Crawford, Scott, of Greene, Smith, of Adams, Spindler, Streater, Stinson, Vincent, Van Vorhes, Watkins, Way, Weaver, Welch, Wheeler, Wood, Worthington, Young and Speaker,—forty-five.

Those who voted in the negative, were Messrs. Aten, Bartley, Brough, Burns, Harlan, Hinkle, Hockinberry, Jenkins, Johnson, of Monroe, Morris, Probasco, Raffensperger, Reynolds, Riblet, Shober, Smith, of Stark, and Warren—seventeen.

Mr. Perkins of the House, reported, on the 10th instant, a bill to repeal all laws now in force prohibiting colored citizens from testifying in courts of justice, in cases where white citizens may be a party,—which was read the first time.

On the 20 inst. Mr. Bliss of the House offered the following preamble and resolution; which were agreed to:

Whereas, a difference of opinion exists, to a considerable extent, as to the construction that should be given to the 9th section of the School Law, passed March 7, 1838, and also the 7th sec. of the amendatory act, passed March 16, 1839, in this, that it is doubted whether the Directors in the several School Districts can continue a School any longer than the public money shall hold and levy a tax for its support. Therefore,

Resolved, That the standing committee on Schools be instructed to inquire whether said act needs any amendment in this particular, declaratory of its provisions, or otherwise; and also, that the committee be further instructed to inquire into the expediency of amending the general School Law, so as,

1st. That no tax exceeding — mills on the dollar valuation, shall be levied in any one year for building any School House, nor more than three-fourths of said tax shall be assessed on residents within the School District.

2d. That no School District shall hereafter be divided so as to make a School District containing less than —— legal voters.

3d. That no person shall be entitled to vote at any School District meeting for building a School House, unless such person shall have been one year within the District, and shall be liable to be taxed for such building.

MCLEOD CASE AGAIN.—We alluded to the McLeod case, not long since, as likely to make a difficulty between the British and American governments. McLeod was arrested at Lewiston, N. Y., on the 12th of November last, on a charge of murder and arson, on the supposition of his being one of the party of Canadians, who destroyed the steamboat Caroline in American waters, in December 1837. His trial will be had the coming month. The British Minister having demanded the release of Mr. McLeod, a correspondence took place between him and Mr. Forsythe, the whole of which was laid before Congress on the 4th instant, and drew forth some very warm remarks from members. We give the following, from this debate, as it gives a history of the facts of the case, which may be satisfactory to some of our readers:

Mr. Fillmore, said he had one remark to make: and that was in relation to the facts stated by the British Minister about the steamboat Caroline.

That boat, as he, (Mr. F.) was informed from the best authority, belonged to a man in the city of Buffalo, by the name of William Wells, who was then and is now a very respectful, peaceable citizen. The boat neither belonged to the patriots, as they were called, or the insurgents from Canada, nor was it in any manner under their control or authority; and what reason there was for the appellation that was given to it by the Minister of Great Britain, he (Mr. F.) could not conceive. The Minister had called it a piratical vessel in the employ of those who had been denominated Canadian patriots. This he (Mr. F.) believed was an entire mistake. The simple facts of the case he understood to be these.

Williams Wells, during the time that these insurgents were occupying Navy Island, in the Niagara river, (which was on the Canada side, and within her Britannic Majesty's dominions,) was owner of this steamboat, which was then at the city of Buffalo, nearly twenty miles above.—He applied to the Custom-house for a license to run the boat from Schlosser, on the American shore, to Navy Island, (where these patriots had their fortifications,) to which she was to ply simply as a ferry boat, unarmed. The boat was licensed and went down the river upon the day previous to its destruction—stopping at Schlosser, the last stopping-place above the Falls. The boat then passed over that afternoon once or twice, carrying passengers; but, as he (Mr. F.) was informed, without any arms or munitions of war on board. She returned again to our own shore, and was moored at our own shore, and within the national territory of the United States, (not as expressed in the communication of the British Minister,) but within the undoubted territory of the United States, as much as was this spot on which that House was now standing. She was moored at the wharf, and was there left in charge of the usual watch of the boat who were wholly unarmed.—There was only one piece of arms on board, and that was a pocket pistol not loaded, there being no ammunition.

While thus moored, in the night, she was attacked by an armed force, which, it now appeared, was sent from the Canadian shore under the direction of her Majesty's authorities. She was attacked without warning, and one or two (certainly one) of the boat's hands were killed, and others were driven from on board without resistance. The boat itself was towed into the current, set on fire, in that condition, sent over the Falls.

This was the outrage complained of; this was the arson complained of, and that this was the murder complained of. One of our citizens, wholly unarmed, had his brains blown out, and was found next morning on the wharf. There was also good reason to suppose that others in the boat went over the Falls, being unable to escaped.

He was aware that this was a difficult question between the two Governments.—By the laws of the State of New York, this was a murder; and the person committing that murder, and that arson was liable to be tried and punished for these crimes; and neither this Government nor the Executive of this Government, that he could see, had any control over the matter, unless the Government of Great Britain should see fit to respond to the claim in relation to this outrage, by entering into some treaty stipulation. Possibly, by the treaty-making power between this Government and Great Britian, (as treaties, so soon as ratified, become the supreme law of the land,) the individual now implicated might be pardoned. He (Mr. F.) could not see that there was any other way in which it could be done—nor did he know that it could be done even in this—But he did foresee that if the same spirit was manifested by the people at home that was exhibited by the Minister of Great Britain here, the necessary course of events must almost inevitably lead to a collision, if M'Leod should be convicted. That he would be tried he (Mr. F.) had no doubt. He hoped he might be innocent, and that if he was so, he might not be convicted. But if he should be found guilty, he would no doubt be executed, unless a force stronger than he, (Mr. F.) conceived could be brought, were sent from the other side to prevent it, or unless the event could be prevented by the treaty making power.

These are the circumstances and facts, that some think, threaten our relations with Great Britain very seriously. But should McLeod be acquitted, there will be no difficulty in the matter. If he be found guilty, he will, undoubtedly be executed. But in that event, we cannot believe the British government will avenge the supposed wrong by an appeal to arms.

The Banks of Philadelphia have commenced paying specie for their notes. Bicknell of the 19th inst. remarks:

The work of resumption commenced as early as Wednesday last, when several of the banks, the United States among the number, freely payed out small amounts in specie. But it was not until Friday that any thing like a rush was made, and then it was confined almost exclusively to the U. S. Bank. Before the doors were opened, a large number of persons were in waiting, most of them with notes varying in amount, from ten to one hundred dollars. The Bank paid them promptly, and as fast as they could be paid by six or eight persons who had been deputed for the especial purpose.—At one time there might have been three hundred persons within the walls of the institution, the greater part, however, being mere spectators. The excitement was limited, and very little confusion or disorder took place. Towards midday the crowd thinned considerably, and the excitement had nearly subsided. The next day, Saturday, a scene somewhat similar took place, but particularly good humored, the desire being merely to obtain a small quantity of specie for change.—Yesterday the demand was still more limited, and it is probable that before the close of the present week, every thing will progress as usual. The other banks, with the exception of the Commercial, freely paid out their own notes and also specie when required. But the whole sum drawn from them by our citizens on their own account must have been very light indeed. We may then, we think, confidently state to our friends at a distance, that the resumption has passed over with little or no excitement, and that Philadelphia is now once more a specie paying city. Long may she continue so.

REMAINS OF NAPOLEON.—A Paris correspondent being present on the 15th of December, when the remains of Napoleon were exhibited at the Hotel des Invalides, previous to their re-interment, thus remarks:

It is difficult to describe with what anxiety, with what emotions, those who were present waited for the moment which was to expose to them all that death had left of Napoleon. Notwithstanding the singular state of preservation of the tomb and coffins, we could scarcely hope to find any thing but some mis-shapen remains of the least perishable parts of the costume to evidence the identity. But when, by the hand of Dr. Guillard, the satin sheet was raised, an indescribable feeling and affection was expressed by the spectators, most of whom burst into tears.—The Emperor himself was before their eyes! The features of his face, though changed, were perfectly recognized—the hands perfectly beautiful; his well-known costume had suffered but little, and the colors were easily distinguished—the epaulets, the decorations and the hat, seemed to be entirely preserved from decay—the attitude itself was full of ease, and but for the fragments of the satin lining, which covered as with a fine gauze several parts of the uniform, we might have believed we saw before us Napoleon still extended on a bed of state. General Bertrand, and M. Marchand, who were present at the interment, quickly pointed out the different articles which each had deposited in the coffin, and in the precise position which they had previously described. It was even remarked that the left hand which General Bertrand had taken to kiss for the last time, before the coffin was closed up, still remained slightly raised. Between the legs, near the hat, were the two vases which contained the heart and entrails.

The two inner coffins, were carefully closed again; the old leaden coffin was strongly blocked up with wedges of wood and both were once more soldered up with the most minute precautions, under the direction of Dr. Guillard.

The mortal remains of Napoleon reposed where his last wish was that they should repose—a wish which he thought in his dying moments to have been a vain one—in the heart of his own country, in the place worthy of France's greatest General—under the dome of the Invalides.

More splendor and cost were exhibited on the reception and re-interment of the remains of Bonaparte than, probably, on any similar occasion, in the history of France. It strikes us very forcibly, that, it would have been vastly more creditable to the French nation to have applied the money thus expended to the relief of the widows and orphans, thus made, to gratify the wicked ambition of the man whose ashes they were idolizing.

The correspondent of the Colored American has the following remarks on the right of petitions:

I have witnessed, during the present session, several instances of the presentation of abolition petitions, and their rejection; and it has struck me, as an insult to the members offering the petitions, and to the petitioners themselves. I say an insult; for what is it to refuse a petition so much as a hearing? It is as much as to say to the petitioners, "You are guilty of outraging all propriety, by presenting something to Congress unfit to be listened to;" and to the member offering it, "You, sirrah, are guilty of offering trash unfit to come before this body." If it were in reality so, such a member should be expelled from Congress. But it is not so; the petitioners should be heard, and therefore, the House in refusing to receive and hear the abolition petitions, violates the rights of the petitioners, and of the members offering the petitions, and adds insult to the usurpation. And you will, no doubt, recollect, that Henry Clay, although he was averse to the grant of the petitions, was, at the same time for giving them a hearing. Nay, even in the recent message of Gov. Yell, of Arkansas, he thinks it possible, that abolitionists, have the right to a hearing in Congress, and he advocates the idea of receiving, the petitions, and referring them to a committee of abolition members, so that the South may understand precisely what ground abolitionists assume in relation to Southern slavery. At the same time, he says, that if they have not the right to be heard, they ought to be punished for misdemeanor in presenting petitions. If abolitionists have not the right to petition Congress, they ought to be punished for doing so, and the members offering their petitions should be expelled; but if they have this right, they ought to be heard. There is no proper middle ground; and consequently Congress, in its State of betweenity, occupies a very unreasonable position. And then, just think of the precedent, of refusing to hear these petitions. If Congress may thus exercise their own discretionary power, as to what petitions they will hear or not hear, where is the security for the right of being heard in any case? Any subject disagreeable to the majority may in this way be blinked and got rid of. And then what becomes of our rights and liberties! What becomes of our constitution, which provides for the right of petition? for it is the mockery of this right not to hear a petition when it is made. Hence, Congress are manifestly guilty of violating the Constitution, in refusing to hear abolition petitions.

The Abolition Convention met at Columbus on the 20th inst. About 300 it is said were present.

ITEMS.

RUMOR.—It is rumored that Mr. Fox, the British Minister, has requested his recall.

DECISION.—It has been decided at Albany in the Supreme Court, that the city was not liable for houses torn down to stop a conflagration.

FUGITIVE SLAVES.—An Upper Canada paper says, that within the last four years more than 12,000 runaway slaves have made their escape into Canada, from the United States.

LONG ENOUGH.—The Boston papers of Monday contain the Message of Governor Davis of Massachusetts, to the legislature of that State. It is but one column and a half in length.

REMOVAL OF THE SEAT OF GOVERNMENT. Petitions have been put in circulation, in Ohio, praying the removal of the Seat of the General Government from Washington city to Cincinnati, Ohio,—Phil. Chronicle.

God loves the poorest saint on earth incomparatively better than any angel in heaven loves God.

MILITARY MOVEMENT.—The Buffalo, N. Y. paper states that two companies of artillery have been ordered from that station to Lockport. Rumor attributes this to an anticipated attempt of the Canadians to rescue McLeod.

Massachusetts Legislature assembled on the 6th. The Senate was organized by the choosing of Daniel P. King, President, and Charles Calhoun, Clerk, without opposition.

Major Noah, late editor of the New York Evening Star, has been appointed Associate Judge of the New York Court of Sessions.

Why is the motion of a watch like vegetation? Because both are occasioned by the Spring.

It is now said there is a prospect of peace in Florida. It is to be hoped so

The last intelligence from Florida states that 40 Indians have been captured, and that ten were hanged.

The "new disease" which created so much alarm in Henry county, Tenn., is found to be the spotted fever.

COMMENDABLE.—A firm in Baltimore, having a note to pay in the exploded Franklin bank, advertised to take its notes at par of such poor persons as might possess them.

The Charleston Courier cannot agree with some of the newspapers, that there is nothing in the Fanny Elssler exhibition calculated to offend the most fastidious delicacy.

FAIR.—The Anti Slavery Society of Boston at their late fair, realized from the sale of articles the sum of $2000.

ABOUT RIGHT.—The Quebec Mercury of the 12th inst. closes an article on the subject of the Caroline and McLeod affair, with the following paragraph; "All this at the commencement of a session looks "squally" enough: however, the American press, like its government, is given to loud talking, and as it is not to the interest of either country to go to war notwithstanding the fee-faw-fum articles we have spoken of, we are under no apprehension of immediate hostilities ensuing."

FOREIGN NEWS.

FIVE DAYS LATER FROM ENGLAND.

The ship Patrick Henry, which sailed from Liverpool on the 25th ult., arrived in New York on Friday last, bringing papers from London of the 24th and Liverpool of the 25th Dec., but which are destitute of any very important news.

The steamer Great Western reached Liverpool in 14½ days after leaving New York.

The terms of the convention entered into between Mehemet Ali and Capt. Napier have been agreed to by the members of the conference in London.

Spain and Portugal are quarreling and about to engage in hostilities concerning the navigation of Douro. The intervention of Great Britain would, it was thought prevent any collision.

Her Majesty's ship Fairy, Captain Hewitt, while exploring the eastern coast of England, went down in a squall of wind, and every soul on board perished. There were thirty-five persons on board at the time. The Fairy is the eighth brig that has turned over and gone down—cause, faulty, build or construction.

The coal mines at Ringley Field, near Bolton, were suddenly overflowed on the 10th. Of thirty persons, all but three escaped almost miraculously.

It appears that there have been rumors that the East India Company were to bear the expenses of the Chinese expedition. The Governor of the company states, however, that assurances had been received from government it would not be required.

THE JEWS.—There seems to be a movement among the Continental Jews in relation to the late events in the East. The following is the concluding paragarph of an address to the Jews, published in Der Orient, a German newspaper:

"People of Jehovah, raise yourselves from your thousand years' slumber. Rally round leaders! have really the will, a Moses will not be wanting. The rights of nations will never grow old; take possession of the land of your fathers; build a third time the temple of Zion, greater and more magnificent than ever. Trust in the Lord, who has led you safely thro' the vale of misery thousands of years.—He also will not forsake you in your last conflict."

MISSIONARY.—The Mission Family that left New York in October, 1839, for the Sandwich Islands, have safely arrived at the point of their destination in good health. They reached Oahu on the 10th of April.

Business Department.

RECEIVED PAY FOR RECORDER.

From F. B. Thompson for D. Harbaugh,	$2 00
" T. Robinson for J. J. Amos, 2d vol.	2 00
" S. H. Euans for W. Hunt,*	2 00
" W. Marshall for S. Mitchell,	2 00
" A. C. Barnes for W. Cones,	2 00
" " for Mrs. E. Hall,	2 00
" R. Richardson for E. Johnson,	1 00
" " for 'Christian World'	1 00
" O. White for H. Elliott,	2 00
" George Waddle, for C. Arnt,†	2 00
" J. White for Ira Wright,	2 00
" R. Richardson, for J. Scott, Steub.,	1 00
" L. S. Delaplain for F. W. Bassett,	2 00
" R. Dobbins for J. Johnson,	1 00
" J. H. Thomas for E. Stibbins,	2 00
" S. Bloomer for W. McPherson,	2 00
" J. Herbert for Wm. Melvin,	2 00
" T. Forshee, in full, for the following persons,	15 00
" " for P. Ferrel,
" " for P. Stiver,
" " for J. Pettier,
" " for S. Mills,
" " for P. Roe,
" " for E. Stuckey,
" " for S. Mitchell,
" " for J. Ross,
" " for W. P. Bryant.
" " for J. Mulingan,

*Mawreytown, is that right?
†Is that right?

LETTERS RECEIVED.

S. H. Euans, D. Lewis, T. Robinson, B. F. Thompson, J. Clarke, J. Woodruff, 1 sub.; J. S. Robinson, E. H. McCoy, M. D., A. H. Bassett. W. Munhall, R. Richardson, 2 let., 1 sub., E. D. Norris, J. Hale, "A Disciple," W. Reeves, W. B. Miller, 8 subs.; J. J. Hamilton, 1 sub., J. Herbert, Geo. Waddle, J. White, W. K., J. Clarke, T. Forshee, TEN subs.; A. C. Barnes, S. Bloomer and J. H. Thomas.

We say to Br. White's inquiry, Gallipolis money does not pass with us.

We send a paper for Br. Joseph White to Lawrenceburgh, Ia., and S. H. Euans to Hamersville, Ohio.

Br. West, at Moons, is informed that we succeeded in getting off his uncurrent note and have credited him in full for 2d vol.

T. Forshee, all right, but you sent us ten names beside your own. Thank you in the bargain.

Several new subscribers have called for the back numbers of this volume; we have them not, and have to commence with the time of the forwarding of the names.

We have received the cash in advance for ten new subscribers from Br. T. Forshee, of Mercer, Ohio. That is the way to cheer the heart of an editor. We think if our friends would try and bear it on their minds, and act on all suitable occasions they could do considerable for us yet.

We received a letter some weeks since from Eaton, Ohio, charged 75 cents postage. This letter we cannot take from the office, as we do not wish to pay such a heavy tax. Our readers will recollect that when any package amounts to one ounce and over, it is charged by weight, which comes to more than the single sheet.—For instance; we have received two sheets of paper, under one seal, which amounted to $1,00 postage, by weight, which if sent separately would only have been 37½ cts.

AGRICULTURAL.

ON THE CULTURE OF SILK.

By Lewis Garrett.

This is to many in this country a novelty and by some esteemed a mere humbug, although it has been in successful operation for some four thousand years in China, and long known as a profitable branch of industry in Asia, Africa, Europe and in some portions of America. Fifty years ago, the cotton culture, and the notion of its becoming the leading staple of our country—an important article of commerce and a source of individual wealth, would have been esteemed visionary. Thirty six years ago, when I first knew the country, then familiarly known by the name of Cumberland—now middle Tennessee, a few acres of ground cultivated in cotton, were interspersed through a limited country thinly populated. At that time the Western District of Tennessee, the states of Alabama, Arkansas, Louisiana, and a great portion of Mississippi, were not thought of as cotton regions. To have talked then of large fields of cotton in Tennessee—extensive farms white with this article, in regions then the habitations of savages and wild beasts—of thousands of cotton bales being shipped to New Orleans, and a rich cargo brought back in return in so short a period, would have been pronounced a humbug. But we have seen this in all its details and benefits realized. It is well known that what was called the 'cotton fever,' raged to excess at one period, but this was no proof of the inutility of the enterprise. The business, however, is overdone—the land in many places exhausted—as it regards Middle Tennessee, from some cause or combination of causes, the culture of cotton has become difficult and uncertain, and we are almost destitute of any leading staple.

The Silk Culture—which has contributed to make the Chinese empire the richest and most independent country in the world—that has given employment and bread to destitute millions of men, women and children in numerous other regions less favorable to the enterprise, as it regards climate and soil—which has given an impetus to industry, to merchandise and to navigation—this branch of domestic industry, presents itself to us under favorable auspices—at a time when the stagnation of business, pecuniary pressure and the want of some leading staple—some important article calls loudly for such a desideratum. It presents itself in the simplest imaginable form.

The material from which silk is made is easily obtained—that species of Mulberry, (the Morus Multicaulis) deemed the most suitable and convenient, is readily procured, and requires only a little experience, care and industry to render it abundant. The laborers—the simple insects—the silk worm, which with instinctive skill, converts the mulberry leaf into a valuable and useful fabric, is easily obtained, and only requires a little reading, plain common sense, practical experience and industrious habits, to manage the whole and conduct it to a profitable and useful issue. It may be undertaken and carried on with or without capital—by many or few—strong or weak hands—upon a large or small scale—the aged and infirm—women and children, who cannot perform hard labor, can gather the leaves, feed the worms, take care of the cocoons, which contain a rich treasure—manage the reel, &c. &c. and be profitably and usefully employed.

The ladies, have, in some instances, taken the lead in this enterprise so beneficial to mankind. History relates that the "lawful wife of the Emperor of China, Siling-chi, began the culture of silk—had a large quantity of those insects (the silk worm) collected, which she fed herself," &c., and posterity rendered her particular honors under the name of the "goddess of silk worms." This business, found profitable at first, was continued—"the fair sex of all ranks did not fail to copy a precedent at once honorable in its character and profitable to themselves." In the year 1755, Mrs. Pinckney, of South Carolina, "took with her to England, a quantity of excellent silk, which she had raised and spun in the vicinity of Charleston." "The silk culture, it is asserted, commenced in South Carolina, as in Georgia," about the year 1732. "The ladies of South Carolina, hesitated not to devote their attention to what had, from time immemorial, constituted the care of the empresses of the Celestial Empire."

The annual drain of the precious metals for the single article of silks is immense—and that too from the United States—a country possessing climate, soil mechanical genius, and other facilities every other way adequate to check or stop this drain, and to compete with other countries in the production of this article—and it is stated on unquestionable authority, that the importations of manufactured silks in 1836, 'amounted to $22,-079,000.'

"The success of the silk culture in France," more than 200 years ago, induced James I., king of England, to say, "that in a few years our brother, the French King, hath both began and bro't to perfection the making of silk in his country, whereby he has won to himself honor, and to his subjects a marvellous increase of wealth." "In 1661 the company of silk throwsters in London, then employed 40,000 men, women, and children." Would our uninformed fellow-citizens denounce this rapid progress of "silk or multicaulis fever?" As early as 1662, it is stated that James I. king of England, encouraged the culture of silk in the colonies of North America—it was commenced and prospered for a time in different places—a "report on the Mulberry and Sugar beet, published during the second session of the twenty-fifth Congress," assigns reasons why it was neglected—the white Italian mulberry, "was the only variety cultivated, and this was unfit for use for several years."—"The difficulty in the process of reeling," and "the want of a market for cocoons or raw silk;" and that "the culture of silk was not abandoned in this country on account of the soil or climate." These difficulties are removed by the introduction of the Morus Multicaulis, which is of quicker growth and more abundant foliage—the improvements in the process of reeling, and a ready market for cocoons, or raw silk.—For the superior advantages of the Morus Multicaulis, above other species of Mulberry, we have the testimony of G. B. Smith, Dr. Pascalis, the Silk culturist, and sundry other scientific and practical writers. It is stated by Mr. Judson, that "The foliage which may be gathered from annual shoots on an acre of ground, will furnish food enough to sustain a family of worms, sufficiently numerous to make 128 pounds of silk, worth at present prices, $8 or $9,00. Practical men say, that an acre set in this tree, will furnish food for a million of worms—allowing 3000 cocoons to make a bushel, the amount will be over 300 bushels, which will command a ready market at four dollars per bushel. The progress of the silk business in this country, will probably be gradual, but certain, in proportion to the success of actual experiments, and the degree of information circulated among the people—example has a more powerful influence than theory. The example of China, by degrees, spreads its influence to other regions—the example of the French King attracted the attention of the King of England, and the success of France gave an impetus to the business in England. It is a business within the reach of every industrious family—and the example of one will influence and benefit many. It cannot be monopolized—companies and the wealthy may establish factories—all the better—the industrious poor can own or rent a small piece of ground, can raise cocoons, and find a ready market—nor will it interfere materially with ordinary cropping.

From the Methodist Protestant.

Windsor Theological and Literary Institute.

(FOUR MILES FROM BALTIMORE.)

Rev. Francis Waters, D. D., Principal and Professor of Didactic Theology and Sacred Literature.

By a resolution of the convention, at its late session in this city, the Rev. Isaac Webster, Rev. William Collier, Rev. Francis Waters, Mr. John Clark and Mr. Beale H. Richardson, were appointed a committee "to make arrangements for the immediate organization of a Theological School for the education of young men for the Itinerant Ministry of the Methodist Protestant Church." In pursuance of that act, the committee have already made arrangements with Dr. Waters to serve as instructor of the candidates, and have the pleasure to inform our brethren of this, and other Conference Districts, that the school is now open for the reception of students.

Tuition and board, including lights, fuel and washing, will be $150 per scholastic year; that is, from 1st September to last of July following.

Bed and bedding, furnished by the student.

Agreeably to the resolution of the convention, each applicant for admission into the school, must furnish to the committee satisfactory testimonials of religious character, and of definite intentions to prepare himself for the Itinerant Ministry of the Methodist Protestant Church. The committee would further state, that the Institution is intended to be for the benefit of the church generally, and, in view of the incalculable importance of the object, in all its bearings, would earnestly recommend the instant formation of education societies, or the adoption of some plan equally efficient in all our circuits and stations, for the purpose of collecting materials for the school, and of raising funds to sustain, in whole or in part, such of our young brethren as may need assistance in pursuing the course of studies. It may hence be inferred that the school is equally open to any, who are able to incur their own expenses; although it may reasonably be concluded, that the greater number will consist of such as will require assistance. The proposition had, we believe, the unanimous and spirited sanction and suffrage of the whole convention; and believing, as we do, that no other could have merited higher consideration, or can be of greater importance and interest to the church, we now cherish the hope and the confidence, that our brethren, one and all, will at once manifest a zeal and enterprize in carrying it out, that shall justly correspond with the high and acknowledged claims of the subject.

Persons desiring further information, for the present, may address Dr. F. Waters, Baltimore.

(Signed,) ISAAC WEBSTER, Ch'n.

Baltimore, Nov. 13, 1840.

RULES AND REGULATIONS

For the Government of the Committee, having charge of the Education of Young Men for the Itinerant Ministry of the Methodist Protestant Church, and of the School under their charge.

1. The officers of the Committee shall be a Chairman, a Recording Secretary, and a Corresponding Secretary; to perform, each, such duties as usually belong to similar appointments.

2. There shall be four meetings of the Committee, in the year; last week in December; last week in March; last week in July; and first week in October;—and, also special meetings to be called by the Chairman, when business of importance may require it.

3. All elections of officers shall take place at the December meeting—except in cases of resignation, or other sudden vacancy.

4. The Books, and all other property of the Committee, or under their superintendence, shall be held responsible to their control and disposal.

5. Every candidate for admission into the School—personally unknown to the Committee—shall be required to present a certificate of his religious character, and of his definite intentions to prepare himself for the Itinerant Ministry of the Methodist Protestant Church, from the President of a conference District, the superintendent of a circuit or station, or a quarterly conference.

6. No applicant shall be admitted into the School, until examined in such form as the Committee may prescribe.

7. Each candidate must be sustained by a responsible pledge for the payment of his bills, and must comply with the mode of discharging the same, prescribed by the Committee.

8. Each student—whilst at the School—will be required to attend strictly and punctually to all its regulations, religious, literary and domestic; to pursue, under the direction of the Principal, the course of studies prescribed; to assist in conducting exercises of worship; to aid in Sabbath School instruction; and, in short, to engage in all such duties as may be deemed by the Committee suitable to prepare young men for the services and labors of the Itinerant Ministry.

9. The course of study shall occupy so much time as the Committee shall judge necessary, and each student, upon completing it, shall be entitled to a certificate signed by the Chairman, and countersigned by the Secretary.

10. Money advanced, in the way of assistance to a candidate, should be considered as a loan, to be refunded by him, in annual payments, suitable to his ability and convenience—after entering upon his Itinerant labors—for the purpose of raising a fund, to assist other young men upon the same terms.

11. There shall be occasional examinations of the students upon the subjects they are pursuing, in presence of the Committee, and of other persons whom they may invite to attend.

12. It shall be the duty of the Principal to make quarterly reports to the Committee, of the state of the School, the number and progress of the students, &c.

COURSE OF STUDIES.

1. ACADEMICAL. It will be the aim of the Committee to have the candidates well acquainted with the English language; and, when necessary, the lessons of instruction will accordingly embrace the principles of Grammar, with Rhetoric, Logic, Pronunciation, Composition, and such branches of Mathematical and Natural Science as may be thought requisite to complete a usegul English education. To those will be added, in selected cases, according to the judgment of the committee, instruction in the Latin and Greek languages, and in Hebrew; that students evincing a taste and aptitude for such acquirements, may be permitted to attain them, so far at least as to be able to read the Septuagant, Greek Testament, &c., &c.

2. THEOLOGICAL. This Department will embrace Moral Science, the Evidences of Natural and Revealed Religion, the Doctrines of Christianity, Ecclesiastical Polity and Jurisprudence, Church History, Pulpit Eloquence, Composition of Sermons, &c., &c. Instruction will be given in the form of regular recitations and lectures.

Text Books will be selected, so far as doctrines are concerned, to teach and maintain the distinctive faith of our Church, in its agreement with the sacred Scriptures.

A well selected Library being very important to the purposes of the School, the Committee would respectfully suggest the proposition to the consideration of the church, and solicit contributions, in money or books, toward its establishment without delay. All such contributions may be forwarded to any member of the Committee, at Baltimore, and the same shall be duly acknowledged in the Methodist Protestant. A list of the Books mostly needed will be shortly published. ISAAC WEBSTER, Chairman.

December 15, 1840.

DESCRIPTION OF A GOOD WIFE.—She had'nt no ear for music, but she had a capital eye for dirt, and for poor folks, that's much better. No eye never seen as much dirt in my house as a fly couldn't brush off with his wings. Boston gals may boast of their spinnets and gytars, and their eye-talian airs, and their ears for music—but give me the gal I say, that has an eye for dirt, for she's the gal for my money. SAM SLICK.

A young man named Benjamin Oliver, a native of New York, and recently a clerk in New Orleans, committed suicide in that city on Sunday, the 6th instant. He accomplished the deed with a small penknife, severing the arteries of his throat, and stabbing himself in some twenty places with it. He assigned poverty as the cause.

If Queen Victoria has a son hereafter that son will take the crown in preference to any sisters whether born before or after him. The rule of descent is the same as in regard to lands—the oldest son is heir, if there be a son. Therefore the infant Princess is only heiress-presumptive, not heiress apparent.—Com. Advertiser.

The President steam-ship is laid up for alterations. She is to receive considerable additional steam power. She will leave England on the 10th of February; the British Queen will leave on the 10th of March. The two ships will continue to sail from their opposite ports on the 16th of each month.

THE SLOTH.—Few enemies are so hard to conquer as the enemies within. Of these early prejudices are among the most invincible. We have a letter now before us, lately received from a friend in the West Indies, which was written expressly to correct the erroneous impressions prevailing in this country, respecting the Sloth.

We will first extract a few sentences from "A Description of the Sloth," with which some of our readers are familiar. It is found in Marshall's Spelling Book, which was in common use in some parts of New England 15 years ago. It is there said:

"The Sloth, which is an animal of South America, makes the most despicable appearance of all the animal race.—This poor creature seldom changes its position but by constraint."

Then follows a detailed, but not very intelligible account of its slow, painful and awkward motions; and it is added that it sometimes advances no more than three feet in an hour, and that "all motions, which it makes, seem to torture it."

To give a more just idea, of the Sloth, (or Bradypus,) we have combined the information of our correspondent sends us, with what we glean from other sources, in the following article.

Our young readers will doubtless fancy that this picture represents the Sloth in an unnatural and painful condition. If so, you mistake. He is now in the happiest position he can be in. He suspends himself beneath a branch when he wishes to rest, and there he quietly sleeps.

You see at once that strong crooked claws which are made to hook naturally upon a horizontal branch, would be very awkward things for a heavy animal to stand upon. Now it happens that most of our accounts of the Sloth have been given by travellers to whom it was exhibited by Indians and others, who had brought it from its native forests to the seashore.—They have seen it on the ground, where it was never designed to be, and where it is in as unnatural a position as a man would be in, who should try to support himself on the ends of his fingers and toes.

In that condition, it is even said that the poor creature sheds tears. At any rate, he moans dolefully, and looks up with a countenance which seems to say: Have pity on me, for I am in pain and sorrow.

If he could then be restored to the forest, where he might pursue happiness in his own way, by running about under the branches, his whole appearance would be changed. In such a condition the sloth was seen and described by Mr. Waterton, a Naturalist and traveller. He believes that it was made to live no where but among the branches of trees. He says:

"Hence his seemingly bungling conformation is at once accounted for. In lieu of his leading a painful life and entailing a miserable existence on his progeny, it is but fair to suppose that it enjoys life just as much as any other animal, and that his extraordinary formation and singular habits are but further proofs to engage us to admire the wonderful works of Omnipotence.

"There is a saying among the Indians, that when the wind blows, the Sloth begins to travel. In the calm weather he remains tranquil, probably not liking to cling to the extremity if the branches, lest they should break with him in passing from one tree to another. But as soon as the wind rises, the branches of the neighboring trees become interwoven, and then the Sloth seizes them as they are blown within his reach, and pursues his journey in safety. There is seldom an entire day of calm in the forests between the tropics. The trade winds generally set in about 10 o'clock in the morning, and thus the Sloth may set out after breakfast, and get a considerable way before dinner. He travels at a good round pace, and were you to see him pass from tree to tree, as I have, you would never think of calling him a Sloth."

One day Waterton found a large two-toed Sloth upon the ground, upon the bank of the Essequibo. He gives the following amusing account of his adventure.

"As soon as we got up to him, he threw himself upon his back, and defended himself in gallant style with his fore legs.—'Come, poor fellow,' said I to him, 'if thou hast got into a hobble to-day, thou shalt not suffer for it. I'll take no advantage of thee in misfortune; the forest is large enough both for me and thee to rove in: go thy way up above, and enjoy thyself in these endless wilds! it is more than probable thou wilt never have another interview with man; so fare thee well.'—On saying this, I took a long stick which was lying there, held it from him to hook on, and then conveyed him to a high and stately mora He ascended with wonderful rapidity, and in about a minute, he was almost at the top of the tree. He went off in a side direction, and caught hold of the branch of a neighboring tree; he then proceeded toward the heart of the forest.

"Thus I felt persuaded that the world has hitherto erred in its conjectures concerning the Sloth, from descriptions being given of him on the ground, and not in the only position in which he ought to have been described, namely, clinging to the branch of a tree."

Our young readers will learn from this to guard against rash judgment, and unfounded prejudice.—Youth's Cabinet.

THE LARGEST LAKE.—The Caspian sea between Europe and Asia, is the largest lake in the world. Its era is 150,000 square miles. It is a remarkable fact that the surface of this lake is 300 feet below the level of the ocean.

Dr. Jayne's Family Medicines.

THESE medicines are recommended and extensively used by the most intelligent persons in the United States, by numerous Professors and Presidents of Colleges, Physicians of the Army and Navy, and of Hospitals and Almshouses, and by more than three hundred Clergymen of various denominations.

They are expressly prepared for family use, and have acquired an unprecedented popularity throughout the United States; and as they are so admirably calculated to preserve HEALTH and cure DISEASE, no family should ever be without them. The proprietor of these valuable preparations received his education at one of the best Medical Colleges in the United States, and has had fifteen years' experience in an extensive and diversified practice, by which he has had ample opportunities of acquiring a practical knowledge of diseases, and of the remedies best calculated to remove them.

These preparations consist of ☞JAYNE'S EXPECTORANT, a valuable remedy for coughs, colds, consumption, asthma, spitting of blood, croup, whooping coughs, bronchitis, pleurisy, and inflammation of the lungs or throat, difficulty of breathing, and all diseases of the pulmonary organs. Price $1.

☞JAYNE'S TONIC VERMIFUGE. A pleasant, safe, and certain preparation for the removal of worms, dyspepsia, sour stomach, fever and ague, want of appetite, and all diseases of debility, especially of the stomach and bowels, and organs of digestion. Price 50 cents.

☞JAYNE'S CARMINATIVE BALSAM, a certain cure for bowel and summer complaints, diarrhœa, dysentery, cholic, cramps, sick headache, sour stomach, cholera morbus, and all derangements of the stomach and bowels, nervous affections, &c. Price 50 cents.

☞JAYNE'S SANATIVE PILLS, for female diseases, liver complaints, costiveness, fevers, inflammations, obstructions, diseases of the skin, &c., and in all cases where an appointed alternative or purgative medicine is required.—Price 25 cents.

☞Also, JAYNE'S HAIR TONIC, for the preservation, growth and beauty of the hair, and which will positively bring new hair on bald heads and prevent its falling off or turning grey.

☞For sale at the store of

POTTS & GRAHAM.

Putnam, Ohio, Jan. 20, 1841. 74tf

SCHOOL BOOKS.

Pierpoint's Series of Reading Books.

1. The American First Class Book.
2. The National Reader.
3. Introduction to the National Reader.
4. The Young Reader.

THESE four works, compiled by the Rev. John Pierpont, compose a series which is undoubtedly more suitable for the purposes for which they were designed, than any previous publications.

The series is used in the Boston Schools, and generally in the schools of New England, and other parts of the United States, and have been republished in England.

The estimation in which these books are held, may be judged of, in some degree, by such notices as the following:

"We deem this selection decidedly superior, in all the requisites called for in such a work, to any one we know. That reader must be fastidious, and deficient in the extreme, who will not find in these extracts wherewith to regale himself. We can easily imagine how this fine writing will cause the bosoms of talented children to swell, and their eyes to glisten. We wish to see them relieved from the nackneyed and worn-out matter of former selections; and we think we hazard little in saying, that it is a selection of exercises of a higher order, and more generally adapted to its design, than any other in the language."—Flint's Western Review.

"We are satisfied that no gentleman of good taste can look over this book without great delight as well as instruction. The pieces are so rich in matter, so neat, and often so eloquent in expression, that they may be read again and again without weariness, and even with renewed pleasure. It may not be amiss to observe, that this book and the preceding have been so highly thought of, as to be republished in England, a country from which, till within a few years, we have been accustomed to borrow all our books of this description."—Charleston (S. C.) Republican.

☞For sale by the quantity or single copy by

A. LIPPITT,
Main-st.

☞Teachers can be supplied with copies for examination on application as above.

Zanesville, O., Jan. 20, 1841. 74tf

New and Cheap Goods.

POTTS & GRAHAM, are now enabled by a fresh arrival of FALL and WINTER GOODS, to offer to the public a very general assortment of all articles in their line. Their stock is almost ENTIRELY NEW, and embraces a complete supply of DRY GOODS, GROCERIES, QUEENSWARE, HARDWARE, &c. All of which they will sell upon such terms, and conduct their business throughout upon such principles, as cannot fail to afford permanent satisfaction to all who may favor them with their custom.

☞Most kinds of country produce, including any quantity of new Butter, will be taken in exchange for goods.

Putnam, Ohio, Nov. 4. 63tf

Winslow's Compound

BALSAM OF HOARHOUND.

UNRIVALLED and unequalled in curing Colds, Coughs, Asthma, Influenza, Whooping Cough, and all diseases of the Breast and Lungs, leading to Consumption, composed of the concentrated virtues of the herbs Hoarhound, Boneset, and several other vegetable substances, warranted pure from any mineral whatever.

Sold by A. LIPPITT and S. GATES.

Zanesville, Nov. 4. 64tf

Glass Manufactory.

THE subscriber having dissolved his connexion with the former company, has taken the GLASS WORKS below town under his own management.

WINDOW GLASS, double and single, all seizes, and of superior quality will be kept constantly on hand for sale on reasonable terms.—The experience of the proprietor, in the manufacture of the article, will insure all made to be of the best quality. Call and see.

S. B. JOHNSON.

Zanesville, Ohio, May 6, 1840. 37

William Green,

CLOCK AND WATCH REPAIRER, SILVERSMITH AND JEWELLER,

CAN be found at his shop on Main street Putnam, a few doors north of J. C. Guthrie's store, where he will do his best to accommodate customers. He keeps on hand an assortment of spectacles, watch trimmings, pencils, &c.

As far as we have tried Mr. GREEN as a watch repairer he has given us good satisfaction.—ED.

April 22, 1840. 35tf.

Notice.

BOOKS, Stationery, and Printer's Ink, for sale by A. LIPPITT.

Zanesville, Nov. 4. 63tf.

THE LARGEST AND CHEAPEST

FAMILY NEWSPAPER

☞IN THE WORLD.☜

ONE DOLLAR PER ANNUM!

When subscribed for in Clubs of ten or more

COMMENCEMENT OF A NEW YEAR

ALEXANDER'S

WEEKLY MESSENGER

Will be materially improved in its typographic appearance, at the beginning of the next volume in January, 1841. The publisher has made such arrangements as to justify him in announcing to the public, that this paper shall continue to take precedence of all its competitors, as it has heretofore done, and all the facilities which his extensive printing establishment can afford, with the aid of his numerous literary correspondents at home and abroad, shall be united to make the WEEKLY MESSENGER still more satisfactory to its THIRTY-FIVE THOUSAND PATRONS, distributed as it is, thro' every section of the Union. Every exertion will be used to keep equal pace with the advancement which is constantly making in the character of the newspaper press, and the publisher pledges himself that his journal shall, in all departments, afford to its readers a full and comprehensive view of the important events which are continually transpiring in our own Country and the European World! The actual fact is, that the Weekly Messenger is just such a newspaper as persons living out of large cities, require, and will be pleased to receive—and the publisher, after an association of twenty years with the newspaper press, pledges himself that his journal shall not be excelled either as respects its moral and literary reputation, or the early dissemination of news and other important and useful information. "Go-a-head," is his principle, and he has never failed to carry it out to the fullest extent.

The WEEKLY MESSENGER is published every Wednesday, on a beautiful white sheet of the largest class. Single copies are forwarded to subscribers, every week during the year, for Two Dollars, in advance—or ten persons clubbing together, can have it for the same period by forwarding the publisher a Ten Dollar Note free of postage, which is less than any paper of the same size can be furnished by any other office in the United States.

A variety of beautiful engravings will be given in regular succession, which will be accompanied by appropriate sketches of such a description as to render them particularly deserving the attention of the public.

Over Thirty Thousand.

With the immense circulation that has been received for the Weekly Messenger, during the 4 years past, since its commencement, we are bold to say, that no paper has ever been distributed to the same number of patrons with fewer causes of complaint—in fact, we have the most careful and trustworthy Clerks now in our employ, and no inducements are withheld to make them attentive and systematic in the discharge of their various duties; therefore, persons subscribing for the Paper at a distance, may rely on receiving it regularly and punctually by the due course of the mail.

All the contemporary Weekly Press in the Atlantic cities head their subscription papers with the imposing caption of "Largest and Cheapest!" Now, we propose that no person who can not satisfy himself after one year's trial that the Weekly Messenger is emphatically what we have said it is, and therefore is best entitled to patronage, that we will confer on every one making such discovery, a Free Subscription for the space of another year.

At the expiration of the term subscribed and paid for, by Clubs the paper is invariably discontinued, unless the Subscriptions are renewed. All letters must be post paid, or they will not be taken out of the Post Office. Address

CHARLES ALEXANDER,
Athenian Buildings, Franklin Place, Phil.

PREMIUMS

FOR FIFTEEN SUBSCRIBERS.

Any Agent or Postmaster who shall forward to our address Fifteen Dollars, will be entitled to Fifteen Copies of the Messenger for one Year, and either of the following works:

Alexander's Travels, in two volumes.
The Art of Dining, a popular book.
Andrew, the Savoyard, a novel in two volumes.
Charcoal Sketches, by Neal.
Genius and Wisdom of Shakspeare.
Henrietta Temple, a novel in two volumes.
Health and Beauty, a volume much asked for.
Indecision, a favorite novel.
Miss Leslie's Cookery, for married folks.
The Picture of Philadelphia.
Whispers to a Newly Married Pair.
The Prayer Book, 18mo. Neatly bound.
Every Body's Album, with engravings.

FOR THIRTY SUBSCRIBERS.

Any agent or post master who shall forward thirty dollars to our address, will be supplied with thirty copies of the Messenger for one year—and also to be entitled, as a premium, for the same, to one copy of either of the following valuable works:

Gooch on Females and Children.
American Flower Garden Directory.
Gregory's Mathematics.
Pambour on Locomotive Engines and Railways.
Scott's Life of Napoleon.
Pilgrimage to Jerusalem and Mount Sinai, by Baron Geramb, two volumes.
1000 Night's Entertainment, five volumes.

FOR FIFTY SUBSCRIBERS.

A copy of either of the following works will be furnished to any agent procuring a club of fifty subscribers—or, if it should be preferred, two of the first named premiums will be given instead.

Lockhart's Life of Walter Scott.
Treatise on the Management and Disease of Cattle.
Holy Bible, quarto, with beautiful engravings.

TERMS OF THE

Weekly Messenger,

PER ANNUM—Payable in advance:

One Subscription,	$2 00
" " six months,	1 00
Four Subscriptions (a 1,25)	5 00
Ten Subscriptions (a $1)	10 00

All who desire to secure the paper from the commencement of the volume, will please forward their names immediately.

☞Postmasters and other gentlemen, who interest themselves to extend our circulation, may rest assured that the most strict and early attention will be given to their orders.

☞To secure agents and others from imposition, we guarantee to forward our paper to all who send us payment in advance, directed to the Philadelphia Post Office, which order, if received there, with the remittance, will be our acknowledgment of the same, and consequently the paper will be regularly sent for the time stipulated. CHARLES ALEXANDER.

December 30, 1840. 6w71

An Apprentice Wanted.

THE subscriber wishes to take a boy of 12 or 15 years of age, to learn the TAILORING BUSINESS. One from the country will be preferred. Applicants must come well recommended.

W. BERKSHIRE.
Main street, Putnam, Ohio.

December 16, 1840 69

DRUGS, Medicines, Paints, Dyestuffs, Oils, and Spirits Turpentine. Cheap for cash or good horses, by A. LIPPITT.

Main st., No. 72, Zanesville, Nov. 4. 63tf

THE WESTERN RECORDER.

C. SPRINGER, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.
TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM IN ADVANCE.

Vol. 2.--No. 24. ZANESVILLE, OHIO, WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 3, 1841. Whole No. 76.

JOHN W. WHITE, PRINTER.
$2.50, IN THREE MONTHS; $3, END OF YEAR.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

For the Western Recorder.

INDIANA CONFERENCE MISSIONARY.

Br. Springer: I have passed through perils of snow and cold, but I have reason to praise my heavenly Master for His goodness in opening the door of hope, and making the wilderness and solitary place rejoice and blossom as the rose. I arrived on the St. Joseph Mission, on Sabbath the 29th of November, and commenced by filling an appointment on Eel river, which I protracted five days and organized a society which now numbers twenty-three; the power of God was present to convert sinners and reclaim backsliders.

At Bear creek, in DeKalb county, we held a watch-night, New Year's Eve. Almost every sinner in the house presented themselves at the anxious seats, and blessed be Israel's God, most of them received a New Year's Gift right from the Father of all our mercies and the giver of all perfect gifts. At this place, twenty-two have united with us. On the Maumee, six miles east of Fort Wayne, where satan was thought to reign without a rival, I held a meeting of six days. Here, sinners were brought into the kingdom, and backsliders were reclaimed. Our society numbers nineteen in this place.

Our quarterly meeting was a refreshing season; the power of the Highest was with us. On Monday night, six young converts rejoiced in the love of God their Saviour; some that had wandered from the fold were brought in. The children of the Kingdom drank deep from the fulness of God's love, their cups of rejoicing were full to overflowing. Tuesday night, we held a general class-meeting and organized a class of nineteen. At Lake, in Allen county, I held a meeting of four days, at which the grace of God was richly poured out; praise the Lord for sin subduing power. Awakened sinners opened their hearts to let the blessed Jesus in, and eighteen banded together in church fellowship.

From there, I went to the Feeder dam, on the 6ty. Here, wickedness has greatly abounded—may the grace of God much more abound. They told us if we could do any thing here, that we could work miracles; and truly it is a miracle of grace for God to convert great sinners. We preached to them Saturday night, Sabbath and Sabbath night, but there was no mercy cloud, not even the bigness of the palm of a man's hand. Monday night, the cloud broke; six or eight souls drank of the waters of life freely.—Our meetings continued to increase in interest, Israel's God was present to answer by fire; 20 or 30 souls drank from the streams of salvation. Here I organized a class of twenty-four.

At my meetings, I always visit from house to house, and I find it almost as necessary as preaching, to get up a good state of feeling; and it is almost useless to preach once and run off to give the devil time to pick up or choke down the good seed. I have organized the St. Joseph circuit with seven societies, numbering 152 members; and the world is before us, inviting us to swell the number by gathering in the bundles of life. May the Lord send some devoted brother to our aid. The harvest truly is great.—Had we the privilege to enter in and occupy, other circuits might be formed.

Last Monday week, I had the pleasure of administering the dear mementoes of a Saviour's love, to an aged Baptist mother in Israel; she was unable to go to our communion, and requested me to administer it to her at home, for she thought it would be the last time she would have the privilege of obeying her Saviour's dying command. She received it reclining in bed; and with a full heart she testified, trembling with age and affliction on the verge of eternity, of a Saviour's matchless love. The tears of the melted audience gave an index to the deep subdued feelings of the heart. The occasion—the atonement—the tremendous sufferings of Christ—thoughts of an afflicted mother at home, that perhaps I might never see till we met with the sacramental hosts of God's elect,—were too overpowering; my feelings were too full for utterance. Could the infidel world have been present, they would have quailed before the majesty of christianity, thus triumphing in the jaws of mortality, and giving glory to God in the highest. I have lectured a few times on the second coming of Christ, that has excited some interest.—My post office address, is Newville, DeKalb co., Indiana.

Yours, in the bonds of christian love,
LEWIS HICKLIN, Con. Mis'y.
Fort Wayne, Ia., Jan. 19, 1841.

DILLSBOROUGH, IA., JAN. 11, 1841.

Br. Springer: Having to communicate on business, permit me to say through the medium of the Recorder, to the friends of our Zion, that the Lord of hosts is truly with us, manifesting His saving power in bestowing the rich blessings of Divine Grace upon His humble followers.—And while the heart cheering intelligence of the out-pouring of the Holy Spirit in other places, is almost weekly borne to our doors upon the faithful pages of the Western Recorder, we feel that we too are participating in some degree in a "refreshing from the presence of the Lord."

Our first quarterly meeting was held in the Stone Chapel on the east fork of Tanner's creek, commencing with a watch-night, December 31st, and continuing over Sabbath. Unexpectedly Br. Collins came to our assistance and labored with us faithfully in word and doctrine throughout the meeting. On Saturday Brs. Murray, T. Hicklin and Stibbens, from Ohio, arrived. May the Lord reward them for their labors of love.—At our first interview we had intimations of good from the Great Head of the church, which continued until Sabbath morning, when in love feast the clouds of unbelief seemed to break in sunder—the hallowed flame ran from heart to heart—the songs of praise ascended the hill of the Lord, so that we could exclaim, we indeed sat together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus, while numerous witnesses arose and testified, "the son of man hath power on earth to forgive sins." After public preaching the sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered, where our Old Side friends joined cordially with us in commemorating the sufferings of our common Lord.

In the evening after preaching we again resumed our love feast. And truly it was a feast of love, a blessed foretaste of that ineffable glory reserved for the saints of God, when they shall have passed the Jordan of death, and borne aloft on seraphs' wings to that rest which is prepared for the people of God, where the wicked shall cease from troubling and the weary be forever and eternally at rest. One joined the church.

"O what a blessed hope is ours,
While here on earth we stay,
We more than taste the heavenly powers,
And antidate that day."

Our second quarterly meeting will be held near Allensville, on the last Saturday and Sabbath in March. Brs. Collins, L. and T. Hicklin, Boyd, Dalbey and Flood are specially requested to attend.

J. WHITE, Sup't.
Tanners creek ct.

WOODSFIELD CT., O., JAN. 22, 1841.

Mr. Editor: After a considerable silence I take an occasion to inform you of the state of things on my circuit. I am happy to say prospects are now pleasingly changed for the better. At my first quarterly meeting, which was held in Summerfield, we had a very interesting meeting; on Sabbath evening we had a glorious manifestation of the Divine Power. Three persons professed to be converted, and three were added to the church.

We had also a two days' meeting at Woodsfield, at which two more were added to our number.

We had no meeting house that we could call our own on the circuit, save a little cabin one near the river on Sunfish. I have since I came on made an effort and have succeeded in getting up a building spirit. We have commenced one house on Buffalo, near Sarahsville, 40 by 30.—For this house when I was last there they had eighty dollars on one paper. Also at Summerfield we have a beautiful lot given to the church. They have subscription papers out, and we think the prospect is fair for getting these two houses built this year. This latter house is to be also 40 by 30. Yours, &c.

GEO. WADDLE.

FAYETTE CO., O., JAN. 13, 1841.

Br. Springer: On Christmas we held a meeting at Port William, which was continued until the next Thursday night. The meeting was blessed with the presence of the Lord; believers were refreshed, and seven united with the church.

Xenia and Rehoboth circuits are united for the present, and I have charge; there is a good work going on on both.

A few weeks ago I formed a class of eleven; eight of whom were new members. At a small village in Clinton county there is a prospect of a large in-gathering. The work has been very general on the northern part of the two circuits; there has been a large accession of valuable members.

For my own part I am blessed with health not common for one of my age, being within a very short period of 72. Such has been the mercy of God that I have been able to reach my appointments regularly. Yours, &c.

ROBT. DOBBINS.

JACKSONBURGH, O., JAN. 21, 1841.

We are advancing moderately on Twin creek circuit. At our second quarterly meeting we received five into society,—and since have received some few more at this place.

Yours, respectfully, &c.
J. H. THOMAS.

OBITUARY.

For the Western Recorder.

Mr. Charles Scott, Sr., of Washington county, Pa., departed this life on the 7th of December last, aged 88 years and 4 months.

The deceased was born in Lackagh, county of Donegal, Ireland, in 1752. His parents were members of the church of England, but he lived destitute of religion until the 35th year of his age, when it pleased God, through the instrumentality of Matthew Steerte, a Methodist preacher, whom God had greatly owned in that section of country, to awaken him to a sense of sin. After tasting of the bitter cup of repentance, he obtained mercy through faith in the Saviour. He united with the Methodists, though then a poor and despised people, and opened his house for preaching the word of life, and for the reception and accommodation of the ministers of religion. While he tarried in the land of his nativity, amidst surrounding difficulties, he remained firm as a rock in the cause of truth.

In 1792 he removed to America, landed in Philadelphia, and settled in Chester county, Pa., with his family, where he remained five years. Here he united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, and again opened his house to the embassadors of Christ.

In 1797 he removed to Washington county, where, as usual, his house was the preachers' home, and his means dedicated to the interest of the gospel. He was licensed to preach in 1805, and received ministerial orders in 1818.

In the latter end of March last he was taken ill, but was perfectly resigned to his fate, and even expressed a solicitude to depart and be with Christ. His peace in God was unwavering, and his confidence unshaken. And so he remained steadfast even unto the end.

O! my friends, had you beheld his serene and happy countenance; had you heard his heavenly and delightful sayings your soul would have instinctively breathed the prayer;—"O! let me die the death of the righteous and let my last end be like unto his!" I have often heard of happy deaths, and have been witness of some, but such a triumph over death and the grave never came under my notice before. Truly has the poet said,

The chamber where the good man meets his fate,
Is privilege beyond the common walk of life,
Quite on the verge of heaven.

Br. Scott was a man of strong, good sense, and of ardent, devoted piety. As a minister he was plain, spiritual and practical. Having attached himself to the Methodists in the days of their primitive simplicity, he ever remained a strong advocate for old fashioned Methodism. Being a friend of liberal principles, in ecclesiastical as well as civil polity, he, with nearly all the Bethel society, of which he was a principal member, at an early period of our enterprise, connected themselves with the Protestant secession. Of this church, he remained an honored member until he left it to join the church triumphant.

He has left behind him some 14 children, 54 grand children and 24 great grand children May they follow his footsteps to the kingdom of heaven.

J. H.

YOUTH'S DEPARTMENT.

From the Youth's Cabinet.

NOVEL READING.

MISS JANE PRUDENCE AND MISS MATILDA JONES.

The following dialogue was spoken at the first exhibition of Sunday School No. 48, connected with the North Baptist Church—for which occasion it was expressly written.

Miss. P. Good evening, Miss Jones; I hope I see you well; how is your sister Margaret? Miss Jay was saying that she had met with a very severe accident.

Miss J. She is a little better than she was; but she is very miserable still;—but it was nothing more than mother told us both; and I was very fortunate that I did not fare the same as she.

Miss P. Do tell me what has taken place; I have not heard any of the particulars, only that Margaret was burnt badly.

Miss J. Why you see we made it a practice, (unknown to mother, for she forbid our reading novels,) when we retired to our room for the night, to sit up as long as we could, and read most of the new novels, pretty near as fast as they came out. Well, last Thursday night we both became so deeply interested in one of the most charming things I ever read, and got so tired of sitting up, that we went to bed, and Margaret held the light for me to read by. Some way or other, we both fell asleep!—the candle set fire to our night clothes, and not only burnt them very much, but burnt Margaret's face and arm so bad, that I'm afraid she won't get over it in a month, if she does then. Oh, its shocking!

Miss P. I hope she is not dangerously injured,—but you both did wrong, very wrong indeed. I hope, too, that it has taught both of you a lesson, that you'll not very soon forget.

Miss J. Now, Miss Prudence, don't you begin to censure me, too: for mother has made such a time about it, and seems really to forget that she was once young herself; and I suppose used to sit up as late, and read as many novels as any body: for my part, I don't think there is any harm in reading a good novel at any time.

Miss P. You surprise me, Matilda; you do indeed. I hope, though, that what I say to you, will not be received as censure, for I wish to advise you, and reason with you, and not to censure you or make you angry.

Miss J. Not at all, Jane; you may be assured that I shall not get angry with you; for I always tho't too much of you to get angry, when you saw fit to scold me a little, or to correct me.

Miss P. I do not feel myself competent to "correct" you, but I shall endeavor to give you my opinion of your conduct, as well as I can. In the first place, you disobeyed your mother's command, and thereby violated one of the commands of the Bible.

Miss J. Now, Jane, I beg of you, don't begin to talk to me about what the Bible says, for it's time enough for me to think about what is in that Book, when I get to be an old woman, and want to settle down in the world.

Miss P. Mistaken girl! How do you know that you will live to be an "old woman?" It was the saying of a great man, that "Men think all men mortal but themselves;" and you seem to have imbibed the same idea. It is wrong. Don't you know that there are a great many girls as young as we, who are dying all around us, and almost every moment? You don't know how soon you may be called to go the same way.

Miss J. Now, Miss Prudence, don't talk so to me; you make me feel very bad. I know I am not good, am not prepared to die; but I do not want to hear about it now. I want to enjoy myself while I am young, and have pleasures while I can.

Miss P. Such pleasures as you receive from novel reading, and the like, is, and must be, only momentary. You derive no real benefit—you have nothing but a dream of happiness. Perhaps you read some tale of romance; you read, and read on with intense interest to know the conclusion. You finish it, probably, in tears—and what is it, after all?—nothing but fiction. Are you any better than you were before? Are you any more acquainted with yourself? Are you any more prepared to meet your Judge, if you should be called to meet Him as soon as you had finished your novel?

Miss J. These are questions that make me very unhappy, Miss Prudence,—I am sorry I told you anything about it. I did not expect to receive such a lecture, or I should not have said anything to you on the subject. I thought you would be a little more compassionate, than to harrow up my feelings in the manner you do.

Miss P. Ah! Miss Jones, you will see the time, depend upon it, when you will feel the necessity of more compassion than mine, and you will feel it, unless you are "born again," when it will be too late. I am sorry to make you feel unhappy; but there is great need of your changing your course;—we sing a hymn in our Sunday School that runs thus:

"Twill save us from a thousand snares,
To mind religion young."

And if you could only feel that, as many do that have grown old in the course you are pursuing, you would alter your ways very soon; and you would not blame me for telling you the truth, either.

Miss J. You may go on now in that strain, just as much, and as long as you like—I mean to attend to all those things one of these days; but I can't now,—I have commenced my career of pleasure—I have my associates; those that do as I do, and what will they think of me if I shun them now? Oh, I cannot bear the idea for one moment.

Miss P. Why, Matilda! you seem to think your pleasures, your enjoyments, and your associates, of more consequence than your immortal soul! I advise you.

"Stoop and think before you farther go."

You are on a precipice & cannot too carefully guard yourself. Just as sure as you pursue the course that you have marked out, you will have to come to the conclusion that all others have come to, that have gone on in the same manner, and that is, that "All, all is vanity."

Miss J. Would you then have me give up all my enjoyments, and live the life of a nun? exclude myself from all society—see nobody, and know nobody?

Miss P. Not at all—but I would have you, instead of reading novels, read the Bible—instead of going to dancing school, and to balls, go to church, and come to Sunday School. I would have you seek that religion which is not only the most profitable, and the best enjoyment to live by, but is good in a dying hour.

Miss J. Ah! Jane, I've nothing to say—I feel the truth of your remarks. I know—I know I ought to read the Bible, and to go church; but I am so much engaged in other matters that I do not get time.

Miss P. Well now, Matilda, as you have not time to attend to both, I advise you to quit all your vanities, and endeavor, immediately, to obtain the religion I have been speaking to you about;—put yourself in the way;—be in the constant use of the means to obtain it, and there is a good promise for you, for Christ says: "They that seek Me early shall find me."

Miss J. I'll renounce the whole; I see my folly, and I will endeavor to mend my ways. I thank you for your kind advice, and hope to be enabled to find mercy, that can wash away my sins and fit me to enjoy the blessings of religion.

Miss P. Matilda, I am most happy to hear you take so proper a stand, and hope most sincerely, that you may continue to seek religion till you are blessed with it; and I assure you, that religion alone, is all that can render you perfectly happy in this world, or will prepare you for a blessed immortality beyond the grave.

B. C. W.

NEWSPAPERS.—According to a recent calculation, there are now one thousand five hundred and fifty five newspapers and other periodicals published in this country: two hundred and sixty-seven in New England, (Massachusetts one hundred and twenty four:) two hundred and seventy four in the State of New York; two hundred and fifty three in Pennsylvania, and one hundred and sixty four in Ohio. The next largest number in a single State is sixty-nine, and the smallest number three.

FOREIGN NEWS.

The steamer Columbia arrived at her wharf at Boston, at half past 7 o'clock, Thursday morning, in 15½ days from Liverpool, which place she left on the 5th inst., at 10 o'clock, P. M. She arrived at Halifax at 1 P. M., on the 19th, and sailed thence for Boston at 6 P. M. On the passage, they lost a boy overboard. The Columbia left Liverpool with 75 passengers, for Boston and Halifax.

The news brought by her is highly important and interesting. Is eleven days later than that heretofore received, being from Liverpool to the 5th, from London to the 5th, and from Paris to the 3d inst.

All the papers speak of the continual severity of the weather in almost every part of Europe. In the South of France it had been colder than ever before known, and fears were entertained of the effect upon the vineyards.

The Chartists held a meeting at Newport, for the purpose of getting up an address to the Queen, praying for the restoration of Frost, Williams and Jones from banishment. There was no disturbance of the public peace, and the concourse, which consisted of some thousands, separated quietly.

The latest French journals are filled with New Year addresses to the King, and his answers.

Louis Phillippe, in his reply to the speeches made to him by the diplomatic corps, on the preservation of peace, said.

You know the value which I have never ceased to attach to the duration of the political repose enjoyed by Europe, and to the maintenance of the general peace. Convicted as I am that this state of things is alike the interest of France and of all other states, nothing shall relax my efforts to co-operate with all the sovereigns for the preservation of this great blessing to our nation, and I hope with you that in the year which has just opened to us, the wisdom of the Cabinets will effect its consolidation. I feel very sensibly the solicitations of the corps diplomatique, and the good wishes which you offer in its name for France, my family and myself.

The addresses of the Chambers of Peers and Deputies have no distinctive marks of political sentiment—but the answer of the King to both prove that he is determined to preserve peace under all circumstances.

The Nile has risen to 22½ feet this year, and the inundation is so great, that incalculable mischief has been done to the country.

A manuscript, relative to the military and naval positions of Corsica, entirely written in Napoleon's own hand, has been found in a library at Toulon.

The commercial city of Leghorn is in the most melancholy condition, owing to the failure of several first-rate houses.

A lamentable accident occurred at Dublin, on the 25th ult. at the Roman Catholic chapel in Francis street. One of the timbers of the gallery, which was thronged with people was heard to crack—a cry was raised that the building was falling, and a rush ensued, in which three persons were trampled to death, and several were dangerously injured.

A person named Borel has been arrested in Switzerland, charged with being an accessory to the attempt by Darmes, on the life of Louis Phillippe on the 15th October last.

Further plots against Louis Phillippe's life are again spoken of as having been found in the pocket of the driver of a Paris omnibus, who committed suicide; a paper is said to have been found, setting forth that being a member of a secret society, his turn had come by lot to kill the King; but finding himself unable to commit the crime, he had determed to hang himself.

The King had remitted that part of Madame Laffarge's sentence, which condemns her to exposition publique.

The Paris journals are indulging in a notion, says the Spectator of the 2nd instant, that Russia may be induced to enter into a separate alliance with France against England and the other two powers, parties to the quadruple treaty.

There were a great many fires in London during the Christmas festivities.

Nearly 1,000,000 persons are said to have visited the church of the Invalides, Paris, during the space of ten days.

Shocking accidents had happened on the London and Brighton railroad. Near Chuckfield a driftway had been made through a large mound of earth, and an arch composed of wood had been temporally constructed, sufficiently high to allow the engine to pass through. The tender was forced off the line, dragging the engine after it, and after removing another portion of the woodwork, when an immense quantity of superincumbent earth folded in upon the engine, burying the engineer and the storer, and stopping the engine. One man was suffocated by the steam in his attempt to get the other two from the earth.

A second accident of a more serious nature was reported to have taken place a few miles beyond Haywood's Heath, by which several lives were sacrificed. Seventeen men were buried by a fall of earth. Six bodies had been dug out. It was said that a third accident had taken place further up the road. Since the commencement of the works on this line, the railroad had furnished the Sussex county hospital with between 200 and 400 accidents, and about seventy or eighty lives have been lost exclusive of the accidents above mentioned.

A rumor that the allied powers had called upon France to account for her proceeding with warlike preparations, has received partial confirmation.

The Paris correspondent of the Commerce Belge writes—"The French government gives way to the demands of foreign powers. The ministry of the 20th of October has decided on disarming."

The budget, or expositon of ways and means was laid before the chamber of Deputies, on the 30th of September. It discloses the fact that the revenue is not adequate to the expenditure, even without reference to accidental necessities, and asks a loan of 450 millions and a credit of 250 millions in Treasury bonds.

TURKEY AND EGYPT.—The convention entered into with the Pacha by Commodore Napier, was disallowed by Admiral Stopford, and at one time there seemed reason to apprehend that a renewal of hostilities would be the consequence. The refusal of Admiral Stopford was communicated to the Pacha on the 6th of December, and required from the latter the evacuation of Syria and the restoration of the Turkish fleet, within three days, offering in return his replacement in the government of Egypt, but for life only.

The poor Pacha, thus deluded by his magnanimous enemies was compelled to submit. His reply to the proposition, addressed to the Grand Vizer, was given to Admiral Stopford's messenger on the 11th of December, and contained a full and frank acceptance.

Orders have been issued for the Turkish fleet to hold itself in readiness for sea. It was to be delivered up to the English in the course of a month.

There was a dreadful gale in the vicinity of Constantinople on the 1st of December. Among the vessels lost was the Russian steamer Neva, or Emperor Nicholas, Rogers, from Odessa, 13 of the crew and six passengers lost, the captain, first engineer and four of the crew with four male and two female passengers saved.

FOREIGN MARKETS, AT THE LAST DATES. In Liverpool, American Flour, free, is held at 36 shillings per barrel, and small quantities have been sold for export, in bond at 26 shillings, per barrel. In the London Market but few sales had been affected of imported wheat, and the value of the article had receded 1 shilling per quarter. Very few buyers had appeared at the Corn Mart, and though the trade might be said to be in a state of inactivity still the tendency of prices was rather upwards than otherwise.

SIGNS OF A POOR FARMER.

He grazes his mowing land late in the Spring. Some of his cows are past their prime. He neglects to keep the dung and ground from the sills of his buildings.—He sows & plants his land till it is exhausted before he thinks of manuring. He keeps too much stock, and many of them are unruly. He has place for nothing and nothing in its place. If he wants a gimlet, a chisel or a hammer, he cannot find it. He seldom does any thing in stormy weather, or in an evening. You will perhaps hear of his being in a bar room, talking of hard times. Although he has been on a piece of land twenty years, ask him for grafted fruit, and he will tell you he could not raise them, for he never had any luck. His indolence and carelessness subject him to many accidents. He loses cider for want of a hoop; his plough breaks in his hurry to get in his seed in season, because it was not housed, and in harvest time when he is at work on a distant part of his farm, the hogs break into his garden, for want of a small repair in his fence. He always feels in a hurry, yet in his busiest day he will stop and talk till he has tired your patience. He is seldom neat in his person, and generally late at public worship. His children are late at school, and their books are torn and dirty. He has no enterprise, and is sure to have no money, or if he must have it, makes great sacrifice to get it: and as he is slack in his payments, and buys altogether on credit, he purchases every thing at a dear rate. You will see the smoke come out of his chimney long after daylight in winter. His horse stable is not daily cleansed, nor his horse curried. Boards, shingles, and clapboards are seen off his buildings month after month, without being replaced, and his windows are full of rags. He feeds his hogs and horses with whole grain. If the lambs die, or the wool comes off his sheep, he does not think it is for want of care or food. He is generally a great borrower, and seldom returns the thing borrowed. He is a poor husband, a poor father, a poor neighbor, a poor citizen, and a poor Christian.—Exchange paper.

A DRIVING BUSINESS.—Fifteen weddings took place at Winchester, Ky., on Christmas day.

PEPPER.—Nearly eighteen hundred thousand pounds of black pepper are consumed in the United States yearly.

WESTERN RECORDER.

ZANESVILLE:

WEDNESDAY, ... FEBRUARY 3, 1841.

THE PROTESTANT AGAIN.—This little matter between us and the Protestant, is briefly this: some time since, a number of the Pittsburgh "Christian Advocate" was forwarded to us, either by the editor or some one else, containing strictures on the doings of the late Pittsburgh Conference, and also on an article from the Protestant, in relation to the government of the Methodist Episcopal Church. We were, at the time, attending to our own business, not heeding either the Advocate or the Protestant. As we presumed the paper was forwarded to us to notice the article, we answered it precisely as we understood Solomon to have directed us.—This brought forth, from the editor of the Advocate, a splendid reply, in which he pays both us and the Protestant off all dues and demands.—The latter editor, in reply to the former, honeys him up in real mawkish style; then gratuitously and officiously, attends to our case, as though we were not able to take care of ourself,—tells his brother of the Advocate, in substance, that our style is "rude and coarse," that our manner was "improper," and that he "decidedly disapproved" of the whole. Now, reader, just look at this; the editor of the "official organ," so called, of the Methodist Protestant Church, without the least provocation under the heaven, joins with a pampered ecclesiastic, who cares no more about either of us, than the sole-leather he scours beneath his feet, to throw a little dirt at his brother. Before we would be guilty of such pitiful conduct, may our "right hand forget her cunning."

As we were satisfied that the editor of the Protestant was prone to this habit of reproving, and as we had come to the knowledge of the fact he had used his reproving prerogative, with an uncalled for severity, which had done injury to the cause, we intended, in our paper of the 13th ultimo, to rebuke him in a style that might put him on his guard in future. This was all we intended. And being sensible that the editor would feel himself in a tight place, and anticipating that he might be tempted to misrepresent us, in order to get as easily out of his difficulty as possible, we requested him positively, if he should see cause to animadvert upon our article, to give it a place in his columns, so that the reader might see for himself. But in his paper of he 23d ultimo, he devotes something like half a column to strictures upon us, in which we are misrepresented by inuendoes, &c., in a style which is little better than public slander, but he refuses to let us be heard for ourself.

And, really, has it come to this? A boy of "twenty-five," almost entirely unknown to the church; with little experience beyond the corporation of Baltimore, has the control of her "official organ." He commences an unprovoked and an uncalled-for attack upon his brother, of at least twice his years, representing him as guilty of "impropriety," "coarseness" and "rudeness," and then refuses him an opportunity to be heard in his own defence in the "official" which has thus attacked him. We have done, at least, as much for the church as this editor, and think we have as good a right to the use of her "organ" as he has. But he holds the power to do as he pleases, and appears disposed to use his little brief authority to prevent any one from talking in his columns, on this subject, but himself. So be it; we must submit.

Now, Br. Editor, of the Protestant, we had both better be at something else. But, you will recollect that you brought on this controversy.—If you had not made your invidious allusions to us, there would have been nothing of it. We have such an utter aversion to impertinence in young men, that we could not, in duty, pass you without rebuke.

GEOLOGY.—This bids fair to rank highest among all the Natural Sciences except that of Chemistry. It is certainly of more practical importance to the owners of the soil than those who have no acquaintance with it can admit.—We will state a case to illustrate this subject. There are in the west part of this county four distinct veins of stone coal. The first is about the water courses, and is frequently found in the beds of the streams, and varies from six to thirty inches in thickness. The second is some fifteen or more feet above this, and lies immediately under a bed of limestone which pervades this whole section, and is from three to six inches in thickness. Above this, at an elevation of some twenty-five feet or upwards is a third vein, and which is the only workable one, varying in thickness from three to five feet. Still above this, near the summit of the ridges, is a small vein twelve or fifteen inches in thickness. These several veins, on a level, pass through every hill which is high enough to receive them, dipping a few degrees to the south-east.

A neighboring farmer, wishing to burn a lot of lime for his land, had on one side of him abundance of stone uncovered ready for blasting.—On the other side, some farther distant, was the same vein of limestone jetting out of a bluff bank, and under it the appearance of some two or three feet of coal. The idea of getting the limestone and the coal to burn it, together, induced him to abandon the first situation, where there was no prospect of coal, to attempt the second. After a considerable expense in throwing off a high bank, he found that his coal was nothing but colored shale. Had he but acquainted himself with the geological arrangements of his neighborhood he might have saved himself this expense, for he would have known there was no prospect there of the amount of coal which appearances seemed to indicate. There are also many farmers who are now buying their coal, and hauling it considerable distance, if they but understood this matter could have the article on their own premises with but a few hours work.

These veins of coal may always be found by the springs, either permanent or wet weather.—Let any man examine his farm and he will, if it be elevated enough, find some two or three tiers of springs, on a level coming off these several veins of coal. There are two beds of limestone between the first and second veins of coal. If these can be ascertained, the first tier of springs, above, comes off the workable vein of coal.

There are some good thoughts on the subject of geology, in the following extract from the Nashville Christian Advocate:

"We would take this occasion, to recommend this study to our young readers; especially preachers. In the minds of many honest, intelligent christians, there still exists a strong prejudice against this branch of Natural Science, owing to the unfavorable bearing, in regard to the Scripture, given it by some of its early Professors. To those infidel writers, however, who have made this use of it, the homely adage—"They hollowed before they got out of the woods," is very applicable; for it now bids fair to become more strongly and directly confirmatory of the truth of the Bible, than any of the other Natural Sciences can be. The existence of this prejudice shows the weakness of the faith of those who have unfortunately yielded to it. They should have known, that God is the author both of the Book of works and the Book of words, and that, therefore, they could not disagree.—Instead then of opposing the 'science of Geology,' which proposes to investigate the works of the Creator, they ought to have been the most eager in pursuit of the knowledge here—having the firm conviction, that whatever may be the present appearance of things, arising from our limited acquaintance with facts, in the end, there will be found a perfect accordance between Revelation and the principles established by this science. Geology being then so closely connected with revelation, is peculiarly the study of the minister of the gospel; and in addition to this, commends itself to their notice by its manifest tendency to enlarge the mind, and to fill it with high and ennobling thoughts.

"Methodist preachers have a better opportunity to prosecute this study than any other class of men. They generally remain in a section of country about long enough to become acquainted with its geological phenomena, and travelling as they do extensively, in a few years, with a little labor and no loss of time, they might amass a very considerable store of useful knowledge.—It requires no apparatus, no expensive fixtures, as do most of the Natural Sciences—a hammer, and you are ready to begin, and with this only, you may make considerable advancement. Tho' if you expect to prosecute to any great extent the study, Mineralogy and Chemistry will be necessary. Be not alarmed at these names—a few weeks application will give you knowledge enough to suffice for years in your geological investigations.

"This study will not at all interfere with your higher and never to be neglected duty—but rather aid you therein. It calls up those feelings and inspires those thoughts that should belong peculiarly to the minister of our Holy Religion.—With a knowledge of this science you can never be alone—never idle—never uninterested. The rocks under your feet will no longer be but Rocks—but changed to eloquent companions, they will discourse to you in your lonely rides or evening rambles of times and circumstances long gone by, when the earth rolled and quivered as if upon the billows of subterranean seas of moulten elements—when fearful cataclysms and catastrophies swept over the earth's surface or rent its rocky crust." E.

☞The following article, from the Nashville "Christian Advocate," on pronunciation, is a word in season. We commend it to the particular notice of young ministers:

"Pronunciation.—An intelligent gentleman in conversation with us a short time since, remarked, that it is a lamentable fact, that less attention is generally paid by public speakers and especially by ministers of the gospel, to correct pronunciation, than almost any other branch of Belles-Letters. In reflecting on the matter, we are inclined to believe that there is much truth in the remark.

"At first view, it may be supposed that there is but little importance attached to the proper pronunciation of words; that it is rather an arbitrary matter at best, and shows a kind of pedantry in any one to be very particular. This course of reasoning has created a kind of indifference in the minds of many, and for want of proper attention, they have formed habits that are exceedingly awkward and destructive to the influence of public speakers.

"One grand object to be attained by a public speaker, is to secure the confidence of his auditory. He must make an impression upon his hearers that he is capable of imparting instruction; for there is a principle in human nature that does not readily submit to be taught by those who are regarded as less wise than ourselves. Now, although a knowledge of one particular grade of science or literature does not conclusively argue a man's competency to teach others; although a man's being fluent, and exceedingly correct in the pronunciation does not prove that he is a good divine, yet his manner of speech never fails to make an impression for good or evil on the minds of his auditors. If a speaker betray ignorance in these minor matters, his hearers take for granted that he is not well informed in subjects of greater moment.

"Again, all public speakers should avoid whatever might be offensive. To a refined ear, an awkward pronunciation is not only grating, but is calculated to arrest the mind and call off the attention from the thread of the discourse, and thus the effect of the discourse is partially destroyed.

"An improper pronunciation is productive of another evil. It destroys the force of language. There are many words in the English language pronounced nearly alike, which are entirely different in their signification, and convey to the mind sometimes a meaning exactly opposite.

"How frequently do we hear the words far and fair pronounced alike. He went into a far—fair country. She is a fair—far lady. The stars—stairs of heaven declare the wisdom and power of God.

"Most of our readers have heard of the preacher, who arose on an interesting occasion, to instruct his congregation on some great moral subject, when he read for his text, 'I knew that thou art an austere man.' He confounded this with the word oyster, and then proceeded to give a learned discourse of the method of 'catching oysters.' Young ministers should be careful, not only to study the true signification of words, but the best standards of pronunciation.

"While we avoid pedantry on the one hand, we should be studious to steer clear of awkwardness on the other.

"Affectation we dislike exceedingly, but at the same time we cannot help being prepossessed in his favor, who introduces his discourse in a neat and correct style. Keep your standard dictionaries always near you in your study.—Pay particular attention to the best speakers, and you will find it very easy to acquire correct habits of speaking. Get clear at once of your provincialisms. Rid yourselves of the phraseology of your 'leading strings,' and study a correct and dignified style, and you will command an influence that you will never otherwise exert."

A correspondent of the Alton (Ill.) Telegraph, under date 6th January, writes in relation to the doings of the Legislature of that State:

"A communication was made to the House this afternoon, inclosing a letter from Samuel Allison, of London, the broker who acted as the negotiator between our Fund Commissioners and Wright & Co. Mr. Allison, after stating the failure of Wright & Co., and assigning the causes of it assures the Executive that our State Bonds, which were in the possession of Wright & Co., are safe. They are now deposited with, and under the control of, the Court of Bankruptcy, and can be obtained, as Mr. Alison asserts, at any time by any legally authorized agent of the State. Mr. Allison makes another disclosure, which adds one more item to the list of swindling operations that this unfortunate State has been subject to. He states, that our Rail Road Iron, which was purchased at £9 10s. per ton, was only worth then and is now worth but £7 5s. The contract with Thompson and Forman, as appears by the volume of Reports of the last session of our Legislature, page 410, made by Rawlings & Oakley, was for six hundred and fifty tons of Rail Road Iron. If Mr. Allison's statements are to be relied upon, the difference between the price paid by our State and the market price of the Iron, was £2 5s. on each ton; which, in the aggregate, makes a loss to the State in this one contract of £1,375, or nearly one hundred thousand dollars!! Want of time alone precludes my referring more particularly to this disclosure in this letter."

From the Bucyrus Democrat.

WYANDOTT EXECUTION!

'I saw the criminal stand forth at trial;
He offered no excuse, made no denial:
He heard the witnesses—the Judges speak
The laws dread sentence, with unchanging cheek:
To questions of the past he deign'd no reply;
His crime, its cause, are wrapp'd in mystery.
——————— looking down
'As coldly on the guns that near him shone,
As if they did not shine for him that day.
And when the priest besought him still to pray,
To fix his last thoughts on eternity.
He said old man, I cannot DREAM like thee!"

Doubtless many of the readers of the Democrat have heard of the execution of young Wyandott, by the authorities of the Wyandott Nation, for murder in the first degree on the fifth day of October last, at Upper Sandusky. I have thought a statement, (tho' at a late period,) of all the circumstances attending the murder, trial and execution of the murderer from an authentic source, would be interesting to your readers. Should you deem it worthy of a pace in your columns, it is at your service.

On the afternoon of Monday, September 22d, some 8 or 10 roistering, intemperate fellows, (Wyandotts) among whom were Henry Johnson, the unfortunate victim, and Thomas Long, Jr. the murderer and step son of the former, generally known by the sobriquet of "Chuckle-head," met in the neighborhood of Osceola, and getting liquor, got into a drunken spree. The next day the same individuals met, and it was proposed that some one of the party should be dispatched to procure a supply of liquor, and Thomas Long was named as the messenger; but he at once objected and proposed Henry Johnson, his step father, the latter, after some hesitation, consented, whereupon Thomas Long volunteered to accompany him: then a young man by the name of Seneca John, offered his services, and the three set out for a distillery in the neighborhood.

Nothing occurred worthy of remark on their way to the distillery—nothing like quarrelling or angry words passing, all three being duly sober. When they arrived within sight of this Devil's Den, they halted. Henry Johnson proceeded with a two gallon tin kettle, purchased the liquor and returned to the spot where he left his bon-vivant comrades. Thomas Long then pulled out of his pocket a pint flask and ordered Henry Johnson to return to the distillery and get it filled, he refused, saying he had done his share; after some altercation he consented, went and returned with the flask filled. Thomas pulled out the cork and emptied the contents into the kettle, handed Johnson the flask and ordered him to go again, but he again refused, saying he might go himself if he wanted any more liquor, however, after some conversation, he went the third time. Upon his return they each took a dram, the first they had taken that day, and set our for their place of rendezvous, Seneca John leading the way, carrying the kettle of liquor; Henry Johnson next following and Thomas Long in the rear. After travelling about a half mile, Seneca John being then some distance ahead, heard (as he described it) a crashing resembling the breaking of a limb, and upon looking back, found that Thomas had knocked Johnson down with a large club which had broken into two, and was beating him with the remaining piece, then seizing another club dispatched his victim. Seneca John upon discovering this, dropped his kettle and was hurrying to interfere. Thomas, discovering his approach, warned him not to approach at his peril, as he would certainly kill him also, (as he stated in his testimony on the trial) knowing the desperate character of the murderer, was deterred from interfering. Having perpetrated the bloody deed, he walked off a few steps and sat down by the root of a tree.

At this juncture two of the company they left at their place of rendezvous, becoming impatient at the delay of their messengers, rode up, and seeing Henry Johnson slain, demanded who had killed him, upon which the murderer sprang to his feet and answered the question by saying, 'he was killed by white men!' and immediately fled.

On Friday, 25th of Sept. he was arrested and imprisoned to stand his trial the next day. On Saturday the 26th at 11 o'clock the male part of the nation, from sixteen years old and upwards, assembled as the tribunal and grand inquest before which he was to answer for his crime. After an examination of the witnesses, the principal being Seneca John, in which the prisoner evinced considerable tact and ingenuity in cross examining them, he was informed by the presiding Chief (Francis A. Hicks) that the nation was ready to hear his defence. His defence was, in substance, as follows:

"I have but little to say in the way of self-defence. It may be supposed by many that I had for some time past entertained hostile feelings to the deceased, but this was not the case. I entertained no hostility towards him; we have heretofore frequently been together in drunken sprees and carousals, and have had frequent opportunities of taking his life, but never availed myself of them; and at the time that I suppose I perpetrated the murder, I was so much intoxicated that I have but a feint and indistinct recollection of what did take place. The murder, if committed by me, was prompted by circumstances which have borne with much weight upon my mind, and which I deem worthy of being related and which I hope you will deem worthy of serious consideration, and I wish it to be taken as part of my defence.

"For more than a year past, I have heard frequent rumors in our neighborhood that the dec'd. practised WITCH-CRAFT, and that several of the deaths that had occurred in our immediate neighborhood were brought about through his means. The deceased, when intoxicated, frequently had stated that he could enter a dwelling through a window when only a part of a pane of glass was out of the sash, and could even pass thro' a keyhole into a dwelling and be invisible to the inmates. It was also rumored that the death of all Saint Peters's children was his work. There are witnesses present who will testify to the existence of these reports. These reports did not, at the time, give much concern. Subsequently a dispute arose between the deceased & my sister, (widow Gray Eyes) about the ownership of a blanket, and after some disputing and contention, he was heard to utter the following significant remark. 'Well, let her have the blanket, it will do for a winding sheet for her child.' A short time afterwards the child died. This made a deep impression on my mind, and I could not divest myself of the conviction that he was the cause of the child's death. Prior to this, I had given myself but little concern about the rumors against him; but now he had invaded my house and family connexions with his witchcraft, it roused me to serious reflections, and I felt bound to notice this invasion; still I never had formed a determination to take his life, notwithstanding my firm belief of his guilt. It must have been under these feelings that the fatal deed was done.—Whether this will be considered as a justification or a palliating circumstance or not, I leave for the assembly to decide. I am done.

He was then remanded to jail.

After some discussion a vote was called for as to his guilt or innocence of the charge of murder. Tellers were appointed, and the result was almost unanimous, guilty of murder in the first degree, when he was sentenced to be shot by a platoon of six men on Monday, October 5th. He heard it with cold indifference, remarking, "Well, I supposed so."

On the day appointed for his execution a vast concourse of people assembled to witness the modus operandi of the Wyandott code of executing criminals convicted of capital crime.

At half past two o'clock the prisoner was bro't out of jail, a procession was formed by William Walker, acting as marshal of the day, assisted by Summeudowst and S. Armstrong, and marched to the place of execution; the multitude numbering about 1500, was formed into two parallel lines, one on each side of the grave, the rear closed up and the front (the direction in which the executioners were to shoot,) left open. The coffin was brought which the prisoner scrutinized very closely, as though endeavoring to detect some fault in the workmanship, and gazed about upon the multitude with as much unconcern and nonchalance as though he were only an idle spectator. The head Chief delivered a short address, after which he directed the marshal of the day to read, first in Wyandott and then in English, the following proclamation:

"Citizens: You will doubtless expect from the constituted authorities of the nation, the nature and character of the offence committed by the prisoner now before you, and about to suffer death by capital punishment. The offence is one of the highest in grade in the catalogue of crimes—shedding the blood of one of his fellow men without just cause—in other words, guilty of murder in the first degree." (Here follows a general statement of the circumstances attending the murder, which I omit.)

"He has been heard, tried and condemned by almost unanimous voice of the nation to die; and it remains for the Council to carry the decision into execution.

"The sentence, therefore, is that he be bro't forth from his place of confinement and be shot by a platoon of six men till he is dead.

"It may appear to you a severe measure, thus to cut off in the morning of life, a fellow being. Humanity may plead loudly for mercy, but the inexorable demands of justice, and the stern decrees of the law, alike require an example which shall not only prove a warning to all, but to convince our people, that the laws of the nation are not to be violated and trampled upon with impunity."

After this, the prisoner was taken to the foot of the grave, blindfolded and made to kneel down—the executioners were marched into the square under the escort of two men having charge of the fire arms, ready charged with balls except one, which was only charged with a blank cartridge. The guns were distributed indiscriminately among them, so that no one should know who had the gun containing the blank. At a signal the fatal volley was discharged. The marshal then requested Dr. Hetich to examine him and pronounce him dead. The Doctor did so, and announced that life was extinct. Such was the melancholy fate of Thomas Long, Jr., having scarcely attained the twentieth year of his age.

During his confinement he appeared to be perfectly indifferent to his fate, and when visited by his friends, maintained an air of cheerfulness and unconcern. The only time he betrayed any symptoms of trepidation was when the carpenter entered the jail and measured him for the purpose of making his coffin. Running the two foot rule up and down his body, seemed to have the effect of relaxing his hitherto turged muscles, and created a palsy-like tremor in his nerves. His mother and sister called upon him on the morning of his execution, gave him some clean clothes and bade him the last and bitter farewell. OQUANOXA.

THE CASE OF PIRACY AND MURDER ON BOARD THE SCHOONER ALEXANDER.

The New Orleans Picayune gives the full particulars, which follow, of this painful tragedy.

Bill Smith, Willian Jones, and John Swal, were yesterday brought to the Second Municipality prison by Lieut. Winters and police officer Rockwell. They are charged with murder and robbing the schooner Alexander, the particulars of which are as follows:

The schooner Alexander, Capt. Butler, left this port for Pensacola on the 24th December. She stopped at the lake end of the Ponchartrain rail road to take on board a crew of six sailors, as passengers, who were being sent to ship on board a vessel lying at Pensacola by a shipping master in this city. On the 26th, one of the prisoners, Smith, who appears to have taken a leading part in the bloody drama which followed, quarrelled with the cook of the schooner; the captain remonstrated with him, when Smith and some of the other strangers evinced a most turbulent spirit. The captain said he had arms aft and would use them if any disposition was shown to munity. Smith replied that if he had arms aft, they, the passenger sailors, had arms forward and would use them, and finally said that it should be decided that night whether he or the captain should command the schooner. The schooner in the meantime got aground on the Shell Banks. About dusk, and while Smith and his bloody-minded companions were in the forecastle, the captain and the whole of his own crew excepting the steward, who unfortunately was left behind, got into the yawl and shoved off from the schooner, leaving her aground and in possession of the pirates. As they put off, Smith happened to come on deck and saw them, when he immediately asked for his Bowie knife and called up all hands; but the captain and his men were out of his power. They then turned to and commenced drinking, and the next day it was proposed to lighten the schooner by throwing the cargo over-board, with the view of getting her off. They intimated their design to the steward, who remained in the cabin. He objected, when Smith replied that whosoever would not join with them should be considered their enemy and be treated as such.—The steward replied they might do as they pleased. They then went to work, discharging the freight into the lake.—One of them, an old Englishman, who felt unable and refused to work, Jones beat about the head and face with a marlinspike till he murdered him, and then threw him overboard. The report of a shot was now heard from the cabin where the steward was; they ran in and struck at him with blood-thirsty violence. He begged his life, but Jones told Smith to give him no mercy. He got out, and one among them who neither approved nor participated in their proceedings threw a plank into the lake on which the steward jumped. They then threw at him billets of wood and other missles, till they drowned him They next turned on the one who threw out the plank to the steward, and despatched him.—There were now but four hands remaining who managed to get the schooner off. Swal was sent to the helm who shortly run her aground again near Cat island. They then ransacked the vessel, and took possession of two hundred dollars, two watches and some other property, put on some other clothes than their own, and made a raft on which to go ashore. A storm was blowing and they did not venture, but staid on board that night, the 27th. In the morning they saw a boat nearing them with armed men in it, and as they saw no chance of escape, they concluded that death, instant death was inevitable. They expected to be shot as soon as the party reached the schooner, and Smith and Jones said they cared not—they were prepared for it.—Not so an old man of the party jumped overboard and was drowned, making the fourth life that was sacrificed.

The party who were seen approaching in the boat consisted of the captain and some citizens of Pass Christian, who came with him armed to retake the vessel.—The cowardly murderers on their approach ran down and hid themselves under deck where they remained till they were arrested. After this, the captain put his schooner in order, returned to this city, and informed the police of the transaction.

These facts have been gathered principally from the confessions of Swal, who says that he took no part in the murders; and in giving his assistance only acted from fear. Smith and Jones, he says, were the principals, one acting as captain and the other as mate. They say Swal (he is a Dutchman) is as much implicated as they are—that they desire death and wish to be shot.

STEAMBOAT ACCIDENTS.—When Congress passed the famous law for the prevention of steamboat accidents, the hope was indulged that the dangers attendant on this species of navigation would be greatly diminished. But very different has been the result. So far as we can tell from recollection, disasters on steamboats are as frequent now as they were before the law was passed. Nor is this all. The same impunity is enjoyed by those who may be presumed as not entirely innocent of the blame where such disasters happen. Notwithstanding the number of steamboat accidents, of recent occurrance, we hear of none of the officers being punished for the neglect which we well suppose, must, in some instances at least, have been committed. We do not even hear of legal investigations being instituted. It is high time that something was done to arrest this wanton sacrifice of human life. If the present law is so defective as not to be susceptible of enforcement, let it be amended, or a substitute provided that will furnish some security to travellers. If, on the other hand, the inefficacy of the law is owing to mal-administration, let the delinquents, whoever they may be, be held up to the public opprobrium. The indifference exhibited on the subject looks much like barbarism, and is far from creditable to the American character.—N. O. Bulletin.

GEN. HARRISON.—Mr. George Endicott of 152 Fulton street, has published a highly finished mezzotint of the President.—The likeness is said to be perfect. If it be so, then is the old hero of Tippecanoe a much handsomer man than we took him for. His bust and all other pretended likenesses, that we have seen, are decidedly homely. They show a hatchet-face—the features being void of any particular expression—and indicate altogether a frail old gentleman. In the face of this picture there is a full, hearty, cheerful look—such as we might attribute to the man from his well-known character.

We are inclined to confide in the fidelity of this portrait, on account of the high reputation of the painter, Mr. Marchant. The engraving is exceedingly creditable to Mr. H. S. Sadd.—New World.

THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN THE UNITED STATES.—The Baltimore Sun gives some information, copied from the Catholic Almanac for 1841, in relation to the Catholics in the United States. The Catholic population in the United States is 1,300,000. The number of clergymen, 545, of which 436 are in the ministry, and 109 otherwise employed. The number of churches and chapels is 512; churches building, 27; other stations, 394. There are 17 ecclesiastical institutions, with 144 clerical students. The female religious institutions number 31, and the female academies, 49. There are in the female academies, 2,782 pupils. The literary institutions for young men number 24, and the young men in them, 1,593.—The number of Catholic bishops in the United States, is 17. During 1840, the accessions to the priestly office have been eighty-five.

A HISTORY OF THE DEVIL.—There is a preacher in Chicago, Ill., nightly holding forth to large audiences, and giving, as he says, "a history of the devil." The Democrat says that all who hear him are entirely convinced of his thorough acquaintance with the subject.

A meeting of citizens of Philadelphia was held in November, to take into consideration the utility of establishing an "Asylum for the cure of Inebriates."—Alexander Henry was appointed Chairman, and Doctor W. Darrach, Secretary. After a free interchange of sentiment, it was unanimously agreed: That the subject be laid before our citizens generally in the form of an Address; when Dr. W. Darrah, Isaac Collins, Townsend Sharpless, Dr. John Bell and Isaiah Hacker were appointed a committee for that purpose.—Saturday Courier.

INTEMPERANCE.—Another proof of the fatal effects of rum, is the death of an aged man, named John Kelsey, residing in Salisbury, Conn. It appears that he had been an habitual drunkard for years, was in the habit of leaving his home for a length of time, without any notice being taken of it, but having been absent recently about a week, search was made when he was traced to one of the grog shops with which that town abounds, and eventually was found frozen to death, at the side of the fence in a lot near the house of Capt. Everty, with a jug of brandy by his head! just fourteen days from the time when he was last seen at the grog shop—snow having fallen in the mean time, and hidden him entirely from view!

A TRANCE.—Two young ladies residing in Fourth street, between Master & Phœnix, district of Kensington, one named —— Skull, the other Sarah Middleton, have been lying in a trance since Sunday evening. They attended, as was their custom, religious meeting on the evening alluded to, and had for several weeks previous devoted their whole thoughts to religion; but, on that occasion, returned home apparently more affected than at any former time, retired to bed, and have not, up to yesterday morning, shown the least possibility of a revival; notwithstanding several attempts have been made to offer them some nourishment they appeared to take no notice of the endeavors.—Philadelphia paper.

THE EARTHQUAKE.—In Morristown, N. J., an earthquake, similar to that experienced in New York, on Monday, was experienced. In some instances the windows rattled to an alarming degree, and the noise resembled a heavy stage passing rapidly over frozen ground. In Pequannac, some ten or 12 miles to the north, the shock was sensibly felt, and many ran out of doors to see what occasioned the unusual sound and shaking.—A brilliant meteor was seen toward the east by several persons, the explosion of which is said to have been superb, which may probably account for the phenomenon.

FARMERS' AND MECHANICS' BANK.—The N. Y. Journal of Commerce of Saturday morning says: "The Farmers' and Mechanics' Bank at New Brunswick commenced specie payments on the 15th, but stopped payment altogether on Thursday morning. The Directors say they expect to be able to pay all demands against the Bank but that they thought it not their duty to make further sacrifices. The bills are bought by the brokers at heavy discounts."

THE DEEP, DEEP SEA.—According to a paragraph in the N. Y. Journal of Commerce. Capt. Ross, R. N. found bottom, 3d of March last, in lat. 33 21 south long. 94 east, at the depth of 2677 fathoms. He had over 5000 fathoms of line on the reel, and the weight employed was 540 pounds. Captain Ross says: "Nothing could be more satisfactory than this sounding, and it is the more so from showing that we have the means of getting soundings however deep the sea may be, and I trust our next trial may be in deeper water. I have ordered the line to be completed again to 5000 fathoms; but it would be useless to attempt it any more on this side of the cape."—The mean velocity of weight in descending 2677 fathoms, was at the rate of three miles and one-fifth per hour. The first 50 fathoms, descended at the rate of 7.1 miles per hour, and the last 100 at 2.4. On a previous occasion Capt. Ross found bottom at the depth of about 3700 fathoms, or about four miles.—Balt. American.

METHOD OF BURNING LIME WITHOUT KILNS.—The practice of Lime burners in Wales was formerly to burn lime in kilns, made broad and shallow, but lately they have begun to manufacture the article without any kiln at all.

They place the limestone in large bodies, the stones not being broken small, and calcine these heaps in the same way prepared for using charcoal. To prevent the flame from bursting out at tops and sides of these heaps, turfs and earths are placed against them, and the apperture partially closed; the heat is thus regulated and transferred through the whole mass, and notwithstanding the increased size of the stones, the whole becomes thoroughly calcined. As a proof of the superior advantages that lime in these clumps has over lime burnt in the old methed, a preference is always given to that burnt in heaps. This practice also prevails in England and Scotland. —Picton Mechanic.

DELAWARE BRIDGE.—Some of the braces under the Trenton Delaware Bridge were carried away by some of the upper bridges passing under it during the late flood; not however endangering the structure in the least.

HE RECORDER.

ZANESVILLE:

NESDAY, ... FEARUARY 3, 1841.

weather is very changeable, latterly. We warm and clear one day, rainy the next, iating with snow, and thus perpetually g.

abolition riot is said to have taken p'ace ton, in which an assault was made upon olored people, in which one or two whites eir lives.

v England Christian Advocate.—Since st we have received the 2d and 3d Nos. of per, to which we alluded some time since. lublished at Lowell, Massachusetts, once a under the editorial care of the Rev. Luther t $2 per annum in advance. This paper ducted with ability and in a good spirit.— l be mainly supported by the members of I. E. Church, and will go, we hope, for the ipation of the white as well as the colored

OHIO LEGISLATURE.

e bill of the Senate authorizing the town nesville to borrow money for the erection of works, passed on the 25th ult.

e House bill to "protect religious worship" eferred by the Senate to the committee on diciary, and reported back on the 28th ult. nt amendment: after being read was laid e table.

e Legislature is still at the good work of re- g the State Printer, but he appears to be a hard case. We are afraid his reforma- will cost the State considerable.

bill is introduced into the House giving eves from service the right to trial by jury arrested by their supposed owners.

e Ohio Star, alluding to the Wyandott exe- n recorded on our second page, remarks:

hough justice, according to the forms of e law, was thus done to the murderer, it rs strange that such a proceeding should been permitted in an organized and popu- county of Ohio. From the narration it d appear that some white men participated e ceremonies at the execution."

e Columbus State Journal, alludi g to the e of the Star, further says:

We copy the above for the purpose of adding xpression of our surprise, that such an ille- nd unauthorized act could have been per- d to have taken place within the jurisdic- of this State. The white men referred to, d probably find it a difficult matter to justify art they are said to have borne in the busi- before a proper tribunal."

e remark upon these notices:

We are not satisfied, from the narration, there were any who participated in this tution, but such as belonged to the nation. We have understood that, by treaty stipu- n, these Wyandotts were to govern them- s by their own regulations. If so, what is violated? Or, how could it be any more inal for white men to take a part in this tution, than to participate in an execution anada? Who can inform us on this subject?

PRICES CURRENT.

ANESVILLE.—Wheat, 50cts.; Flour, $3.

ALTIMORE, January 23.—Flour.—At close of the last and the beginning of the ent week, Howard street Flour advanced 4,50 to $4,56¼, and a few hundred bbls. e sold at the latter rate. On Wednesday the icle got up to 4,62½, at which considerable s of common brands were made from store; holders were firm. On Thursday and yes- ay many were willing to sell at the latter e, but not as many disposed to buy; and on former day small sales were made at 4,56¼.— quote the present rates 4,56¼ a 4,62½, with a ted demand at either price.

Western Transportation.—There is a small line in the rates of Freight westwardly, but e appears to be little demand for Wagons.— quote 1,12½ to Pittsburgh, and 1,37½ to eeling, per 100 lbs.

The Home Market.—There were probably exceeding 200 head of Beef Cattle in mar- this week, and only 120 of them disposed of; remainder were laid over. The prices paid e at a further advance on last week's rates, ging from 6,50 to 7,50, with a very few prime, ch were sold on Sunday, at 8 dollars per 100

There are no Live Hogs offering, but are nted; and those of good quality would readi- command 6 dollars, at which price the last e, noticed in our last report, was made.—Ly- d.

PHILADELPHIA, January 26.—Flour.— e receipts continue light, with a moderate port demand. Sales of Pennsylvania Flour 4,75, choice brands at 4,87½ per bbl.

Cattle Market.—Beef Cattle—480 in mar- t; 61 from Virginia; sales 6½ a 8 cents, which a decline of ½ cent.—Bicknell.

MASSILLON, OHIO, January 21.—Wheat, bushel, 50 cents; Corn 20; Oats 15; Corn al 37½; Potatoes 18¾.

Butter 7c. Eggs 8. Lard 6¼.

Apples, per bush. 25. Cheese, per lb. 6.

Flour, per bbl. 2,75. Pork 12,00.

Pork, per cwt. 3,00.

Salt, per bbl. 2,75; White Fish 8,00. Pickerel 00; Mackerel 20,00.

Coffee, best per bag, 15.

Bacon, per cwt. 5 a 6c.

Buckwheat flour, per cwt. 1,50.

Sole Leather, per lb. 22 a 25.—Gazette.

Zanesville Postmaster.—By a letter receiv- d this morning from Washington, we learn at Mr. Israel Hoge has been nominated by e President to fill the vacancy in the post of- e at this place, occasioned by the resignation Col. Cassidy.—Zanesville Aurora.

All the Banks in Wilmington, Del., resumed ecie payments on the 15th ultimo. There as no run upon them, and all passed off qui- ly.

The mahogany coffin which enclosed the remains of Napoleon at St. Helena, and which was exchanged for the ebony one brought from France, was cut up by order of the Prince de Joinville, and distributed in pieces to the officers and men of the Belle Poule and Favorite.—Several pieces were disposed of by the sailors, on their arrival in France, at from 300 to 500 francs each.

Gov. Porter, of Pennsylvania, has signed a bill for the loan of eight hundred thousand dollars to the State, at six per cent. interest. This loan is to pay the interest on the State debt which must be met next month.

ITEMS.

The ship Grace Brown has been taken into Norfolk by the pilots, who found her abandoned on the south east point of middle ground. Capt. Doff and all the crew had gone ashore for assistance, as he says. The pilots claim salvage, and if they get it, they will not make a bad day's work, for the amount will not be less than thirty to fifty thousand dollars.

Removing the Deposites.—In cleaning out a well in Wilmington, Del. a few days since, a vessel was found containing gold coins to the amount of about six hundred dollars, which, for aught that is known, may have been deposited there during the revolutionary war.

Bombastes Furioso.—The Montreal Transcript bursts out in a furious strain upon the subject of McLeod's imprisonment, and intimates that if any harm shall befal him, a hundred thousand American lives are but a fair equivalent for every hair of his head.

"Whoever does these boots displace, Shall meet Bombastes face to face."

The New York Planet has the following good Wellerism—"I'm lost in grief," as the fly said, when he was drowned in a tear.

The Legislature of New Hampshire, at its late session, swept from the statue books every vestige of imprisonment for debt.

Mr. James O'Connell, M. P., in a recent speech to the Dublin tailors, alluding to the common scandal that nine tailors go to the composition of a man, expressed his conviction that it would take nine men of any other country to make an Irish tailor.

Georgia.—We learn from the Milledgeville Journal, that in 56 counties, Hines Holt, Whig, for the present Congress, in the place of Judge Colquitt, V. B. resigned, has received 20,336 votes, against 15,124 for Mr. Watson, V. B. Holt's majority may be somewhat reduced by the remaining counties, but his election is certain.

The Richmond Compiler of Monday last announces the death of Hiram Haines, Esq., of Petersburg, Va., editor of the Virginia Star.

New County in Pennsylvania.—A public meeting of the citizens of Mercer, Butler and Beaver counties was lately held at Newcastle, for the purpose of taking into consideration the propriety of forming a new county out of parts of the above, to be called Lawrence. Newcastle, in Mercer county, has been suggested as the seat of justice.

The Richmond Enquirer says that Mr. Van Buren has not acceded to the request of Mr. Stevenson (our Ministers at St. James) that he may be recalled; but, in consequence of the new aspect of affairs in regard to the boundary question, and the affair of the Caroline, has desired Mr. Stevenson to remain in England until a successor should be appointed and reach London.

Free Against Slave Labor.—The population of Virginia has increased a little more than 20,000, and that of North Carolina almost 19,000, in the last ten years. The increase in Ohio, in the same time, has been over half a million. Virginia enjoys now a representation in Congress, of two more members than Ohio.—In the next, she will have but two-thirds as many.

Escaped.—Dr. Hines, who was condemned at Baton Rouge, La., to fourteen months' imprisonment, for negro stealing, has effected his escape from prison.

Capital Punishment.— A bill has been introduced in the Legislature of Massachusetts to abolish capital punishment.

A terrible gale had visited the southern coast of Mexico on the 3d of November.—In Acapuleo, 200 houses were destroyed and at Coyuca, only three houses were left out of 360.

A correspondent of the N. O. Bulletin, writing from Buenos Ayres, says:—"It is certain that peace has been concluded, and the French question settled, but I am unabled to inform you of the conditions.

"Some excitement exists here against the French, and insults are offered them daily."

Who shall decide when Doctors Disagree.—A suit was brought before a Justice in Baltimore, on Friday last, Dr. Smith against Dr. Whittaker, to recover a fee of $100 for professional services.—Dr. W. pleads the established custom among physicicians not to charge each other for professional services. It was contended that, though the custom of doctors not charging each other for professional services is well established, yet there is a perfect right to do so if they think fit. The Justice is unable at present to decide.

N. E. Boundary.—Governor Davis, of Massachusetts, sent a message to the Legislature on Friday, accompanying a resolution of the Legislature of Maine, in which he expresses his fears that there is no disposition on the part of Great Britain to settle this long disputed question, in regard to which the terms of the treaty of '83 are plain and intelligible.

The Greenfield, Mass., papers announce the death of John Leland, of Chester, Berkshire county, for a long series of years a distinguished minister of the Baptist persuasion, at the advanced age of eighty-five.

McLeod.—The Niagara Chronicle says that McLeod intends to give bail for his appearance, and accept a release. The Rochester Democrat has heard nothing of the intended removal of the prisoner from Lockport to Rochester.

Important Decision.—The Supreme Court of Ohio have decided that Insurance Companies are not liable for accidents in steamboat explosions, as the explosion is presumptive evidence of carelessness.

The company who have leased the lead mine at Sunbury, Pa., will commence operations as soon as the weather will permit.

Baptists.—In the United States this denomination has 423 associations, 7,992 churches, 4,495 ministers, and comprises 551,582 members.

A Vessel Lost.—Captain Paul, of the ship Ruby, of St. Johns, N. B., arrived at Norfolk, Va,, on Sunday last in the brig Sidney, Capt. Chammerlaine, from Turk's Island, and informed the editor of the Beacon, that his ship was cast away on the Blue Caycos, on the 18th of Dec. last. She was from Liverpool with a cargo of salt bound to New Orleans. Ship and cargo lost. Crew and part of the materials saved.

Mrs. Davis.—The judges of the court of General Sessions, yesterday granted the counsel in the case of Mrs. Davis, convicted on Saturday, of the murder of Julia Ann Jordan, till Friday week, to file reasons in arrest of judgment and for a new trial.—Philadelphia paper.

Consequence of a Wrong Vote.—One of the most talented members of the Indiana House of Representatives, has been stricken with insanity, in consequence, as it is supposed, of his vote in the election of Secretary of State, and the part he took against one of the candidates.—Philadelphia Chronicle.

Important to Office-Seekers.—It is currently reported, says the Boston Atlas, that General Harrison will not appoint any man to office who does not promptly pay for his paper.

Wm. C. Rives, Esq., was elected a Senator from Virginia in the Congress of the United States, for six years from the 4th of March, 1839. His majority is six over all others.

Gallipolis money has been thrown out of circulation for a few days past. The directors have since published a statement of the affairs of that bank, in which they assure the public that its notes are good. From all we can learn, it redeems its notes with current paper of other banks. It has also on hand a considerable amount of specie.—Steub. Herald.

Recorder Morris, of the city of New York, has been removed from office, and Mr. Tallmadge, late State Senator from that city, appointed in his place. Egbert Benson is appointed Tobacco Inspector, in place of Mr. Glentworth removed.—Morris and Glentworth are names familiar to our readers.

☞Fire.—The drug store of Messrs. Shinn, Sellers & Williams, corner of Wood and Third streets, Pittsburgh, Pa., was destroyed by fire on the morning of the 22d ultimo.

Robbery.—The dwelling of Henry H. Dodge, of Cleveland, Ohio, was entered on Sunday night last, and robbed of $2550, principally Ohio bills of the Miami Exporting Company, Gallipolis, West Union, and other banks; with some Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Virginia, and Kentucky paper. A reward of $500 is offered for the apprehension and recovery.

More Steam.—An application is now before the Legislature of New York for the incorporation of the New York and New Orleans Steam Ship Company, with an adequate capital to purchase, equip and man four steamers.

The United States Bank has obtained a loan in England of about five millions of dollars. This is an important matter, and will greatly assist the permanency of resumption. The stock, however, will not, in all probability, rise higher than 56 or 57 for some time. An increase of indebtedness is not calculated to render an individual more solvent.—Bicknell.

The Harrisburg Daily Chronicle, of Tuesday says: "There has been no extraordinary run upon the banks here since the resumption."

The Albany Daily Advertiser says, the bills of the Farmers' and Mechanics' Bank of Genesee, at Batavia, are no longer redeemed by their agent in this city.

The Debt of Ohio.—According to the annual report of the Auditor of the State of Ohio, the total debt of the State is $14,809,477 14; of this sum, $13,724,755 98 is subject to interest. The annual interest is $823,485 45. The debt has been increased, within the last year, $2,309,477 14.

The profits of the New Jersey State Prison last year, were $10,000.

Gen. Harrison's Departure.—Yesterday morning, (Tuesday) about 11 o'clock Gen. Harrison and suite, left the city for Washington and Virginia, in the splendid new boat Ben Franklin, fitted up expressly for the occasion by Messrs. Strader & Gorman. Early in the morning the crowd began to gather, in the neighborhood of the Henrie House, from where it was understood the General would move. He left that house under the escort of the Cincinnati Greys, and proceeded on foot to the boat, attended by an immense crowd. On board, the General took his station near the wheel house, surrounded by his friends, until the military were arranged upon the hurricane deck. He then came forward upon the deck and addressed the immense crowd of both sexes that filled our spacious landing, and the windows and tops of houses and boats. He adverted to the difference between his present situation, and the present state of the city, and contrasted them with what both were short of fifty years since—Then an Ensign, he landed upon these shores, where the only marks of improvement were a few log-cabins—now raised by the voices of the working men of the real Democracy of the country, to the highest station in the world, he departed from a large and splendid city, taking leave of his friends, perhaps for the last time, to take upon himself the cares of Government. If any man living had reason to be thankful and grateful he had.—The General went on to say that his future conduct should be governed by that vital principle of Democracy—the greatest good of the greatest number. He requested his fellow-citizens to judge him only by his acts,—and, as he did not ask their approbation in advance, he hoped they would not permit him to be abused in advance. He then took an affectionate farewell of his friends and fellow-citizens.

The General was in fine health, and spoke in a remarkably strong and clear voice. The boat moved down the river and returned past the city, the military on board the boat and on the shore firing vollies, and the fine Brass Band on board playing lively and animating airs.—Cheers, loud and long, were exchanged from the boat, and the multitude on shore. The General stood uncovered, out from the throng, viewing his fellow-citizens, with a palitating heart and moistened eye.—Cincinnati Gazette, Jan. 27.

New York, 4½ P. M.—A shock of an earthquake, says a New York correspondent of the Philadelphia Daily Chronicle, was experienced in this city about half past five o'clock this morning. The sounds resembled the noise of a loaded wagon passing over a wooden bridge, and continued about half a minute, during which several slight vibrations of the earth were perceptible.

The same shock was experienced, according to advices by the New Jersey Rail Road, sixty miles south. In Jersey city the sound is represented to be similar to that which accompanied the meteoric shower in Fairfield, Conn., thirty-five years ago.

From Rio Janeiro.—The ship William C. Nae, has arrived, bringing dates to the 28th November. The blockade of Buenos Ayres is removed, which convinces many that war in Europe is certain, in consequence of which exchange had declined. A large quantity of Baltimore flour had been sold at Rio at 15‖600 but it was doubtful whether any more could be sold at such high rates. Good coffee was scarce and difficult to be obtained.

Important from Texas.—The Cincinnati Republican says—We are indebted to a gentleman of this city for the Austin Gazette as late as the 23d ultimo, from which we learn that a courier had arrived at Austin the previous evening, announcing the fact that a body of hostile Mexicans had crossed the Rio Grande, and penetrated the thinly settled country of San Patricia. Exciting information of a meditated invasion had previously reached Austin; President Lamar was absent, in consequence of severe indisposition—Vice President Burnet had transmitted a message to Congress, recommending speedy and efficient measures for defence. He suggested that the present invasion would afford them an opportunity of settling their long controversy with Mexico, and he spoke with confidence of success. A joint Committee of both Houses of Congress reported resolutions in conformity with the suggestions of the President, and all appearances indicate a renewal of the war. Gen. Felix Houston is at Austin, ready to parade, and anxious to lead the Texas troops into service.

Daniel Webster.—It appears that this Senator (sometimes called "black Dan") is sure to be appointed Secretary of State by Mr. Harrison, as the old General is sarcastically called by John Smith, Jr., of Arkansas. The Cincinnati Daily Gazette—a paper in the confidence of the President, if not his organ—says: "The newspaper announcement of the selection of Daniel Webster to be Secretary of State, gives great satisfaction. The Whig press regards the matter as settled, and most cordially approves the choice of the able Defender of the Constitution. His talents and experience eminently qualify him for the place, in our estimation."

Printing in Pittsburgh.—Number of printing offices in Pittsburgh, eighteen; binders, seven; daily newspapers, four; weekly do., eleven; periodicals, ten; men employed, one hundred and thirty; amount of capital invested ninety-eight thousand dollars!

Discharge of the Eldridge Jury.—Last night the jury in the case of Eldridge came into court and declared their inability to agree upon a verdict. They then deliberated among themselves, and stated to the court that it was the unanimous wish of the jury to be discharged. Judge Conrad then consulted with his colleagues and put the question to each juror whether he thought it possible, if they were kept together longer, they could agree upon a verdict. Ten of them thought it utterly impossible to agree; the eleventh also thought it impossible to agree, but was willing to remain out a month provided they could agree upon a verdict; the twelfth said he did not think it possible to agree, but was willing to remain out a twelve-month, if he thought it likely they could agree upon a verdict. The court then consulted, when a majority being for the discharge of the jury, they were discharged forthwith, Judge Conrad dissenting, stating that no lapse of time would justify him in discharging them. At the time of their separation they stood eleven for conviction and one for acquittal. They have been out thirteen days.—Philadelphia Chronicle.

The Spirit in Canada.—Several of the Canada papers hold very violent language in relation to the Canada affair and the arrest of McLeod. The Toronto Colonist says—

We conclude for the present with the expression of a confident hope, that, at whatever cost, our government will not suffer one hair of McLeod's head to be injured. There are perjured villains enough on the other side ready to swear any thing to procure his conviction, who would that moment desire and assist in putting him to death, and as the sheriff's interests may be closely indentified with those of this desperate mob, there would be little chance of his conniving at McLeod's escape, as has been done, in the cases of all the border prowlers who have been tried in the United States, and convicted, but afterwards set at liberty.

The Montreal Herald is still more violent, thus:

"As nothing is now too base for the officers of the republic to sanction, we should not be surprised to hear of British officers, who were engaged in the war of 1812, being seized and put on trial for damage done to the citizens of the separate States, by orders of government. The principle of Mr. Forsyth holds good in all cases of a similar nature. And the British government is so much respected by the Americans, that it is powerless to save its servants for obeying its lawful orders. This state of feeling cannot last. The cup of iniquity is fast filling up, and we should like to see that country left to itself.—Those persons who firmly believe in Providence overruling the affairs of the world, cannot but be impressed with the conviction, that a government which does not acknowledge a God and acts as if there were no God, must ultimately be brought to desolation."

Latest from China.—By the ship Moctezuma, arrived at the Breakwater from Manilla, we have accounts from Macao to the middle of August. The forts at the Bocca Tigris have been put in complete order, and two hundred cannons are now mounted on the walls. The prevailing opinion is, that the force of the British in that quarter is too insignificant to effect much, and that nothing of consequence can be done until it is reinforced. An English Missionary, who had been bathing in the river, had been seized and carried to Canton, where he was threatened with instant decapitation. His release was demanded by the English, and it being refused, the fort which divides the Chinese from the Portuguese jurisdiction, near Macao, was attacked, with but trifling loss on the part of the British; the Chinese had about 70 killed. It is thought by many that there will be no renewal of the Foreign trade for some years. The Moctezuma left at Manilla, 1st Sept., ship Adelaide for this port, to sail immediately, and the Merchant and Washington to sail in about thirty days for the United States.

Latest from China—Additional Particulars.—By a gentleman who came passenger in the Moctezuma, we learn that there were two Americans remaining at Canton, Messrs, Shillaber and Coolidge, the Chinese authorities allowing them to stay in compliance with earnest solicitations, but advising them to confine themselves within the factories.

The Chinese are confident in their superiority, and will not yield to any demand made by the British.—Commissioner Lin has said that if a few towns on the sea coast, were destroyed, it was of but little consequence, and the English could never penetrate the interior. He places the utmost reliance upon the superiority of his cannon, and avers that certain destruction awaits every Englishman.

No teas will be brought from the interior to Canton this season, and of course the trade may be considered as having ceased. In Manilla and Signapore, but little Chinese produce could be found.

As yet the British have been foiled in all attempts to communicate with the Emperor.

Pennsylvania.—The census exhibits a population of about 1,659,717 for Pennsylvania. This is 153,932 more than Ohio contains. The increase in Pennsylvania since 1830, has been a little more than 350,000, whilst in Ohio the increase has been over 577,000.

Deduct from Pennsylvania and Ohio, the population of the largest city in each, to wit: Philadelphia and Cincinnati, and Ohio contains more inhabitants than Pennsylvania.

Ohio will have, under the new census, about six members of Congress more than Virginia, and but two, or at most three, less than Pennsylvania. Ten years more and Pennsylvania, too, must knock under. Then must the Empire State look out.—Steubenville Herald.

Fire!!—A fire broke out in the stable attached to the Exchange hotel, kept by Mr. Egbort, in this place, on Tuesday morning last, between 5 and 6 o'clock, which destroyed the stable, a new buggy, much harness, 30 or 40 mantle cloaks, and we are sorry to add, four horses, though unfastened could not be driven out of the burning building. The other horses all made their escape on the doors being thrown open. The fire is supposed to have been the work of design. Total loss estimated at about 2000 dollars.—Leb. Star.

Canal Land Sales.—The President of the United States has issued his proclamation postponing the Sales of the United States alternate sections of public land on the Wabash and Erie Canal (Maumee Valley) in Ohio, from March, as heretofore advertised, to June next,—that is, the sale will commence at Bucyrus on Monday the 7th day of June, and at Lima on the 14th day of June.—ib.

J. B. Glentworth—This celebrated individual has had no less than seven bills of indictment preferred against him, by the Grand Jury of New York, at the present session. Mr. Glentworth is under bonds of $5000 to appear and answer.

Business Department.

In answer to the inquiries of H., we say, use soft words and hard arguments, and you shall be heard.

We have had application for back Nos.; we are sorry we have not the ones called for.

Br. White, I. Wright is not credited for first volume Recorder, and you forwarded for the second. Has he paid for the first and who? let us know in your next.

The P. M. at Donegal, Pa., informs us that Abm. Gallentine does not take his paper. He now owes us for half a volume. If he pays us we will discontinue: see terms. Will Br. Robison please attend to this matter?

Br. John Guest wishes us to inform Br. Ragan, that if he can make it convenient to be at Tiffin, Ohio, or in the neighborhood thereof, on the 17th of June, or the 1st of August, that his old friend, A. H. Bassett, and himself, will be pleased to spend a night with them.

We inform John Marfoot or Maffit, of Bucyrus, Ohio, that his name had not before reached us, but we commence sending the paper to him from the 75th number.

We have received one dollar for the Western Recorder, in a letter post marked "East Bethlehem, Pa.," and neither the name of the person who forwards, nor of the person to whom credit is to be given is in the letter, and we have no such office on our book. We give this notice so the person who should have the credit may see and let us know.

Prospectus.

THE WESTERN WORLD & WEEKLY MESSENGER is published every Thursday morning, by Henkle, Logan, & Co., Main street, three doors below Fifth, Louisville, Ky.

The country is flooded with political newspapers in great abundance; but these, generally, are so devoted to political controversy as to afford little else, and many of them are so bitter in spirit and so violent in language as to render them unfit, and even unsafe visitors of the family circle. There are also a number of papers of a religious cast, under the special patronage, and devoted to the inculcation of the peculiar views of the different religious sects, but these are not quite suited to the general reader and do not serve the purposes of a miscellaneous family newspaper. A few literary papers there are too in the west—some light, some heavy—chiefly published but monthly. All these are well enough in their way, and we have nothing to say in opposition to them. But there is not among them what can be properly called a Family Newspaper. Several attempts have been made to get up weekly papers to supply this deficiency in the periodical literature of the west, but they have not been adequately sustained; and in consequence, the entire west is supplied with family newspapers from the east, so far as there is a supply at all. And our great western valley drained of thousands of dollars to pay for eastern papers, which come to us not so fresh as we could have papers of our own, and burdened with a heavier tax of postage.

We have now undertaken to supply the desideratum, by presenting the western public with a western family weekly, containing a larger quantity of select reading matter than any western paper of any description we have ever seen, and at a lower price. This we are enabled to do, by publishing our weekly in connection with a family daily paper, as we can thereby use the choice reading matter of six daily papers (besides other matter) in making up each number of the weekly paper. Feeling ourselves prepared to furnish our patrons as good and as cheap a paper, at least, as they can get by sending their money away from among us, we may confidently expect a liberal support; and our liberal encouragement thus far, assures us of this result.

Local Agents will be appointed at all the principal points in the west and south-west, which will save subscribers the expense of ordering paper by mail and of making remittances.

The "Western World" is printed on good type and fine paper, on a mammoth sheet of the largest size, each paper containing about thirty columns of select reading matter, at the very low price of two dollars a year, or—still lower—six copies for ten dollars—payable in advance in all cases. All letters to the editors or publishers must be post paid.

Editors in the west and south, with whom we exchange, will confer a favor—which, on occasion, will be reciprocated—by inserting our prospectus and noticing the paper.

Louisville, Ky., January, 1841. 76

COMMUNICATIONS.

For the Western Recorder.

CLASS LEADERS—CLASS MEETINGS.

Mr. Editor: That the office and duties of class leaders, and the institution of class meetings, in the Methodist Protestant Church, are of very high importance to the welfare and religious prosperity of the members, and also to the whole church in all her interests, is a matter too apparent to escape the notice of the most superficial observer of her economy. It is the business of a class leader, "to instruct the members in the principles and duties of christianity; to comfort them in affliction; to advise them in cases of difficulty; to exhort them to diligence and perseverence in doing and suffering the whole will of God." In order to this, it is not only plainly and imperiously the duty of each member to meet the leader "at the stated time and place appointed for holding the class meeting:" but to accomplish so great a work as that which pertains to his office, the leader himself must be acquainted with the particular state of each member in his class. This knowledge can only be obtained by careful, plain, and diligent inquiry, pursued, not only in the class room, but on all proper occasions, and the leader who would be thoroughly furnished for this work, must have his own heart sensibly influenced by the grace of God, and possess such knowledge of the human heart, the devices of satan, and the things of God, as will not only enable him by his inquiries to search the heart, but also to instruct, to comfort, to advise and to exhort as occasion may require.

This is the true intention and design of class meetings; and in proportion as we have departed from the original plan, established by Mr. Wesley, have we depreciated the benefits of this means of grace. No particular form of questions, or inquiry can be adopted in meeting a class.—The various cases and circumstances of the members, and the experience and good judgment of the leader, must govern in this matter. Yet the leader will do well, I apprehend, to adopt some general outline to be filled up as occasion may require, and prudence dictate. And,

First. It will be found requisite to inquire of all the members, relative to their attendance on all the means of grace.—Do they attend the public worship of Almighty God? the Lord's supper? secret prayer? searching the holy scriptures? family prayer?

Secondly. As believers, have they the evidence of the pardon of their sins? Have they the spirit of adoption, "whereby they cry Abba father?" Are they growing in grace? Have they habitual access to God in prayer? Have they joy and peace in the Holy Ghost through believing? Does temptation have no dominion over them? Have they increasing delight in the ways of religion? Are they resolved by the grace of God not to stop short of the privilege of believers, "holiness of heart?" Are they fervently seeking after it?

Thirdly. As seekers of religion, are they pungently convinced of the evil of sin and their own guilt? Is it their chief desire to flee the wrath to come and to be saved by grace through faith? Have they clear views of the way of salvation by faith in Christ? Do they diligently and perseveringly use all the means of grace, and only as means? Many penitent seekers of salvation look for some kind of mediatorship in the means of grace, or in their own exercises, rather than to Christ as the one only mediator between sinners and God. A false, or affected humility, such as refuses mercy because they think they are not fit to receive it, not humble enough, or not penitent enough, is a very general hinderance to seekers. Have they no favorite sin, or idol which they are unwilling to give up?

If a course of plain scriptural inquiry, in conformity with the above outlines, were to be faithfully pursued in the spirit of meekness and affection by class leaders, I doubt not but it would be accompanied with the most happy effects, and the profiting of the church by class meetings would become very apparent. Those who have joined the church under partial awakenings, would be led to a deeper sense of their sinfulness, and their need of salvation; the truly penitent would be bro't to "the knowledge of salvation, by the remission of sins;" the wavering and the believers would be encouraged and comforted and strengthened; and those who have received 'the full assurance of faith,' would "go on to perfection;" the lukewarm and superficial would be excited to self-examination; and many in our fellowship who have nothing of religion but the name and the form would find themselves detected, and either withdraw or reform.

It too frequently happens that in speaking in class meeting a kind of habitual sameness is observable in the members, and sometimes in leaders, in which the understanding, the judgment or the affections seem to be but very little concerned, and consequently the exercises degenerate into a lifeless and irksome form; but close, confidential and affectionate examination, will tend to improve the mind and excite and strengthen holy affections, and make the meetings "lively and interesting." But to secure these blessed results, it will also be found very important not to let any class be too large, or held too long; from twelve to eighteen I think will be found a sufficient number to be associated under one leader, and as many as he can properly attend to in one hour, which is generally as long as a class meeting can be profitably continued; and further, it will be found necessary to guard these meeting (and all similar ones) against the intrusion of careless persons; much of their spirituality will be lost, if their end is not entirely defeated by allowing them to be held "promiscuously."

CLARKE.

Allegheny, Jan. 21, 1841.

For the Western Recorder.

Br. Springer: In No. 71st, there is a communication addressed to "Timothy," but the writer aims his remarks at "O." This "Disciple," like many others of the modern clergy, has mistaken himself for an Apostle, or for one of the first disciples of our Lord, to whom he gave the words of His Father, and the glory or power that the Father had bestowed on Him.—Saying, "and the glory which thou gavest me, I have given unto them." These disciples who were commissioned by the Lord and empowered to confirm the word wherever they went, had promises made to them that were not made to any body else. Such as "greater works than these (done by me) shall ye do."—"Whatsoever you shall ask in my name that will I do." "Verily, I say unto you, whatsoever ye shall bind on earth, shall be bound in heaven, and whatsoever ye shall loose on earth, shall be loosed in heaven. Again, I say unto you, that if two of you shall agree on earth, as touching any thing they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father, who is in heaven." That these promises were special and belonged to the Apostles only, is evident from the subsequent history of these men. Peter and John asked for the healing of a lame man who begged at the beautiful gate of the Temple, and he was healed according to the promise. Again, they agreed in asking that the Holy Spirit should be given to the Samaritans, and it fell upon them according to the promise. When these men, to whom the promises were made, asked—the thing asked for was instantly done, as the Lord had promised. But this cannot be said of modern disciples who mistake themselves for "embassadors of Christ."—They often agree to ask for things which are not done, and the reason is, that God has not promised to do those things for which they ask. They frequently ask God to pour out the Holy Spirit as on Pentecost, but He has not done so, since the last days spoken of by Joel the Prophet, because He did not promise to do so before or after those last days, in which He would show signs in the heavens above, and wonders in the earth beneath, &c., which signs and wonders were exhibited in the last days of the Jewish polity, from Pentecost when the prophecy began to be fulfilled as Peter declared, until the destruction of Jerusalem, when all those signs and wonders ceased.

Perhaps this "Disciple" can find some place or time, that the Apostles called seekers around them, or to a mourner's bench, to let them pray for them. If he find any such practice among the Apostles, I will thank him to turn down a leaf at the place where it is mentioned, and show it to me—among all the things bound by these Apostles on the earth, they never bound one man to bow down before another to be prayed for—this practice belonged not to the Apostles, but is a relic of Popery, and lies at the very foundation of Clerical Supremacy. It is one thing to pray to God who rules the destinies of nations for good kings and rulers, or that kings and rulers may disseminate wholesome laws, that the people may have peace, and it is quite another thing to pray to Him to remit the sins of such kings and rulers.

It is one thing to pray to God that all men may be blessed with a knowledge of the truth, that they may be saved,—and it is another thing to pray to God to remit the sins of all men, without the means appointed.

"O" does not claim to know any thing of God, of the church, of religion, or of the enjoyment thereof, other than what he has learned from the record that God has given of these things—he knows nothing above, or beyond, what is written, and not near all that is written.—Many of the clergy know more than he does of the things written, and some of them profess to know things not written.

As for this modern "Timothy," of whom "Disciple" speaks, I know not what kind of warrior he may be, whether he would run towards or from an enemy. But, as for "O," I know him to be rather cowardly; he will not venture far from the battle ground of his captain, nor will he use any other weapon than the one originally furnished the soldiers to fight with, namely, the sword made by the spirit, which is the word of God. When he gets the right hold on this sword, he fears no adversary, not even if he wield spiritual wickedness in high places, as the clergy sometimes do.

This is all "O" has to say to "Disciple," at present. When he is desirous to address "O," he will find him in the "Recorder," ready to ask and answer all questions concerning the kingdom of God, and the name or authority of Jesus Christ

May we all learn right, believe right, and do right, that we may feel right. O.

For the Western Recorder

NO. IV.

To Timothy.

So, as Br. Timothy is to judge what is necessary and what is not, what is answered and what is not, we will try again.

Question—What is the will of the Father?

We call your attention to St. John xv. 8: Herein is my Father glorified that ye have much fruit; so shall ye be my disciples.

Question—The means by which they become disciples. The means, the means.

We call the brother's attention again to 1 Peter i. 22: Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the spirit. What, give the spirit to an alien? Yes, according to the doctrine of Peter; but what is obeying the truth? St. John xvii. 17: Sanctify them through thy truth, thy word is truth.

Question—How is this done?

Look at Acts xv. 9: And put no difference between us (Jews) and them (Gentiles,) purifying their hearts by faith.—But we want the cleansing power; this we will find in Hebrews ix. 14: How much more shall the blood of Christ who thro' the eternal spirit offered himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God. The blood of Christ is the cleansing power, according to this declaration, conveyed by faith in Him, &c.

We will now proceed with our former position; we closed with pentecost. The next in order is the Acts of the Apostles, tenth chapter, embracing the house of Cornelius. And,

1. His general character was by occupation a soldier. 2. By his religion a proselyte or converted Gentle; of which there were two sorts. One sort were of the covenant, that is, they submitted to circumcision on the whole Mosaical pedagogy; others were called proselytes of the gate—of these was Cornelius.

2. His religious character. First; he was a devout man—that means pious, religious, sincere. Second; he feared the Lord. Third; he gave much alms to the people. Fourth; he prayed to God always.

3. The evidence that he was a good man. First; the Lord sent an angel saying unto him, thy prayers and thine alms are come up for a memorial before God. The next point, is, Peter is sent for; he came and while he was preaching of the prophecies relative to Christ and of His death, and that God raised Him up the third day,—verse 40. While Peter yet spake these words the Holy Ghost fell on all them which heard the word,—verse 44. Can Br. Timothy promise any more after baptism than this man received before; if he cannot, why then so strenuous in teaching that there is no remission without water baptism, when this man must have received it before.—This, glory be to God, is our model, we commence at this case, and preach of, ye believe that Christ hath died, and again, thou shalt be saved. The penitent believes it; then and in that case, the holy spirit comes from the High Court above, and sanctions the truth, and seals pardon upon the penitent's heart; there we have it to bear witness with our spirits that we are born from above. May the spirit of God come upon His people, and quicken them to duty. I thank the Lord for a religion that can be felt, and enjoyed in life, and death, and glory:—Amen.

A DISCIPLE.

Cincinnati, Jan. 12, 1841.

For the Western Recorder.

Having seen a notice in the Zanesville Aurora some time in December past, stating the efficiency of allum dissolved in water, for extracting frost from a member of the body effected therewith, and as my feet were painfully afflicted with a burning sensation from that cause, I immediately tried the experiment, and found relief, by dissolving about ¼ of an oz. in about 1½ gallons of warm water, and bathing fifteen or twenty minutes.

I ask you to record, also, a remedy for coughing at night. It is simply this; draw the bed clothes so close around the chin and lower parts of the cheeks that no air can pass up or down. Many persons are a trouble to themselves and others with a disagreeable cough, while in bed, which effects them not at other times. I have experienced the benefits of this remedy for more than twenty years; any person can easily try it. The paroxism of coughing may be stopped at any time by putting the throat and lower part of the cheeks in a situation to receive the warm air from under the bed clothes, at the same time leaving the organs of breathing so they can receive the fresh air.

A SUBSCRIBER.

For the Western Recorder.

Mr. Editor: In the Recorder of the 30th of December, we noticed a puzzle; here is the SOLUTION:

1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11 12 13 14 15 16 17 18 19 20
W i l l i a m H e n r y H a r r i s o n

Your 13 19 11 18 9, is the name of a useful animal,—which is a horse;

Your 18 8 6 10 20 19 10, is the name of a late Governor,—which is Shannon;

Your 8 6 11 16 2 18 17 10, is the name of a county in Ohio,—which is Harrison;

Your 1 14 11 15 9 20, is the name of a county in Pennsylvania,—which is Warren;

Your 7 6 5 10 9, is the name of one of the States in the Union,—which is Maine;

Your 17 11 19 10, is the name of an article much used in the United States,—which is Iron;

Your 1 17 4 3 2 14 7 18, is the name of a small town in Massachusetts,—which is Williams;

Your 13 9 20 15 12, is the name of a county in Georgia,—which is Henry;

Your 19 16 3 9 6 10 18, is a county in New York,—which is Orleans;

Your 15 19 18 9, is the name of a fragant flower,—which is a rose.

J. J. H. & J. K.

Evansville, Va., January 7, 1841.

ENTERPRISE.—The Springfield, Ill., Journal states that a company has been formed for building a steamer on the Rock River, and that a ship is now contracted for, to be built at Cairo, the ensuing summer, to run as a direct trader between that city and Liverpool.

SUMMERS IN BRITAIN FROM 1816 TO 1839.

1816—Extremely cold and wet thro'-out—the worst harvest ever known.

1817—Very cold and wet in July and August, but very fine in September, which favored the harvest.

1818—Intensely hot and dry—the thermometer twice at 89, and often about 80.

1819—A very hot summer—the month of August intensely hot—scarcely any thunder.

1820—A fine summer on the whole and very productive.

1821—Some very hot days occasionally, but for the most part cold and showery. Immense rains during harvest, which did great damage.

1822—A splendid year—hot and dry for the most part, but heavy rains at times with much thunder. A very abundant harvest.

1823—A very cold and showery summer. In July it rained every day except the 24th—very little thunder. Remarkable for abundance of wasps.

1824—Very fine and warm throughout, but never intensely hot. The thermometer stood highest, September 1, and was at 79.

1825—Very hot almost throughout. On July 19, the thermometer stood at 90 which is the highest observation in the course of all these summers.

1826—The hottest and driest summer ever known—it began early and continued late. The thermometer was twice at 88, and often at 84.

1827—Hot and dry, but not to such extremity as in the preceding summer—much thunder.

1828—Immense rains, which began July 9, and continued almost without cessation. Large floods July 16 and 30. Heavy thunder storms; bad harvest.

1829—A very cold stormy summer; in September the rains were exceedingly heavy.

1830—Very cold and wet especially in June. Much thunder.

1831—Warm, gloomy, showery, and electrical. A sickly summer, great number of insects especially house flies.

1832—Moderate for the most part, without much inclination either one way or the other.

1833—Very fine, the early part especially. An abundant harvest.

1834—A very fine hot summer, but heavy rains in the end of July. An early and productive harvest.

1835—Hot and dry, with some showery exceptions. Another abundant harvest.

1836—Very different in different parts of the kingdom. In the midland countries dry weather predominated. Remarkable for the almost entire destruction of the turnip crop by smother fly. Harvest not amiss.

1837—A fair average of hot weather, but preceded by a very severe spring. Harvest deficient.

1838—A cold wet summer, and a late unproductive harvest.

1839—Very heavy rains, almost without cessation. A large flood August 2nd, and smaller ones frequent. The harvest not unproductive, but much damaged.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.—The Sunday School Union of the Methodist E. Church, was organized, in New York, Monday evening, November 30th.

The New "Methodist Quarterly Review," edited by George Peck, D. D., has made its appearance. We have not read it. Its style is worthy the church.

"Benson's Life of Fletcher has been translated into German, and published in Germany, with a preface, by Dr. Tholuck."

"Zion's Herald," is now edited by Rev. Abel Stevens, A. M. He is an admirable preacher and writer.

The Missionaries in Texas, are said to be very successful. They report numerous conversions, baptisms, and additions to the church.

METHODIST PROTESTANT.—We have noticed reports from several of the smaller conferences:

	Itinerant Preach's.	Visited.	Members.	Increase.
Georgia Conference,	27	6	981	269
Illinois Conference,	33	22	1267	not stated
Virginia Conference,	16	4	1485	167
Indiana Conference,	21	24	1368	not stated
Onondaga Conf'ence,	15	—	687	—
Ohio Conference,	33	53	2911	—
Vermont Conference,	21	16	1107	360
Genesee Conference,	15	9	889	—
Boston Conference,	11	5	700	—
	192	139	11395	696

It will be seen that these reports are imperfect. There are eight or ten other Conferences in the connexion, two of which, alone, contain a much larger membership than all the above.—Christian World.

FROM FLORIDA—INDIAN MURDERS.—Intelligence contained in the Charleston Courier states that Lieut. Sherwood, and a Mrs. Montgomery, wife of Lieut. Montgomery, of the 7th Regiment of Infantry, were riding out for pleasure, under an escort of soldiers, and when only two miles from the military post at Micanopy, they were fired on by a party of Indians.—Lieut. Sherwood, Mrs. Montgomery, a sergeant major and two privates of the escort were killed. Mrs. M. was from Cincinnati, and had been married but a short time.

EXPENSE OF THE FLORIDA WAR.—The Secretary of War has applied to Congress for about two and a half millions more dollars to carry on the Florida war; one million three hundred thousand of which is to pay up arrearages.

THE LARGEST AND CHEAPEST

FAMILY NEWSPAPER

☞IN THE WORLD.☜

ONE DOLLAR PER ANNUM!

When subscribed for in Clubs of ten or more.

COMMENCEMENT OF A NEW YEAR.

ALEXANDER'S

WEEKLY MESSENGER

Will be materially improved in its typographical appearance, at the beginning of the next volume, in January, 1841. The publisher has made such arrangements as to justify him in announcing to the public, that this paper shall continue to take precedence of all its competitors, as it has heretofore done, and all the facilities which his extensive printing establishment can afford, with the aid of his numerous literary correspondents, at home and abroad, shall be united to make the WEEKLY MESSENGER still more satisfactory to its THIRTY-FIVE THOUSAND PATRONS, distributed as it is, thro' every section of the Union. Every exertion will be used to keep equal pace with the advancement which is constantly making in the character of the newspaper press, and the publisher pledges himself that his journal shall, in all departments, afford to its readers a full and comprehensive view of the important events which are continually transpiring in our own Country and the European World! The actual fact is, that the Weekly Messenger is just such a newspaper as persons living out of large cities, require, and will be pleased to receive—and the publisher, after an association of twenty years with the newspaper press, pledges himself that his journal shall not be excelled, either as respects its moral and literary reputation, or the early dissemination of news and other important and useful information. "Go a-head," is his principle, and he has never failed to carry it out to the fullest extent.

The WEEKLY MESSENGER is published every Wednesday, on a beautiful white sheet, of the largest class. Single copies are forwarded to subscribers, every week during the year, for Two Dollars, in advance—or ten persons clubbing together, can have it for the same period, by forwarding the publisher a Ten Dollar Note, free of postage, which is less than any paper of the same size can be furnished by any other office in the United States.

A variety of beautiful engravings will be given in regular succession, which will be accompanied by appropriate sketches of such a description as to render them particularly deserving the attention of the public.

Over Thirty Thousand.

With the immense circulation that has been received for the Weekly Messenger, during the 4 years past, since its commencement, we are bold to say, that no paper has ever been distributed to the same number of patrons with fewer causes of complaint—in fact, we have the most careful and trustworthy Clerks now in our employ, and no inducements are withheld to make them attentive and systematic in the discharge of their various duties; therefore, persons subscribing for the Paper at a distance, may rely on receiving it regularly and punctually by the due course of the mail.

All the contemporary Weekly Press in the Atlantic cities head their subscription papers with the imposing caption of "Largest and Cheapest!" Now, we propose that no person who can not satisfy himself after one year's trial that the Weekly Messenger is emphatically what we have said it is, and therefore is best entitled to patronage, that we will confer on every one making such discovery, a Free Subscription for the space of another year.

At the expiration of the term subscribed and paid for, by Clubs the paper is invariably discontinued, unless the Subscriptions are renewed. All letters must be post paid, or they will not be taken out of the Post Office. Address

CHARLES ALEXANDER,
Athenian Buildings, Franklin Place, Phil.

PREMIUMS

FOR FIFTEEN SUBSCRIBERS.

Any Agent or Postmaster who shall forward to our address Fifteen Dollars, will be entitled to Fifteen Copies of the Messenger for one Year, and either of the following works:

Alexander's Travels, in two volumes.
The Art of Dining, a popular book.
Andrew, the Savoyard, a novel in two volumes.
Charcoal Sketches, by Neal.
Genius and Wisdom of Shakspeare.
Henrietta Temple, a novel in two volumes.
Health and Beauty, a volume much asked for.
Indecision, a favorite novel.
Miss Leslie's Cookery, for married folks.
The Picture of Philadelphia.
Whispers to a Newly Married Pair.
The Prayer Book, 18mo. Neatly bound.
Every Body's Album, with engravings.

FOR THIRTY SUBSCRIBERS.

Any agent or post master who shall forward thirty dollars to our address, will be supplied with thirty copies of the Messenger for one year—and also to be entitled, as a premium, for the same, to one copy of either of the following valuable works:

Gooch on Females and Children.
American Flower Garden Directory.
Gregory's Mathematics.
Pambour on Locomotive Engines and Railways.
Scott's Life of Napoleon.
Pilgrimage to Jerusalem and Mount Sinai, by Baron Geramb, two volumes.
1000 Night's Entertainment, five volumes.

FOR FIFTY SUBSCRIBERS.

A copy of either of the following works will be furnished to any agent procuring a club of fifty subscribers—or, if it should be preferred, two of the first named premiums will be given instead.

Lockhart's Life of Walter Scott.
Treatise on the Management and Disease of Cattle.
Holy Bible, quarto, with beautiful engravings.

TERMS OF THE

Weekly Messenger,

PER ANNUM—Payable in advance:

One Subscription, - - - - - - - -	$2 00
" " six months, - - - - -	1 00
Four Subscriptions (a 1,25) - - - - - -	5 00
Ten Subscriptions (a $1) - - - - - -	10 00

All who desire to secure the paper from the commencement of the volume, will please forward their names immediately.

☞Postmasters and other gentlemen, who interest themselves to extend our circulation, may rest assured that the most strict and early attention will be given to their orders.

☞To secure agents and others from imposition, we guarantee to forward our paper to all who send us payment in advance, directed to the Philadelphia Post Office, which order, if received there, with the remittance, will be our acknowledgment of the same, and consequently the paper will be regularly sent for the time stipulated.

CHARLES ALEXANDER.

December 30, 1840. 6w71

An Apprentice Wanted.

THE subscriber wishes to take a boy of 12 or 15 years of age, to learn the TAILORING BUSINESS. One from the country will be preferred. Applicants must come well recommended.

W. BERKSHIRE.
Main street, Putnam, Ohio.

December 16, 1840. 69

DRUGS, Medicines, Paints, Dyestuffs, Oils and Spirits Turpentine. Cheap for cash or good horses, by A. LIPPITT.

Main st., No. 72, Zanesville, Nov. 4. 63tf

Dr. Jayne's Family Medicines.

THESE medicines are recommended and extensively used by the most intelligent persons in the United States, by numerous professors and Presidents of Colleges, Physicians, the Army and Navy, and of Hospitals and Alms houses, and by more than three hundred Clergymen of various denominations.

They are expressly prepared for family use, have acquired an unprecedented popularity throughout the United States; and as they are so admirably calculated to preserve HEALTH and cure DISEASE, no family should ever be without them. The proprietor of these valuable preparations received his education at one of the best Medical Colleges in the United States, and has had fifteen years' experience in an extensive and diversified practice, by which he had ample opportunities of acquiring a practical knowledge of diseases, and of the remedies best calculated to remove them.

These preparations consist of ☞JAYNE'S EXPECTORANT, a valuable remedy for coughs, colds, consumption, asthma, spitting of blood, croup, whooping coughs, bronchitis, pleurisy, and inflammation of the lungs, throat, difficulty of breathing, and all diseases of the pulmonary organs. Price $1.

☞JAYNE'S TONIC VERMIFUGE. A pleasant, safe, and certain preparation for the removal of worms, dyspepsia, sour stomach, fever and ague, want of appetite, and all diseases of debility, especially of the stomach and bowels and organs of digestion. Price 50 cents.

☞JAYNE'S CARMINATIVE BALSAM, a certain cure for bowel and summer complaints, diarrhœa, dysentery, cholic, cramps, sick headache, sour stomach, cholera morbus, and all derangements of the stomach and bowels, nervous affections, &c. Price 50 cents.

☞JAYNE'S SANATIVE PILLS, for female diseases, liver complaints, costiveness, fevers, inflammations, obstructions, diseases of the skin, &c., and in all cases where an appointed alternative or purgative medicine is required. Price 25 cents.

☞Also, JAYNE'S HAIR TONIC, for the preservation, growth and beauty of the hair, a preparation which will positively bring new hair on bald heads, and prevent its falling off or turning grey.

☞For sale at the store of

POTTS & GRAHAM.

Putnam, Ohio, Jan. 20, 1841. 74tf

SCHOOL BOOKS.

Pierpoint's Series of Reading Books.

1. The American First Class Book.
2. The National Reader.
3. Introduction to the National Reader.
4. The Young Reader.

THESE four works, compiled by the Rev. John Pierpont, compose a series which is undoubtedly more suitable for the purposes for which they were designed, than any previous publications.

The series is used in the Boston Schools, and generally in the schools of New England, and other parts of the United States, and have been republished in England.

The estimation in which these books are held may be judged of, in some degree, by such notices as the following:

"We deem this selection decidedly superior in all the requisites called for in such a work, to any one we know. That reader must be fastidious, and deficient in the extreme, who will not find in these extracts wherewith to regale himself. We can easily imagine how this fine writing will cause the bosoms of talented children to swell and their eyes to glisten. We wish to see them relieved from the nackneyed and worn-out matter of former selections; and we think we have said little in saying, that it is a selection of exercises of a higher order, and more generally adapted to its design, than any other in the language."—Flint's Western Review.

"We are satisfied that no gentleman of good taste can look over this book without great delight as well as instruction. The pieces are rich in matter, so neat, and often so eloquent in expression, that they may be read again and again without weariness, and even with renewed pleasure. It may not be amiss to observe that this book and the preceding have been highly thought of, as to be republished in England, a country from which, till within a few years, we have been accustomed to borrow our books of this description."—Charleston (S. C.) Republican.

☞For sale by the quantity or single copy

A. LIPPITT,
Main-st.

☞Teachers can be supplied with copies for examination on application as above.

Zanesville, O., Jan. 20, 1841. 74tf

New and Cheap Goods.

POTTS & GRAHAM, are now enabled by a fresh arrival of FALL and WINTER GOODS, to offer to the public a very general assortment of all articles in their line. The stock is almost ENTIRELY NEW, and embraces a complete supply of DRY GOODS, GROCERIES, QUEENSWARE, HARDWARE, &c. All of which they will sell upon such terms, and conduct their business throughout upon such principles, as cannot fail to afford permanent satisfaction to all who may favor them with their custom.

☞Most kinds of country produce, including any quantity of new Butter, will be taken in exchange for goods.

Putnam, Ohio, Nov. 4. 63tf

Winslow's Compound

BALSAM OF HOARHOUND.

UNRIVALLED and unequalled in curing Colds, Coughs, Asthma, Influenza, Whooping Cough, and all diseases of the Breast and Lungs, leading to Consumption, composed of the concentrated virtues of the herbs Hoarhound, Boneset, and several other vegetable substances, warranted pure from any mineral whatever.

Sold by A. LIPPITT and S. GATES.

Zanesville, Nov. 4. 64tf

Glass Manufactory.

THE subscriber having dissolved his connexion with the former company, has taken the GLASS WORKS below town under his own management.

WINDOW GLASS, double and single, assorted, seizes, and of superior quality will be kept constantly on hand for sale on reasonable terms.—The experience of the proprietor, in the manufacture of the article, will insure all made to be of the best quality. Call and see.

S. B. JOHNSON.

Zanesville, Ohio, May 6, 1840. 37

William Green,

CLOCK AND WATCH REPAIRER, SILVERSMITH AND JEWELLER,

CAN be found at his shop on Main street, Putnam, a few doors north of J. C. Guthrie's store, where he will do his best to accommodate customers. He keeps on hand an assortment of spectacles, watch trimmings, pencils, &c.

As far as we have tried Mr. GREEN as a watch repairer he has given us good satisfaction.—EDS.

April 22, 1840. 35tf.

Notice.

BOOKS, Stationery, and Printer's Ink, for sale by A. LIPPITT.

Zanesville, Nov. 4. 63tf.

THE WESTERN RECORDER.

C. SPRINGER, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER. | Vol. 2.--No. 25. | ZANESVILLE, OHIO, WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 10, 1841. | Whole No. 77. | JOHN W. WHITE, PRINTER.

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM IN ADVANCE. | $2.50, IN THREE MONTHS; $3, END OF YEAR

COMMUNICATIONS.

For the Western Recorder.

"THEOLOGICAL COLLEGE."

This may or may not be a useful in-tution. If the object is, to qualify se who are "called of God, as was ron," to minister in holy things—and convert men to real christianity—then ould say with Dr. Hawies, that "the in story of the illiterate man, telling the sufferings of Christ, and the glo-s that followed, has done more in con-ting men to real Christianity, than all great polemics put together." A lebrated Statesman on being visited by lergyman, near the close of life—re-rked—"I have light enough, I want t." The Jewish Church had light—a bernacle,—Priests, learned doctors, &c.,—but they needed that kind of t, peculiar to the baptism of the Holy ost—and the power of simple truth, awaken the conscience, and move the ections. The English Church had nt—a learned clergy—forms of wor-p, &c., but they lacked that heat pecu-to experimental religion—the reli-n of the bible—the religion of God.—is Wesley, and his lay preachers—extraordinary messengers, urged h simplicity and zeal. Perhaps in hing, is any branch of the Christian rch in more imminent danger, than hat of departure from primitive sim-ity—relying too much on human pru-ce—human means—and of adopting ns to create distinctions in the minis-—and gratifying that anti-christian pensity of "heaping up teachers, hav-itching ears." When men are to be ght in the science of religion—in the of salvation, "not in the words which 's wisdom teacheth, but which the y Ghost teacheth," that "their faith ld not stand in the wisdom of men, in the power of God," & when the "ex-ency of the power may be of God and of us," a Theological College would n to be an useless appendage, if not a arture from the precepts and example Christ and his holy apostles. The iour said to his ministers, "all ye are hren"—upon an equality—and the ldly-wise esteemed Peter and John "il-rate and ignorant men—not taught t college of any description—thrust from the common avocations of life, commanded, "as ye go, preach"—ach and learn, and learn and preach—each the gospel to every creature"—souls are mine"—"go into the hedg-nd highways"—"the streets and the s"—"to the poor the gospel is ached"—the souls scattered in the atry—in the mountains and vales—g huts and in the wilderness, are aluable and as much the purchase of Redeemer's blood as the rich and t—as the tasty and fashionable he city. But the polished graduate of ollege, or the refined student of a ological College, would not be likely lish the coarse fare and rough scenes circuit, they would probably be like e popular preachers, and men high ffice, who profess great zeal for s, but seem to care only for those s to be found in cities, towns, and ages, and fine houses—where they be surrounded by gay equipage—a ionable crowd—caressed by the rich, solaced with the delicacies and luxu-of life. If then, to foster pride, to te distinctions in the ministry—es-ish a system of favouritism—to mul-y fashionable and formal professors—ender the church popular with the ld—and furnish a partial supply of larly qualified clergy, be the object, n with a Theological College—while titudes can slumber in their sins, un-the dull sound of fine spun theories—l rounded periods and well arrnaged ological discourses—and thousands ve for want of the bread of life.

od hath chosen the weak things of world to confound the mighty, and foolish things to confound the wise. good that is done upon earth, he h it himself. In His hand, at the d of the ram's horn, the walls of cho fell—and the simple sling and a smooth stones, by the youthful Da-achieved for Israel a signal victory. fishermen of Gallilee,—esteemed terate and ignorant men," by the ldly wise, had to tell the simple story he cross, to a world shrouded in su-stition and idolatry—to contend with learning of the Greeks—the wisdom prejudices of the Jews—the corrup-and hypocrisy of a corrupt hierar-—but they were not cased in the ned lore, or polished in a Theological lege. They were to tarry at Jerusa-—not long, however,—for what?—ake a regular course in a Theological ege? No truly, but "until you receive er from on high,"—the same power "the same spirit" (although it may n different degrees) every man re-es, who is truly called of God, or mo-by the Holy Ghost to preach the gos-

The spiritual prosperity of a church r her growth in useful members and nt piety,—which is the only pros-ity of much worth—depends on the er of simple evangelical truth,—ght or preached in demonstration of spirit and with power—and when the unction of the Holy One rests upon the preacher whether in the pulpit or elsewhere, signs and wonders will follow—though it may be but the plain story of the "illiterate man." To decry learning—to neglect education, study, and improvement, is one extreme—and to place too much reliance on human attainments, means and plans, is another. I have been an observer of the effects produced, by the ministrations of different classes of preachers for near half a century—and I have found, that the men "full of the Holy Ghost"—and "mighty in the scriptures"—have been most successful in spreading the flame of pure religion, and turning many to righteousness.—Let young men called of God to preach the gospel instead of becoming recluse in a Theological College—go in quest of perishing souls, and "as they go preach"—let them read the bible on their knees, and study it with humble prayer—let them be deeply imbued with the spirit of their master, and their mission, and success will surely crown their labors—they will be "mighty through God." While such as trust in being clad in something like Saul's armour—or blow "the silver trumpet"—may be foiled—or only realize the fable of the fly on the chariot wheel. It is God that worketh in us and by us.

G.

For the Western Recorder.

ON A PLURALITY OF CHRISTIAN SECTS.—NO. I.

Isaiah xliv. 5. One shall say, I am the Lords; and another shall call himself by the name of Jacob; and another shall subscribe with his hand unto the Lord, and surname himself by the name of Israel.

"Nothing," said the amiable Fletcher, "is more common than for man, under the plausible pretext of avoiding one extreme, to run into another." And even so it is now. While on the one hand, we behold a deplorable disposition to anarchy and insubordination; on the other, an inclination equally objectionable to bring every species of religious sentiment into one general organization, (if organization it would be.) Hence the common outcry against the sects, and the fascinating but indefinite and indefinable proclamation of union! union! Now, while we deeply deplore the bitterness of spirit, and unhallowed prejudices, and in some instances, woful and wicked misrepresentation, and vile contumely, among rigid, narrow minded, sectarian bigots; yet the opposite course, flying off in a tangent, omitting an elusive glare, and eliciting a pestiferous vapor from the rich soil of the human heart, and spreading moral death wherever they go is, we think, to say the best, to manifest as little of the meekness and gentleness of Christ, and equally as unlovely and dangerous a course as the other.

The design of these remarks, then, is not to endorse, en masse, the distractions in christendom, or to encourage, in the least, any unkind and uncharitable views and feelings among brethren of the different denominational folds of our great and good Shepherd; but to remind brethren of the error and dangerous position they occupy, who petulently refuse to unite with any branch of the christian church themselves, and indulge a rancorous invective against those who do.

The position we occupy is, that all things considered, a plurality of christian denominations is both reasonable and proper. There are two methods of defence:—one is to show that the opposite is false; the other is to prove the position assumed to be true. In the present case, it is proposed to offer a little of both.

First. Then, we will attempt an answer to all the leading objections:

1. The ostensible objections. And 1. It is alleged, that great confusion is produced by the different sects, in the mind of the inquirer. Answer, [1.] Men differ in sentiment upon every other subject, without confusion; and why then should grievous perplexity be viewed an inevitable attendant on diversity in our religious opinions? In every lane of life, from the humblest plebian, to the executive officer of the nation, may be found great diversity of sentiment, but no such grievous complaints of confusion are heard on that account. Why, then, should it be regarded as an intolerable outrage of divine things, to differ in sentiment upon religious subjects? In every avocation, too, differences appear; in agriculture and horticulture, men differ, yet the earth is cultivated, and grain and fruit produced without much confusion. In all the mechanical arts, also, men of various views upon the same trade and calling, are found, yet without distraction. So also in schools, academies, &c., institutions for the improvement and cultivation of the mind, men differ in regard to the best means and measures to attain the desired object, but without the alarming outcry of confusion.—And why not men differ in sentiment respecting the method of moral and religious improvement—the cultivation of the heart? What need of confusion?

[2.] But we apprehend not half the confusion is produced, which is supposed; generally, we find not more than four or five different denominations in a village, not so many in a country neighborhood, and but few more in the larger towns and cities, and in the latter, few persons are acquainted with all which do exist.—Are our objectors so easily confused, that they cannot bear a second thought upon the subject of salvation? If so, are they not afflicted with that distressing complaint—sectarian monomania? Are they not peculiarly the "men of one idea?" If so, verily they are to be pitied. But shall men of sound mind, who honestly agree to differ on "points which God has left at large," throw away all their distinctive peculiarities, and make a general sacrifice of sentiment to prevent confusion in the minds of a few moral maniacs? We trow not. [3.] And much more confusion must be produced, should the christian world adhere to the notion of our objectors. For, the mere change of their relation to the different sects, would not, could not, change their sentiments, and bring every man to think alike. And if brethren of every name were brought into one association, confusion indeed, would inevitably ensue. For, of course, upon the proposed plan of union, the ministers as well as the members must come together, and occupy the same pulpits, and preach to the same people. What contradiction, and distraction, must then follow! Who among our objectors, would be found to possess stomachs strong enough to digest such a heterogeneous mass of relegious aliment? Surely spiritual dyspepsy would be the consequence, if not death! If the nature of the subject would admit of it, we might indulge imagination, and fancifully gaze with amazement upon the probable ludicrous scenes produced by such a spiritual irritation of the nerves! But we forbear. Suffice it to say, the worst of consequences, evidently would be inevitable!

[4.] But some have thought that an unanswerable argument may be drawn from the following figure: Suppose a traveller on his way to the metropolis of Ohio, should come to a point where more than three hundred roads met, and all pointed differently to "Columbus;" after some time spent in confused cogitation, the conclusion, it is presumed, would be, either that no such place as Columbus exists, or that all the different ways pointed to, are false! Reply, [1.] Granting the premises to be correct, if we mistake not, the conclusions are not legitimate. In regard to the (1) conclusion, we remark that the mind must be confused indeed, to conclude that, because there were so many ways to Columbus; therefore, no such place exists! Surely our objectors, themselves, with a little sober reflection, will see that such a conclusion would be incorrect. Would not the conclusion rather be, that Columbus must be a most noted and marvellous place, or there would not be half so much attention paid to it? And is not that the truth, as it respects the christians' city of habitation?—is not heaven a most marvellous and noted place, and so it excites more or less attention through all the land below?

The (2) conclusion, viz: that all those roads are wrong, would, to us, most obviously appear to be, not right. The conclusion, supposed, would be drawn from the mere number of roads, all purporting to be right, and not from the knowledge or admission that any given number of them were false. Besides, if it could be ascertained that half of them, nay, all but one, were false, it would not follow that the other was also false. So far from it, it would afford strong presumptive evidence that the other one was right. For, surely, with the proclamation of the fact, that such a place exists, some way to it would be pointed out; besides, it is a truth, generally acknowledged, that there would be no such thing as falsehood if there were no truth. [2.] But we are disposed to attack the premises, as well as rebel against the conclusions, in this imaginary irrefragable argument.—And if it had not been so viewed and used, by high and popular ministerial authority, we should have taken less notice of it. In reviewing this argumentative similitude, we observe (1) the facts of the case are miserably distorted, or, in other words, a very incorrect statement of the case, in the premises. It should be observed that every variety of sentiment in the christian world, is put into the form of a road, and then, all those roads huddled together in some imaginary point, and every one furnished with a guide board, pointing their respective directions to Columbus! Now, every man must see, with a single glance, the fallacy of the objection. Did any man on earth ever meet with such a case,—every road, lane and path, leading to a town or city, collected from every point of the compass, and grouped together in some kind of multitudinous corners! (2) But this self-same figure, properly presented, would prove, probably, more than our objectors would desire, to-wit: that all those professional paths or roads are right! For example. Take the city of London instead of Columbus, and restrict the distance, to say twenty miles from the city, and in the circle of that extent, probably more than three hundred finger boards could be found, all pointing to London! And yet, all true! How easy a matter it is to prove any point by forced similies!

Ec. INNOMINATUS.

Eight Presidents of the United States have been farmers

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

MT. VERNON, O., JAN. 27, 1841.

Br. Springer: In the flourishing town of Mt. Vernon, the county seat of Knox, we, as Protestant Methodists, have had an organized existence I think about eight or nine years, and a commodious house of worship. Some of the members composing this society, both male and female, are as generous spirits as ever I became acquainted with,—their motto is, "we will serve God whether we have light or darkness;" we will sustain the interests of the M. P. Church in adversity as well as prosperity.

During our first visit to this society we devoted considerable time visiting those who were to be found. We were informed that they had had but little preaching for some months, although our predecessor was faithful. We will here leave the reader to judge of our prospects under these circumstances. But notwithstanding the discouraging circumstances under which we labored, we determined to make an effort through the instrumentality of a protracted meeting, and as Providence would have it, about one week previous to its commencement, our Conference Missionary, Br. Reeves, on his way to the Sandusky circuit, gave us a call, and through solicitation consented to remain with us a few weeks. Consequently we commenced the meeting one week sooner than we otherwise would have done; it continued from day to day for four weeks.

During the first two weeks there was nothing of a special character occurred; only a tremendous struggle between the powers of darkness and the spirit of God—probably as great a struggle as ever was witnessed; the contention was so visible that the children of God were made to tremble and quake, and we were frequently, to all appearances, upon the eve of gaining the victory, but were as often repulsed and driven back. Notwithstanding these repulses the Lord would invigorate our exhausted spirits, and fill the house with His glory, but apparently to no purpose,—sinners were not converted! But firmness of purpose characterized every effort,—our cry was we will "prove thee and see if thou wilt not pour us out a blessing." We not only exercised faith, but we used means, and truly "man's extremity is God's opportunity." After we had fasted and prayed one day and part of two nights, and lay (so to speak) with our faces in the dust, the heavens gave way,—the fountains of the great deep were broken up, and God did indeed and in truth "gird His sword upon His thigh," and in His glory and majesty He reigned in the midst of His enemies. Sinners were pricked to the heart—mourners comforted—and believers made to rejoice,—truly the Lord, considering the circumstances, has done great things for us, whereof we are glad. As the result of this meeting sixty determined to be on the Lord's side,—about thirty were happily converted to God, and thirty-one were added to the M. P. Church.

The indefatigable labors of Br. and Sister Reeves were highly beneficial and no less appreciated.

Yours, in the gospel of Christ,
J. B. ROBERTS.

Br. Springer: In addition I would say that the christian community in this region, seem to be in the spirit of protracted meetings. A short time previous to our meeting in this place, above alluded to, the Presbyterians of the New School held a protracted meeting which continued four weeks. Much good was done, and at this time there are three protracted meetings in progress, in this town, viz:—the Episcopal Methodists, the Lutherans and the Old School Presbyterians, and a short distance from here the Congregationalists are holding one. May all be successful in winning souls to Christ. I would farthermore observe that our second quarterly meeting will be held in Mt. Vernon, commencing on the morning of the 20th of February. We would like to see the editor of the Recorder here; and we would regard it as a favor if Br. I. Thrap would attend, and should Br. W. Reeves return about that time from Sandusky circuit, he will be pleased to give us a passing visit. Yours, &c.

CHARLES CADDY, Sup't.
Mt. Vernon Ct.

LOWER SANDUSKY, JAN. 19, 1841.

Since my last, we have held two several days' meetings. The first in Tiffin. There our brethren, to their praise be it spoken, have a very commodious house of worship. Our congregations were very numerous and attentive; and considerable interest manifested in the meeting. The Lord bless that kind and deserving people!

We have just closed a very interesting meeting in Lower Sandusky. With great regret, be it said, that in this place of promise, our worthy friends have no meeting house. It is true, we occupy a large school house, which is seated and may be easily fixed to entertain a much larger audience than one would suppose; but what is that for a town of that size—a county seat? But the greatest difficulty is, it cannot be occupied for a protracted meeting, of much length. With extreme reluctance, we closed a memorable meeting in it, yesterday evening. It was a thronged place, indeed, but heavenly.—There was no room to separate the anxious, but some rose up to testify their desire to receive the benefit of special prayer. I think, all present, saw and felt the necessity of a house of worship. In the morning, we had an unusually good season in the love feast. At the close, ten persons united with the society. To-morrow, we leave for another part of the circuit. It is very desirable indeed, that this charge had a superintendent. Br. Ragan, try your best to supply this needy and deserving people.

In haste, Yours, W. REEVES.

OBITUARY.

For the Western Recorder.

Departed this life on the 31st December, 1840, in the 25th year of her age, MRS. MARGARET ROBERTSON, a member of the M. E. Church, consort of David Robertson. She died of a pulmonary disorder with which she was partly confined for several months. She bore her afflictions with christian patience and resignation. Shortly before her death, in a conversation with her neighbors, she expressed a strong confidence in her God, and firm belief that she had a house in heaven, and in a short time after departed in peace without a struggle. She has left an affectionate husband and three children to mourn their loss. *

Franklin Square, Columbiana, Ohio.

AN EXCELLENT SCHOOL MASTER.—The Boston correspondent of the New York Journal of Commerce tells the following capital story of a New York school master, whose perseverance and fertility of resources, must have fitted him for operations on an extended scale!

I heard one of your committees interfering with a vengeance, and turning out a school master for committing enormities by way of illustrating his lessons.—It appears that he had enlisted the feelings of his pupils in natural philosophy, and tried to get some apparatus, but was told to do the regular teaching and leave the nonsense. But nothing daunted, he got some apparatus himself, and told the boys if they would bring a mouse or two the next day he would show them the effect of nitrogen gas upon them. The next day, came in great wrath, the committee, to reprove him, because, forsooth the boys in their eagerness to learn, had been up all night trying to catch mice for their master, and disturbing their houses. He promised to do better, but when he came to astronomy, he committed a more attrocious crime,—for being deficient of an orrery, he took the biggest boy in the school, and placing him in the middle for the sun, told him how to turn round and round slowly upon his axis, as the sun did; then he placed a little fellow for Mercury, next to him, then a girl for Venus; then a representation of the Earth; then a fiery little fellow for Mars, and so on, till he got all the planetary system arranged, and explained to each one how fast he was to go, and how many times to turn on his heels as he went round in his orbit.

Then giving the signal, the sun commenced revolving and away went the whole team of planets around him, each boy keeping his proper distance from the centre, trotting with the proper velocity in his orbit, and whirling around in due proportion as he performed his revolution. It must have been a rare sight, and a lesson which the boys long retained; for do you think, my dear sir, that John, who represented Mercury, would ever forget that he was nearest the sun, and that he had an easy time walking round the stationary lubber in the center, while Will, who represented Herschell, must have been out of breath scampering round his orbit.

But if the boys did not forget the lesson, neither did the master; they danced, but he paid the piper; for horrified, the committee dismissed him at once—he had been teaching, for aught they knew, the dance of the Turkish dervishes.

HOW TO CURE A HUSBAND.—A woman whose husband used frequently to beat her went to a cunning man to inquire how she might cure him of his barbarity. The sagacious sooth-sayer heard her complaint; and after pronouncing some hard words, and using various gesticulations, while he filled a phial with colored liquid, desired her, whenever her husband was in a passion, to take a mouthful of the liquor, and keep it in her mouth for five minutes. The woman, quite overjoyed at so simple a remedy, strictly followed the counsel which was given her and by her silence escaped the usual chastisement. The contents of the bottle being at last expended, she returned to the cunning man and anxiously begged to have another, possessed of the same virtue.—"Fool," said the man, "there was nothing in the bottle but brown sugar and water. When your husband is in passion, hold your tongue, and, my life for it, he will not lay a finger upon you."

England receives 311,585,800 pounds of cotton annually from this country.

WESTERN RECORDER.

ZANESVILLE:

WEDNESDAY, ... FEBRUARY 10, 1841.

By the politeness of Mr. HENDERSON, of the Senate, we have been favored with the second report of the Ohio Lunatic Asylum. This states the whole number of patients, admitted into the Institution, to be 258; of whom 140 were males, and 118 females. The whole number discharged is 120—80 of whom are recovered.—There are a variety of tables giving information relating to the Asylum, that our limits prohibit us from giving.

We shall take the liberty of giving an extract from the Report of the Superintendent, Dr. AWL, which, we think, will be interesting, as well as instructive, to our readers:

"The moral treatment, we have thought, can be illustrated in connection with a brief description of leading and important cases. We therefore only remark, in general terms, that our government is kind and respectful, and as far as possible, parental; with a becoming firmness at all times in respect to the order and discipline which reason and experience have approved. As a primary step, we are anxious to secure the confidence and good will of our patients, and endeavor to retain it, by kind hospitality and attention to their wants, without any extraordinary officiousness or unbecoming authority; always desirous that they shall have every allowable privilege, and participate in the enjoyment of every pleasure, which their capacity and condition may admit. Males and females, in seperate parties, frequently ramble over the country, in all directions, accompanied only by a single attendant. The matron (Mrs. C. W. Atcherson) regularly invites all the ladies, who behave well, to her social parties, on Thursday afternoon: and a carriage is always ready, in pleasant weather, if they feel anxious to take a ride. The gentlemen are provided with a variety of amusing games, and books and stationary are freely distributed to all. We also have our sports upon the green, and our music and dancing parties in the halls. We celebrate the National Independence on the fourth of July, and hold the annual election for the officers of state in October. But, above all, and before every thing else in the world, for the substantial welfare and improvement of both mind and body, is regular and profitable labor. "Man was made to be active: even in paradise he was employed in the healthy and pleasant exercise of cultivation a garden. Happiness, consisting in folded arms and pensive contemplation, beneath rural shades and by the sides of purling brooks, never had any existence, except in the brains of mad poets and love-sick girls and boys."* It is impossible for us to go into particulars; but we may observe, that many of our male patients find useful employment, at present, in clearing up the premises, and grading and leveling the grounds: in attending to the vegetable gardens; assisting in the care and management of the stock upon the farm, and preparing all the fuel that is used.—The females find constant employment within doors, and it will be sufficient to say of them, that the making and mending of all the wearing apparel for the indigent, and all the washing and ironing for the entire household, is chiefly performed by their assistance.

According to an accurate estimate of the male and female work performed by our patients in the last six months, made by the Assistant Physician, (Samuel M. Smith, M. D.) we find them entitled to the credit of 3690 days labor; so that, with all our amusements, we belong to the laboring classes, and may be considered an industrious, though crazy community.—We never, indeed, fail to improve the condition of any one who will agree to work, and, with many, it is the best medicine this world can afford.

We proceed to the description of a few leading cases, with some remarks:

No. 65. A remarkable case, on account of the extraordinary character of the prevailing ideas, which, for the most part, consisted of imperfect reminiscences of past events, combined with the most absurd and superstitious delusions that a morbid fancy could possibly suggest. She was the widow of an enterprizing young farmer, who removed west, with the laudable design of improving his condition and making a comfortable provision for a rising family. A native of Scotland, and a lady of unusual intelligence for her opportunities, she was quite prepossessing in her manners, and pleasant and sociable in her disposition; very strong in all her attachments, and a strict and worthy member of the church.

The attack occurred shortly after the birth of a child, and seemed to be immediately occasioned by excessive grief for the loss of her husband, together with the hardships and privations incident upon their location in a new and unhealthy settlement. Her derangement was melancholy and despair, with scarcely any of the active symptoms of violent and open mania. But it is almost impossible to sketch even a general outline of the various hallucinations for which the case is chiefly remarkable. The most prominent appeared to be, that she was a hypocrite and devil; that her excellent husband was a notoriously bad character, to whom she been illegally united; that she was, in fact, the wife of another and very different person; that her own dear mother was base, and neither she, nor her brother and sisters, were the legitimate offsprings of their reputed father; that she was a serpent, and washed herself in the blood of her husband's heart and mother's liver; that her proper place was hell, and she had sealed her condemnation by refusing to read the license for her marriage, which had been offered and pressed upon her attention by her husband, who made use of every argument to convince her of the impending doom, assuring her that his eyes had been opened by looking upon the paper, and she would find that God himself was opposed to their marriage which would inevitably bring a curse instead of a blessing, both to themselves and friends; and representing to her, above all, that their situation would be similar to Adam under the covenant of works; and numerous equally shocking and ridiculous compounds, that it were improper and indelicate to mention. The great leading idea seeming to be, that she had gone astray in the light and duty, and was prematurely in the reception of the wages of sin.

*Dr. Rush.

It may be here observed, that as a general rule, the decline and removal of delusive impressions will depend upon the cessation of morbid excitement and irritation, and the perfect restoration of all the functions of the system to health. In curable cases, we commonly prefer to avoid the delusive subjects entirely, until there is a favorable change in the general health unless they are pressed upon our attention, when we meet them with such discretion and judgment as circumstances may seem to require.

With all these painful and tormenting associations and delusions, this estimable woman was a kind, affectionate, and submissive patient, and uncommonly industrious, being anxious to recover her health and serenity of mind, and at the same time render herself useful to the unfortunate persons around her. She was a long time under the operation of medicines calculated to control irritation and restore & invigorate the nervous system; and we ultimately had the pleasure of restoring her in health to her little family of helpless children, grateful and happy for the benefits received whilst an inmate of the institution. Since her discharge, she concludes a letter in the following words: "My mind is now so well recovered, that I feel willing to press on in the way of duty, and leave the event to God. And accept my humble thanks for your kindness, and believe me your affectionate friend," &c.

No. 71. The exciting cause was quite of an opposite character in this instance, which was distinguished for its activity and violence. The patient was a young widow, with a lively sparkling eye and interesting countenance, who had always enjoyed good health and spirits, and was industrious, almost to a fault. After the loss of her husband, and a series of domestic troubles, she suddenly became "excited and almost frantic," with the unexpected intelligence of the recovery of an only daughter.—She was brought to the Asylum two months after this avent, in a complete state of mental derangement; raving, reckless, headstrong and desperate—a perfect fury: vulgar, profane and abusive: with a determination to do as she pleased, and "go her own road if it led to Jamaica," stating at the same time in a spirit of defiance, "that she was not to be conquered, as a number had already found to their everlasting sorrow."

Usually, general intellectual and violent mania of this description is more easily managed and overcome than the lesser shades of partial derangement.—Under present circumstances, we had for a time to submit to considerable abuse and violence; but we were decided about matters and took the right course; she was put under the influence of active remedies, which soon began to display their power in calming and we had the satisfaction of beholding the transformation of the diseased fury into a healthful woman, regaining her own natural countenance, with every prospect of returning health and reason, which was all duly accomplished, and she left us, happy, thankful and delighted with the pleasing change.

"The wild frenzy of the brain,"

No. 67. This patient, a little past the prime of life, had been the subject of mental alienation about three months previous to his committal to our care. Possessing an excitable temperament and a mind in which the susceptibility to emotions was not counterpoised by a strength sufficient to sustain their excitement, the invasion of strong religious feeling, together with disappointment in an "affair of the heart," at once submerged the intellect in their tide. When first brought here, he was listless and inactive, careless as to his bodily habits, and giving no attention to any thing around him. A continued whistle or hum, was the uninterrupted employment of each successive day; and for months, this dull, sad monotony was unbroken. All signs of mental existence, much more of mental activity, seemed equivocal. Mind had sunk so near to a state of imbecility, that no consciousness of previous years, with their active habits, exciting scenes an family endearments, remained. The mind that had engaged with activity and interest in the pursuit of an honorable employment, and the heart that had cherished, with all the fondness of a parent-the warmest emotions of affection, seem, ed now unlighted by intellect, and unwarmed by a single sentiment.

After the most judicious efforts to restore the bodily functions had at last proved in a great measure successful, a shade of change for the better gave encouragement to persevere; but, thus far, it has been labor uncheered by hope. The first indication of the least interest excited in his own condition, was the displeasure manifested toward a pair of "hard times," with which his nether limbs were invested. As soon as mind had awakened to the consciousness of its own existence, the novelty of the scene around him excited his inquiries, as to where he was? how he came here? and for what purpose? and when satisfied on all these points, he manifested the surprise of one aroused from a dream. His trunk was brought to him, and in turning over with curious interest, its contents, some simple token of a daughter's affection struck his eye, and, at once, the sealed fountain of emotion found vent in a flood of tears. The recollections of the past, that had been crowded from the mind, rushed in to fill up the dreary waste which their exile had made, and with remembrance came affection and intellect.

From this time, he continued rapidly to recover, making frequent and anxious inquiries concerning his family and friends, taking a deep interest in his own progress, and expressing the warmest gratitude to all who had in any degree contributed to its happy consummation.

No. 69. To use a grand flourish, in his own peculiar style, this was "jist about the keenest cock that ever was gaffted on the Sun-Fish Hills." He certainly "knew a thing or two," besides being able to "put out fire with his breath by blowing up a burning house!" and in the full tide and action of disease, was quite a striking character. Dreadfully in love, and careless about himself and every thing in the world, except his clothing, in regard to which his fancy ran, that he was as well off, if not better, without any at all. A coat was perfectly out of the question, and he commonly disposed of the cotton and unmentionables without much ceremony, and by the most convenient process to suit his humor.—The sheriff had, amongst other matters, provided him with a pair of coarse pantaloons, of unusual capacity and strength, the quality and cut of which took our attention, and, aware of his destructive inclination, we immediately commenced speaking their praise, remarking, aside, that these were the right sort of pants. "Well," said he, "stranger, they jist about are!" We at once became interested in the cloth, and began to inquire as to the purchase, price, and tailor's name; desiring him at the same time to turn about and show them all round; and asked him, in the most earnest manner, if they set easy? "Well," said he, "stranger, they jist about do;" which was just about the amount he felt inclined to say in a strange place. As to the invincibles, they, by our particular direction, soon became the admiration of every man engaged about the house, and eventually grew into such favor with the owner himself, that he felt inclined to stick to them night and day; particularly after we had slyly insinuated, that he was surrounded by a slippery set of fellows, and, as good looking trousers were much in demand, he had better keep a sharp look out. He improved on further acquaintance; became quite familiar, and eventually took such a fondness for dress, that he was not only willing to wear his own clothing, but those of any other patient that would agree to exchange. Other pranks and mischief followed, until a shower-bath became indispensable, which, being altogether new, alarmed him exceedingly, and at once put an end to every caper in his head. His fright was quite amusing, for he supposed we were about to drown him, and sung out, at the top of his voice, "Oh, doctor! for God's sake let me out! I can't swim a stroke!"

Medicine had a speedy and happy effect upon his vigorous and hardy constitution; and he was soon able and willing to labor daily, and entirely recovered the full use of his somewhat droll and eccentric faculties.

No. 68. Was a lady, near the prime of life, whose insanity was of puerperal origin, and of two months' duration at the time of her admission into the asylum. At first, a cheerless listlessness, amounting almost to the hopelessness of imbecility, was the prevalent feature of her case. For some weeks after her entrance, she could not be induced to converse, or observe any thing around her; but sat in listless silence, regardless of all the attentions bestowed upon her, and apparently desiring to exclude all observation. At last, by perseverance in all the appliances of kindness which her situation required, she could, by earnest solicitation, be induced to raise her head, yet with a trembling becoming the lowest humility. Her natural simplicity of character had, by the invasion of insanity, degenerated into the merest childishness, characterized by even more than a child's timidity. To this was added a most depressing despondency, darkened by the gloomy forebodings of a religious melancholy. With this saddening companionship of unhappy illusions, the mind retired into its gloomy recesses, and there seemed to brood over its woes; and for a time, every effort to drag it from this cheerless contemplation seemed fruitless. But perseverance at last secured the slight change alluded to, and a gradual improvement continued to reward our labors. By degrees, the dark shadows which melancholy had projected on the countenance began to disappear, and joy to relumine with its smile the cheerless despondency, and, over all, returning reason began to assume its wonted sway.—She was first induced to engage with freedom in conversation; then, to employ herself in knitting, and, by slow degrees, her interest extended to things around her, early begetting a warm attachment for her attendants. At last, there seemed the trembling suspense between hope and fear; between an humble faith, that almost feared to trust, and yet, casting away despair, dared to hope; and she was heard to repeat these simple lines, that were the very embodiment of her feelings:

"I am a stranger here below,
And what I am, it's hard to know;
I am so vile, so prone to sin,
I fear I am not born again.

When I experience call to mind.
My understanding is so blind,
All feeling, sense, seems to be gone,
Which makes me think that I am wrong.

I find myself out of the way,
My thoughts entirely gone astray;
Like one alone I seem to be,
Oh! is there any one like me?"

To this date she refers her first consciousness of her true situation, and from this period her improvement was rapid and uninterrupted. Anxiety and affection for her friends and children returned. She attended, with pleasure and interest, the religious services of the house, and on the Sabbath was in her place, undisguised, attending on the public services of the sanctuary. She left us, with a heart swelling with gratitude to the God of mercies, again to fill the place of an affectionate mother and devoted wife. [To be continued.]

CONVICTION OF MRS. SARAH ANN DAVIS.

Judge Barton, in his charge to the Jury, (a full report of which was printed in the Daily Chronicle) thus briefly recapitulates the incidents of the tragedy, which has resulted in the conviction of a female for murder in the first degree!

On the tenth day of July last, Julia Ann Jordan resided with the defendant and Alfred H. Davis, the latter's paramour or husband, in a house, belonging to Michael McCloskey, at the corner of Juniper street and Norman's alley, and which had been rented from Mr. McCloskey, by Davis, some six or seven weeks before. Between twelve and one o'clock on that day—as nearly as it has been possible to ascertain, about ten or fifteen minutes after twelve—the neighborhood was alarmed by repeated screams and cries of murder; and upon hastening from their various houses and avocations to the vicinity where the sound of these cries directed them, a female, soon ascertained to be the deceased, was perceived by the neighbors to rush to the window of the passage in the third story of the back building of the house, tenanted by Davis, with the blood streaming from her neck, uttering, as several of the witnesses have testified, faint ejaculations, and almost immediately disappeared from the window. Upon entering the house, the defendant was found in the area passage, or upon the steps leading therefrom to the yard, at or near a tub of clothes, which she had apparently been engaged in washing—while the deceased was found in the front room of the upper story, bleeding from several wounds upon the neck and throat, evidently inflicted with some sharp instrument. A pool of partly congealed blood at the head of the stairs, betokened the immediate spot where the injuries had been received or inflicted; and a razor lying upon the blood, indicated the means of their infliction. Surgical aid was promptly sent for and soon arrived; but the resources of science were unavailing; and the sufferer, after lingering for something more than half an hour, during which time she received every assistance that humanity could prompt or skill afford, died, without having been enabled to articulate a word, although she appears to have made more than one endeavor to communicate with those around her. Suspicion naturally directing itself against the prisoner and Davis, they were arrested some time during the night, by Charles Downer, then one of the Special Constables in the appointment of the Mayor; and, after a patient and careful hearing, continued from day to day, the evidence, in the opinion of the Mayor, not warranting the detention of Davis, he was discharged, while the defendant was committed for trial.

After a protracted trial, which occupied weeks, the Jury came into Court on Saturday afternoon, with a verdict of murder in the first degree against Sarah Ann Davis. The foreman of the Jury, Hugh Smith, Esq., then read to the Court a communication, which ran in these words, and which was ordered to be filed:

"The jury in the case of the Commonwealth against Sarah Ann Davis, find the prisoner guilty of murder in the first degree, but respectfully request the court, in conjunction with the jurors, to recommend her to the mercy of his Excellency the Governor."

The prisoner, on the verdict being rendered, shrieked aloud, swooned, and fell into the arms of Davis. The court room was crowded with spectators; and altogether it was a scene of great solemnity and pain. The prisoner appeared to be in an insensible state when she was conveyed from the court room, where she had received a verdict for the commission of a crime which makes the blood run cold to think of. The judges of the Court have granted the counsel until Friday next, to file reasons in arrest of judgment and for a new trial.—Phil. Sat. Courier.

FROM WASHINGTON.—Quite a scene was produced in the House of Representatives, on Mr. John Quincy Adams' presenting sundry anti-slavery petitions, and especially in regard to petitions which prayed that all applications from States and Territories for admission in the Union, should be disregarded, if they recognized the legitimacy of slavery. Many members participated in the excitement, but as usual it ended without any serious consequences.

Both branches have passed the bill authorizing a settlement by compromise with sureties of Samuel Swartwout, the former collector of New York; but who now resides in the fashionable metropolis of France.

The Secretary of the Treasury's proposition for a revision of the Tariff, is that the change should be to articles of luxury rather than those of necessity, and even to make this a matter of favor, as high as 20 per cent. where the foreign articles of luxuries compete with American productions. It is stated by the Secretary that "the value of free articles imported in 1838, exclusive of specie, was about $37,161,583. A duty of 17 per cent, on these would yield a nett revenue near the five millions that may be needed in 1842.

Selecting from the free articles those which may be regarded most as luxuries, as teas, coffees, silks, &c., and adding them to these which conflict with American productions, as worsteds, linens, &c., there would be an amount of $29,026,448, (taking the year 1838 still as a guide) on which a duty of 20 per cent. would also yield the amount of about five millions."

Mr. Calhoun's amendment, ceding the public lands to the States in which they lie, on certain conditions, was negatived in the Senate 18 to 22; and the distribution scheme was lost, 18 to 25.

The Senate of the United States has been summoned by the Executive to meet on the 4th of March next, for the transaction of business, being of course of an Executive character, connected with the commencement of a new Administration, the formation of a new Cabinet, &c. &c.

The great subjects to discussion are the Pre-emption Bill, and the Treasury Note Bill, authorizing an issue of $5,000,000.

CONGRESS, ON SATURDAY.—In the Senate on Saturday, Mr. Rives of Virginia, appeared, was qualified and took his seat.

The pre-emption bill was then discussed by Messrs. Calhoun, Mangum, and Clay, of Ala., until the hour of adjournment.

In the House, Mr. Pickens asked that the following resolution be read for information, viz:

Resolved, That the President be requested to communicate to this House, if not incompatible with public interest, any information or correspondence he may have in relation to recent seizures or search of any of our vessels on the coast of Africa or elsewhere by British cruizers or sailors, and the cause of said seizures, and the authority under which they have been made.

Mr. Adams offered the following amendment—"And also copies of all correspondence between the Government of the United States, and of Great Britain relating to the African slave Trade, since the 3d of March, 1837, and all despatches from Nathaniel P. Trist, Consul of the United States at the Havana, to the Department of State relating in any manner to the African Slave Trade."

Which amendment was accepted, and the resolution as modified, adopted.

On motion of Mr. Cushing it was Resolved, That a committee be appointed to join the committee for that purpose, of the Senate, to ascertain and report a mode of examining the votes for President and Vice President of the United States, and of notifying the persons elected of their election.

Various communications were laid before the House from the several departments: when the Treasury Note Bill was further considered until the hour of adjournment.

HIGHLY IMPORTANT FROM THE NIAGARA FRONTIER—Case of McLeod.—The intelligence from Western New York, and the Niagara Frontier begins to be highly interesting. The official correspondence between Mr. Fox, the British Minister, and Mr. Forsyth, respecting the burning of the Caroline, and the arrest of McLeod, have created a flame all over the border. Public meetings have been held on the subject in Buffalo, Batavia, and other places, denouncing the claims and conduct of England.

We have despatched a correspondent to the Niagara Frontier, from whom we have received the following:

LOCKPORT, Jan. 25, 1841.

The trial of McLeod cannot take place until the 4th Monday in March, unless a special commission of Oyer and Terminer should issue, which is not probable. His case will come before the Grand Jury at the County Court, to be held early in February; but that Court can only indict him. The evidence before the Grand Jury is private, of course, and not to be reported. It has been stated in some prints, that he was to be tried immediately—this may have misled some.

I have not been able to obtain any information in relation to his history, to be depended on. There is nothing peculiar in his situation in jail, except that he sleeps all day and is up all night, probably expecting assistance from Canada, to enable him to escape. If I can find any one who can give any of the information asked by you, I will procure it to be done.

The statement that Mr. Brotherston, the Cashier of the Suspension Bridge Bank had become McLeod's bail in $5000, is also erroneous. McLeod was arrested under a charge of murder, which is not a bailable offence. The excitement on this affair increases every day. Meetings are holding all over the western district, and if an attempt be made to rescue him, I would not answer for the consequences.

WAR IN EUROPE.—There are not a few who appear to think it certain there must be something like a general war in Europe. And they infer this, from the extensive preparations which many nations have been, and are now making, for war-like demonstrations.

By the last foreign intelligence, it does appear that Spain and Portugal were likely to have a serious quarrel. "The government at Lisbon had determined to resist the proposals of that of Madrid as to the Douro Navigation Treaty. A spanish force, therefore, had been marched to the frontiers of Portugal, and the time for a definite answer fixed for January 4; by which time it was determined by the Portuguese Government that every thing should be prepared for war, on land, as well as that their old crafts were to be hastily put into such a state, as to be able to blockade Cadiz and other important Spanish towns on the coast.

The German States are making war-like preparations on account of similar preparations in France. The London Spectator remarks that the whole continent seems bristling for war. There is certainly no impossibility of a war between France and England, though it may be distant.

But to look to more distant regions, it is by no means certain that there will be no further troubles growing out of the Turco-Egyptian question, for any obstinacy on the part of Mehemet Ali to adhere to the rules of the treaty, or any sinister motives on the part of Russia, may open the whole subject again.

It is stated that the French Government are determined on demanding satisfaction from the Emperor of Morocco for the insult offered the Consul General of France at Tangiers. Admiral Hugon was said to have received orders to hold himself in readiness to sail at the first signal with his ten ships of the line and two steamers. A French paper says: "We shall perhaps have an opportunity of trying our Patxhan guns against the walls of Tangier, Salee and Mongador, and ruining the important trade carried on by the English along the coast, in retaliation for the destruction of our factories on the Syrian shores."

LATER FROM FLORIDA.—By way of St. Augustine dates to the 22d. It was reported that Tiger Tail and 30 or 40 Tallehassees had gone in to Fort Fanning. A letter under date of the 22d says:

"Our only intelligence from the interior is, that Gen. Armistead has issued orders that the Indians shall not be molested. Yes, a General commanding 4,500 regulars, comprising the most efficient and best provident army the United States ever in the field, and sent to Florida, not to protect the inhabitants (that is allotted to the volunteers under Gen. Reid) but to whip the enemy, has issued orders that this enemy shall not be molested. And why?

Another letter of the same date contradicts the reported appearance of Tiger Tail, but expresses a belief that he will come in, and intimates that the Indians generally are more pacific in their views.

The whole subject of Slavery has recently been discussed in the Legislature of Kentucky, on a bill to repeal the law which prohibits the importation of Slaves into the State. The effect of the repeal would be to make Louisville and other Kentucky cities slave marts. The repealing bill was, after a full discussion conducted with dignity and propriety, defeated by a vote of 53 to 34. Last year a similar bill passed the Lower House, but was arrested in the Senate. In noticing the subject the Cincinnati Chronicle remarks:

"The very best anti-slavery speeches we have seen, have been made in the Kentucky Legislature, by noble minded, honest men, who feared not to do their duty, because a mean spirit of jealousy or interest was ready to censure them."

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH CASE.—The law case between the Old and New Schools came up in Philadelphia last week. The whole court, as it is known, had, some months ago, set aside the opinion of Judge Rogers, and ordered a new trial. At the opening of the court this week, Judge Kennedy presiding, the counsel for the Old School moved that this case should take precedence of all others; but the New School counsel opposed the motion, on the ground that, it being unexpected, they were not ready, and the court refused the motion which brought the case so low on the Calendar that it will probably not be reached this term.

GRAND JURY.—The Grand Jury yesterday returned to the court of General Sessions six true bills, one of the bills was the second found during the present term against Gustavus A. Robinson, broker in Market street, for vending lottery tickets.

The Grand Jury came into Court a second time, yesterday, with some twelve or fifteen additional true bills; all of which were for minor offences.—Phil. paper.

LEHIGH COAL COMPANY.—We had a sa change last week in the prices of th stock and loans of the Lehigh Coal an Navigation Company. The former sol as low as $18 a 20—the latter at 65 fo $100 paid. This depreciation is attrib table in a great measure to the recer freshet, by which property to a conside able extent, belonging to the Company was destroyed. It is feared that they wi not be able to effect a new loan in order t make the necessary repairs. The pani among the stock and loan holders, at th close of the week, was distressing indee About 18 months ago, the stock sold a high as $90 per share, and the Compan was looked upon as one of the best in th land.—Bicknell.

THE SOUTHERN BANKS.—Our Baltimor friends are beginning to reconsider th motion of their continued suspensions.—The Patriot says—"The measure has bee tried in Pennsylvania, where there wa a legal necessity for its adoption on th 15th Jan. It was found to work well, whic is likely to be the case; we presume tha Maryland and Virginia, and the State farther South, will take order ere long and act in concert, to follow the exam ple thus afforded them, north of Maso and Dixon's line."

P. S. We have just received a lette announcing the determination of the Ma ryland and Virginia Banks to resume o the 1st of Febuary.—ib.

THE BANK CONVENTION AT LOUIS VILLE.—The Nashville Journal of Tues day last says—"The convention of We tern banks, took place in this city yeste day. The Bank of Indiana, and he branches, four Cincinnati banks, one o the banks at Columbus, Ohio, and th banks of this State were represented.—We were not able to ascertain the re sult of the deliberations of the convention They will adjourn without fixing a da for resumption, and will probably re commend another convention. Letter were read in the convention from th banks of New Orleans and Tennessee expressing the opinion that the resump tion of Specie payments would not b proper under existing circumstances."—Bicknell.

AN IMPORTANT MOVEMENT.—The N York Herald says,—"We understan that preparations are making to call great mass American meeting in th Park, for the purpose of taking into con sideration the conduct of the British Gov ernment, in relation to the burning o the Caroline—also on the North Easter Boundary Question—also on the Nort Western Territory—also on the recen seizures of American merchantmen b British cruizers on the African seas.

We learn further that the conduct o England in her aggressions and aggran dizement throughout the world, will b considered and presented to the nation i several strong points of view."

CAUSE OF THE FAILURE OF THE FRANKLI BANK.—The failure of the Franklin Bank at Baltimore, is attributed to the loss o $100,000 occasioned by the defalcation o Mr. S. L. Hawkins, the former Cashier o the Bank, who managed to abstract tha amount during the twenty years he held his office, and to avoid a discovery of the fact till the 31st ult., when the books were thoroughly examined. The effect of the development caused great affliction among Mr. Hawkins' friends and family, and so disasterous was it to the health of his wife, that, on hearing the news on Thursday last for the first time, she laid down on her bed, and was taken thence a corpse on Sunday night.

GEN. HARRISON.—This gentleman arrived at Wheeling, on Thursday, the 28th of January. He was received in a very enthusiastic manner, and left the same night for Pittsburg, which place he reached the ensuing afternoon, and took lodgings at the Pittsburg Hotel. He was to address the citizens at 11 o'clock on Saturday morning and to leave the city on Monday.

GEN. HARRISON.—The Pittsburg Gazette of Saturday says, the President elect addressed an assemblage from the front of the Iron Hotel, at 11 o'clock that morning. He was to remain there until Monday, and then ascend the Monongahela to Brownsville, where he will take the National road.

GEN. HARRISON.—Rooms have been provided for the accommodation of Gen. Harrison upon his arrival at Washington at Brown's Hotel.

MCLEOD.—The Buffalo papers of the 28th ult., says that after McLeod had been released on bail, two or three hundred armed men forcibly re-conducted him to jail. Their object was to afford an opportunity to the owner of the Caroline to arrest McLeod for the destruction of his boat and thus detain him on this side."

